The centenary of Essex Union has been celebrated at Colchester. Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., presided at a large gathering in Lion-walk Chapel. Amongst those present was Rev. J. R. Cotter, rector of St. Mary Magdalen's. Mr. Spicer, in reviewing the work of the Union, said Free Churchmen scarcely realised the grandeur of the work they were doing for England. The Free Churches were living and active; they were the representatives of the principles of Protestantism in many a village: they were responsible for a large half of the national Christian work. He hoped that in the new century there would be new methods and new successes.

Baptist.

Rev. James Horn has been recognised as pastor at Clayton, near Bradford.

Mr. G. Armitt, of Rawdon College, has commenced the pastorate at Hellifield.

Rev. E. Poole Connor has accepted an invitation to Borough-road Chapel, Southwark.

Rev. G. W. Brooker, from Leigh, Lancs., has been recognised as pastor at East-street, Southampton.

Three "at homes" have been held at Carey Hall, Leicester, to welcome back from America the minister's wife, after six months' absence.

Cheering meetings have been held in North Shields in connection with the ninety-ninth anniversary of the Howard-street Chapel.

At the quarterly committee meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society Revs. T. H. Barnett, of Howrah, and J. Ellison, from Rungpore, India, were welcomed home.

The first anniversary of Hertford Chapel was commemorated by a series of meetings, in which Pastor Martin Ashby, Mr. G. B. Sinclair, of Highgate-road, and Pastor G. D. Hooper, of Luton, took part.

Rev. H. Davies, of Trinity-road Chapel, Halifax, suggests that it would be an excellent practice if every minister, before entering upon his ministry, had to undergo a year's apprenticeship at the workhouses or in the slums.

The Dronfield Church recently celebrated its fifty-second anniversary. Special sermons were preached by the pastor, C. J. Rendell, and Rev. J. Hambly. The report showed there had been six persons added during the year, and upwards of £175 raised for the church and foreign missions.

At the annual meeting of the Evangelistic Society connected with West Drayton Chapel (Rev. E. B. Warren), it was reported that over 200 homes have been visited every week under the personal superintendence of the pastor's wife. Cottage meetings and open-air services are also held every week in Drayton, Thorney-Bucks, and Yiewsly.

Methodist.

A new chapel has been begun at Bailey Hill, Luton.

The Connexional auditors have found the Primitive Methodist Orphanage accounts in a very healthy condition. The income for the year shows an advance.

In place of a very old chapel at Swimbridge, which was the oldest in Barnstaple circuit, a new building has been erected on a site given by the Duke of Bedford.

The retirement of Bishop Haygood has raised in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the question whether a successor shall be appointed or the number of bishops reduced. At present there are ten, each drawing a salary of 3,000 dols. with no parsonage, but a travelling allowance of 600 dols.

The Wesley Deaconess Institute has held a convocation during the past week in Birmingham. On Thursday there was a meeting at the Princess Alice Orphanage, at which Bishop Thoburn gave an address. That day and the next were spent in discussing the work of deaconesses in its various aspects, Revs. Dr. Stephenson, A. E. Gregory, Simpson, Johnson, Mr. J. Pendlebury, Mr. C. J. Stone, and several deaconesses taking part. On Monday the Central Hall was utilised and well filled.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. M. Witherow has intimated his acceptance of the call from Bellhaven U.P Church, Glasgow.

Trinity Church, Walton, Liverpool, has been opened by Principal Dykes, Rev. S. Scott, and Dr. Watson.

The late Mr. Hugh M. Matheson has left £500 to the foreign missions of the English Presbyterian Church.

At the annual meeting at Chatham (Rev. S. D. Scammell) £1000 was subscribed towards the new church to be built in Victoria-gardens.

Anniversary services have been held for the last time at Trinity Church, Manchester, the building having been sold for £2,500 to the Y.W.C.A. A new chapel will be erected further out of the city, the present one being situated in a district which has almost entirely been taken possession of by Jews.

The annual report of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance states that an organic union between the two Presbyterian Churches has taken place in New Zealand. The dangers are also mentioned to Protestant missions in countries like Manchuria, Korea, and Northern China, in the Far East, and of Persia and Northern Syria, through the recent action of Russia in regard to those countries.

Society of Friends.

The Bombay Guardian of April 16 records the "public confession" of thirty-seven young men and lads at Seoni-Malara, in India, under Joseph Taylor, of the Friends' Mission there.

Deeply interesting quarterly meetings are being held over the country, and preparation is being made for London yearly meeting, which will begin on Wednesday week, the 18th inst. There are tokens of progress in different parts of the land.

Dublin yearly meeting met on the 27th ult., and had the company of several visitors from America, as well as Alderman White, J.P., from Birmingham. Last Sabbath was the great day of the feast, and largely attended meetings in various meeting-houses in and round Dublin are usual on that day.

Fallen Asleep.

At Sherburn, Durham, on 26th ult., Canon Richmond who has been vicar of the parish for thirty-three years.—At Yeovil, on 24th ult., Rev. Dr. Beebe, aged 64, vicar of St. John's for many years.—At Sheffield, Rev. William West, a remarkably successful missionary (Wesleyan) in the West Indies.—At Jarrow, Mrs. Kipling, wife of the Free Methodist minister.—At Stockport, on 24th ult., Rev. Joseph Pywell, for forty years a devoted Baptist minister.—At Small Heath, Mr. J. B. Collings, a member of Coventry-road Church, Small Heath, an earnest helper of religious and temperance organisations, such as the West Midland Baptist Association, the Birmingham Evangelical Free Church Council, the Small Heath District Union of Evangelical Free Churches, besides Baptist and Congregational Churches and Good Templar lodges in almost every county of England.—At Boston Spa, Rev. Thomas Dickin, who entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1859, and has since done good service.—At Stourbridge, Mr. James Hands, for sixty-two years a member and worker among the Congregationalists.—At Leeds, on 22nd ult., Mr. W. Brierley, aged 72, a well-known worker at East Parade.—At Cleator Moor, Mrs. Sparks, aged 29, wife of the Rev. W. Sparks, Congregational minister.—At Leeds, Mr. W. Kettlewell, aged 66, who for many years was a prominent man among the Methodists and treasurer of Lady-lane Mission.—At Shanklin, Rev. P. Labdon, an earnest Bible Christian minister.—In Glasgow, on 27th ult., Rev. Robert Cameron, minister emeritus of Cambridge-street U.P. Church, died suddenly at his residence, 10, South Park-terrace, Hillhead: a useful minister at Perth, Egremont, near Liverpool, and, since 1864, in the charge which he held until six months ago.—At Torquay, on 20th ult., Miss Florence Braithwaite, aged 46, daughter of the late Mr. Isaac Braithwaite.—In the South of Ireland, Rev. Richard Longfield, Canon of Cloyne, who entered the ministry in 1842. In the various parishes where he laboured he was greatly beloved, not only for his distinguished intellectual qualities, but also for his loving care of those committed to his spiritual charge; owing to declining health in 1892 he resigned his parish of Mogeela, of which he had been incumbent for thirty-four years.

"MAY" MEETINGS, 1898.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.		Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
MAY.
Thurs. 5	11 a.m.	London City Mission	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
,,	11, 3, & 6.30	Women's Total Abstinence Union	c	32, St. Martin's-lane	Lady Cecilia Roberts.
,,	2.30	Soc. Prop. Gospel in Foreign Parts	m	St. James's Hall, W.	Archbp. of Canterbury.
,,	2.30	Church Pastoral Aid Society	m	Exeter Hall	Bps. Exeter and Ripon.
,,	4 p.m.	London Association Moravian Missions	m	Exeter Hall, Lower	Mr. T. Fowell Buxton.
,,	4 & 7	Union Hall Mission	m	Carlisle-street, Edgware-road	Mr. T. B. Miller.
,,	6.30	Sunday School Union	m	Exeter Hall	Marq. of Northampton.
,,	7 p.m.	London Jews' Society	s	St. Martin's-in-the-Fields	Bishop of Bristol.
Fri. 6.	9 a.m.	,, ,,	b	Exeter Hall	Dr. T. Chaplin.
,,	11 a.m.	,, ,,	m	,,	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
,,	11 a.m.	West London Mission	s	St. James's Hall, W.	Rev. J. G. Greenhough.
,,	3.30	,, ,, (sisters)	m	,, ,,	Sister Lily.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,,	m	,, ,,	Mr. J. C. Rickett, M.P.
,,	2.30	Bridge of Hope Mission	m	Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
,,	3 p.m.	Colonial and Cont. Church Society	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
,,	4 p.m.	Native Races and Liquor Traffic	m	Grosvenor House	Duke of Westminster.
,,	2.30	Church England Zenana Miss. Society.	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,,	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Sir C. Bernard, K.C.S.I.
,,	4 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	c	Sion College	Bishop of London.
,,	6.30	Religious Tract Society	m	Exeter Hall	Archdeacon Sinclair.
,,	7.50	The Boys' Brigade	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Lord Reay.
Sat. 7	3.30	Lon. Missionary Soc. (children's mtg.)		Exeter Hall	Mr. F. H. Hawkins.
,,	4 p.m.	Female Orphan Home	m	Hampton, Middlesex	Mr. A. C. P. Coote.
Sun. 8	11 a.m.	Protestant Reformation Society	s	St. Paul's, Brixton	Canon Woodward.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	s	St. Stephen's, South Lambeth	,, ,,
,,	6.30	Seamen's Christian Friend Society	s	H'dquarters, St. George's-st., E.	Rev. R. Dawson.
Mon. 9	11 to 5	British Women's Temperance Assoc.	c	St. Martin's Town Hall	Various
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Lady Henry Somerset
,,	4 p.m.	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society	m	Mansion House	The Lord Mayor
,,	7 p.m.	Church of England S.S. Institute	s	St. Paul's Cathedral	Archbp. of Canterbury.
,,	7.30	Protestant Reformation Society	m	Exeter Hall, Lower	Colonel Sandys, M.P.
,,	8 p.m.	Cong. Total Abstinence Association	m	City Temple	Rev. A. Rowland.
Tues. 10	10 to 7	British Women's Temperance Assn.	c	St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. McLaren.
,,	11 a.m.	Irish Church Missions	m	Exeter Hall	Cannon M'Cormick
,,	12 noon.	British Home for Incurables	m	Cannon-street Hotel	Earl Amherst.
,,	12 noon.	Seamen's Christian Friend Society	m	Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street	Rev. W. Fuller-Gooch.
,,	4 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	Headquarters, St. Georges-st, E.	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
,,	7.30	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	Great Assembly Hall, E.	Sir George Williams.
,,	3 p.m.	London Missionary Society	m	Falcon-square Chapel	Mrs. Evan Spicer.
,,	3 p.m.	London Anti-Vivisection Society	m	St. James' Hall	Dean of Hereford.
,,	4 p.m.	Colonial Missionary Society	s	City Temple	Rev. J. H. Jowett.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m	,, ,,
,,	7 p.m.	Church England S.S. Institute	m	Church House, S.W.	Rev. J. E. C. Welldon.
Wed. 11	10 to 5	British Women's Temperance Asso.	c	St. Martin's Town Hall	Lady Henry Somerset.
,,	8.30	U.K. Band of Hope Union	b	Exeter Hall	Mr. T. P. Whittaker.
,,	2.30	,, ,, ,, ,,	c	,, ,,	Alderman White.
,,	6 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	,, ,,	Sir George Williams.
,,	3 p.m.	Christian Literature Society	m	,, ,, (Lower)	Earl Northbrook.
,,	11 a.m.	London Missionary Society	s	City Temple	Dr. C. A. Berry.
,,	3 p.m.	,, ,, ,, (Watchers)	m	,, ,,	Rev. A. Rowland.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Mr. Evan Spicer, M.P.
,,	5.30	Barbican Mission to Jews	m	35, Finsbury-square	Preb. Webb-Peploe.
,,	4 p.m.	Female Guardian Society	m	191, High-st., Stoke Newington	Lord Kinnaird.
,,	8 p.m.	British Jews' Society	s	Queen's Park Cong. Chapel	Dr. Chas. Leach.
Thurs. 12	10 to 5	British Women's Temperance Assoc.	c	St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. McLaren.
,,	10 to 5	The Congregational Union	m	City Temple	Rev. A. Rowland.
,,	3 and 7	Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen	m	Exeter Hall	Lord Strathcona.
,,	3 p.m.	Spanish and Port. Church Aid Society	m	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Bishop of Worcester.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m	St. Martin's Town Hall
,,	6.30	British Jews' Society	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. John Cory.
,,	7 p.m.	Country Towns' Mission	m	Exeter Hall (Council Room)	Mr. W. Wainwright.
,,	7.30	Seamen's Christian Friend Society	s	East London Tabernacle	Rev. S. J. Jones.
Fr. 13	10 a.m.	The Congregational Union	m	Memorial Hall, E.C.	Rev. A. Rowland.
,,	3.30	Invalids' Children's Aid Society	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Earl of Stamford.
,,	6.30	L.M.S., Young People's	m	City Temple	Mr. A. E. Hutton, M.P.
,,	7 p.m.	Presbyterian Missions	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Rt. Hon. J. Bryce, M.P.
Sat. 14	12 noon.	Soc. Prevention Cruelty to Animals	m	Crystal Palace Demonstration	Duke of York.
,,	All-day.	London Lifeboat Day

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

AN URGENT APPEAL FROM EAST LONDON.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS

required immediately for God's work amongst the masses surrounding THE LIGHTHOUSE, BOW COMMON, E.

By the conditional promises which this amount will secure nearly THREE HUNDRED POUNDS will become available, and many earnest workers will be relieved of great and pressing anxiety.

Who will Co-operate with God in answering His people's prayers?

Particulars supplied and donations acknowledged by—

Pastor T. J. HAZZARD,
52, Addington-road,
Bow-road, London, E.

Mrs. MEREDITH'S PRISON MISSION (Founded in 1865)

FOR THE HELP OF

DISCHARGED FEMALE PRISONERS.

Your Help is greatly needed to carry on this work, which has been blessed both to the bodies and souls of this unfortunate class.

Donations and Subscriptions will be very thankfully received.

Cheques and Postal Orders to be made payable to Mrs. Meredith, and crossed "London and South-Western Bank, Stockwell Branch."

Office:—143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

Founder: C. H. SPURGEON.

President & Treasurer: Rev. J. A. SPURGEON, D.D., LL.D.

A HOME AND SCHOOL FOR 500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN.

No Votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management, without regard to class or creed.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, addressed to the care of the Secretary, Mr. F. G. Ladds, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS.—Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal Form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME

(Dr. Stephenson's)

Shelters and trains eleven hundred boys and girls (orphans, waifs, epileptics, and cripples).

HELP IS GREATLY NEEDED.

Chief Offices: Bonner Road, London, N.E.

Address Rev. Dr. Stephenson.

CLAPTON MISSION.

The benevolent agencies of Clapton Mission embrace Free Meals to the destitute, Medical Mission, Nursing, Maternity Aid, and Seaside Home of Rest. The necessitous poor in the districts of Clapton, Hoxton, and Whitechapel are assisted with food and clothing. This ministry is performed in Christ's name and for His sake.

FUNDS GREATLY NEEDED.

Contributions may be sent to the Office of The Christian or to

THOMAS JACKSON,
8, Rushmore Road, Clapton, N.E.

Hallelujah! for the Cross.

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

AS these lines are being printed, we will be in the tenth week of every-night mission services in our new Home Hall. Since the first service on Sunday, February 25, we know of at least 120 apparently clear cases of conversion to God, and as we have had most of those who have professed "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" under regular, frequent visitation in their own homes, we can in some measure gauge the depth and reality of the work of grace in their hearts. Men and women who were enslaved by drink, gambling, and other gross sins are evidencing that they are "new creatures in Christ Jesus" by walking "in newness of life," and are earnestly striving to lead others to the feet of Jesus.

* * *

Indeed, this loving concern for the souls of old companions is one of the most encouraging features of the work. A young man who since he left the Navy had been addicted to boxing and gambling has been instrumental in leading to Christ seven or eight of his friends during the few weeks he has been on the Lord's side. Another convert—a forewoman in a large factory—has brought some young women with her night after night, and about ten of them have yielded to Christ as the Saviour of their souls and the Lord of their lives. At our testimony meetings on Saturday nights we have rejoiced to hear the converts tell one after the other how they were living in utter indifference till they came to the Home Hall and were awakened and led to trust in the finished work of Christ, or how they thought they were Christians till they came and heard plainly what it is to be Christian—"born of God," "partakers of the Divine nature," etc. Many of these are real trophies of redeeming grace — drunkards, gamblers, brawlers, blasphemers, etc., both men and women.

* * *

It is the old-fashioned Gospel in its simplicity and entirety which has wrought these blessed results in perhaps the darkest and most difficult, as it is unquestionably the most poverty-stricken and over-crowded, in all London. Let a few plain facts speak as to this.

* * *

At the back of the imposing warehouses and factories which line Southwark-street is a labyrinth of courts and alleys, in which, perhaps, the overcrowding problem is more acute than anywhere in London. The population is composed largely of very poor, but hard-working, people—many of them dragged down, against their better inclinations, by their depressing and demoralising surroundings and the seeming hopelessness of endeavouring to maintain a decent standard of home-life under such conditions of existence. Every court of tumble-down houses cleared away for the erection of a warehouse has only intensified the evil year by year. It cannot be worse than it is. Even the County Court judge, the other day, made a public appeal that something should be done speedily to provide some dwelling-places for these helpless, huddled-together, toiling families.

* *

Let me give an instance. At the back of our Home there is a court called Farnham-place. An inquest was recently held on an infant. The newspaper report showed that eight children had died in the family, and that father, mother, and six surviving children—eight souls in all—were living, sleeping, eating, and discharging all the functions of life in one small room! Is not this home-heathendom?

* * *

Now a few statistics. Hereabouts is the most poverty-stricken district in all London. Over 57 per cent. of the people are living in chronic poverty, i.e., on the verge of destitution. In London, generally, the population is fifty-seven to an acre; hereabouts it is 259 to the acre. In London, generally, the death rate is about twenty per 1000; hereabouts it is nearly thirty per 1000. In the last fifty years the death rate in London generally has decreased five per 1000; here it has increased two per 1000. In fact, it is higher than the most unhealthy towns in Europe, except Moscow and Hamburg. The infant mortality is 220 per 1000. Twice as many people die of alcoholism and delirium tremens as the average in the rest of London, and other vices are in painful proportion.

* * *

That it is becoming increasingly difficult to draw in the bulk of the people in such a neighbourhood as this to hear a message from God all must sorrowfully admit. Perhaps the most painful feature of the dark indifference settling down on the people is the miserably small proportion even of regular church and chapel going people that can be got out to a Sunday morning service. An earnest minister, much esteemed by his people, complained the other day that while he has a congregation of 700 or so on Sunday evening he has to deliver a carefully prepared sermon to a handful of twelve or twenty people on Sunday morning! I am satisfied from enquiry that this, alas! is not exceptional but typical.

* * *

How are the servants of God to meet this condition of things, induced, doubtless, by the growth of working men's drinking clubs, the gambling fever, Sunday cheap excursions by rail, the attractions of bicycle expeditions, and last but not least the depraving influence of Sunday newspapers? My answer is: (A) by increased effort in the open-air, and by thorough constant house-to-house visitation to bring the people in; (B) and by more directness and more variety to hold them when they do come.

* * *

(a) More than ever we must remember the keynote of the Church's Great Commission, "Go ye." We must take the Gospel to the people. Not merely to mission hall for the people, but right to the people by open-air service, under the windows where they live, at the street corners they pass, into the courts that lie back from the highways. We must take the Gospel to the people—by visiting every house, climbing the stairs of the big tenement blocks, tapping at the doors of all the one-room houses in the close alleys.

* * *

(b) Then let us be careful it is the Gospel we take, not gossip—straight, full, tender, solemn Gospel. People know enough nowadays to see when a man is timidly beating about the bush, and they despise half-hearted handling of eternal realities, which they know, if a man really believes, ought to make him tremendously in earnest. I say, let us go to close quarters at once with the whole truth, with loving entreaty, with useful warning.

* * *

Again, I feel we need variety—our methods are often too monotonous. By variety I do not mean what is merely secular or sensational, but I do believe that the minds of the people are more active, more restless, than they used to be, and that we ought, as wise "fishers of men," to study the changes taking place around us, and adapt our methods accordingly. In a neighbourhood like this I feel we must let the people bear testimony to the power of the Gospel from the lips of those who have proved that Christ is able to save and to keep those who trust in Him under just the same conditions of life as they are in. Bible truths—always and all of them—but presented in different forms and by "a cloud of witnesses."

* * *

We have got a Scripture-reader and a Bible-woman at work, but we need two more Bible-women at once. What a blessing two kind, praying women may be, going in and out day by day amongst the poor, the sick, the drink-enslaved, the despairing! Will some who "know the Gospel sound," and long for others to do so in the slums of Southwark, help us in providing this house-to-house, room-to-room ministry?

We are commencing a Medical Mission (Opening Meetings on Monday, May 16, at the Home Hall, at 3.30 and 7), with a qualified doctor, a lady superintendent, and a dispenser, who will give all their time to the work, not only attending to the sick poor who come to the Mission at appointed times, but visiting those who are too sick to come out at their own homes.

* * *

In connection with this we feel we must have an invalids' kitchen, as all the skill of doctor and nurse must be in vain in some cases unless some suitable nourishing food is provided. Healing the sick, feeding the hungry, and preaching the Gospel are divinely linked together by our Lord by precept and example. Nowhere in all London is this practical exemplification of Christianity more needed than hereabouts.

* * *

With all these solemn convictions pressing upon our hearts, in spite of specially heavy responsibilities just now—the postponed despatch of our emigrant party (£400 still wanted)—the opening of our new Ramsgate Orphanage (£700 yet needed), my council feel with me that we must go forward with the mission work to which God has so manifestly set the seal of his approval. Dr. H. Soltau, who has been kindly advising us in this matter, assures us from his great experience in connection with the London Medical Mission that such an effort is more needed here than anywhere in London.

* * *

Personally, I am feeling the strain of these every-night services, with their many collateral calls in regard to cases of sickness, spiritual difficulty, family complications, etc., etc., on the top of my ordinary duties, and increasing head trouble by day and sleeplessness at night sound a warning bell, the significance of which I know too well from past painful experience. When the Medical Mission is fairly started I hope to get a brief change and rest, but just now it would be a great relief to me if all my kind friends would try to help me by relieving me of pecuniary anxieties and enabling me to spend all my time and strength to push to the utmost the advantage God has graciously given us lately over the enemy of souls in these dark riverside slums. "The Cross it standeth fast. Hallelujah."

J. W. C. FEGAN.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

Cheques and postal orders may be crossed "London and South-Western Bank."—[ADVT.]

SOUTHWARK HOME MISSION.

The Opening Meetings

in connection with the

NEW MEDICAL MISSION

will (D.V.) be held

On Monday, 16th May, 1898,

in the

HOME HALL,

Holland Street, Southwark Street, S.E.

Afternoon, 3.30. Chairman: JOHN McCALL, Esq.

Evening, 7.0. Chairman: Dr. W. SOLTAU ECCLES.

The first Medical Mission Service will be held (D.V.) the next day, Tuesday, 17th May, at 11 a.m. The help of Christian friends in conducting the Services, singing the Gospel, sending flowers, bodily comforts, &c., for the sick poor will be most gratefully appreciated.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, May 2, 1898.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

Miss Crim.—Please send us your address. P.O.'s did not reach us. Apply at Post Office, giving numbers of postal orders.

	£	s.	d
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission (Debt)—M. S. ..	5	0	0
Cuban Sufferers' Relief—Members of Bible-class ..	0	5	0
China Inland Mission—M. C., 2s. 6d.; Elsie and Willie B., 10s.; A. M. R., £1	1	12	6
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—J. H. L.	0	5	0
Distressed Nestorians (Deacon Abraham)—R. B. C., Bristol, 5s.; H. W., 10s.; R. S., £1; L. J. B. G., £1; A. B., 2s.; (Orphanage) C. S. J., £5	7	17	0
McAll Mission, France—A. D., Stirling	1	0	0
Pastor Chiniquy's Work—A. D., Stirling	1	0	0
"Friends of Armenia" (Mr. Crossfield)—R. S... ..	0	10	0
Colonial and Continental Church Society—R. S. ..	0	10	0
Persecuted Stundists—E. R.	0	5	0
North Africa Mission—A. M. R.	0	10	0
Ch. Missionary Soc.—A. M. R., £1; S. A. P., £1 1s.	2	1	0
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission—A. M. R.	0	10	0
Bible Lands Mission—A. M. R.	0	10	0
South American Missionary Society—X. X. X. ..	0	10	6
Gratuitous Circulation of "THE CHRISTIAN" to Missionaries—X. X. X.	0	7	6
Tracts for Klondyke—Mrs. R. O. M.	0	2	6
Society Relief Persecuted Jews—L. C...	0	5	0
London Missionary Society—G. D.	3	0	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—Mrs. E. R. M., 4s.; H. W., 10s.; (Jubilee Fund)—E. R., £1 1s...	1	15	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—A. M., T., 5s.; A. J. R., Matt. vi. 3, 5s.; M. M., Upper Tooting, 10s.; Yelmorb, 10s.; J. H. L., 5s.; In Response, £1; R. S., £2; Eggs Sold, £1; W. W., £1 2s.; P. L., 5s.; L. C., 5s.; (Reserve Fund) In Memoriam, S. A. P., £1	8	7	0
Dr. Stephenson's Homes—A. J. R., Matt. vi. 3, 5s.; A. M. R., 10s...	0	15	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—A. J. R., Matt. vi. 3, 5s.; A. M. R., 10s.; (Southwark Home Mission) M. C., 2s. 6d.; A. M. R., 10s.	1	7	6
The Spurgeon Orphanage—A. J. R., Matt. vi. 3 ..	0	5	0
London City Mission—Silver Wedding Thank-offering, £1; J. H. L., 5s...	1	5	0
Metropolitan Tab. Rebuilding—A Lover of T. S.	0	2	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—A. H. T. W., 1s. 6d.; H. C. L., 10s.; L. B. R., 5s.	0	16	6
Glasgow City Mission—S.	1	0	2
Mildmay Institutions—J. H. L., 5s.; L. B. R., 10s.	0	15	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—K. K.	0	10	0
Ragged School Union (Cripples)—Mrs. N.	0	10	0
Destitute Children's Dinner Society—B. M.	1	0	0
Railway Mission—E. R.	1	1	0
Flower Girls' Mission—E. R.	0	5	0
Y.M.C.A., Brompton—A. M. R.	1	10	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—A. M. R.	0	10	0
Postal Telegraph Christian Association (Junior Branch)—A. M. R.	0	10	0
Mr. Quarrier's Orphans—Ruth	1	0	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—X. X. X.	0	15	0
London Medical Mission—L. B. R.	0	10	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—L. B. R.	0	10	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—L. B. R., 5s.; Miss P., sen., 10s. 6d.	0	15	6
Ladies' National Association—M. S.	2	2	0
Pastors' Aid Fund (Mrs. Spurgeon)—Mrs. B.	1	0	0
Dock Labourers' Mission (Children)—Miss W... ..	0	2	0
Open-air Mission, Ireland (Expenses)—Miss P., sen.	0	10	6
Rev. D. Baron's Work, Jews—S. A.	0	10	0
Total	£56	0	2

[ADVERTISEMENTS.]

Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, Metropolitan Tabernacle.—M. B. W., parcel of clothing.

The London Samaritan Society and Convalescent Home and Hospital.—S. J. H., £1 1s.; B. S., 4s.; K., 5s.; M. L., 2s. 6d.; M., £2 2s.; E. P., 9s.

Notices.

THE CHILDREN'S MISSION, late of 251, Southampton-street, S.E., has removed to larger premises in Little South-street, Camberwell, S.E.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS. — W.A.E. R.C. A. and C. C. F.T.S. P.K.S. I.B. R.T. A.R.C. C.A.B. W.R.G. M.S. A.P.H. A.V. Mrs. H. B.S. J.M. A.R.B. J.W. J.M. J.A.S. E.S. G.F. F.J.C. S.E.S. A.F.P. C.H. G.M.S. M.R. W.C. S.B. E.A.D. W.J.N. J.E. G.R.C. W.H.S. E.J.M. C.G.H. M.J.P. W.H. J.G.S. E.H. F.W. G.H.M. C.A.B. Mrs. M. F.C. S.R.B. A.M. J.K.N. H.H.P. H.C.S. J.W. F.E.B. C.B. Mrs. F.E.C. A.M. H.G.E. A.P.D. Mrs. H. H.G.H. J.L.S. J.J.P. R.C. A.R.C. C.G. G.H.M. F.O. H.U. F.C. C.L.N. C.H.L. C.B. E.B. L.O. Miss P. E.E.T. W.S. E.T.H. J.A. V.T. A.K. C.W.F. E.H.K. J.O. W.D. W.H.S. F.E.H. E.S.H.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—E. C. Howard, 17, Hale-street, Linton-street, N.; Alfred Atkins, 56, Fairlawn-street, Moss-lane East, Manchester; R. Swinbank, 113, Steven-street, Stretford, near Manchester; Charles J. Wallworth, 37, Sloane-street, Brooks's-bar, Manchester; Mrs. Gilbert, 64, Howard-street, Salford; Miss Ramsley, 4, Elm-villas, Avenue-road, Southend-on-Sea; Mrs. Fryer, Queen's-road Stores, Southend-on-Sea; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley-road, N.E.; Pastor F. W. Walter, Monkton-street, Ryde; W. M. Jeffrey, 5, Fowld's-street, Kilmarnock; Mrs. Clift, Brandlee, Dawley, Salop.; Miss Tibbets, Ventnor Houses, Tudor-road, Leicester; Jas. Gilder, 17, Hudson-road, Plumstead. S.E.; A. Maling, 74, Derby-buildings, Wicklow-street, W.C.; Miss Hunt, 94A, Spread Eagle-yard, Whitechapel, E.; H. H. Frame, New Town, Kempston; Gordon J. White, 17, Willoughby-road, Hornsey, N.; Mrs. Kindon, 21, Church-road, Aston; F. W. Heafford, 30, Alberta-terrace, Sherwood-rise, Nottingham.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES
FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.
"ARETHUSA" AND "CHICHESTER" TRAINING SHIPS.
164, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C.

PRESIDENT - - THE EARL OF JERSEY, G.C.M.G.

As this Society is a National one, not simply Metropolitan, admission is ensured to a destitute child from whatever part of the kingdom it may come. 900 CHILDREN MAINTAINED. NO VOTES ARE REQUIRED. FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED. Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary or Financial Secretary, or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

H. BRISTOW WALLEN, Secretary. HENRY G. COPELAND, Finance and Deputation Secretary.

ROYAL NATIONAL
Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The 17th ANNUAL MEETINGS
Of the above Society, at EXETER HALL, STRAND, W.C.,
On THURSDAY, MAY 12th, 1898, at 3 p.m. & 7 p.m.

Chairman (3 o'clock):
The Rt. Hon. Lord STRATHCONA & MOUNT ROYAL.
Chairman (7 o'clock):
THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq., Chairman of the Mission.

Speakers: Rev. W. R. MOWLL, M.A.; G. DOUGHTY, Esq., M.P.; Mr. W. T. GRENFELL, M.R.C.S.; Mr. F. W. WILLWAY, M.R.C.S.

100 NORTH SEA FISHERMEN will attend the Meetings and take part in the proceedings.

BRITISH SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE JEWS.
96, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, BLOOMSBURY, W.C.
(INSTITUTED 1842.)

The ANNUAL SERMON will be preached by the Rev. Dr. Leach, in Queen's Park Congregational Church, Harrow-road, W., on Wednesday, May 11th, 1898. Divine Service will begin at 8 p.m.

The Fifty-fifth Annual Meeting will (D.V.) be held at EXETER HALL (Lower Hall), on THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 12, 1898. The Chair to be taken at Half-past Six p.m. by JOHN CORY, Esq., J.P., of Cardiff.

Speakers: The Rev. J. B. BARRACLOUGH, M.A., Vicar of St. Thomas', Lambeth; The Rev. J. M. GIBBON, of Stamford Hill Congregational Church; The Rev. JAMES MOUNTAIN, of Tunbridge Wells; ROBERT GREER, ESQ., of Bournemouth.

The Rev. J. MOUNTAIN, and the Organist and Choir of Eccleston-Square Church, Belgravia, are expected to lead the Singing.

Tickets may be obtained on application to the Secretary, Rev. J. DUNLOP, 96, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.

THE FORTY-NINTH ANNUAL MEETING
OF THE
IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS,
WILL (D.V.) BE HELD IN
Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, May 10, at 11 a.m.

THE REV. CANON McCORMICK, D.D.,

Vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, and Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen, will preside, and the Meeting will also be addressed by Rev. T. LANCASTER, B.A., Vicar of St. Paul's, Halliwell, Bolton (who, in conjuction with the Chairman, has lately visited Dublin on behalf of the Committee); Rev. P. B. JOHNSON, M.A., Superintendent of the Dublin Mission; and Mr. H. MUMFORD, Itinerating Evangelist.

Tickets may be obtained from the Secretaries, Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION,
St. George's, E.

A PUBLIC MEETING
On behalf of the "Bridge of Hope" Mission
WILL BE HELD
At the Mansion House,
Kindly lent for the occasion by
THE RIGHT HON. THE LORD MAYOR,
ON FRIDAY, MAY 6TH, 1898.

The Chair will be taken at 2.30
By The Right Hon. THE LORD MAYOR,
WHO WILL BE SUPPORTED BY THE FOLLOWING SPEAKERS:—
JOSEPH HOWARD, Esq., M.P. Short Statement of the Work.
Mrs. CREIGHTON.
The Rev. CANON SCOTT HOLLAND. The Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.
Sir CHAS. ELLIOTT, M.L.S.B. WALTER HAZELL, Esq., M.P. JOHN CORY, Esq., J.P.
The Rev. R. W. HARRIS, M.A. The Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, Esq.

A COLLECTION WILL BE MADE ON BEHALF OF THE MISSION.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London. E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the Editor should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. „ „
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols. „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 „ „	4s. „ „
12 „ „	6s. „ „
24 „ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

Notes and Comments.

A STARTLING statement appears on page 11, concerning public-house profits, which demands the careful study of all Temperance leaders.

No one who is at all interested in the annual celebrations of the various missionary societies can fail to see how deeply interested ladies are in foreign missions, and the eloquence with which they advocate the Christianising of heathen nations. We are glad, indeed, that it is so. As medical missionaries and in the zenanas they can accomplish results in the mission field that men could never reach in consequence of the drawbacks of their sex. Their labours of love are recognised and blessed by God in an abundant measure.

While at home many who from numerous valid reasons cannot enter upon foreign service for the Christ whom they love, cease not to speak for Him when occasion serves in the home-land, devoted women are not silent on the opportunities that exist for their direct service of the Master in distant lands. "Honourable women, not a few," are convinced that the Christ has called them to be co-workers with Him in spreading the glory of his name and kingdom in the world; hence they are found doing what they can to fulfil their special mission, as they regard it to be.

The Churches will be greatly indebted this May to the clear thinkers and persuasive speakers who put before them and the world the mighty issues involved in the work of the great societies each of which represents a particular department of service. But it would be well also if they could, in any measure, estimate their indebtedness to the unseen home workers, committeemen, directors, secretaries, and clerks who labour quietly all the year round, seeing that everything goes smoothly and efficiently. The wise method, the happy suggestion which saves a mission from shipwreck, is, perhaps, more useful than the philanthropic generalisation that, falling from eloquent lips, delights and instructs an audience. The little kindness to some worn labourer may tell with greater effect than a brilliant peroration. We need all sorts of men and service; we only wish those who are out of sight not to be forgotten.

"Faithful unto death" will be the words spoken by thousands as they read that Mr. Müller died worth only £160, and left no real estate. His friends gave him the opportunity of dying worth several thousands, for several large sums were given to him for personal use, but it all went into the Lord's treasury, according to the conception of duty he early formed of what he should do with his money. And how true God has been to his servant who was so true to Him!

Those who disagree with the particular methods of Mr. John Kensit in his crusade against Romanist practices in the Church of England, while they sympathise with his purpose, will find little comfort in the Bishop of London's attitude towards this evil. In the reply he gave last week to the deputation, he defined his policy towards those guilty of these practices as one of "good-natured contempt," and pleaded for the exercise of toleration of opinion for which Englishmen are famous in matters of religious observance. The answer is an obvious one. While the Episcopal Church is a State institution, and its constitution is defined by law, it is no part of the duty of its officials to ignore open violations of that law. If the Church were to be disestablished its members and ministers would have the right to follow what ritualistic practices they please; until that occurs the legal constitution should be loyally upheld. Otherwise "good-natured contempt" is hard to distinguish from tacit support. So long as our bishops sit on the fence in this manner such protests as Mr. Kensit has made seem to be the only alternative, and this is a sad state of things.

The need of praying for definite objects, and for individual causes, is one that is felt by all true Christians. But there is peril in becoming mechanical and formal even in this matter. "Schemes of prayer" for a week and a month are likely, if followed out, to make prayer a burden, by making it lose all spontaneity and freshness. "The wind bloweth where it listeth...So is everyone that is born of the Spirit." Programmes of various kinds, and "prayer missions," are unquestionably good by way of suggestion, and as a corrective of the narrow round within which our petitions are apt to move. But the heart needs liberty as well as direction, and our prayers should be not only comprehensive but free.

Dr. Parker's eulogium on Thomas Binney at the centenary of that aged preacher's birth contained a passage worthy of earnest consideration on the part of all whose business it is to proclaim the Gospel :—

> Mr. Binney had a doctrine. That is what the pulpit sometimes lacks—a dogma, a message, a doctrine of righteousness and truth, and a Gospel of love and light and redeeming tenderness. He faced and recognised the reasoning faculties of man; he did not ask men to accept a superstition, but a Gospel, a historical and well-attested faith.

There is room in the pulpit for such men and preaching as that. The world needs a message that appeals to mind and heart, reason and sentiment, meeting human nature on all sides, till conviction is carried home to the whole man. In an age of "scissors and paste" literature it is specially important that the pulpit should maintain its noblest traditions, such as were represented in the past by the ministry of men like Thomas Binney.

The innovation started by some of the evening papers of publishing one or more Sunday editions with the latest war news is one that should receive strong condemnation from all lovers of a peaceful day of rest. There are plenty of disagreeable features already disfiguring our town Sundays, and if to these are to be added the shouts of newspaper vendors shrieking the last sensational telegrams it will add a new horror to life. It is to be devoutly hoped that the public will discourage the objectionable experiment, and that it will die a natural death for lack of support.

Even in priest-ridden Spain freedom of speech cannot be altogether repressed. In the Cortes recently one of the speakers denounced the increasing tyranny and dictatorship "inspired by the genius of the disciples of Ignatius Loyola." Shouts of approval mingled with the yells with which this daring charge was received by the deputies. It is within the limits of possibility that the present war will hasten the downfall of Papal authority in that country by rousing the common people to a sense of their true place in the nation, and their right to think and act for themselves. Spain needs the stimulus of a rude shock. She has been languishing under the numbing influence of the priest for centuries. Her hope for the future is that she should throw over the galling yoke that has crippled her for so long, and follow the younger nations in their demands for liberty, and for a chance to rehabilitate herself as a people.

If the opinion of Signor Silvela—the Opposition leader in the Spanish Cortes—on the parallel character of war and duelling were accepted by the two nations now fighting, it would soon be brought to an end. He said that when blood had been drawn, the defeated party, "having saved its honour," might reasonably ask for peace. This is a new doctrine, but it is a great advance on the old idea of war à l'outrance, or till one of the combatants was too exhausted to carry on the struggle. If, however, it were generally accepted, it would surely sound the knell of all warfare, by making it as ridiculous as duelling has already become in certain countries. Its real significance lies in the fact that it has been received with a sense of relief in Spain as well as out of that country, which is a hopeful sign both for the present and the future.

The Daily News had an unworthy thrust at the Increased Armaments Protest Committee, which surely is seeking to do a much-needed work. It remarked that :—

> The leading case to-day of a nation which has adopted the policy of decreased armaments is Spain, and the fate of Manila is hardly calculated, we fancy, to induce other nations to go and do likewise. The moral which most men will draw from present events is rather that only when a strong man armed keepeth his palace are his goods in peace.

The facts are that Spain has misgoverned her colonies, and at the same time has neglected her navy. Had she done justly to her subjects she would have had no trouble, and America would have been only too glad to leave her alone. She has never "disarmed," but has allowed things to go to ruin. We are not asked to imitate her, but to take the way of a strong nation that can afford to do right, and can trust to conduct rather than to arms? Sir Arthur Helps was of opinion that we should never get rid of these immense armies and navies—and how they have grown since his day!—until two or three strong countries dared to dispense with them. Why should we not lead the way?

Lord Salisbury, in his speech at the Albert Hall last week, ventured to say that in days to come this age would be known as an age of heroes. The particular reference was to the men who have recently taken a prominent part in the extension and consolidation of the Empire in India and Africa. No one would care to detract from whatever credit fairly belongs to empire-builders, but we cannot help feeling that the Premier's list of heroes was of too exclusively military and political a type. The greatest heroes are those who raise the tone of the national life rather than those who extend its territories or increase its revenues. Their names may not be in the mouths of the multitude, but they are "written in heaven," and that is greater praise than can be given by any honourable mention in military despatches or inclusion in the Civil List.

In another striking passage Lord Salisbury divided the nations of the world into two great classes—the living and the dying. Some states are growing stronger and stronger. These are for the most part the Christian (he might have said the Protestant) nations; others are growing weaker and weaker; and the first tend inevitably to dominate and absorb the second. This movement is full of peril for both, and will be a blessing or a curse to the world according to the manner in which the strong absorb the weak, and the use to which they put their opportunity. Unfortunately, at present there does not seem to be any high principle at work in the process; and the friction between the strong nations, arising from the partition of the world, presents anything but an edifying spectacle. The one hopeful sign is that Providence is using the existing international rivalries for the opening of the way to missionary influences and work among the heathen.

It is only as races, bound by certain bonds and federated under certain forms of government, that they are dying. The people are not doomed to extinction. The millions of Turkey and the millions of China will come under some other rule, and, let us hope, will have a happier and brighter history. With misgovernment cured, with oppression and terror and injustice removed, the latent force in them will spring up once more, and a new career be entered upon. All witnesses testify to the elasticity and recoverability of the various peoples when once they get fair play, but this is dependent on a religion of justice and brotherliness.

It would seem as though the sharp line of cleavage between the white and coloured man, which has been fruitful of so many evils in America, is to be repeated in South Africa. Canon Fisher, Rector and Precentor of Victoria, goes so far in a letter to The Guardian as to justify this antipathy on its religious side by justifying the practice of separate places of worship for the different races. He affirms that "the races of Europe are superior in nature to the native tribes of South Africa." Is this attitude consistent with the teaching of the Bible, which tells us that the partition-wall between Jew and Gentile or Greek was broken down in Christ? Granted the vast gap in culture between the savage and civilised races, is this gap to be filled up by keeping them apart in the worship of the Saviour who died for all?

[4061]

Rev. Simon P. Sihali, a Kaffir missionary on a visit to this country, in an interview in the British Weekly, speaks most hopefully of the native races of South Africa, and his opinion may be placed alongside with that of Canon Fisher. The natives of South Africa, according to him, if they can only be Christianised and civilised, are well fitted to play a prominent part in the life of the country, both politically and socially. Their populations differ in one most significant respect from other barbarous communities among whom white people are settled. Instead of declining in numbers, they are rapidly increasing—a fact which shows that there is real vitality in the race, and that it has a future. The Kaffir students hold their own well in the missionary colleges, showing that the natives are capable of culture. A perusal of this striking interview gives a deep impression of the vast importance and boundless promise of missionary work in South Africa.

Living in the East has undoubtedly its great trials to the health, but some can bear them; e.g., the late Mrs. Addis, who has just died in India at the age of ninety. When four years old (writes Rev. S. Long in The Missionary Chronicle) she was taken by Mrs. Judson to Burmah, and remained with the family for ten years. Her hands embroidered the cover to the Bible which Dr. Judson took to Ava to present to the king. Her earliest missionary work was, as a child of ten, to teach some poor men and women the Burmese alphabet. For thirty years she did excellent work as a missionary's wife at Coimbatore. Since 1870, when her husband died, she has kept a Bible and tract depository at Connoor, and a shop where mission goods from all quarters have been sold. In that time she collected for the Madras Bible Society over 10,000 rupees. When she died in February last "she passed triumphantly." Her useful life recalls the words, "They shall bring forth fruit in old age." "Your fruit may remain."

The French may not be good colonisers, but French Protestants are developing a strong missionary spirit. With no small success are our brethren in France striving to overtake the work which changes in Madagascar have created. Children are coming back to the Protestant schools, and worship is celebrated in most of the villages where it had been suppressed. General Gallieni has thanked the French Protestant missionaries for coming to convert and educate the Malagasy, and has said that he has no better fellow-workers in his great colonising task. From New Caledonia also comes the welcome intelligence of some 150 Kanakas having been baptised. A trader says that the people do not buy rum any more, and a sceptical engineer, who has known the natives for fifteen years, declares that the change among them is "miraculous." Works of this kind will bring to our neighbour, in whose peace and prosperity we are deeply interested, more enduring glory and solid strength than any number of victories by her soldiers and sailors.

Dr. Munhall, evangelist, of Philadelphia, testifies that he has seen scores of churches in which worldliness and other evils had almost paralysed the spiritual forces, where the pastor was almost broken-hearted and ready to abandon the ministry, become, in three weeks' time, under the ministrations of an evangelist, as harmonious and lovely as heaven, and throb with intensest spiritual life in every department of their work.

He thinks that the influences which weaken churches the most, such as worldliness, formality, selfishness, and pride, are alarmingly on the increase, and that therefore there is more and more need for practical evangelism. We are glad to hear of good done by any instrumentality, but if this testimony is correct—and no doubt it is for America—then there is room for a great change in the pastors. A stranger coming into a congregation may speak with great freedom and force of certain prevailing sins, not knowing, perhaps, how directly his words are bearing on some of the regular hearers; but it would be an ill day for truth if the irksome duty of reproving were left to the occasional evangelist. Some churches would never hear it at all.

The Voice, of New York, has been inquiring into the environment of college life, and has found that at Princeton, where the University is only nominally under Presbyterian influence, there are six town saloons and a hostelry called the Princeton Inn, situated just outside the University grounds. There has been protest against the complicity of some in office with the trade, and an effort is being made to guard the students. At Yale University there were seventy-five places close to the University for the sale of liquors, and yet New Haven is a local option city. Harvard University is well safeguarded by prohibition. Before 1886 there were 125 open saloons in Cambridge, where it is situated, but the college faculty now make prohibition a reality. Dartmouth College is strongly protected, and out of 200 scholarships none is granted save to students who are total abstainers from the use of strong drink as a beverage. Cornell University deals with individual cases of excess when they arise. A similar inquiry concerning all our British seats of learning might afford some remarkably suggestive facts.

There are many theories concerning the secret of England's greatness, but it has been reserved for a writer in the Nineteenth Century to formulate the opinion that the foundation of our country-life is—fox-hunting! The arguments on which this astounding position is built up are not worth recounting; but the article proves how easy it is to be led away by accidental aspects of life, to miss its true and determining facts. The real foundation of our country-life, of course, is honest labour in tilling the soil and gathering the produce of the earth. If the farmer ceased from work, the fox-hunter would not long remain to follow his cruel sport, nor would he have money to circulate or horses to ride. No sport creates wealth; it only distributes it, and sometimes it destroys it.

The Fortnightly Review contains a remarkable article, entitled "A Cure for Indolence," by which is meant the inability of some persons to keep on at continuous exertion to realise their ideal. Its suggestions, given from the material standpoint, have a curious resemblance to those rules of Christian living which are grounded in Christian faith and love. Regulation of the hours of work and of the hours of sleep is commended by the good effects that follow from the habit of regular devotion. "Gospel temperance" has an echo of itself in the instruction to "remove from the regimen all alcoholic preparations." The doctors who have neuropaths as patients—all indolent people are generally troubled with a poor digestion and weak nerves—are counselled to get them in love with some great idea, some lofty aim, and teach them to labour for it patiently and methodically. Surely the Christian faith supplies the grandest ideals and the most compelling motive. All the earthly wisdom of this scientific doctor, at least the vital part of it, is unconsciously carried out by every servant who hears his Master say, 'Follow Me." Godliness is profitable for this life.

*Certainty in Religion—1.

THERE can be no controversy about the unmistakable fact that at the present hour the religious tide is out....The minds of great masses of people are in a nebulous state concerning the Faith: the former ringing certainty has been replaced by a hesitancy which is numbing the souls of men. Mrs. Humphry Ward has expressed in a sentence what very many people regard as the truth: "The day is over for the certain people."

Christians are bound to regard the present unbelief of the masses as fraught with danger in every direction. It is a sorry outlook for any country when Faith begins to decay. Men's lives are bound up with the life and will of God, whose law is the only true rule for morals. If, therefore, men sever themselves from God the most terrible consequences must ensue—their inner life will wither, and outward morals will decay.

The men of our time declare that absolute certainty in religion is impossible. The Bible and the Universal Church affirm, on the contrary, that it is both possible and necessary. The issue is perfectly clear—on the one side is denial, on the other side affirmation. These two contradictory things we bring into the field; may God speed the war.

Let us begin with the affirmation of Faith. Certainty, I maintain, is the great key thought of the whole Christian revelation: its note is sounded everywhere. Open the Bible where you will, from Job, the earliest book, to John, the latest, and the voice which speaks of God is the voice of assurance. "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "The Lord is my Shepherd." "The Lord is the strength of my life." "God is a very present help in trouble." "I know whom I have believed." "We know that the Son of God hath come."

I ask you to observe that these definite affirmations proceed from persons belonging to many epochs, of different ages of life, of various temperaments, of various minds, and of various social positions. Differently expressed, they affirm but one truth, the soul's certainty of God. Further, they are not the enunciation of mere abstract doctrines, or external bigoted mental beliefs, but in each case they claim to be personal experiences. These expressions concerning the reality of God are not poetic rhapsodies, but the affirmation of practical realities. "The Lord is my Shepherd—my Light." He has done thus and so for me. I am absolutely certain about it.

From that Bible the canon of which is closed let us turn to that other Bible which God is ever writing—the life and experience of his Church. Here again the same consensus of testimony confronts us. There has never been a time in the history of the Church when the voice of assurance has ceased to speak. Christians have, unhappily, disagreed about many things, but they have always agreed in this, that God has really come to them, and they were absolutely certain of it. And those who so confidently made this affirmation were not persons of one type only, but of every conceivable type, belonging also to every station in life, and living under the most diverse conditions. Bishops, kings, princes, philosophers, artists, scientists, musicians, merchants, freedmen and slaves, old men and young children, have joined for nineteen centuries in one harmonious chorus. And rather than deny that Faith which was dearer to them than life, tens of thousands of them suffered martyrdom, while myriads more allowed themselves to be despoiled of all their possessions.

You may complain that all this is commonplace, but wise men never ignore the commonplace, for they know that nothing is really commonplace if it retains the power to instruct us. We cannot afford to do ourselves the injustice to ignore such a mass of evidence as that which we have reviewed to-day. We are bound, as honest men, to demand an explanation of such united testimony.

One of three things the Church in her testimony must be—true, false, or mistaken. Is she false? No one believes that, so we need not discuss it. Is she mistaken? This is more incredible even than that she is false, for consider what it means. Not one man, nor one age, nor one kind of temperament, but unnumbered millions of men, living in every age, and of all conceivable temperaments, have them been imposed upon! And, curiously enough, the falsehood has improved their lives in a most extraordinary manner, raising them even to sanctity—a remarkable thing for a falsehood to accomplish. The theory that all these people have been mistaken is simply absurd, and I leave it to your derision. There remains but one other explanation—their affirmation is true; and this I shall prove to you.

F. C. Spurr.

* From a series of Conferences for Men.

Public-house Profits.

SIX HUNDRED PER CENT.

AT the London Sheriff's Court on Saturday, before Mr. Under Sheriff Burchell and a special jury, the case of "Bouts v. the Great Central Railway Company, Limited," came on for hearing. This was a claim on the part of Mr. Frank Bouts, proprietor of the Nightingale Hotel, Alpha-road, St. John's Wood, for the sum of £9000 as compensation for the compulsory acquirement by the Great Central Railway Company of his licensed premises for the purpose of their terminus at St. John's Wood in connection with their new line to London. Mr. Candy, Q.C., and Mr. Ram were counsel for the claimant, and Mr. Littler, Q.C., represented the railway company.

In opening the case Mr. Candy said that the licensed premises in question were a most valuable property, and since the year 1895, when the Liberal party sustained a crushing defeat at the general election, it had enhanced in value considerably. As a matter of fact, immediately the Tory party came into power there was a "boom" in public-house property, and the value went up by leaps and bounds. The Nightingale was a fully licensed and free house, and it possessed a peculiar clientèle, the persons residing in the neighbourhood of St. John's Wood constituting a most profitable custom. Those who were in the habit of visiting the Nightingale did not, as a rule, drink beer, but in the majority of cases expensive wines and spirits. The following were the average profits on articles sold by the claimant: Port wine, 200 per cent.; brandy, 200 per cent.; whisky, 100 per cent.; gin, 50 per cent.; rum, 50 per cent.; and beer, 33 per cent. Being a glass trade in beer the profit was close upon 100 per cent. The average takings per month were £416, and the annual net profits £1200.

YOUNG LADY CUSTOMERS.

Mr. Frank Bouts, the claimant, said that he gave £6500 for the lease of the Nightingale, and the total amount he paid on the change was £7457. He obtained a loan from the brewers (Messrs. Reid), £5000; £800 from the distillers, and £850 on bills. Of these amounts he had repaid £1500, but that did not signify in the least, as he had not been pressed for the money. His business was a most lucrative one, and the sale of champagne was considerable. In the neighbourhood of North Bank—a fashionable quarter—more champagne was drunk than anything, and the majority of his customers were young ladies. The most profitable part of his business was in connection with the sale of mineral waters. Port wine he purchased as low as 3s. per gallon, and he retailed it at £1 1s. per gallon (600 per cent.); champagne he bought at 30s. and 32s. per dozen, and sold it at 7s. and 8s. per bottle, or between 300 and 400 per cent. profit. For large sodas he paid 1s. a dozen, and across the counter they were sold at 4d. each, or 300 per cent. profit. Half-bottles were bought at 9d. a dozen and sold at 2s. British cigars he bought at 8s. and 9s. per 100, and retailed them at 2d. and 3d. each. Mexican and foreign cigars he purchased at 12s. per 100, and sold them at 3d., and where he could get it 4d. each.

NO DIFFICULTY IN GETTING IT.

Mr. Candy, Q.C.: Did you find any difficulty in getting it?

Claimant: None at all. (Laughter.)

Continuing, the plaintiff said that his profit on cheap wines was 200 and 300 per cent. Brandy he bought at 8s. in bond, and after "breaking it down" he retailed it at 31s. On whisky and gin the profit was 100 and 50 per cent. respectively. On pale ales there was a profit of 150 per cent., and on ordinary beers 33 per cent. Where the beer was sold in glasses the profit was much greater.

Mr. Marks, a public-house broker, said that it was the custom, in dealing with licensed premises, to write down a profit of 56 per cent. on the gross takings.

Mr. Littler, Q.C., for the railway company, characterised the claim as extravagant. He did not dispute that the profits on the sale of intoxicating liquor were considerable.

The jury gave a verdict for £4500.

Sons and Orphans of Missionaries.

THE Home and School for the Sons and Orphans of Missionaries was established at Walthamstow in 1842; and, after one or two removals, it occupied its present site at Blackheath in 1857. Its record for the past year indicates the high reputation which the institution has gained, and shows a constantly increasing number of applications for admission.

A house has been taken for three years, in close proximity to the school, which will, with other arrangements, provide accommodation for an additional eighteen or twenty boys; but with further development of numbers and imminent changes in regard to educational systems a bolder and more radical move will have to be made in regard to this Home. It is hoped that the Christian public who are interested in the cause of foreign missions may bear the condition of things in mind.

Since the foundation of the institution 580 boys have passed through the school. Of these, thirty-four have become missonaries, twenty per cent. have entered the learned professions, and a large majority of the remainder have filled honourable and useful positions in life. The benefits of the school are at present enjoyed by some eighty-six boys, and the headmaster's report concerning their work is very creditable.

Special attention is paid to Bible study, and the Book is made the basis of all religious instruction. Bible-classes are held on Sundays, and special services are arranged from time to time. The hon. treasurer is Mr. Edward Unwin, 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Looking back on California.

We left Los Angeles on Tuesday, April 5. After a tedious journey through the desert of California and Arizona, and the States of Texas, Kansas, and Illinois, we arrived at Chicago on the following Saturday morning. What a contrast between leaving and arriving! There a cloudless sky, a mild summer breeze, lawns, and orchards blooming; here a heavy rain pouring down, lead coloured clouds hanging over the city, and a cold wind blowing from the lake. In such circumstances the mind travels back swiftly to sunny surroundings; and the incidents of a near past pass before our mental eyes in kaleidoscopic changes.

We walk again under palms and eucalyptus to the meeting-house of the Christian Alliance, where opportunity is given to expound the Word of God. Sisters and brethren, taught in the Spirit, link on their own experience to the teaching received. Hearts are touched, souls are drawn nearer to God.

Then, again, at night we enter the Pacific Union Mission. The hall is filled with men of the working class. Mr. Mason, the missionary, is urging upon them the necessity of a new birth. There is response in many a face upon which passion and a hard life have pressed their marks. Conviction works under the mask of seeming indifference.

OVER A THOUSAND MEN have been brought to Christ within the last four years.

Another time we take the car to the Florence Crittenden Home. Dr. Yoakim introduces us to the matron. In the parlour we face the pictures of the owners of the house, Rev. and Mrs. Stevens, who, being led to live a life of faith, gave all they had unto the service of the Lord, and went out of this their home, and the matron and rescue girls came in.

On the opposite wall we see Mr. Crittenden, a gentleman of New York, and little Florence (for many years with Jesus), in whose memory had been started homes for illegitimate maternity cases. There are now over thirty such rescue homes in the United States. The inmates are recruited from all nations, and represent the class of girls who have come into trouble through inexperience rather than bad tendencies. They are for the most part young and pretty. We saw a collection of some white as milk, some dark, some brown, but all beautifully cared for.

TWENTY-TWO LOVELY BABIES,

If a woman see no way to bring up her child, she is free to give him or her to the institution, in which case Christian adoptive parents are sought for the little ones; but it is very seldom that a mother renounces her rights to her baby. The young mothers are kept in the home for six months, at the end of which time situations are found for them. Twenty-five dollars is paid by or for them; they may pay it out of their wages after they leave, if unable to do so on entering.

Before leaving we assembled in the parlour for a little prayer-meeting. A child-like looking girl of the Hebrew type offered a fervent prayer to her Redeemer, and then another and another. "Do they all become converted?" "Yes, all," said the doctor. "When?" "Generally at once. The time of distress, when the girl is despairing under the burden of her fault, is the most propitious for leading her to the Saviour; as the drowning man reaches out for the saving rope, so does she strive in mortal anxiety to get hold of Jesus. Once ashore, she continues to hold on."

One afternoon we walked to a little school in the China town of Los Angeles. Twenty children, boys and girls from five to fourteen years of age, are receiving instruction in English from a lady missionary, appointed by the Presbyterian Board for Foreign Missions. Mrs. Cruickshank has an admirable way of dealing with little ones. While she is occupying them in various ways, seeds of kindness, of love, and of truth are continually being dropped into their hearts. The little dots repeat "God is love." The older ones recite John iii. 16. They tell at home what they have heard about Jesus. One of the mothers (who had at first opposed her child's going to the school), in removing to another town, asked Mrs. Cruickshank in broken English, and with tears in her eyes, "Pray for me to your Jesus."

The scene changes. We are in San Diego, a pleasant town near the Mexican frontier, claiming the most perfect climate in California and the best harbour in the world. At the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Surr we meet a pleasant company, and are introduced to the ministers of the Baptist and the Congregational churches, Dr. Knapp and Dr. Horton.

Mrs. Elizabeth Surr is the author of HYMNS AND POEMS ON THE LORD'S COMING (6d. Morgan & Scott) and "The King of Love" (Stoneman). Someone mentioned her to us as the SALT OF THE SAN DIEGO CHRISTIANS.

Whosoever had the pleasure of conversing with this lady will readily believe the assertion to be true.

Then again it is a lovely starlit night. After having enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg at their charming home on Coronado Beach, we accompany Mr Kellogg, who is service leader in the Floating Society of Christian Endeavour of San Diego, to the man-of-war Monterey, anchored in the bay. Five ladies come by the same boat. They distribute flowers to the young men. A harmonium is placed on the deck. A throng of fine-looking, sunburnt fellows gathers around it, heartily joining in the songs. Mr. Kellogg reads from the Prophet Jonah, which is followed by a heart-searching message from the same; a lady sings solos, and after the closing prayer they continue personal conversation until 9 p.m.

The aim of the Floating Society being to bring Christ to the seamen, meetings are held thrice a week aboard the different vessels which harbour at San Diego. As to the results, a decided stepping out on the spot is not frequently witnessed. Yet oftener than some are inclined to believe. In The Harbour Light, a little paper published quarterly in the interest and under the auspices of the Floating Society, we read the following:—

ACTUAL CONVERSIONS TAKE PLACE

"The terrible catastrophe to the U.S. Maine, casting a dark shadow over many American homes, comes close to every American. One of the sailors, William Rushworth, has gone down with the Maine. He found Christ in San Diego Harbour while serving his time on another vessel. A sunny face and a ringing testimony told of the joy his religion was bringing him."

Our mind wanders back to San Francisco. Through the kindness of Rev. C. C. Herriott, to whom we had a letter of introduction from Rev. Mr. Soarez, of the Christian Conference at Minneapolis, we are introduced to Mr. George B. Studd, who had just been spending a little time at Hawaii with his younger brother, who was on his way to Japan as a missionary. We attend the noon meeting in one of the halls of the Peniel Mission, which Mr. Studd and his coadjutors, Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson, are establishing in several of the towns and cities of California. It is a somewhat dingy dive in Chinatown, into which twenty or thirty men, sailors and others, have strolled. The meeting is led by two or three mission sisters. There are three Peniel Missions in San Francisco, doing an unpretentious but useful work, fishing not by net, but hook—a button-holding, personal work.

Here, as in other places, especially in Los Angeles and San Diego, many opportunities of addressing meetings are afforded to me, among others a Prophetic and Christian Alliance tent meeting at Oakland. On Sunday afternoon the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A., admitting ladies as well as gentlemen, has a crowded congregation. Mr. G. Montgomery, of the Brooklyn Temperance Hotel, invites me to hold a five days' mission in a Gospel hall in Mason-street, opened for noon prayer and nightly evangelistic meetings after Mr. Henry Varley's last visit to San Francisco.

Rev. Oliver C. Miller, of the Lutheran Church of the Holy Spirit, Rev. Dr. Carsten, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. R. C. Hobart, of the First Baptist Church, Oakland, kindly offer their pulpits. Sixteen days at the Golden Gate pass away much quicker than anticipated.

Here and elsewhere we invite a few missionaries and Christian workers for a drive through the magnificent parks, or for a few hours by the sea, or an outing into the mountains; and oh! how privileged we feel to see those dear friends who are bearing the burden and heat of the day in varied spheres, or fighting the Lord's battles in the high places of the field, enjoy the little pleasant change which gives them a new incentive for work! It is a joy to watch with what delight they drink in the pure mountain air and the cooling ocean-breeze, which to so many is a rare luxury. Christian travellers might often avail themselves of this profitable and enjoyable privilege.

VISITING THE YOSEMITE VALLEY.

And now the time comes when we have to bid good-bye to sunny California. Friends ask questions, such as, "Have you seen the Yosemite Valley? Have you seen the Big Trees? You ought not to go without seeing them." Our landlord is so impressed by the sense of our duty to visit the gems of the Sierra Nevada, that he induces Mr. Baxter, the agent of the Southern Pacific Company, to make arrangements for us to enter the valley a few days previous to its opening for the season. We were the first visitors this year.

After a three days' drive by stage, first through oak and cotton woods, manzanitas, etc., and then through a beautiful forest of immense cedars, firs, sugar-pines and yellow-pines, from 200 to 300 feet and more in height, and after having seen the renowned Big Trees (Sequoia gigantea), we first beheld the valley when the sun was nearing the western horizon—a sight wonderful in its immense proportions and scenic varieties.

Manifold descriptions have been given of the grandeur and picturesque beauties of its rocks, waterfalls, and surrounding mountains. None seems exhaustive, none really doing it justice. Impression varies according to the light. When we entered the valley a rainbow was playing upon one of its falls, The Bridal Veil. After reaching the hotel, we faced a waterfall sixteen times as high as Niagara. Cloud's Rest, the snow-clad mountain, was just nursing a cloud, the only one which could be seen in the sky. The reflection of the setting sun produced an effect upon it very much like the Alpen Glühen. The Sierra Nevada mountains are sometimes called the American Alps. The euphonious name Yosemite was given the valley by the soldiers of the Mariposa Battalion, which was so instrumental in subduing the mountain Indians. Yosemites, or grizzlies, were the most warlike tribe of them. They were pursued into their natural stronghold by these soldiers, who were the first white men to behold these wonders of nature, which are now visited by thousands of tourists, an eldorado for poets and painters.

The visitor to these and other scenes of creative grandeur should take time to be impressed by them. The Yosemite, the Yellowstone Park, the Grand Cañon of Colorado, Niagara Falls, and all such natural wonders may be looked at or "done" in a very little while; but to receive the impressions they were surely intended by the Creator to convey, not hours, but days, or even weeks, must be spent among them.

R. Cope Morgan.

Soldiers in India.

SAID an officer one Sunday evening in the Rawal Pindi Soldiers' Home: "Stationed as we are on the North-west frontier of this vast empire, a great trust is ours; we do not know how soon the day may come when we shall be called upon to fight, perhaps to die."

A strange thrill passed through the gathering as the ominous words lingered in all ears, and the tears started unbidden to the workers' eyes as they looked round on the bright young soldiers who filled the large meeting room: men of the Rifle Brigade, of the Royal Artillery, of the Gordon Highlanders, of the 4th Dragoon Guards, of the K.O.S. Borderers, etc., etc., were gathered there. Miss Ashe writes from Rawal Pindi: "The first to leave were the Rifle Brigade. How well we remember the night they marched away; and shall we ever forget their return from Tochi—that valley of death! The thought of the 100 graves in the Tochi valley was uppermost in all our minds that first night we sat and talked together, and our hearts were very sad as we listened to the story of how one after another of our friends had died quietly and nobly on his bed at bhoosa without complaint. No man went into hospital unless he actually could not stand, and in the midst of all this terrible mortality the men of the 93rd and the Rifle Brigade showed a quiet heroism that reflects lasting credit on them.

"The next to go were the 10th Field Battery R.A., taking with it the first man who enlisted under the banner of Christ in this new Home. Once or twice he wrote, and then a comrade wrote to tell how this young soldier had been DROWNED IN THE PANJKARA.

A few days later came an unfinished letter, which had been found in his kit: 'God has been my guide and friend since I came up here, and those who put their trust in Him will never be confounded. Please pray for me. The Battery has had a good time of it, but ——' If he could finish that letter to-day surely it would be, 'but to be with Christ is far better.'

"The Sunday after, in the middle of our evening meeting, the 'assembly' went for the Gordons, and as they hurriedly left the meeting some jumped on the platform and were gone. By that time we had almost learned to expect good-byes, and yet when the following Friday a note came from a friend in K Battery, saying they were under orders to leave for Peshawar that day, and we knew it also meant that the 4th Dragoon Guards were going, our hearts sank within us. All day we sat in the verandah, so that we might not miss anyone who came in for a parting word.

"A little sketch of Fort Jamrud lies before me. In its bastions these men had many a glorious meeting, and many a letter of joy and triumph was written from that fort. How eagerly we watched for these letters, and how glad we were that we had kept in touch with many from whom no answer can ever come. Of one we heard as follows:—'Forgive the liberty I take in writing to you, as I am a stranger. Sergeant J. was killed in action a few days ago, and a letter from you was found in his pocket. He had been wounded three times, but fought on before the fatal bullet came, and when his body was brought in, though covered with blood and dust, the old look of peace was on his face.' When tidings such as these came there was but one thing more for us to do, and this proved the hardest task of all, to write messages of comfort to SORROWING HEARTS IN THE HOMELAND."

But other work remained for Miss Ashe and her co-workers. For months wounded and sick men kept arriving at the Base Hospital in Rawal Pindi. Day after day found the Soldiers' Home ladies by the bedsides of these lonely and suffering men. Thank God, we believe many of them were led to look to the only one who could help and comfort them—Jesus.

We have now three soldiers' Homes in India—Rawal Pindi, Quetta, and Murrèe. The Quetta Home was opened this year, and is simply crowded out. Miss Schofield writes from Quetta:—"It seems as if these men were only waiting for the chance to be better men—to lead a different life—and the moment the chance came they seized it."

Our new building at Murree—"The Lockhart Soldiers' Home"—will be opened in a month's time. I need £1000 immediately for that home in order to complete it and open it free of debt. Again Miss Ashe writes:—"I am looking forward to welcoming at Murree this hot season white-faced, weary men, from the hot, dusty plains—men for whom it will be the first furlough in India."

So much might be done at Murree! So much might be done in India! For from other stations comes the call for Homes. Will you help us to plant Homes in the midst of these lonely, tempted lads? And will you not help us quickly, before these lads are laid in some lonely, unknown grave, or before their fresh young manhood is stained and cursed by sin? I will gladly give further information to any who desire it. (Miss) ELISE SANDES.

Soldiers' Home, Cork.

On the Border of Nepaul.

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN who saw the letter which appeared on October 8, 1896, telling of Nepaul and its needs, may have wondered that nothing further has been written. Much has passed since then to which I can only briefly allude. My husband and I spent about four months in England and Scotland, visiting various places, and having the privilege of speaking at many meetings. On our return to Calcutta in August we came to Ghoom, the village written of before, near Darjeeling, there to wait until we could secure the native house spoken of in Sukhia. This we succeeded in doing, and we have been at work here for six months.

During that time we have had over 3000 patients, of whom nearly a half have been Nepalese, among them the headmen of two Nepalese villages and an officer of the Nepalese army. Our house occupies an ideal place for mission work, facing the large open space in the village where the weekly bazaar is held. The room in front, used as a dispensary, is clearly seen and easily reached. Bazaar days are, of course, our busiest days. One and another come in to morning prayers, and we are kept busily employed in the dispensary till about 12.30, when our open-air service is held. The people gather round, often to the number of a hundred and fifty, and the Gospel is preached. Our friend Mr. Macdonald, from Ghoom, of whom we wrote before, as often as he can rides out here to help, and with our native servant, Nam Singh, gives earnest Gospel address in Nepalee. In the afternoon we reopen the dispensary and work on for some hours. On other days the dispensary work is only from 10 a.m. till 2 p.m. (except for urgent cases), but every opportunity is taken of making known the glad tidings of salvation.

As often as possible we visit the Bustes and native villages round about, and have succeeded in preaching the Gospel in Nepaul, in two villages just over the border, without hindrance. The common people receive us gladly, but it is with the authorities the hindrance is to be found. During the last few weeks we have sold quite a number of Gospels in Nepalee, many of these copies being bought by Nepalese returning to their homes from the bazaar, some as far into the interior as ten days' journey. Few can read, else we might sell many more.

Extra accommodation for the treatment of the patients is urgently required, and were the means forthcoming could be procured at once. The owners of this house have offered it to us for £105, and ground adjoining could be had from Government either free or at a merely nominal rate, and so for a small sum we might have the needed addition. We sorely need fellow workers, and must have a place to put them—hence everything emphasises the need of adding to the house. Even if we had access into the interior to-morrow, this place offers too important an opening not to retain possession of it, being within three miles of the frontier and having its large weekly bazaar of about a thousand people.

I trust this short account may call forth workers, and may interest those who have already so kindly enabled us to begin, and have upheld our hands in prayer. REBECCA INNES WRIGHT.

Nepaul Mission House,
Sukhia, by Darjeeling, India.

Notes from India.

IN a recent letter, Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institute, says:—

Thousands of the poor people are still in great distress. During the famine of the last year they were compelled to sell everything, leave their homes in the country, and come into the towns to try and pick up a precarious living. This is a most difficult thing to do. If anything is earned, they are able to eat. If nothing is earned, that night they must go to sleep without food. Even now that the crops have been reaped the grain is still much dearer than it was before the famine visitation. You can, therefore, understand the cause of the destitution of the people, and the large numbers that attend our Beggars' Church.

The dispensary has become a permanent part of our work. Of course our services commence daily with a Gospel address and prayer. During the hot season and rains it will be almost impossible to continue to do so. We need a dispensary, and for this we shall require at least £150. The state of the funds of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society precludes the possibility of its assisting us in this work.

I have recently been in the Punjab. I was greatly struck with the appearance of the country. The miles upon miles of fields waving with most luxuriant crops of sugar cane, wheat, barley, ivar bajra grain, and cotton was a most refreshing sight to me. The villages, too, were more numerous and populous than we are accustomed to in Rajputana and the N.W. Provinces. The men and women were all better clad, and the bullocks, instead of the walking skeletons I had been accustomed to, were sleek and fat. The explanation of all this is given in one word, "Canals." What a pleasure it was to look upon the great, broad channels reflecting the luxuriant vegetation on their banks, and pouring their waters into the numerous arteries that ramify through the country, producing fertility over miles of country that would otherwise have been a desert!

I went to Ludhiana, in the Punjab, to be present at a meeting of the directors of the North India School of Medicine for Christian Women. This is a well devised and carefully planned effort for the education of Christian women as medical missionaries. It is in the hands of Miss Edith Brown, her teaching staff, and the lady members of the Indian committee. All that it needs is the hearty co-operation of missionaries in this country and the assistance of missionary societies at home to make it a complete success and a real blessing to India.

Notes from Dr. Cuyler.

WE are in the midst of a most needless and wretched war, brought on us by the party rivalries of the politicians, and against the wishes and efforts of our noble President, who sought to bring relief to Cuba by wise diplomacy.

Our best men deplore the war; but as the most direct road to peace seems to lead through blood we must fight it out, and be done with the horrid business as soon as possible. All Christian enterprises suffer amid the uproar and havoc of war.

Mr. Gladstone on his dying bed! The noble Tabernacle in ashes! Such tidings start my honest tears. THEO. L. CUYLER.

Brooklyn, U.S.A.

In a later note, dated April 29, Dr. Cuyler says:—In my recent letter I stated that we have been precipitated into a needless war, which might have been prevented if our noble President McKinley had been allowed to continue his wise measures of diplomacy. While that is true, it is too late to criticise mistakes. Our Government has declared war, and it is the general feeling among our best people now that the only road to peace lies through a vigorous prosecution of the conflict.

The sooner it is with the better, and there is a substantial unanimity in sustaining our national Government. Let us hope and pray that out of the horrors of war a wise Providence may evolve some blessings to suffering Cuba and to the cause of humanity.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 15.

"He lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner."—Acts x. 6.

THIS lodging must have been somewhat distasteful to the Apostle, not only because of its insalubrious odours, but because of the association with death that rendered him liable to the ceremonial pollution which a religious Jew, as Peter was, peculiarly dreaded. Probably he was only driven to it by the sternest necessity. But was it not remarkable that he who had been the chief apostle of the Church, and who had but recently come from a most successful tour, should suddenly be isolated from all his happy and holy associations, and be stranded for many days in the tanner's house! (ib. ix. 43).

Yet such dealings on the part of the Lord with his servant are easy of explanation. We are all apt to substitute work for God instead of communion with Him. We become strong in our own strength, elated with success, puffed up by the adulation of our friends. It is needful, therefore, that we be withdrawn from the madding crowd and the career of unbroken prosperity; that the glare of the sun should be tempered, and confidence in ourselves be brought low. There is only one resort. To be hidden in the quiver, to become dependent on the widow woman of Zarephath, to spend forty years in the desert, till the passionate impulses of our own life subside, to go apart into Arabia, to spend the slowly moving weeks in the tanner's house.

Whilst Peter waited, he maintained his habits of prayer, left his heart open to the impressions and teachings of the Holy Spirit, awaited the next movements of the cloudy pillar, set himself to acquire lessons which, though subversive of his past experience, reacted on his whole after life, and from his retirement went forth to unlock the door of a new era.

MONDAY, May 16.

"He was a good man."—Acts xi. 24.

This is the Holy Spirit's verdict on the character and life of Barnabas. Very different to the magniloquent inscriptions on the tombs of warriors and statesmen, but it were better to deserve this at the lips of the Master than to have the longest list of titles ever appended to a mortal's name. For a good man like this, some would even dare to die. The characteristics of this good man were these:—

He could see the good in movements outside his own church order.—The church at Antioch originated, as this paragraph proves, in the preaching of a number of unknown, unordained refugees, who were fleeing from the iron hand of persecution. All we know of them is that they were men of Cyprus and Cyrene. They had broken through the barrier of the ages by preaching to the Gentiles (see R.V.), great numbers of whom had been saved. The Church in Jerusalem was somewhat suspicious of this new departure, and sent Barnabas to report; but when he came he was forthwith convinced of its genuineness, saw the evidence of the hand of the Lord, and was glad.

He was willing that another should share with himself the joys of harvest.—He went off to Troas to seek his old acquaintance, and perhaps fellow-student, Paul, and for a whole year the two wrought side by side in loving fellowship, and taught much people.

He was eager that people should be added to the Lord.—Too often good men seek a following for themselves, and rejoice in those who are added to their church or work. This is not the noblest style of work.

TUESDAY, May 17.

"The iron gate."—Acts xii. 10.

There are iron gates before most of us. We are not specially anxious about the first or second ward, but ah! that iron gate! The iron gate of supreme difficulty, of a parent's prohibition against entering the mission-field, of some obstinate circumstance which seems to forbid the execution of our plans, of some barred and locked prohibition, of death at the end of all. It may be that in his strange bewilderment, between waking and sleeping, Peter anticipated this iron gate with a good deal of dread. That, at least, would bar his progress; but lo, it opened of its own accord. So shall it be with many of the evils that we anticipate.

Not before we come to them, but at the moment of reaching them, when heart and flesh fail, in the dim light, we shall find them standing open, set back for us to pass. The tram-line is not cleared from end to end before the tram starts. Were the driver to wait for this, he would never start at all. But as he comes to each van, or drag, or carriage, it moves, and gives a free course; or if it seems dilatory his whistle hastens it. So when we come to the object we have dreaded most we shall find it gone.

Let there be plenty of prayer, "prayer without ceasing." Let there be prompt obedience to the angel's touch and summons; let there be the action of a sanctified judgment on the impulses of the Spirit; and as you go through life you will find yourself escorted by an invisible companion, who holds the key to all doors.

WEDNESDAY, May 18.

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said: Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts xiii. 2.

The Holy Spirit, as the representative of the ascended Lord, is supreme in the Church. It is his sovereign voice that summons his chosen workers to undertake missionary or home enterprise. Dr. Ryland, who at first opposed Carey's thought of going to India, said afterwards, "I believe God Himself infused into the mind of Carey that solicitude for the salvation of the heathen which cannot be fairly traced to any other source." And the same is true of all missionaries. The true call is always of the Divine Spirit. He is gloriously independent of colleges and professors, of ecclesiastical ordination and apostolical descent. Whom He wills, He calls. Whom He calls, He separates. Whom He separates, He endows and sends forth.

But, Divine and absolute though the selection is, the Spirit seeks the concurrence of the Church. It was in answer to the Church's prayer for direction that the Spirit designated Barnabas and Saul for the great work of world evangelisation; and it was when the Church had fasted and prayed, and had offered these two to God as their wave-offering, that they were sent forth by the Holy Ghost. Thus the Spirit and the Bride co-operate.

In determining whether you have been called by the Holy Spirit to be a missionary, you must certainly call in the advice of Christian friends, and specially of the church with which you worship. If the Spirit of God is in you and them, they will ratify the movements of your heart.

THURSDAY, May 19.

"Which bare witness unto the word of his grace, granting signs and wonders to be done by their hands.—Acts xiv. 3. (R.V.)

There is no source of encouragement more fruitful of help than the co-witness and co-working of the Holy Spirit. We are in communion, i.e., in partnership, with the Holy Spirit. Whilst we work from the outside, He works from within; whilst we sow the seed, He waters it abundantly. We must be very careful to be such in our own character and our teaching that He may co-operate with us. And when we work with Him, and He with us, the results are beyond measure astonishing, and to be attributed to Him alone.

"We are now seven years in this land," wrote one of Gossner's missionaries from the land of the Kohls in India; "but through these long years it was but trial of our patience and endurance...Everything seemed to be in vain, and many said the mission was useless. Then the Lord Himself kindled a fire before our eyes; and it seized not only single souls but spread from village to village, and from every side the question was borne to us, What shall we do? How shall we be saved? And I thought it was no more a heathen land I was in, but a Christian and at home."

Deus habet horas et moras, says the old proverb. God has his seasons and delays. We do not at once see the result of our sowings, toils, and tears; but we are conscious that our work is with our God, we know that we have our petitions, we rejoice in hope. And finally the answer comes so overwhelmingly that men cry, What hath God wrought? This is his finger!

FRIDAY, May 20.

"They rehearsed all things that God had done with them."—Acts xv. 4. (R.V.)

"Rehearsing what signs and wonders God had wrought...by them."—Acts xv. 12. (R.V.)

There is a difference between these two assertions. They are in exquisite harmony, but each contributes a different note. In the first we have the co-operation of the Holy Spirit with every faithful worker whom He sends forth. In the second we have his work wrought through a yielded life, which becomes his pure channel and mouthpiece. This is his twofold ministry.

His witness with us.—As we speak of Jesus crucified, risen, ascended, the blessed Spirit convicts men of sin, righteousness, and judgment. To every faithful word of testimony there is a deep resonant affirmation from this hidden but mighty co-operant. If we say, "Behold the Lamb of God!" He adds, "He takes away the sin of the world." If we say, "He died in weakness," the Spirit adds, "He was raised in power." If we say, "Repent and believe the Gospel," He adds, "Now is the accepted time. The Holy Ghost saith to-day."

His witness through us.—"My word," said our Lord, "is not mine, but his that sent Me." And what was his glory may be ours also. We speak not of ourselves. This is the secret of a fruitful life—to be the yielded channel, to be the cleansed vessel, to be as the bugle at the castle-gate on which the king may sound his summons, to be the lute on whose strings the skilled hand may play. Oh, be sure that the most lasting work in this world is only possible when we can say with Paul that we will not boast of anything save what Christ has wrought through us to make men obedient to the Gospel.

SATURDAY, May 21.

"A certain woman named Lydia."—Acts xvi. 14. "He called for a light, and sprang in."—Acts xvi. 29.

These are typical cases, put here in juxtaposition for the teaching and comfort of believers in every age. Each of them needed Christ, and each was brought into his true light, but each came in a different way. Lydia's heart opened as a flower beneath the touch of the sun, so gradually and imperceptibly that it was impossible to say the precise moment of her new life. The jailer came to Christ suddenly, startlingly, amid the crash of an earthquake. The one was drawn by love, the other driven by fear. A distinguished missionary says, "The Lord awakened me with a kiss." It was so that Lydia's heart was won. Another tells us that the Lord sprang on him like a lion; it was thus with the jailer.

Do not always be looking out for signs and manifestations, for marked experiences. We do not notice the lines of longitude and latitude as we cross the ocean of life. Spring fades into summer imperceptibly. Without knowing it, your character may be in the process of transfiguration. By insensible gradations the work of God may be proceeding in your heart, as the tide rises by tiny wavelets that appear to recede as fast as they advance. Do not measure progress by experiences; only be yielded to God, and let Him do his will.

Do not undervalue the influence of fear. We must produce an effect somehow, and there are some natures that never will be awakened unless they are startled by being brought face to face with the consequences of sin. If men will not come by the highest motives, be thankful that they come by any. Remember it is not belief about Christ, about his death or resurrection, but trust in Him as a living Person, that saves from the power and penalty of sin.

F. B. M.

Buried in the Country.—III.

AT my second "at home" to the women we were fairly afloat, and things looked promising. Not only were the three pioneers there, but they had each brought a friend, and four others who were prevented from coming the week before by the heavy rain now put in an appearance. So that I had a class of ten, and that afternoon was spent in what was to be our usual fashion. Let me briefly describe what this was.

We met in a sitting-room in our house—perhaps that fact made the meeting more popular than if it had been in a bare and cheerless schoolroom; I may be wrong, but a large, empty schoolroom always gives me a chill spiritually, and not infrequently physically as well when a tiny class assembles there. A cosy vestry is much more to the purpose if a room in a private house is not available, but this last is by far the best and most popular.

We began the afternoon by a very short prayer, which I generally took, and then the sewing began. The women brought their own work, and there was no cutting out of garments. I sold them materials at a cheaper rate than they could themselves have bought them, since we sent large orders to a Manchester firm. Every woman paid in so much per week, and I gave a penny in the shilling interest when the money was withdrawn. For the first quarter of the hour, while my visitors sewed, I taught them a verse of some hymn or chorus which they might remember and sing when they were busy washing or ironing at home. Many of Moody and Sankey's hymns lent themselves for this, and by degrees we learnt a large number.

For about half an hour I read a book to them, and (will my readers be shocked?) I always chose a book which would cause a laugh if possible. As a rule, I am convinced we do not sufficiently consider the element of laughing in such classes. To bring a smile, a gleam of light, across some tired careworn face full of anxious thought, to raise of genuine merriment, this is worth very much. The serious element will not lose thereby; the Bible reading at the close will come with greater effectiveness if the minds of those present receive it with freshness. "You people are always so dull" is a charge often made against parish workers in their gatherings, and there is surely some foundation for the charge when one notices how continually the same set of persons attend the meetings, those whose minds have a natural bias towards them, while outsiders are hard to catch.

A HEARTY RINGING LAUGH

The reading over, a cup of tea and biscuit were handed round to everyone present. I was a little doubtful as to the expediency of tea, because my guests were not of the very poor class and would be going home to their own comfortable tea-tables; but on reflection it seemed wiser to have it, since it certainly drew the women together, and also made a break between the two parts of the meeting. Tea finished, we all sang a hymn, and then came the short Bible reading, the whole being over by four o'clock punctually, so that the women could get home for their husbands and for the children, who would be leaving school then.

I ought to add that though we admitted babies they occupied a separate room, so the mothers could have a complete rest. Sometimes in the earlier part of the meeting I made a change, in order to keep our gathering "fresh"—there is always such a tendency in these classes to run in a rut after a while, and the interest accordingly slackens. Instead of the reading I taught them how to make a poultice, or or I made a cake or pudding of some sort, and then gave round slips of paper with the directions I myself had followed. This variety was keenly appreciated, but we never did more than one new thing in the afternoon, and that only every two or three weeks. The class steadily grew, not by leaps and bounds, but slowly and surely, and the old members did not drop off owing to our system of hunting up absentees. With regard to the main object of all, the bringing of the women to know Christ, that I hope we—for there were several true Christians among us—never forgot. No one was spoken to individually at the meetings—I did not want to frighten people away—but we managed in this fashion: The Christians who were avowedly such and myself met now and then to pray together; we took certain names and prayed for these definitely, and then when I called to see these particular members in their own houses, and was alone with them, the chance often came for a quiet talk.

BANDAGE A SCALDED HAND,

And that class of women was one of our happiest enterprises, and on it there assuredly rested a rich blessing. It had always seemed to me that in it lay the "key to the situation," if I may so speak, and our other classes would be easy after that. And so indeed it proved. RUS.

Mr. McNeill in London.

CLOSE OF ISLINGTON MISSION.

AFTER three weeks' continuous preaching in the Agricultural Hall, Mr. McNeill has ended his mission in that part of North London. The vast spaces of the mammoth building that have re-echoed with the Gospel message are silent and deserted save for the preparations for the Royal Military Tournament. The area that has been crowded with eager faces drinking in the earnest words of the evangelist will soon be the scene of very different proceedings. A survey of the past three weeks makes us feel exceedingly thankful to God that in his good providence this great auditorium has been at the disposal of the preacher of Christ's gospel of peace and soul-healing and salvation. Reckoning the attendance at 10,000 on each of the four Sunday evenings, with an average of 6000 for each week night service, and an additional 10,000 for the Sunday morning gathering and the afternoon meeting of Sunday last, we arrive at a grand total of 140,000 hearers for the three weeks. Assuming that a good proportion of these were repeated listeners, we have still a very notable fact to reckon with in the attractive potency of the Word of God on human hearts. In this calculation we have left out of account the large congregations in churches who have heard the evangelist on the four same Sabbath mornings.

Last Sunday was a busy day for Mr. McNeill. In the forenoon he preached in his old church at Regent-square, the first time his voice has been heard within its walls since he resigned its pastorate nearly seven years ago. The church was crowded, and the subject of the discourse was the steadfast faith of Daniel in the face of the crafty malice and jealous hate of his enemies.

The experiment of a Sunday afternoon gathering in the Agricultural Hall was thoroughly successful so far as numbers went; the congregation must have totalled up to some 7,000 persons, to whom Mr. McNeill preached one of his most telling sermons, on the incident of the woman who touched the hem of the Saviour's garment, and got immediate release from her long-standing, weary, wasting, complaint. The Gospel applications of this narrative are evident, and were pressed home by the preacher with all his persuasive force.

Needless to say the great hall was crowded to overflowing in the evening for the closing meeting of the mission. In addition the Mohawk Hall was filled, and the message of salvation was delivered by Mr. J. S. Smithson, who will be remembered by many friends as a zealous and able ally of Mr. Moody in his earlier visits to this country.

Many well-known friends were on the platform of the large hall, to show interest and sympathy with the work that Mr. McNeill has so assiduously maintained these three past weeks. Before the sermon, Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, led in prayer; he made very earnest petition that the last meeting might be signalised by real conversions, and that some of the converts might become bigger preachers of the Gospel than Mr. McNeill himself. There were the usual valedictory words from the evangelist, who expressed personal thanks to all who had in any way helped to make the meetings effective and successful. It had been a big thing, he said, numerically, and also spiritually. He trusted that much of the outcome would appear in connection with the regular, steady church and chapel work of North London, and that those workers who had got a soul-lift would carry their renewed enthusiasm and zeal into their stated labours from week to week. Mr. McNeill informed the assembly that an effort is being made by the committee to secure the Royal Albert Hall for a two weeks' series of meetings in June, in the very height of the season. If the council of the hall accede to the proposed arrangements, an effort will be made during that period to reach dwellers in the West End, and Mr. McNeill asked for the co-operation by prayer of all lovers of souls. (The hall has been secured for ten week days; particulars next week.)

The evening's discourse on the healing of the palsied man carried by four through the obstructing crowd, to the feet of the Saviour, formed a basis for many cogent and insistent appeals, both to Christian workers and to those still under the blighting power of the malady of sin. For a full hour the preacher held his audience. At the close of his impressive utterance he led in prayer, and a memorable mission in the Agricultural Hall closed with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again."

This week Mr. McNeill is holding meetings in Mildmay Conference Hall at 3.30 in the afternoons, and in Shoreditch Tabernacle at 8 in the evening (Sunday 6.30). He will continue the meetings in these places till May 18 inclusive, after which he will take a period of rest.

Here and There.

HERE is the darkness, here the toil,
There is the light and rest.
Here is the faith with many a foil,
There is full sight confess'd.
Here is the knowledge gained by grief,
There it is crowned with joy;
Here is the pleasure marr'd and brief,
There it has no alloy.
Here is the cloud and the blinding shower,
There the clear shining sky;
Here is the swiftly fleeting hour,
There is eternity.

H. HALLETT-BUCKNOLE.

Scottish "Monthly Visitors'" Tract Society.—By means of this Society and its branches, the Visitor is circulated monthly in some 900 towns and villages throughout Great Britain and abroad. Ministers or office-bearers of churches and societies may obtain information as to the organisation of local distribution by communicating with the secretary, Mr. R. Henderson Smith, 40, Hanover-street, Edinburgh. Competent and sympathetic writers have well served the society in the production of suitable tracts; and these papers have, as a whole, met with cordial and eager welcome.

World's Young Women's Christian Association.—The first Triennial Conference of the World's Y.W.C.A. is to be held in London June 14 and 18. Prayer is asked for blessing on this important gathering. Prayer meeting, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., Tuesday, June 14, at 3.30 p.m. Bible readings by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, 26, George-street. Wednesday to Friday, June 15 to 17, at 10 a.m. Public meetings at Polytechnic Hall, Regent-street, Wednesday to Friday, June 15 to 17, at 2.30 p.m., when reports dealing with the most distinctive feature of the Y.W.C.A work in each country will be read, also papers on women's duties towards the State, the intellectual and moral training of women, and Y.W.C.A. work in women's colleges, U.S.A. Annual meeting of London Y.W.C.A. at Exeter Hall, Thursday, June 16, at 8 p.m. Concluding devotional meeting, addressed by Mrs. Bannister and Pastor Theodore Monod, at 26, George-street, on Friday, June 17, at 7 p.m.

A Whole-hearted Missionary.

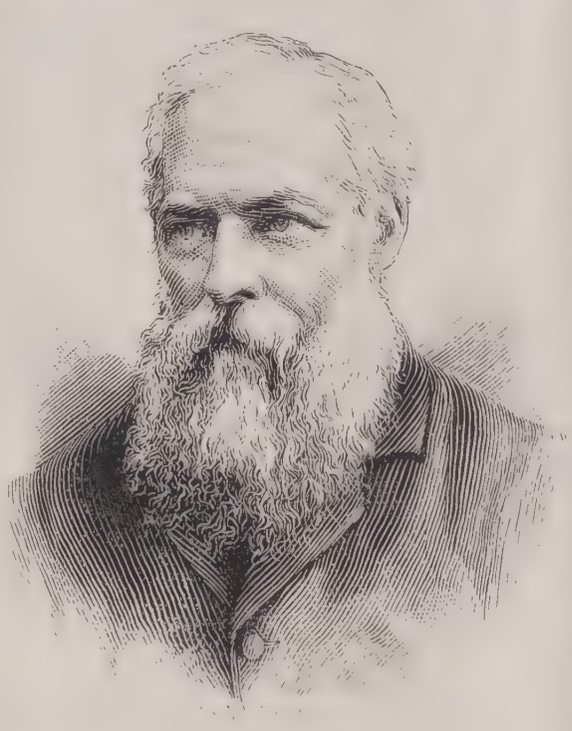
Rev. EDWIN LEWIS, Bellary, South India.

THE successful worker whose portrait we give to-day has for so long held a commanding position in South India that his removal leaves a strange void. To think of the fine old station of Bellary belonging to the London Missionary Society, and its district of 9,000 square miles, every part of which was dominated by the ceaseless energy of this great evangelist, without his presence in it produces a feeling of bewilderment. The sense of bereavement also hinders the formation of a true estimate of his personality and work.

While we may look for an adequate account of his career as a tribute to his memory and a stimulus to young workers, we may here give some of the chief facts and features of "that race well run."

Edwin Lewis was born at Milborne Port in 1843, and educated at Hackney College and the Highgate Institution for training missionaries. He was of medium height, and compactly built. His fine, well-cut features and his kindly but commanding eye were emblematic of the saintly soul they enshrined.

He was also a genial, brotherly man, and possessed that personal magnetism which, aided and directed by God's Spirit, makes a man very successful as a medium in the salvation of souls.



In 1863 Mr. Lewis took the eastern part of the mission and the Telugu service at Kowl Bazaar Chapel, while rendering aid in the Wardlaw Institution. Mrs. Lewis took charge of the Girls' Boarding and Day Schools. All through his career this devoted wife has been his best helper, although in recent years she has been a great sufferer. But though physical weakness pointed out the advisability of rest in a more genial climate, neither husband nor wife ever thought of taking it. Each time they have come to England they have been sent by the doctors. Time after time he was prostrated by fever, but the moment he could get out of bed away he went to his beloved work. And it is well. We need such examples in these days when the movements of so many workers are like the flight of birds in the autumn and spring.

In the terrible famine of 1877-8 Mr. Lewis was one of the hardest toilers. Sir James Caird, the agent of the inquiry instituted by the British Government into the cause and cure of famines, found Mr. Lewis's experience of great service in helping him to form a just estimate of the agriculturist's lot in India.

The Bellary district was bi-lingual, and Mr. Lewis had to acquire two vernaculars, Kanarese and Telugu. It used to be said that he knew Kanarese better than he knew English. To these languages he added Hindustani, and could preach powerfully in all three.

There is a parallel fact in the missionary work of Edwin Lewis and his forerunner John Hands, who founded the Bellary Mission. Both rendered great service in the translation of the Bible. While in India Mr. Hands translated into Kanarese the whole of the Bible, and superintended the printing of it. Mr. Lewis has also been one of the most active translators in the Kanarese and Telugu versions of the Holy Scriptures, and his work always went on at lightning speed. His brethren begged him to go slowly, but this was not possible with his temperament, even when exposure to sun, overwork, and fever brought on facial paralysis. Despite all hindrances, his marvellous energy kept him going.

It yet remains for reference to be made to his evangelistic labours. His appointment to Bellary can only be regarded as a Divinely controlled action. He was a true successor to John Hands, who was one of the most fervid evangelists that India has received from the West. It is worthy of note that each of these missionaries worked for thirty-two years at Bellary. Upon Lewis there descended a double portion of that spirit which had anointed his forerunner, enabling him to become a most earnest, faithful, and indefatigable preacher. In the middle portion of his career his work as an itinerant missionary was phenomenal in the extent and energy he expended upon it. The present writer has often been astonished at what was merely mentioned as an ordinary tour. The distances, the opportunities utilised by the way, the services at village after village, the talks with seekers after God, made one feel that a throat of brass and a frame of steel would not suffice for such wear and tear. The privations by the way, the heat, dust, and drought, the using of his long beard as a filter through which to draw draughts of water from filthy pools make one stand aghast. Truly, the love of Jesus has a constraining power quite unique.

Mr. Lewis was indeed a typical instance of a whole-hearted missionary who laid all he possessed upon the altar. His intense consecration and love for his work never faltered. Wherever he went he would tell with winsome force and freshness the story of the great redemption achieved by his Lord. Indeed, Divine love was expounded and made clear to every heathen heart by the exhibition of so charming a love and devotion in the messenger that faith was made easy. It is simple truth to say that Hindu, Mohammedan, and Christian loved him with a great love. If proof is needed, we instance the extraordinary ferment when the news of his death was bruited. Sorrowful faces and hushed voices were in evidence throughout Bellary, while from early morning until late in the evening a constant stream of men, women, and children poured into the bungalow to catch a last glimpse of their dear friend's face, the serene calmness of which only seemed to accentuate their yearning grief.

Never did a Christian more fully live and endure as seeing Him who is invisible. All he had he gave readily and lovingly to his Lord, and assuredly there was a cheery ring in the Master's kindly greeting, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."

He climbed the steep ascent of heaven
Through peril, toil, and pain,
O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in his train.

Romanists and Protestantism.

IT is not surprising that Romanists should be ignorant of Protestant principles, and be "at sea" as to the extent and character of Evangelical motives and activity. Neither is it astonishing that, instead of being silent on these matters, the agents of Rome should misrepresent them in various ways. Some of Rome's views and statements on these matters were set forth a few days ago by Pasteur Bourrier (the well-known ex-priest) in the course of a lecture in Taitbout Chapel, Paris.

It seems that Roman Catholic doctors are in the habit of reproaching Protestants with their divisions, by setting forth a list of sects, several of them absolutely unknown, as, for example, the Indifferents, the Evangelists, the Murmurers, and the Calvino-Lutherans. Disputing the apostolic character of Protestantism, one Romish authority has maintained that there are two hundred millions of Catholics and only sixty-six millions of Protestants. M. Bourrier estimates that at the present time the two bodies are about equal in number. As regards Protestant missions, the Romish controversialists boldly maintain that they do not exist—that they have never converted anyone—that Protestant missionaries go where there is no danger—that the English missionaries are dealers in Bibles, traders, etc. Among other things denied to Protestants is holiness, and they are said to act on the maxim, "Believe what you wish, and act what you believe!"

The Bible in Foreign Hotels.

WHEN a jaded traveller retires for the night to his own room after a long, hot, weary journey, how refreshing he often finds it to take up a large-type Bible or Testament, and read a few verses before he lies down to sleep!

We have supposed the traveller to be one who both reads and values the Word of God; but we will suppose another traveller, who never reads and has no pleasure in the sacred volume. His eyes lights upon a book on the table. A book! What book? Ah! he has scarcely seen that Book since the days of his childhood! It takes him back to the long-buried past. Strange feelings rush through his soul. Thoughts of his mother and home come over him, and his eyes begin to swim with tears! He will read it now! He takes it up, and as he turns from page to page light from the eternal world streams in upon his darkness.

Will Christian friends help in the work of placing large-type Testaments in the bedrooms of hotels abroad? Already a number of hotels are supplied in this way, but there are hundreds and thousands yet to be supplied.

Communications should be sent to Mrs. Macrae, 45, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

Argentina.—A little over two years ago Mr. W. Roberts, who had studied for a while at Harley College, proceeded to Coronel Suarez, at some distance from Buenos Ayres, and began teaching work, giving attention to Gospel effort as opportunity afforded. For over a year he laboured alone, but he has since been joined by Mr. W. Robinson, of Swansea, whose help is a source of strength to the work. These brethren purpose erecting a building for preaching purposes at a cost of £500. Friends disposed to help can obtain particulars from the secretary, Harley House, Bow, E.

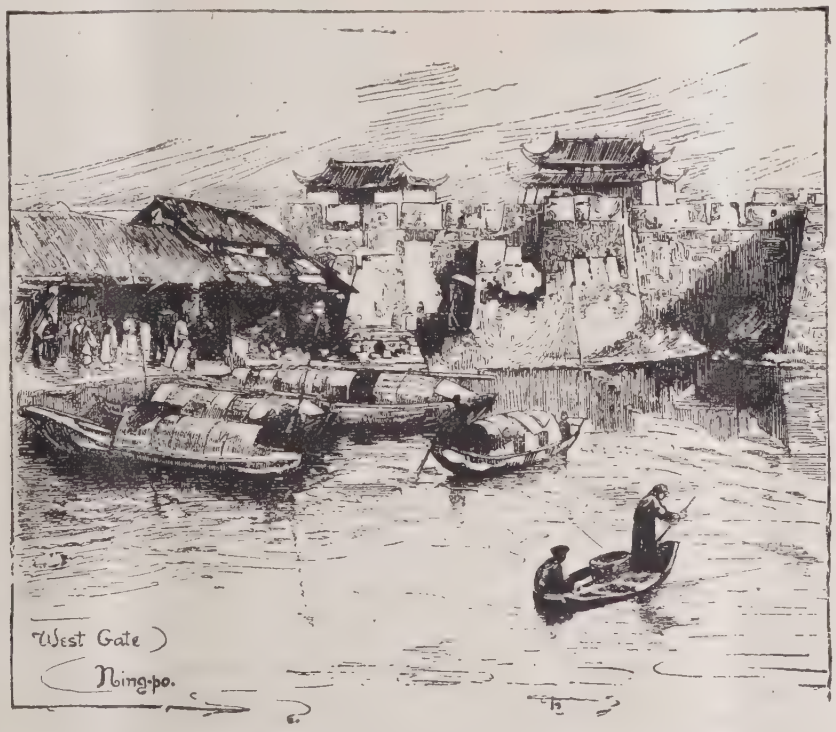
"The Christian"
Special May Meeting Supplement.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1898.

Church Missionary Society.

THE anniversary of the Church Missionary Society was celebrated on Tuesday last week by several meetings and conferences, having an aggregate attendance of about ten thousand persons. The great meeting was, as usual, held in Exeter Hall and presided over by Sir John Kennaway.

Rev. H. E. Fox read a deeply interesting review of the year's work. Early reference was made to the Three Years' Enterprise, which is two-thirds accomplished. It was reported that £42,000 had been contributed; and the number of "our own" missionaries had risen from 146 to 317. The various lands in which the work is carried on were specified, and their actual conditions described The total amount received for the Society's general work was £305,625; which total is the largest sum ever received for that purpose, being £7000 more than last year, and £44,000 more than the year before that. Including famine and other special funds, the entire amount entrusted to the Society's administration was £331,598. The expenditure exceeded the income by £20,000.



BISHOP TUCKER'S STUDY.

The CHAIRMAN delivered a warm-hearted address. In its first fifty years the Society sent out 429 missionaries; in the forty-nine years since then 1481 had been sent. At the time of the first jubilee only a dozen native clergymen had been ordained; since then there had been 540. The jubilee fund amounted to £50,000; the centenary fund should at least equal the £100,000 raised by each of the sister societies—the London and the Baptist. He commended to the Society as its principal work for the new century the BUILDING-UP OF NATIVE CHURCHES.

There was as yet not one independent self-supporting native church under its own bishop. This fact was largely due to the deep-rooted tendency in the Anglo-Saxon character to Anglicise everything with which it came in contact. As Bishop Tucker once said, it was hard for a mother to loose her hold of her child and tell it to run alone. It was hard for a committee to loose the leading-strings. Yet it was necessary. The evangelisation of India must be wrought out by the native converts; and Bishop Tucker was nobly carrying out the idea of spreading the Gospel throughout Africa by means of Africans. The speaker concluded with the remark that if we could return to the primitive order of a bishop for a city, instead of a bishop for a province, there could be found half a dozen men in China fit for the office. It might be dangerous to advance; it was more dangerous to stand still. The building-up of native churches should be the aim of the future.

NINGPO, THE CHINESE CITY MENTIONED BY THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

The BISHOP OF LONDON, in a forcible speech, followed up the chairman's plea for independent native churches, saying, "It is for us to stand on one side and let them work out their own problems for themselves." He continued: We are not only fellow-workers with our native brethren, we are fellow-workers with God. God now leaves his purposes in our hands. Our knowledge has rapidly increased. Nothing is now hidden from us as to the population and surface of the world; and the dominant civilisation of Europe feels the expansive process which urges her to carry her activity over all the world—to take possession of the earth. What does this mean? That she should make manifest

THE WORLD-WIDE CLAIM OF CHRISTIANITY.

The Bishop closed with a reference to that portion of the report which dealt with Hausaland and China. "There, hidden away, is a great nation, possessing cities of 200,000 inhabitants, engaged in industrial work, which is spreading over Africa. Only recently has the nation been converted to Mohammedanism. What an opportunity to give them something better! Think, too, for a moment of China. Only this morning an extraordinary incident is reported in the Times—the making over of a Buddhist temple, in a village near Ningpo, to the Free Methodist Society. Surely there is a great work to do, but we must make up our minds to do it. Of the numerous societies with which I am connected, none possesses more zeal, diligence, and good sense than the Church Missionary Society."

Mr. J. R. MOTT, general secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation, noted the complete change in the attitude of University men towards the missionary cause. He said he had lately completed a two years' tour, during which he had met 1300 missionaries belonging to seventy societies, and he had been greatly impressed by the work of the Church Missionary Society. In about ten years the Student Movement had enrolled 6000 men and women as volunteers, Great Britain claiming 1500 of the whole. Of these, 1600 have reached the foreign mission field. Mr. Mott laid stress upon the burden of responsibility which should belong to the native students to evangelise their own country. He referred to

THE WATCHWORD

—the evangelisation of the world in this generation. "We do not mean," he said, "the conversion, or Christianising, or the civilising of the world; nor do we mean the superficial preaching of the Gospel; nor do we mean the motto as a prophecy. But we mean the giving to every person the opportunity to know Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord. It is possible, because Christ commanded it, and we know the mountain-moving power of prayer."

Dr. Wace spoke of open doors. Fifty years ago, he said, the doors of China and Japan were closed, and so were large parts of India; the greater part of British North America was inaccessible, the greater part of Africa unknown. All these countries were now open. In ten years the Society had added 700 to its roll of missionaries, and in Africa there had been marvellous and accelerating progress. The Gospel which they preached was the Gospel that had made England. When the Evangelical religion of the Church of Christ had trained up a nation fit for the work, God had opened up the world to that nation. They owed an enormous debt to political agencies, particularly to the noble band of Christian heroes in India and elsewhere—General Gordon, for instance; but statesmen themselves would acknowledge that the growth of the Empire was due in an incalculable degree to British missionaries. Would British influence be what it now was in East and West Africa, but for the noble missionaries, beginning with Livingstone, who had opened up that continent?

Addresses were also delivered by Revs. G. H. Pole (from Japan), C. H. Gill, and E. A. Stuart.

The Protestant Alliance.

THAT many are awaking to the danger threatening our Protestant faith has been evidenced at several of the meetings of the past week, when vigorous protests have been raised against the Romanising tendencies of the day. The enthusiastic gatherings of the Protestant Alliance on Tuesday, when the whole day's proceedings were marked by keen interest and crowded meetings, afforded strong evidence of this revival of the Protestant spirit. The Exhibition, open from noon till 8 p.m., created much interest. Some very remarkable models of the rack, stake, and of the "Iron Virgin" were inspected by crowds of people with more than ordinary curiosity. The collection of portraits of Protestant heroes, and of scenes in Protestant history, was extensive, while the other "instruments of torture" used by Romanists and Ritualists created not a little astonishment in the minds of many.

Mr. E. H. Garbet, who presided at the afternoon meeting, said that as an hereditary and convinced Protestant, he thought the most strikingly prominent question of the present day was the state of lawlessness in the Church of England, and the efforts being put forth to promote corporate reunion with the apostate Church of Rome. He gave a graphic account of the Church Association interview with the Bishop of London on the previous day, in which he had taken part. They were received most courteously. The deputation presented a memorial, signed by over 15,000 churchmen, maintaining and vindicating the position taken up by Mr. John Kensit. The members were quite aware that the English Church Union and representatives of those innumerable guilds and secret societies which unfortunately honeycomb England at the present day, had presented memorials to the Bishop opposing Mr. Kensit and what he had done. The Protestant deputation went with the object of ascertaining whether the Bishop of London and the members of the Episcopal Bench were prepared, or not, to perform their solemn oaths. They asked the Bishop if he was prepared to "drive away all strange and erroneous doctrine." The deputation received a most courteous reply, a most able reply, an academic reply, expressed in charming language, but giving no straight answer to the questions put forward.

Rev. G. H. Hewitt followed with a vigorous address on an interview he recently had with the Bishop of London, on the spread of secret societies in the Church of England. Rev. A. Roger followed with an account of his winter's work in the provinces. Rev. W. Sinden discussed the best means for counteracting Romanism and Ritualism. Mr. Kensit's recent action may not have met with unanimous approval, but at any rate it had called general attention to the present state of things. A vigorous discussion ensued, in which Rev. Charles Stirling, Colonel Whale, Rev. J. Gossett Tanner, Mr. Martin Luther Rouse, and others took part.

In the evening the great hall was crowded. Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, opened with a vigorous speech, showing that Protestantism is not dead; and that while present protestors are spoken of as troublers of the peace of the Church, so it has been in all time when men, such as the late Rev. Hugh McNeile, raised a protest—they were denounced as bigots, troublers of Israel, and so forth.

Rev. C. Fenwick Ward spoke of the ambition of Romanism, the of Romanism, and the aggressiveness of Romanism.

ARROGANCE AND AUDACITY

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said they were in the presence of a gigantic conspiracy to Romanise England. There was a time when he disbelieved in the existence of such a conspiracy, but the study of late years had led him to see how deep, how widespread, how crafty was this conspiracy, the centre and seat of which was the National Church of this country. The policy of Newman and of Pusey, started sixty years ago, had ramified in all directions, and produced a most disastrous harvest. No one could have believed it possible at the origin of the movement that its effects would have been so widespread and lamentable as they had been. Those practices were tolerated by the bishops and rulers of the Church. He believed that nothing but a powerful movement amongst the laity would cause those practices to be put down. The deadliest enemy to the faith in all ages had been priestcraft—a deadlier enemy than infidelity, because priestcraft bred infidelity. They were in presence of this tremendous enemy in the midst of the camp. He believed that never since the time of Laud and James II. had this country been called upon to face so determined an effort to destroy its Protestant character.

Addresses on similar lines followed by Revs. W. C. Minifie, C. H. Wainwright, W. Cuff, and George Mallett, and Mr. John Kensit, whose reception on the platform was very enthusiastic. Special and thankful reference was made to Canon Fleming's outspoken utterance on the lawlessness of many clergymen.

London Jews Society.

THE annual gatherings of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews always attracts many of the most earnest Evangelical clergymen attending the May meetings. This year's gathering, held in Exeter Hall on Friday last, was no exception, friends and workers in connection with many agencies and missions having a like object being in attendance, with a large muster of the supporters of the Society.

The abstract of the report, which was read by Rev. W. Fleming, secretary, was pitched in a cheerful note. The funds had been fairly maintained, the aggregate income amounting to £38,841; but as a considerable portion of that amount was contributed for special objects, there was an adverse balance (£3796) on the general fund. The missionaries in charge of the various stations, at home and abroad, reported progress in intellectual apprehension and spiritual realisation of Gospel truth among the Jewish people. The many-sided character of the work—evangelistic, educational, and medical—may be judged from the fact that the Society commenced the year with 44 stations, 185 agents (including clerical, lay, and medical missionaries), with 43 school-teachers, 57 Scripture-readers, colporteurs, and other helpers. Of these 78 are Christian Israelites. Though meeting with much encouragement, the workers have in many quarters

TO FACE DETERMINED OPPOSITION.

One of the most striking outbreaks of this spirit was in Algiers, where a Jew said he would like to go into a Christian church and say:—"Much you know about Christianity! Your Master taught love to all men, but you persecute those who are of his own nation."

Sir John Kennaway, who presided, delivered an address full of sympathy with the work. Touching the question of finance, he said that curtailment of the work was out of the question. Therefore, he hoped that the income would be brought up to the growing needs of the enterprise. Adverting to the Zionist movement, he observed that it proved the vitality and separateness of the people, while the sentiment of the race was an important sign.

Sir Richard Temple, Bart., who followed, spoke as one who had studied the Jew in his own land. He dwelt upon the continuity of the people, their increase in European lands, and the extent to which, from generation to generation, they have preserved their religious and other peculiarities, and that in spite of repression and persecution. Their vices were largely the result of the ill-treatment which had been dealt to them by so-called Christian people, while their domestic virtues were as remarkable as their intellectual capacity was conspicuous. These important characteristics the speaker attributed to the Jewish observance of the commands of God given by Moses, which have had beneficent effects upon of the people. In the anti-Semitic movement there is evidence of the sufferings to which the race is still subjected. Sir Richard held that, regardless of any measure of immediate success that may attend such mission work, it is the duty of Christians to evangelise the Hebrew race, in reparation for the cruelties of the past, in obedience to the genius of the Gospel, and in view of the great promises for future good that are associated with the Jew in Holy Scripture.

THE VERY LIFE AND PHYSIQUE

The next speaker was Rev. C. P. Sherman, rector of St. John Lee, Hexham, missioner to the Jews in the diocese of Newcastle, formerly missionary at Damascus. A convert of one of the Society's agents, he spoke of himself as a typical case of the blessing of God upon the work. Defending the course of those who have confessed Christ, he repudiated the contemptuous statement of the Jewish Press, that the converts were fools and knaves, and ignorant of Judaism; and he proceeded boldly to maintain that it was because they knew Judaism that the converts were enabled to receive Christ as the culmination of Jewish hopes and expectations. The old-time indifference to mission work is past, and Jewish ministers are now reading the New Testament as well as controversial books.

Rev. A. Allen, vicar of St. Stephen's, Spitalfields, followed. He said that three-fifths of the population of his parish were Jews, and if the Jewish population continues to increase at the same rate as in the past, the entire parish will be Jewish

IN TEN YEARS' TIME.

The trouble at present is not with the Jews but with nominal Christians, or Gentiles, who are prejudiced against them. There is a Jewish difficulty, owing to the fact that, coming from foreign lands, where they have been ill-treated, the Jews are unprepared for kindly solicitude on the part of Christians, and disposed to regard all inquiry regarding them with suspicion and fear. Gentiles in Spitalfields are very slow to learn that the Gospel is for the Jews as well as themselves; on the other hand, it is obvious that among the Jews in East London, for the most part moral and thrifty, Christianity is quietly showing its power. A great difficulty in Gospel work arises from the fact that Christians will not employ Jews, so that when they come out as Christians, and are thrown off by their friends, they have to face destitution, through the unwillingness of Gentiles to employ them. A measure of great importance is the contact of Jewish children with others at school, also the influence of Christian teachers upon the young. In conclusion, the speaker sought to encourage workers among Israel to greater boldness and confidence of success in their endeavours.

Dr. P. D'Erf Wheeler, medical missionary at Jerusalem, was delighted to report the realisation of the new mission hospital at Jerusalem. He remarked that the poor Jews of the Holy City bless the medical mission, but some of the new Jews have made a determined set on the institution. After issuing cherems without effect, they have combined in their opposition, and by violence and bribery are doing their utmost to frustrate the beneficent objects and work of the Society. But the work is of God, and goes forward in spite of all misrepresentations and hindrances. In conclusion, Dr. Wheeler intimated that marvellous changes are coming over the East; the Jewish colonies are increasing, and agriculture is advancing, under improving climatic conditions.

The Religious Tract Society.

THIS great distributing society, the handmaid of missions at home and abroad, held its annual meeting, on Friday evening, in Exeter Hall. The report, read by Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., began with a reference to the recent centenary celebration, and the evidence of wide interest created thereby. During the past year there have been issued 674 new publications, of which 257 were tracts. The Society has already published, or helped others to publish, in 229 languages, dialects, and characters. The total circulation from the home depôt, including books, tracts, periodicals, counted in numbers, cards, and miscellaneous issues, has reached 39,086,360, of which 18,047,670 are tracts. The issues from foreign depôts may be stated at 20,000,000, making a total circulation of 59,086,360 and of 3,274,101,470 since the formation of the Society. The contributions for the year 1897-8, reached £15,314 19s. 9d. The grants, in money, paper, publications, amounted to £30,965 12s. 4d., of which £6,307 10s. 5d. has been provided by recipients of grants in part payment, leaving a balance of £9,343 2s. 2d. beyond the total missionary income of the Society. This excess has been provided partly from trade sources, and partly by a withdrawal of £1,655 8s. 3d. from the reserve funds. Details followed of Home, Continental, and Foreign work aided by the R.T.S. in publishing the Gospel and Christian literature.

Archdeacon SINCLAIR, D.D., who presided, congratulated the Society on the report read at the opening of its hundredth year; also on the extraordinary number of the publications, large and small, sent out all over the world, the wonderful variety of languages in which they are printed and read, and the blessing which has attended their circulation. Instances of this kind he gleaned from letters which had come into his hand. At home and abroad such work as this must be greatly increased if we are to keep pace with the growth of the population. It is true that infidelity and atheism are by no means so active as in the past, but, on the other hand, the upper classes are sadly permeated by a volatile fashionable flippancy, which rests on no basis whatever, which is merely the folly of the hour, but which is, nevertheless, terribly fatal to the spiritual life and the due recognition of the PARAMOUNT CLAIMS OF RELIGION AND GOD.

The Headmaster of Harrow, Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, in moving the acceptance of the report, desired to add his testimony to the utility and beneficence of the work of the R.T.S. He could not but recall that it was while anarchy was running riot in France, and the goddess of Reason was being enthroned at Notre Dame, that noble leaders in England were laying the foundations of this and other great missionary societies. Examining the popular literature of the day, he had come to the conclusion that its most characteristic and dangerous feature is the undue straining after excitement. Now, the work of this Society is to provide an antidote by Christianising literature. If that evil literature deserves condemnation anywhere it is among the young; and to publish such literature is to poison the wells of society. Because pernicious literature is so deadly and insidious in its nature he rejoiced in the endeavours of this Society to counteract the evil by the provision of a healthier literature. He believed there is nothing better than a good book, and nothing worse than a bad book.

Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR spoke of the Society's work from the evangelistic point of view. While he rejoiced in the triumphs of the Cross in many lands, he yet maintained that the world to-day, as a whole, is a lost world, and can only be saved by the revelation of God. Now God has graciously made this revelation, has provided a way whereby man may be brought back to his Father; means whereby a sinner may be pardoned, justified, and reconciled to God. Every need of fallen man is met. What then is needed? That the remedy and the sinner be brought face to face—that lost man be made aware that there is for him a way of grace. And this is what this Society has set itself to do by means of the printing press. This is no mere ethical society; it is definitely and expressly Christian. Its Christianity is not vague, but definitely Evangelical—the Christianity of the Bible and of the Reformation. Among other special branches of the work of the Society he had been particularly interested in the systematic efforts made to provide apologetic tracts adapted to the educated natives of India, and to secure that these papers should find their way to the eager young students for whom they have been prepared.

The foreign field was next represented by Rev. ARNOLD FOSTER, of Hankow, who spoke eloquently of the work of the Society in proclaiming the Gospel by means of the press in China. The written pages reach where the living voice may never be heard. But this does not clash with Bible work, because while the Bible is the book of all books, it needs, among such a people as the Chinese, introduction and explanation, and this is what the R.T.S. is doing for China. The work being done is great, but it needs to be multiplied a hundredfold to meet in any way the needs of the millions of China. A large work is done in papers pressing the Gospel on heathen readers, but a very special need is helpful literature for the use of Chinese Christian readers. Details followed of the work of the Central China Tract Society, aided by the R.T.S., as illustrating what might be done if funds were only forthcoming. It must be remembered that these tracts go out to Japan, Corea, the East Indies, Australia, and America; wherever the Chinese go these Gospel papers follow them. Two classes have to be considered in the preparation of these tracts; first the typical Chinaman, simple and unlearned, who must have something plain and easy; and second, the literati, who will not look at such a thing, and for whom a very different type of paper or book must be prepared. To meet these needs the speaker made an earnest appeal.

Christian Colportage Association.

THE annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall a few days ago. In the afternoon a large gathering of friends listened with pleasure to the bright testimonies of many of the colporteurs, nearly a hundred of whom had come up from all parts of England. This is always a special feature of the colportage meetings, and the stirring accounts of work and conversion given by these earnest workers are a testimony to the blessing that attends this form of Christian service.

Mr. T. A. DENNY took the chair at 4 p.m., and called upon the secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, to read an abstract of the report. This stated that during the past year the Association has made progress, and the staff has increased to 130 colporteurs. The evangelistic character of the agency is always kept well to the front; only such men are appointed as manifest a truly missionary spirit, and only such books as set forth clear Gospel truth for the unconverted, or sound Scriptural teaching for the comfort and edification of believers. God has abundantly owned the labours of the colporteurs, and much blessing has followed the books sold, the tracts given, and the messages spoken. The total sales during the past twenty-four years now amount to fifteen-and-a-half millions of Bibles, Testaments, books, and magazines.

During the past year a forward movement was inaugurated by placing pioneers in certain districts, which it is hoped will result in the permanent extension of the work; and during the year upon which we have entered, the Committee are desirous of making yet another forward movement by the establishment of a Training Home for colporteurs, which would very greatly add to the efficiency of the work, by giving candidates some special training before sending them out into the field.

For some time the committee have felt that it would be most desirable to have such a Home, where candidates might be both trained and tested for the practical work of colportage, and at the same time given some special instruction in the Word of God concerning the ground work of the Gospel. An excellent opportunity for establishing such a Home, with special and unusual advantages, has recently been offered, and the committee are anxious to avail themselves of this opportunity if possible. As the training will be thoroughly practical, many of the surrounding villages would reap the benefit. Before embarking upon this the committee want to obtain about £800, which would enable them to furnish and maintain the Home for three years without burdening the funds.

This new project of a Training Home, to equip men more fully before sending them out into the field, will undoubtedly add greatly to the value of the Society's work, and we hope the committee will soon obtain the funds required.

An excellent address was given by Rev. H. Sharpe, vicar of Trinity Church, Hampstead. In the evening another meeting was held, presided over by Mr. John Cory, when an address was delivered by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, and further testimonies were given by the colporteurs.

The Railway Mission.

THE annual Conference of the Mission was recently held, commencing with a meeting for workers. Two days were crowded with conference meetings, attended by delegates representing the important lines throughout the kingdom. A great public meeting was held, the large Exeter Hall being crowded to its utmost capacity. The audience was of a most interesting character; the railway men, many in their uniforms, and their wives forming the preponderating element. The proceedings were most enthusiastic, and it was pleasing to note the high spiritual tone of the gathering, and the evident earnestness of the men.

A friend of the Mission, Mr. T. A. DENNY, was in the chair, and with him on the platform were members of the Houses of Legislature, managers, secretaries, and officials of the great railway companies, etc. Rev. JOHN MCNEILL, having to go to his mission at the Agricultural Hall, was called on at the outset of the meeting to speak a few words. His racy manner had full vent in topical allusions dealing with railway manners and customs perfectly understood by railway servants. He told the men in a simple way the story of his own conversion. He desired his hearers to ring out the note of personal salvation, and then that every saved man should LIVE TO THE LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Mr. R. NIXON (secretary) presented some extracts from the annual report, which showed that twenty new branches had been opened during the year, making a total of over four hundred, at which over fifty thousand meetings have been held for railway people during the last twelve months. New halls have been erected at Edinburgh, Reedsmouth, and Acton Green. Conferences have been held at all the great railway centres, attended by a large number of delegates. The circulation of The Railway Signal shows an increase, while quantities of Gospel literature have been distributed to the men. The Mission does not attempt to tabulate spiritual results, but reports from the branches show that during the past year many have been "turned from darkness to light." Anxious to help railway men in other and less favoured lands, another missionary has been sent to South Africa. It has also been decided to send a missionary to labour amongst the railway men in India. The work amongst the Japanese railway men has been attended with much success and blessing. Mr. Nixon referred to the Convalescent Home for railway men at St. Leonards, opened last year. Erected and furnished at a cost of £7000, there is about £220 still needed to free the Home from debt. This was appealed for, as well as £1000 for the maintenance of the Home, which is proving an immense boon to sick and wounded men.

Mr. GURNEY SHEPPARD, in his own genial fashion, pleaded earnestly for the maintenance fund of the new Convalescent Home, as the men's payments only provided a small part of the cost.

The Chairman, in the course of his address, said the exigencies of their calling deprived railway men of the means of grace, and even if they did not it was not certain that they would go to church or chapel. They were too sadly neglected, yet they would often attend mission halls, especially if they can meet those of their own rank and station. He paid a tribute to the lady superintendents of the branches, who give their heart and life to the work, but he thought that the best missionary to railway men was a railway man, and the best sermon was the godly life of a railway man.

Rev. J. G. MANTLE gave an earnest address. Simple, yet earnest, testimonies to the blessings derived from the work of the Railway Mission were delivered by guards, drivers, porters, and others, from Crewe, Derby, New Cross, and other places.

The London City Mission.

THE claims of this great city were considered on Thursday morning, when Exeter Hall was crowded by the friends of this great home missionary society. Miss Rose Williams sang two solos with much sweetness and power.

The report, presented by Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, opened by emphasising the rapid growth of London—the population of which is now estimated at 6,400,000. In view of this vast increase provision should be made to meet the needs of at least an additional hundred thousand every year; but as the churches do not overtake this growth, such agents as the London City missionaries must be kept at work, to carry on visitation, evangelistic effort among working men, and to set the Gospel before the thousands of foreigners to be found in the metropolis. The present staff is 465 missionaries—twelve less than last year. It is not only the size of London which gives anxiety, it is yet more the terrible indifference to religion and the ravages of strong drink.

The total receipts during the past year were were £56,027 9s. 2d., or £2,255 19s. 4d. more than the receipts in the preceding year. This sounds encouraging, but it is only due to the special appeal put forth last autumn, which brought in £10,124 6s. 3d. The total expenditure during the year was £60,190 5s. 5d., or £8 13 14s. 11d. less than in the preceding year. Amidst obstacles of every kind the missionaries labour faithfully on, seeing much precious fruit, and finding here and there cheering instances of the power of the Gospel. One incident may be given; it explains our illustration.

A BURGLAR'S CONVERSION.

One of the most striking cases of conversion, through mission-hall services, reported by a missionary labouring in the metropolis, is that of a burglar. "I was speaking," writes the missionary, "in a hall one Sunday night when two men came in, one carrying a large black bag, but I knew nothing about them. One day as I was going to my visitation I was stopped by one of these very men, who called after me and said, 'I want to give you something.' 'What is it?' I replied; 'anything good?' 'No, not very. A few things I have got.' Presently he showed me a large bag of burglar's implements. 'Why do you want to give me these? Are the police on your track?' 'No, sir, I am a changed man. I have chucked the whole game, and here are my tools, as nice a lot as ever man got together. I shall never want them again. If I bury them, I shall know where they are, and can dig them up, but if I give them to you I know they will be all right.' So I have them all in my possession – skeleton keys, brace and bits, jemmy, crowbar, etc. I asked him what had arrested him. 'Well,' he replied, 'you talked about a man hid in a tree, and you said God saw him.' [What I said was, 'The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.'] 'Well,' I said, 'why did you not go on your job that night?' 'Because,' he said, 'it was a moonlight night, so, with my mate, I came into the hall to kill time, intending later on to crack a crib. But,' he added, 'the Lord cracked me.'"

Besides those who work amongst Jews and foreigners, 104 special missionaries are set apart to visit men in workshops and factories, at railway-stations, and on the cab ranks, in stables, in markets, in omnibus and tramcar yards, in public-houses and coffee-shops; and, indeed, wherever men are to be found. Christian literature is widely distributed amongst these men; bad language and evil habits are rebuked and checked, infidel arguments are met, and religious difficulties, so far as possible, are solved. Bible expositions are also given during the meal hour. By these means the tone of feeling towards religion and towards "the powers that be," is wonderfully raised, order and peace are promoted throughout the community at large, crimes are prevented, and many souls are won to Christ and his Church.

After interesting details of work in public-houses, also among Jews and foreigners, and other special classes, the committee conclude with a strong plea for largely increased help in view of the great need for extended work amongst a large section of the people far from God, and sadly indifferent to his claims.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, deplored that, as the need became greater, the support rendered to the Society seemed to be diminishing. So far the work had been sustained by a special fund, and the selling out of capital. If, therefore, larger liberality were not aroused the work must be decreased—a terrible fact in view of the appalling need. There is plenty of money in the country, as the Budget has shown; surely, then, a work of this kind cannot be allowed to suffer for lack of funds.

The Burglar and his Bag.

Canon Garratt, of Ipswich, narrated his experience of the value and success of the London City missionaries during his years in a metropolitan incumbency. He had been asked to give reminiscences of the past, a dangerous thing to ask a man of eighty-one to do. Still, he could not but recall some few points about those wonderful secretaries, Mr. Garwood and Mr. Robinson, and some of the remarkable missionaries he had known who had been much used of God in winning the lost. Many might have anxious thoughts about the future of London, but he felt that, at all events, the L.C.M. is like a bright light shining for God and lightening the darkness. The results no one can now tell, but these shall be revealed in the great day. To his mind the strength of the Mission consists of two things—the grandeur of its aims and the simplicity of its means.

Mr. J. Kenelm Wingfield-Digby, M.P., followed with an earnest address on the responsibility of Christians as to the most Christian and most heathen city in the world. Doubtless amongst the six and a-half millions in London there are more Christians than in any other city; but on the other hand there is denser heathenism, in some respects, than in any other city. If London does not listen to the Gospel he feared her fate would yet be that of the ancient mistress of the world. These considerations led him to view with warm interest the work of the L.C.M., and very particularly that of the special missionaries to large bodies of men indifferent to the claims of personal religion. Among the incidents which the speaker selected for illustration was that of the converted burglar which we have narrated. He contended that, even taking a very low ground, in supporting such a society rich people do much to secure their own safety and peace.

Next came Mr. W. F. Miller, for nine years a missionary in the slums of Bermondsey. Coleridge has spoken of the sixty-nine distinct smells which Cologne boasts—Bermondsey has but one, at least that one is so powerful as to drown all the rest. His own experiences among the tanpits and skinneries were certainly trying and novel, while his description of certain slum scenes was startling. Amid all this, by patient toil, men and women are being brought out of darkness into light, and many are now faithfully serving God. A number of instances of this kind were narrated with considerable point and humour, unconsciously illustrating the reason why the missionaries make their way so well among the people.

The superintendent of the London Central Wesleyan Mission, Rev. John E. Wakerley, spoke of his profound sympathy with the missionaries as a comrade with them in the hand-to-hand fight for God and right. He had had the opportunity of watching the operations of some of the missionaries in their ordinary and extraordinary work, and he knew the real work they are doing in this mighty London. No man could work as he had done in the corners of London, without finding that it is a refuge for the failures of the land; but many of these have been rescued by the agents of this society, who go to them who need it most. Alas! outside the churches there are millions untouched by the transforming power of the Gospel. Are we to leave them to perish, or are we to give them a chance by bringing Christ to them? He believed that militant atheism is dead. Indifferent the people are, but not hostile. And this indifference it is our business to remove by patient labour, practical sympathy, and positive truth—a Gospel of hope and power.

The missionary to the canal boatmen, Mr. R. Bamber, followed with picturesque details of work among the bargemen and boatmen on the Regent's Canal, and at the Paddington and City-road wharves.

London City Mission.—By permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, a meeting on behalf of the west and south-west auxiliaries was held at Stafford House, S.W. The secretary, Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, explained that the missionaries now engaged in connection with these particular auxiliaries numbered 119, and the annual cost to the society of each agent was £100. During the past year £7458 had been raised in support of the work carried on by these two auxiliaries, or £4442 short of what was required. Mr. F. A. Bevan, the chairman, remarked that if the wealthier people in London only knew the awful havoc that drink and immorality and gambling and other vices were working amongst vast masses of the population of the metropolis they could not fail to show their sympathy by helping such effort as the London City Mission was putting forth. Mr. C. Ernest Tritton, M.P., Rev. E. A. Stuart, and others spoke.

The Bible Society.

THERE was a large gathering at Exeter Hall on Wednesday last, when Lord Harrowby presided over the ninety-fourth annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society. As usual, the platform included many eminent personages. The summary of the annual report, read by Rev. John Sharp, secretary, showed that there are 5600 branches, auxiliaries, and associations of the Society in England, and 1860 abroad. The total circulation of Scriptures last year was 4,387,000. This record was more than 600,000 above that of the previous year. From its foundation in 1804 the Society has issued over 155½ million copies in more than 340 different languages. The total receipts for the general fund had amounted to £227,749—£138,356 in new income (an advance of £9852 on that of 1896-7) and £91,392 from sales. The expenditure had reached a total of £221,857. The apparent balance of nearly £8000 was simply due to the accident of a large legacy; the free contributions remain stationary.

In his opening address the noble Chairman referred to the serious loss sustained by the Society through the death of Mr. J. G. Barclay, late treasurer. Speaking of work on the Continent, he said that the agents of the Society told of increasing opposition to the circulation of the Scriptures in France, Italy, Spain, the Roman Catholic parts of Germany, also from atheistical and socialistic societies. That opposition was the greatest token the Society could have of how its in those countries. If no notice were taken of the Society he should feel very uneasy, and would think that its books were flung away and doing no good; but when he found great organisations showing opposition, he felt most certainly that the Scriptures were beginning to tell, and helping to dissipate error and to correct the doctrines of atheism.

WORK WAS BEGINNING TO TELL

The Bishop of London moved a resolution appointing committee and officers for the year, Mr. Robert Barclay succeeding the late treasurer. In the course of his address he asked, What is it that Christians have to maintain—to put forth in the world? It is the person of Jesus Christ. The one answer to all the world's questionings, to all the problems alike of society and of the individual, is "Jesus Christ, the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Where was He to be found? The answer must be clear and simple. He appeared upon the earth once under the conditions of human life, in distinct places, and at a distinct time, and the record of his appearance upon the earth is contained in the Gospel history. The Bible consists of three parts—first, the record of the preparation of mankind for the coming of Christ; secondly, the record of the historic appearance of Christ upon earth; and thirdly, the record of the foundation of that Christian society which was to evangelise all the world, and set forth the person of its Lord and Master throughout the ages. The position of the Church was solely that of being the keeper and

WITNESS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

To that record it had no power to add, and had no power to take away. All that the Churches could do was to strive to set forth the person of the Lord in such a manner as to make it most clear and obvious to the minds and consciences of those whom they undertook to teach. The organisation must be adapted to that purpose; but care must be taken that such society was not eaten up by its organisation—that the organisation did not become the prominent thing. One branch of the Christian Church seemed to set the claims of organisation excessively high, and the testimony to that was that it held that the Scriptures were not to be put into the hands of anyone unless accompanied with an accredited explanation which the organisation thought fit to give. It was precisely that position which was not the position of Protestant Englishmen. It was not so; it could not be so; and he trusted it never would be so. They recognised that Jesus Christ spoke to the heart and conscience of each individual soul, that faith was a personal matter, and had to be gained by every one for himself. Each member of the Christian Church was such by virtue of his own conviction and choice, because Jesus Christ had appeared to him and the Spirit of God had spoken to his heart. The Bible Society was the broadest of the societies connected with religion in England. On that platform met people who might differ on other points; on one point they were all united—the primacy, the supremacy of the Bible, the directness of its appeal, its eternal power and force.

A Group of Colporteurs.

Principal Fairbairn, of Oxford, seconded the resolution (which was carried unanimously), and described the Bible Society as the most catholic and generous of all religious societies. By supplying the Bible, it serves all the Churches, contributing to their missions, and co-operating in all their purer aims. Speaking of upon the English people, Dr. Fairbairn said: It stood incorporated in the simplest rudimental Saxon literature. It was expressed in the oldest form of English dialects. It lived in Chaucer. It gave to Piers Plowman his vision. It entered into the dramas of Shakespeare; it filled the soul of Milton; it became the passion of all the poets and the inspiration of their highest dreams. And what it had accomplished at home it carried the potential power of accomplishing abroad. How was it that men so loved the Scriptures? When men found out the mystery of printing, how did they proceed to use it? Repeating, encouraging, multiplying the Sacred Record. How were men comforted in the hour of sorrow? Through the Word that was spoken in the Scriptures that had been written. If a great cause needed pleading, or if we seek an argument that must appeal to the conscience, or maxims that must sway the soul, they come from the same Word, the living breath of God.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE BOOK

The next speaker was Rev. W. L. Watkinson, president of the Wesleyan Conference, who dwelt upon the Bible as the Book for the race. It is, he said, an alphabet with scientific men that the true science was for all men everywhere. Likewise they could have but one true art, one philosophy. And they could have but one religion. We claim to possess in the Old and New Testaments that faith for which the world waited—one God and Father, one moral commandment, one Saviour, one flock, and one hope.

Addresses evincing cordial interest in the work were also delivered by Mr. H. N. Birdwood, C.S.I, Canon Sutton, and Mr. Daniel Wellby.

John iii. 16 in Otshi: For Gold Coast and Ashanti Land.

The Children's Home.

THE Methodist friends of the children mustered well in Wesley's Chapel, when Dr. Stephenson reported that the new year opened with 1060 children, nearly 100 more than last year, and the largest number ever in residence.

Dr. Stephenson explained at length his great scheme for rescuing children of Methodist parentage from workhouses, and declared that it was not intended that this scheme should in any way alter the complexion of their regular work. What at the last annual meeting was a theory had now become a fact, and arrangements had been made for receiving over eighty such children immediately. Touching reference was made to the proposal to care for epileptic children.

The total income of the Homes for the year amounted to £22,038, or £51 in excess of last year. The news of the new development had, unfortunately, brought but little grist to the mill. While they had received many compliments, many good wishes, and some prayers, not much extra money had been received. An appeal was made for a special fund of £5000, required for imperative needs at the present time. Without this the work must be hampered, cribbed, cabined, and confined. It was also necessary permanently to increase the regular income. Replying to the questions, "Does it pay? What becomes of the children?" Dr. Stephenson stated that, with the rarest possible exceptions, children that passed through the Homes were anything but failures, and to illustrate this he read several interesting letters from old boys and girls.

Mr. Isaac Mack, warmly supported the claims of the Homes, while the Wesleyan president followed, showing that such institutions were among the best evidences of Christianity. Dr. Hodge and Bishop Thoburn spoke as missionaries, deeply engaged on behalf of heathendom, and yet rejoicing in such work for orphan children at home.

Rev. George Jackson said that the Children's Home appealed to our love for the children and to our love for Christ. He believed there were a few unhappy creatures who did not love children. A wise man once said, "He that hath no music in his soul is fit for treasons, strategems, and spoils," but he would want language stronger than that to speak of the man who did not love children. This is Christ's work if Christ has any work at all on earth to-day. In filling up their papers in the last census the fathers had to put down the names of every one of their little ones. In a book in the Old Testament where a census was made, the men only were to be counted, not the women nor the little children. Who, then, first began to count the children? That is part of the difference that Christ has made. He took his New Testament, and he found that > God Himself a baby deigned to be,

> Slept upon a mortal mother's breast,
> And steeped in baby tears the Deity.
> They all were looking for a King
> To slay their foes and lift them high;
> Thou cam'st a little baby thing,
> That made a woman cry.

Police Orphanage, Redhill.—The annual meeting and distribution of prizes took place recently at the Orphanage. Viscount Midleton, chairman, said that of all the institutions that had found a home in Surrey, he did not know any serving more useful purposes than this Police Orphanage. The prizes were distributed by the Countess of Chichester, who also addressed the children; earnest and interesting addresses being given by Hon. C. G. Legge, Sir A. C. P. Coote, Captain G. R. B. Drummond, and others. Funds are needed for the enlargement of the Home, and for the furtherance of the work.

Moravian Missions.

FOR real and thrilling interest the big meetings are not necessarily the best. The London Asociation in aid of Moravian Missions had its usual May muster in the lower Exeter Hall last week, and there was by no means an overflowing attendance. But the amount of genuine missionary interest packed into the proceedings will not be exceeded, we venture to think, by any of the anniversaries of the season.

The Chairman was the veteran Mr. T. Fowell Buxton, and of course he had to remind the meeting that the Moravian Mission is the oldest of all our Protestant missions, being now more than 160 years old. Its agents, he also observed, have set a great example to all their fellow-workers of perseverance, self-sacrifice, and personal devotion to the cause of Christ.

The Secretary's abstract of report seemed to us to be rather too despondent with respect to the deficient funds. The text for this was the Morton legacy, the announcement of which threatened at one time to dry up the springs of public generosity. This was rectified in a measure when it became fully known that the large bequest could not be used for the maintenance of existing work, but is to be devoted entirely to extension. The last year's income of the London Association fell short by £1200 or so, though more than £9000 was remitted to the headquarters of the Mission

There were four set speeches at the meeting, all admirable in their way. The first two supplied cogent arguments for the mission as viewed by sympathetic outsiders, and the second, better still, supplied facts gathered by personal observation on the field of the Mission's operations.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe said he thought the Society had perhaps been sufficiently praised; but he, nevertheless, went on to add another stone to the cairn of laudation by showing that this ancient missionary body are quite up to date in the matter of medical missions, of educational work, and of industrial agencies. Rev. W. Talbot Rice spoke as a new recruit in the ranks of the Society's friends. He alluded to the high standard which the Moravian Church had set up in giving to the foreign field one out of every sixty of its members—a standard all churches may well aim at, but which they are not likely to reach for some time to come.

Nothing could well exceed the impressiveness of Mrs. Isabella Bishop's testimony, given at first hand, as to the work of the Moravian Missionaries in Western Tibet. When she first visited these parts, she said, there were apparently no signs of fruit appearing, but now she rejoiced to know that the joys of harvest are being experienced by the workers. Of these devoted men and women she spoke in terms of unstinted admiration. More holy, devoted, self-denying men and women she has not met with in all the 170 mission stations she visited in Asia. Passing on to refer generally to the extreme interest now felt by this country in foreign lands, Mrs. Bishop deplored the fact that it is the materialistic side of things that is almost universally looked at. One scarcely ever hears, in common conversation, of the great moral and spiritual needs of these lands, and the necessity of raising them out of the death for which there can be no resurrection except through the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a deep need of the time that this view of things should be emphasised in society, and that the stories of Christian devotion and heroism shown by foreign missionaries should be made known. Mrs. Bishop also made an earnest plea for the constant and systematic furtherance of a native Gospel ministry in heathen lands, as the only channel through which these lands can be appreciably brought under the saving influences of the Gospel. Her weighty speech was closed by a solemn appeal to Christians to consider well their individual responsibility in the matter of personal expenditure, and to see if by a proper allocation of material resources the needs of the great mission field may not be fully met and the way prepared for the final triumph of the Christian Gospel over the heathen and non-Christian systems that now so largely prevail.

Last of all there was a bluff and breezy address from Dr. Grenfell, who was as unqualified in his witness-bearing about the Labrador missionaries of the Society as Mrs. Bishop had been about those in Central Asia. The workers in Labrador, he said, are humble men and women who certainly do not go out there and toil for money, but for the salvation of their fellows. One circumstance Dr. Grenfell referred to which should encourage the Y.M.C.A. workers at Exeter Hall. A Moravian missionary in Labrador told him that he had come from Germany to London to work at his trade of a baker, he being then a Socialist and an infidel. He was converted at one of the Sunday meetings for men in Exeter Hall. Wishing to do some Christian work he applied to the Moravian Church and was sent as a missionary to Labrador, where he not only preaches the Gospel but exercises his baker's craft. Dr. Grenfell declared that the Moravian brethren out in this northern land have really saved the Esquimaux race from extinction. Referring to the great war fever in the United States, and the sacrifices which patriotism is leading many Americans to make, the speaker appealed with all the intensity of his manly nature to Christians to show something approaching a like enthusiasm in advancing the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

As a postscript to our report, we may add the following facts which we clip from the ticket of admission to the meeting: "There are nearly 500 missionaries, and of the annual expenditure of only £80,000, nearly two-thirds is raised in the foreign field. New missions have been recently commenced in East Central Africa and North Queensland. Two new stations are being added in Labrador, for which a new mission ship is also required; and two in Tibet. A new work among Lepers in Surinam has been begun. Funds are therefore much needed." The address of the London Association is now 7, New-court, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

Missions to Seamen.

ADMIRAL SIR R. VESEY HAMILTON presided at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, at the annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen. Commander Dawson, secretary, presented the annual report, showing that the staff included forty-five chaplains and fifty-eight Scripture readers, who had conducted 12,290 services afloat and 21,011 ashore. New mission steamers had been provided for the Medway and the Bristol Channel and for Rotterdam. Satisfaction was expressed that our Government, with the consent of the foreign authorities, was establishing safeguards against the crimping and robbing of British sailors at the three great Continental ports of discharge—Antwerp, Hamburg, and Rotterdam. The work of the Mission at San Francisco had reduced the annual "desertions," and consequent ruin of British officer-apprentices at that port, from 61 to 11. The ordinary income of the Missions had been £36,597, and the payments £40,710.

The Chairman said that without the commerce of this country the Navy and the Army could not be maintained; if they were deprived of their commerce they would become over-populated and a discontented people. But to whom did they owe that commerce? To the merchant seamen. They owed the men of the merchant service a deep debt of gratitude, and it was their duty to do their utmost for them. There was no section of the British community so unprotected as the merchant seamen.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe pointed out that practically nothing had been done for the benefit of our merchant sailors until the latter half of the present century, but he was glad to think that during the past twenty or thirty years people had been stirred in a remarkable way in connection with the subject for which they were pleading that day, and they were gradually wiping away the disgrace that had been occasioned by the neglect of a former generation. They all knew that a vast improvement had taken place in the condition, both moral and spiritual, of the men of the merchant navy. And he ventured to think that a very large amount of that improvement was due to the efforts of such societies as that which they had met that day to support. Sailors, they all knew, were very amenable to influence, and he was sure that the chaplains and readers of the Missions to Seamen and other similar societies went among those men with the very greatest acceptance—indeed, they were more than welcome.

The work of the society was also described and commended by the Hon. T. A. Brassey, Rev. C. W. H. Browne, chaplain for the Bristol Channel, Rev. James Fell, chaplain at San Francisco, and Sir W. Willis.

Work in the Royal Navy.

THE anniversary meeting in connection with this valuable organisation was held in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday week, Miss Weston, its founder, presiding. Before the commencement of the proceedings a few typical representatives of the British Navy, in uniform, rendered several songs and recitations, expressive of the temporal and spiritual dangers attending their vocation in life, and the noble way in which "Jack," in such circumstances, can lend a hand to the rescue.

Miss Weston, in reporting upon the good work in which she has been engaged now for twenty-five years, pointed out that whereas, when she commenced the work, there were no more than sixty thousand all told in the service of the British Navy, there are now one hundred thousand. Hence, as the number had increased, there was an immensely larger field for work for God. With regard to the temperance department of the work, she explained that the Royal Naval Temperance Society has got branches on board every ship in the service—on battleship, cruiser, gunboat, and torpedo alike. At the Naval Jubilee demonstration at Spithead, last year, on board every ship there was a good band of temperance and Christian men. On one occasion, in Devonport, nearly two thousand men gathered at a temperance meeting held in the Royal Naval Barracks there, and at the close no fewer than one hundred names were enrolled. Some of her best helpers in the temperance cause were stokers employed in different vessels. After further stating that during the past year no fewer than 622,330 Monthly Letters and 499,675 copies of Ashore and Afloat had been sent out to men in the Navy, merchant seamen, and fishermen, in all parts of the world, speaking to them a good word for the Master, Miss Weston alluded to the work of the Sailors' Rests at Portsmouth and Devonport, and other places.

Miss Wintz presented a variety of interesting statistics with regard to the work carried on during the past year in the various Rests, in which 178,527 men had slept on the premises during ten months, this number representing 31,000 more than in any previous year. At the close of the meeting a number of blue-jackets testified to the blessing they had received as the result of the work.

Postal Employés.

The annual meeting of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (Senior Branch) took place in the City Temple, April 26 and 27, and was felt by those present to have been one of the best ever held. The missionary meeting in connection with the efforts made for the spread of the Gospel among the postal employés in heathen lands was especially good this year. Throughout all the meetings there was experienced a real spirit of prayer and waiting upon God. The delegates also from country post offices seemed imbued with the same spirit.

We give the following extract from the year's report of the Association: "Now that ten years have passed since the start of the Association, we humbly realise that God does not mean the P.T.C.A. to be limited to the British Isles. It has spread, though in some cases with but as yet small beginnings, to several of the countries of Europe, to Canada, to India, Ceylon, and Japan, with hopes of China, the West Indies, the Cape, Australia, and New Zealand. The post office goes everywhere; we have in it a wonderful world-wide organisation, and what alone is needed to make it an irresistible power for the evangelisation of the world is a Divine touch to change the hearts of post officials, and to set them on fire with love to souls."

In case this notice falls into the hands of any post officials at home or in distant lands, who are not yet members of the P.T.C.A., they are invited to send name and address to the honorary secretaries, P.T.C.A. Institute, 4, Goswell-road, London, E.C.

Lord's Day Observance Society.

At a breakfast, a few days ago, in connection with the sixty-seventh anniversary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, Mr. H. C. Nisbet, who presided, spoke some timely words. Having referred to the prevalent indifference to the claims of the Lord's Day, and commended the vigilance shown by the society in the past, he urged to renewed effort and further devotion. He said:—Our society can never be a popular one, even among the majority of those who are called Christians. Our society is nothing if not aggressive, and it is not doing its work faithfully unless it gains the reproach of being fanatical, narrow-minded, meddlesome. It will only be to its honour if it is called a disturber of men's consciences, a restless and vigilant censor of men in authority, of the directors of companies, of public institutions, and of all employers of labour.

If of late years we have heard little abuse of the Lord's Day Observance Society, it should make us pause and reflect whether the reason can be found in its having retired, with unnecessary modesty, into a more obscure position, and allowed some of its great battles to be fought by other organisations. I know the difficulties of advocating our unpopular and sacred cause, and can well sympathise with those who undertake it in Parliament. It is not unlike action at the meetings of shareholders of our great railway companies, where I have on more than one occasion lately had to speak on the subject of Sabbath desecration.

In rooms packed with men who can grow pathetic and eloquent over a variation of a quarter per cent. in the dividend, but who are impatient and turbulent when appealed to on behalf of the workman's Sabbath, we have felt the presence of God, and seen his power exercised. Thus, we have obtained a favourable hearing, and God has fulfilled his promise by confirming the word of his servants and performing the counsel of his messengers. Therefore, I say to all who advocate our cause, let us be prepared to incur self-sacrifice in fighting the Lord's battles in defence of the Sabbath, not merely with the old weapons which have been successful in the past, but also with new methods, new allies, new zeal, and new courage.

C. of E. Scripture Readers.

The annual meeting of this association was held in St. Martin's Town Hall. Mr. E. S. Hanbury presided in the absence of the Lord Chancellor.

The annual report stated that owing to insufficiency of funds the committee were unable to report any expansion of the operations amongst the poor and crowded parishes of the metropolis, which stood so much in need of assistance. The question of finance had been a matter of much anxiety, and great difficulty had been found in meeting the expenditure of the year. With regard to the actual work of the association, a satisfactory and encouraging account was given. The reports received from the clergy regarding the character of the readers were of a peculiarly satisfactory kind, and afforded a convincing proof that never had such a work as that which the association's agents were continually engaged in doing been more heartily appreciated or more imperatively needed than at the present time.

The Chairman said he rarely met a clergyman who had had help from one of their readers who did not say a kind and encouraging word regarding the value of their services and the importance of his work in the parish.

Rev. R. W. Harris, Rector of St. George's-in-the-East, said that during the time he was Secretary of the East London Church Fund he had had many opportunities of seeing and hearing of the work of the association, but latterly, as rector of a large East London parish, he had been brought into personal contact with the readers, and he could say what valuable work they did, and how indispensable they were in the parish. The difficulty of the clergy was to obtain workers with the necessary training and capacity for parochial work. That was the kind of agents that association sent to clergymen who wanted their help, and it was the duty of all Churchpeople to give it their hearty support. The association was doing a work blessed of God for this country and for this city.

Lord Balcarres, M.P., gave the testimony of an outsider to the admirable work of the Scripture readers. Prebendary Kitto followed with an account of twenty years' experience of these agents, while Mr. A. V. Chapman, Scripture reader at St. Paul's, Stratford, gave an interesting account of his work.

The Sunday School Union.

The anniversary proceedings in connection with this Union were spread over the past week. On Monday a young people's social gathering was held at the City Temple. On Wednesday morning a public breakfast was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on behalf of the Children's Country Homes. Mr. Howard Spicer presided, and addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Parker and J. M. Gibbon. Last year 1459 children were sent for a fortnight to these cottage homes, which are seven in number. A permanent holiday home is about to be erected at Clacton-on-Sea. Mr. Passmore Edwards has promised £5000 for this purpose, and nearly as much again is required. The Union also maintains a children's convalescent home at Bournemouth, and a home of rest for lady teachers at Hastings.

In the afternoon the annual conference of delegates was opened at the Union's hall in Old Bailey, and in the evening there was a conversazione at the same place.

The annual public meeting was held in the evening at Exeter Hall, the Marquis of Northampton presiding. The annual report shows that there are now 7114 schools, 167,219 teachers, and 1,614,537 children affiliated to the Union in this country; besides 545 schools, 8283 teachers, and 87,168 children in seven colonial unions; and 4957 schools, 9558 teachers, and 191,742 children in the Indian union. Sunday-school work in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Spain, Bohemia, Italy, and Palestine is also fostered by the Union; and there is an International Bible-reading Association with 620,000 members. At home classes and examinations are carried on for the better training of the teachers, and village schools are largely assisted. The object of the Union is to aid the "scattered little army of Bible teachers," and improve methods of Sunday-school instruction. These objects still form its central line, and its committee maintain that it is an evangelistic, philanthropic, and missionary agency, as well as a great educational institution, with over two millions of teachers and scholars affiliated with it. The new secretary nominated by the Council is Mr. James Tillett, who in many ways has rendered valuable service to the Union.

The Marquis of Northampton having urged the necessity of Sunday-school work, Mr. F. F. Belsey, the chairman of the Council, briefly reviewed the year's operations, showing that the examination of teachers and scholars had been provided for, and declaring that a growing interest had been manifested in the training of teachers; and lamented that the benevolent income was no better than it was last year. As to the approaching World's Convention, beginning July 11, two or three steamer-loads of delegates are expected from America, and he trusted that the war would not prevent them from coming. Subsequent speakers included Rev. J. Ossian Davies (Paddington), Rev. J. G. Greenhough (of Leicester), and Judge Willis, Q.C.

Welcome Home, Canning Town. — On Tuesday, May 3, the monthly muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew took place. The room was full, and Miss Child gave a text for the month from Rom. viii. 37. A young sailor gave a beautiful testimony as to how God had saved him eleven years ago. Since then he had been to Africa, and God had used him in opening two missions for Scandinavians in that country. Mrs. Anderson, who is returning to India, also spoke of God's goodness to her. Many others took part.

Business Women.—A quiet and most useful work is carried on at Bessel House, Bessel Green, Sevenoaks. This holiday and rest home for business women was opened thirteen years ago at Horsted Keynes, by Miss Harriet Mason, who personally superintends the household and mothers those who visit it. A Reunion Party is to be held on Whit Monday, to which Miss Mason cordially invites all friends, and on the same day a sale of work will be held in the grounds on behalf of the Free Rest Fund. Gifts of any kind will be welcomed, and should be sent, not later than May 27, to Miss Mason at Bessel House.

The Navvy Mission.

The annual meeting of this mission was held on Tuesday week, at Fulham Palace, the Bishop of London presiding. The Secretary (Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston) read the report. There are now 45 agents of the society at work. Two interesting developments have recently come to the committee's notice: the desire on the part of the missionaries for a conference, which it is hoped will be arranged, and the fact that some of the navvies who are members of the Christian Excavators' Union have expressed their willingness to contribute not less than one penny a week to the funds, 42 collecting boxes having been taken by them for the purpose. The Treasurer, Mr. J. W. Rundall, M.I.C.E., presented the balance-sheet. The income for the year was £4,213, and the expenditure £4,084.

The Bishop of London said that the increase in the number of religious organisations was only a recognition of the fact that every human being must be approached separately and singly, taking into account the different circumstances of life in each case. The work of the society was undertaken on behalf of a class of men of whom they had every reason to be proud. Public works were an indication of growing civilisation, and those engaged on them had a distinct claim to their gratitude. In almost every case the work was welcomed by the contractors, who naturally had an interest in their men's behaviour. At the present time great works were going on at Plymouth Docks, and the entire cost of teaching the navvies engaged was being defrayed by the contractor, Sir John Jackson.

Addresses were also given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. Geo. Thornton, and Mr. Pickles, one of the missionaries.

Mission to Coalies.

The annual meeting of this special branch of the London City Mission was held last week, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, Colonel Morton presiding. The tea which preceded the public meeting was a grand attraction for the good-humoured, stalwart men who crowded the lower hall. There were seven hundred of them, including their wives and children. Some had washed the coal grime from their faces, but left a smear behind, and some were neatly apparelled. Many of their employers were amongst them, talking with them and taking tea. "Before I go," said a master whose name is well known in the London coal trade, to one of his men, "I must have the pleasure of shaking hands with your wife." "Do you see that lidy there," replied the gratified husband, "the lidy with the red hat? That's her," and he departed for tea and cake. Most, if not all, of the guests, if such they can be called, paid for their own tickets, and, moreover, they subscribed over £25 themselves last year to the guarantee fund of the Mission.

Following the festival, which filled the basement rooms of the Conference Hall, came the annual meeting of the Mission to Coalies and Coal Carmen connected with the London City Mission. A sub-committee of London coal merchants guarantee a sum of money which largely maintains the work. Five missionaries are supported, to each of whom a district of London is assigned, and their special duty is to visit the coal depôts, hold informal meetings, distribute books, and arrange for thrift and temperance as well as religious meetings. There is also a benevolent fund in connection with the Mission, which grants relief in cases of sickness.

The treasurer's statement was made by Mr. Fred Tite, and he and Colonel Morton were indulged to the extent of ten minutes for their speeches, but the others were cut down rigorously to five and seven minutes each. Several coalies themselves spoke, roughly and sadly unregardful of grammar, but to the point. Among those who took part were Mr. T. G. Nevil, Mr. E. T. Wills, a colliery agent and a local superintendent of a mission; Mr. Jesse, a coal porter from the West London Coal Porters; Mr. G. A. Warren; Mr. Prentice, a missionary from North London; Mr. James Dunn, from the City Mission; Mr. Halls, a missionary from East London; Mr. Dawson, from North London Coal Porters; and Mr. Mock, from the South London Coal Porters. There is a Coalies' Choir, and some wives and daughters of coal porters also sang.

West London Mission.

TEN years have passed since our Wesleyan friends began in West London the "Forward Movement" that has not only accomplished great things in different populous centres, but shown the way to still more extended efforts in the years to come. Within the decade it may truly be said that the little one has become a thousand. What souls have been saved, what prodigals restored, what weary, lonely hearts made glad, what wretched homes made happy, what lazy professors spurred to active service, by this West London Mission alone, we wot not. The complete tale of the glorious results that have already come out of the "Movement," only the recording angel can report. The bare enumeration of the different agencies set agoing by Mr. Price Hughes and his helpers takes up a whole page in the new report; when we reflect that each item means so great an addition to the sum total of human happiness, our thankfulness is overflowing. All departments of our composite life are catered for—the spiritual, the mental, the social, the family, the physical—Christ and all that He means for the whole man in all his relations.

Friday last was the anniversary, and the day's proceedings lacked nothing of the customary interest. At noon, in St. James' Hall, a very helpful discourse was given by Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, from the words, "At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow"; putting heart and hope into the workers, and assuring them of the final and complete victory of the Saviour's cause.

At the mid-day luncheon in the Criterion Restaurant there was some interesting talk on the affairs of the Mission, and £600 was contributed to the social work.

THE SISTERS OF THE PEOPLE

had their opportunity in the afternoon, when a new departure was made in providing a limelight lecture by Sister Lily, descriptive of the work of the sisters. Very appropriately the chair of the meeting was filled by Mrs. Robertson Lawson, herself one of the first Sisters engaged in the Mission in its earliest days, and then known as Sister Clara. Her little address constituted a magnificent plea for the work, backed up as it was by her personal recollections and experiences. She said the Sisters are face to face every moment of every day with problems of human misery. She could not imagine any more Christ-like, devoted, wise, far-seeing, and properly-balanced effort being made for the elevation of the masses than that which the Sisters of the People are putting forth every day and every part of every day.

We know not how to describe Sister Lily's lecture, which was illustrated with a series of splendid views on the screen. By way of introduction there were shown portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Pearse, and some other leading workers; about all these Sister Lily had some very gracious things to say, but it would be invidious on our part to select any of the compliments. Then she passed on to groups of the Sisters themselves, to the houses where they live, and the halls where they labour for the uplifting of the people. To these succeeded views of Piccadilly and Oxford Circuses and Regent-street, in which neighbourhood, said the fair lecturer, there are to be found, almost side by side, the extremes of acute poverty and abounding wealth.

Next to appear on the screen were groups of the slum children (one of which, representing three young gamins, we reproduce). The appalling statement was made that in the area covered by the operations of the Mission over 61,000 people live in single rooms; in one case a house of six rooms shelters forty people. The resulting social, or unsocial, conditions may be left to the imagination. Here the medical sisters visit and tend the sick as best they can. The work of the crèche was delightfully described and illustrated. It is, as Sister Lily well remarked, a mission within a mission, and has had truly wonderful results, not only on the children, but on the parents. The girls' club received a meed of attention, and here an amusing incident was told that shows the kind of material dealt with. Some girls were on a visit to the country, and the guardian Sister, taking them past a field of barley, asked if they knew what was growing in the field. After a considerable pause, one girl radiantly announced that it was a field of "shrimps all ready for picking!"

Passing by some interesting items we may note an illustration which we have also reproduced on this page—the poor man's lawyer—who does really splendid work for these people in giving them sound and free advice on matters of law. Then it was wonderful to hear that as much as £1800 had been received from the people last year as contributions to the thrift clubs. Several of the Sisters act as

Three Slum Boys.

Guardians of the Poor. Some of the most touching slides were those representing workhouse inmates, for whom a "drawing-room" is open once a week at Cleveland Hall. What rays of cheer and happiness these friendly socials have thrown into the hard and narrow life spent within workhouse walls. No wonder that the inmates are so greatly altered that it is now the rarest thing for any of them to go back to the workhouse drunk. There are over 120 members of the "guild of brave poor things," young and old—all in some way physically deformed. The rescue work department gave Sister Lily the chance of saying some very straight and needful things as to iniquitously partial treatment meted out by society to the male and female sinners that frequent the region of Piccadilly, where two rescue Sisters work for the salvation of those of their own sex. Last of all came views of the Home for the Dying, and a recital of one case of extraordinary pathetic interest, the subject of which is still an inmate of the Home.

The Poor Man's Lawyer.

Our brief summary gives an extremely faint idea of the cumulative intensity of interest awakened by Sister Lily's talk, and we can but hope that friends will secure copies of the report, which will furnish fuller and more detailed accounts of this part of a blessed work. Let everybody who possibly can, lend it help in some way or another.

THE EVENING MEETING

was a very full one, and with an unusually strong platform. Mr. J. Compton Ricketts, M.P., presided and in a sensible speech descanted on the spiritual needs of West London. From a cursory personal visitation of some of the outposts of the Mission, he described, somewhat humorously, his impressions of the work as he had seen it. He pathetically observed that at the Home for the Dying instead of finding the valley of the shadow he found green pastures and still waters. His account may have seemed stale to those familiar with the operations of the Mission, but he was certainly very warm and unreserved in his advocacy of the work. He said it has set an example of primitive Christian work that all other churches ought to follow. He was succeeded by another M.P., Mr. Robert Perks, who dealt with the financial aspect of the Mission. He said £3000 were needed for the social operations of the coming year—not so much as was paid the other day for an old snuff-box. We give a million of money for a battle-ship, and in face of that fact the sum needed is a mere bagatelle. Mr. Perks made passing reference to his famous Methodist "million-pounds" scheme, and hinted at the possibility of Mr. Hughes being appointed next President of the Conference, and so having some say in the distribution of that fund. A very hearty speech followed from Rev. J. J. Coxhead, of St. John's, Fitzroy-square, who spoke of some of the temptations that accompany wealth—encouragements to vice, the neglect by landlords of slum property, and the abuse or neglect of municipal power and authority. Mr. Coxhead quite captured the hearts of his audience, and his earnest brotherly remarks were punctuated with cheers.

A speech of extraordinary eloquence and realistic force was given by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, of Stamford Hill, on "The Word of the Lord liveth," as the basis of the work of the West London Mission. He declared his thankfulness that it was called a "mission" and not a "settlement," for that proves that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is in the centre and at the forefront of the work. His description of the needs of London, of the way in which the Gospel meets those needs, and of the glory of a regenerated London was really superb. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, President of the Conference, gave the work his benison, and then Rev. M. Guy Pearse had his innings. He was all afire with zeal for the social betterment of London. Jesus Christ, he insisted, was the biggest Socialist that ever walked the earth. The "one-roomed" tenements of London are a heavy burden on his soul, and they haunt him ceaselessly. Why should not our churches be formed into people's drawing-rooms once a week? How the angels must laugh at the fatuity of our conventional methods! A perfect stream of Cornish eloquence flowed forth as he painted the social ills and wrongs of London, which must eventuate either in the Socialism of the devil or the real Socialism of Jesus Christ.

Last of all came Mr. Price Hughes, whose mission was to create and evoke practical sympathy with the work; needless to say, he did it with all his unrivalled skill and power. It was a memorable anniversary. Once more we commend to our readers a careful perusal of the handbook that is issued, and that describes the past ten years' work.

Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead.—Of the good seed sown by varied means in this Mission at Lakedale-road, Plumstead, the workers are permitted from time to time to reap genuine fruit. A man who died in a London hospital, and who had a most triumphant departure to be with Christ, had testified that he was born again in Cage-lane Mission Hall. Another who died in India had been converted in this Sunday-school. An important feature in last year's work was a children's mission, conducted by Mr. Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission. Large numbers attended all the meetings, and we trust spiritual blessing was received by the little ones, while the teachers were greatly helped and encouraged. Much expense had to be incurred in consequence of a visit from the sanitary authorities. In every work of this kind there is a certain measure of disappointment to try faith, but there has been far more cause for praise and thanksgiving. The Mission is supervised by Mrs. General Anderson, 1, Thames View Terrace, Plumstead, S.E.

The B.W.T.A.

A BRILLIANT company, consisting largely of ladies, filled the Queen's Hall, on Monday evening, at the annual public meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association. After an opening hymn, and prayer by the Rector of Eastnor, Lady Henry Somerset delivered her presidential address. She was not looking over robust; but there appeared to be no decrease of mental vigour or intensity of feeling in her earnest and eloquent speech.

We are here, she said, to consider the blessedness of the benignant life. The truest happiness of life is to be found in going out after those who are lost and fallen, not in the gratification of self-pleasing and personal enjoyment. Some tender and touching recollections were uttered as to the loss to the temperance cause by the passing away of the veterans James Raper, Dr. Lees, and Neal Dow, whose devoted services were admirably but briefly sketched. A cheer greeted a passing reference to the United States as "the land that is fighting for liberty to-day." A still more pathetic tribute was paid to the memory of Frances Willard. At the mention of her revered name the whole assembly stood while Lady Henry expressed in heartfelt words her grateful and loving remembrance. One could not but mentally rejoin, "How deeply she loved her." Coming to the more immediate issues of the temperance crusade, her ladyship said, though it was a time of transition, things are moving towards the accomplishment of prohibition by the people. She was thankful for the Bill for dealing with criminal inebriates, and felt encouraged at the Duxhurst Industrial Home experiment. The greatest need of the hour is to go back to first principles, and prayerfully pursue individual work, conscious that there must be no cessation of effort, and no discharge in this sacred warfare. The address, though shorter than we have been accustomed to from such eloquent lips, was no less impressive and inspiring than any we have heard her give. "Let us do our part," she said, "and leave success to God, whose days are long, and the full triumph of whose cause is certain, though it may be distant."

A song written by the late Miss Willard, "On Heights of Power," was artistically sung by Miss Maude Danks.

A striking picture of Isaiah's sorrowful denunciation of the women of his day for their indifference to the great issues of that time, served as an effective introduction to Rev. C. F. Aked's address. The darkest blight and blackest curse that can fall on any nation comes when its women are wholly indifferent to the social and moral problems of their day. Englishwomen, he declared, are becoming victims of the drink in our day in a way that they have never done before, and as the women of no other nation have done. Mr. Aked enlarged on this point, as he told of children poisoned even before their birth, and of husbands mourning the degradation of their wives. The social statistics of Liverpool show that women are far more persistent in police convictions for drunkenness than the other sex. A weighty authority in Liverpool has asserted that there is no conceivable form of human degradation to which some women will not submit in order to get drink. The liquor is sottishly imbibed at home, and is too often sent for by the young children; so much so that the authorities in Liverpool have intervened to check this ruinous custom without waiting for Parliamentary action, which, Mr. Aked sarcastically added, may be expected "somewhere on the other side of the Judgment Day." The grocer's licence also came in for scathing and indignant comment. The curse of heredity, descending to the third and fourth generation of children, was expatiated on in burning language, and with such expressions as this—that many children are not so much born as damned into the world. It was, in its totality, a luridly pessimistic and depressing utterance, but it could not fail to show in naked and realistic colours this great and growing evil that is eating into the heart of some sections of our people. We must consecrate ourselves afresh, exclaimed the speaker, to larger love for men, and to deathless hate for all that is cursing and ruining them.

In a very decided and businesslike fashion Mrs. Bamford Slack summoned her sisters to address themselves, in the coming meetings of the Council, to the great work for the near future that lies to their hands. God has determined that there shall be continuous progress in the life of a vigorous society, and the growing power of the people to mould the conditions of their own lives is a call to wise plans and more earnest action. Accepting the gravity of Mr. Aked's black indictment, she said we must see in it a call to all Christian women to play the part of their sisters' keepers. She made a point by surmising that the proportion of men and women recidivists in drinking Liverpool might have been different if there were women police and women on the magisterial bench. On many points touching the springs of the drink evil and the special temptations that assail working women, Mrs. Slack called for the needed reforms, which will all make directly for the sobriety of the people.

The closing words by Canon Hicks, of Manchester, struck a trumpet note of hopefulness and of coming victory as a makeweight to the doleful nature of preceding utterances, and a preventive of despairing discouragement. He looked for great things from the close association that now exists between Christian men and women in this crusade. The great bulk of the Canon's powerful speech was an exposure of the conspiracy by which the great brewing and liquor selling vested interests are delaying temperance reform.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

TWO days of last week were devoted by this Union to its annual meetings and public conference in St. Martin's Town Hall and in the neighbouring Friends' Meeting House. Miss M. E. Docwra presided over a bright and well-attended public meeting on Wednesday evening, which was marked by a tone of thankful hope.

The report then presented (previously adopted by the Council) recognises that the success which has undoubtedly attended the whole work of the Union is in direct response to widespread, earnest, and heartfelt prayer. Federated societies now number 249, many of them with an increased membership. Financial needs have been met, leaving a small balance in hand; and the operations of the year included endowment of a children's cot at the London Temperance Hospital. There is reason to believe that a resolution adopted by the Union has had much to do with the fact that the whole of the members elected to the London School Board are pledged to support temperance teaching. The Union representation has been influential at various conferences and meetings of other bodies at home and abroad. As a set-off against saddening facts connected with the drink curse it is encouraging to know that the army of those pledged against the use of intoxicating drinks is ever growing; but the committee of the W.T.A.U., in Christ's name, earnestly call upon the Christian women of England to join with them in their holy crusade against this terrible enemy of the family, the home, and the nation.

Miss Docwra, in her opening speech from the chair, made feeling reference to the recent decease of former devoted workers in the temperance ranks; advocated individual adherence to the cause, rather than mere expressions of good wishes; and urged the necessity of using every possible means for the tireless, enthusiastic, and prayerful prosecution of operations which God is so manifestly blessing. The Union finds an augmented sale for temperance literature; and the Nurses' League constitutes a most influential and important branch of work, which has made a distinct advance in various parts of the country.

In lively strain Miss Harriet Crommelin (Utrecht) took a courageous view of temperance prospects in Holland. An interesting sketch of steady progress included acknowledgment of Dutch indebtedness to earlier English example, and to such literature as the late Mrs. Wightman's "Haste to the Rescue." Temperance teaching has reached across the Atlantic to Dutch colonies, is bearing some fruit among Holland's teachers and universities, and is influencing doctors, women, and children. Jealousies and prejudices, however, particularly in regard to work among younger children, call for wise treatment by those who have the cause at heart, and for the prayerful sympathy of English sisters.

Rev. John Bradford followed with an expression of indignation against easy-going people who pat reformers on the back but do nothing to fight the foe, and against authorities who punish drinkers rather than drunkard makers. The report just read, however, disclosed much cause of thankfulness in the labours of devoted women.

Mr. Joshua Rowntree, of Scarborough, in the course of his remarks, contended that the value of temperance effort must be gauged by the relation between the present spending power of the people and the actual expenditure upon drink. Miss Wright, of Mansfield, eloquently urged the claims of the Union upon Christian women.

Bridge of Hope Mission.

AT the Mansion House on Friday the Lord Mayor presided over a meeting at which the past year's work of this Mission was reviewed. His lordship spoke in sympathetic terms of the hardships and dangers which beset girl life in the East End, and warmly commended Miss Steer's work as a sound and worthy Christian enterprise.

The statement read by Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., treasurer and member of council, showed that as a result of the three branches of preventive, shelter, and rescue work, 164 little girls who were in danger of growing up to lead immoral lives are now in the Home; that 923 friendless young women were received into the night shelter, and that of others who had lost their characters 138 passed through training for honourable work, at the same time earning a considerable sum towards their own maintenance while in the Refuge.

Mrs. Creighton said that the Mission, which has abundantly justified its hopeful title, is an inspiration and an encouragement for all who have similar work at heart or in hand. The constant strain to get necessary funds for this work should be relieved by the increased support which it so well deserves; and in other directions the influence of subscribers might well be opposed to the despair or indifference with which social sin is commonly regarded.

The advantage of utilising the knowledge and experienced skill of trained workers as channels of generous Christian impulse was eloquently demonstrated by Canon Scott Holland, who also pointed out how wisely the operations of this Mission are graded to meet the varying necessities of different classes among the poor. Rev. F. B. Meyer believed that the Christian methods of the work, perseveringly maintained, had done much toward transforming the name and nature of its sphere. Sir Charles Elliott referred to free breakfasts for under-fed children within the reach of the Mission; and Mr. Walter Hazell testified to truly economical management in a work marked by the exercise of kindly personal interest, in contrast to anything like officialism. Miss Cowie and Prebendary Harry Jones also spoke.

Italian Church Reform Association.

ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR presided at the annual meeting of this Association, held on Friday at the Church House, Westminster. At the outset of the report for the past year, it was stated that the object of the King of Italy, according to his own declaration, is to make his country great by education and industry. But the object of Romanism, added the report, is to keep the people in ignorance and to discourage industry. Under a free Constitution, intolerance, the essence of the Papacy, has been banished from Italy. The report cited the gratifying reception given to Dr. and Mrs. Robertson in Dovadola as good evidence of the progress of the work in that place. Moreover, it was one proof out of many which might be given that the country districts of the Italian peninsula were now waking up from the sleep of ages. Another encouraging circumstance was the reception of the letter from Miss Martin at San Remo, stating that the Waldenses are quite disposed to work with the friends of the Italian Church Reform Association for the spiritual emancipation of Italy. In the report was embodied an appeal for augmented funds, so that the number of stations and workers might be increased. At present there are seven stations with only one worker at each.

The Chairman expressed an earnest hope that a sufficient sum to consolidate the work, of which Count Campello is the guiding spirit, might be speedily forthcoming. Canon Pennington dwelt on the absurdity and unscripturalness of the Papal claim to infallibility. Rev. H. J. R. Marston gave an address on the principles of the Reform movement in Italy, and Rev. E. A. Stuart spoke with regard to its claims on English Christians.

Home Missions.

Westbourne-grove Chapel.

SITUATED in the midst of a large population, Westbourne-grove Chapel, W., is a grand centre for Gospel work. The spacious building, capable of seating 1500 people, has a past record of great blessing in Christian service. As the years have gone by, the district has grown rapidly, and the population to-day includes, in painful proportions, the richest and poorest of London society. For some time past Westbourne-grove Church has been without a pastor, and only in very rare circumstances can work flourish in such conditions. Whatever the recent past may have been, with its trial and difficulty, a new era has now dawned by the settlement of Rev. George Freeman in the pastoral oversight.

Mr. Freeman has come from New Southgate, where for five years he did splendid work. He assumes his present responsibilities with the prayerful good wishes of all who know him. Taking his stand on "the things most surely believed" among Evangelical Christians, and laying himself out to "spend and be spent" in the service of the Gospel, he hopes to rally a band of faithful workers, so that the church may renew its youth under his care and guidance. There is room for all the energy with which God has endowed our friend; and in view of the vigour of the Romish propaganda, and the prevalence of a ritualism scarcely less God dishonouring and soul destroying, the sphere is one combining deep need with great opportunity. There are doubtless many in the district, not members of the Westbourne-grove fellowship, who will hail Mr. Freeman's advent as a blessing of Divine providence.

On Wednesday evening last a meeting was held in the chapel by way of giving a public welcome to the new minister. Rev. Frank White, who has been a true friend and wise counsellor to the church in its time of distress, occupied the chair, and among the speakers were officers of the church at New Southgate, who predicted great results from such a ministry as Mr. Freeman hopes under God's blessing to exercise. Rev. Dr. Bullinger emphasised the need of loyalty to Christ the Living Word, and the Scriptures the Written Word; and hearty addresses were delivered by Revs. W. L. Mackenzie, of Shooter's Hill, and John Wilson, of Woolwich. In the course of an earnest speech, Mr. Freeman declared his intention to bate nothing of the old teaching regarding sin and salvation, and the need of the Holy Spirit's action for regeneration and sanctification. Mr. W. H. Seagram followed with words of hearty sympathy.

Richmond House, Worthing.—This Convalescent Home, founded seven years ago, is under the direction of Miss Bothamley as hon. superintendent. It differs from ordinary homes of the kind in which nursing and medical attendance are not given, and is supported partly by voluntary contributions and partly by small weekly payments made by or for the patients. Its primary object is to provide special treatment for consumptives, for whom the air of Worthing is considered to be highly beneficial. Since the opening between thirteen and fourteen hundred patients have been admitted, the majority of whom have been enabled to return, at least for a time, to the ordinary duties of life. The work is entirely unsectarian. Patients' payments barely cover actual outlay for food and medicine alone.

The Island and Coast Society of Ireland exists to meet the spiritual destitution of the islands around the Irish coast. Of late a grave source of anxiety presents itself in the condition of the scattered Protestants on the northern, western, and southern coasts, bleak and backward places, and on the islands adjacent, where the overwhelming majority is Roman Catholic. The present condition of Ireland has most seriously affected those distant parts. The local help for Protestant Scriptural schools is gone. The gentry and the wealthier classes are no longer resident. Increasing demands are made upon the Society, and it urgently appeals for help to all who feel for their Protestant brethren in these lonely and scattered districts. The secretary is Rev. Charles W. Fleury, 8, Dawson-street, Dublin.

[4221

Watercress and Flower Girls.

THE watercress and flower girls of London are a class of street toilers much to be pitied, and often grievously sinned against. Were it not for the efforts put forth by Mr. John Groom's Mission they would be almost entirely neglected by the Christian public. Owing to the Gospel and philanthropic work which has so happily been carried on among them a striking improvement is manifest.

Among the thousands benefited by this excellent mission there is a sad proportion of crippled and otherwise afflicted girls to whom domestic service is an impossibility. Mr. Groom and his committee are anxious to secure premises for the establishment of an Industrial Home where these girls can be taken in and taught artificial flower making. The premises which Mr. Groom's committee are anxious to secure are adjacent to the house at present occupied. £1000 is asked for the lease, leaving only a very small amount of ground-rent to be paid by the purchaser. The girls will be taught flower making from one to two years, and will be happily surrounded with Christian influence and proper care. The proceeds of their labour will go towards the cost of their support.

It is truly a Christlike work thus to practically help to alleviate the sufferings and privations of these poor afflicted ones by helping them to help themselves. I hope this businesslike scheme of real philanthropy will commend itself to the Lord's people, and all monetary needs will doubtless be forthcoming to enable our friend to carry out this latest desire of his heart. Every information will be gladly afforded by Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

GEO. HATTON.

20, Guildford-road, Tunbridge Wells.

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.

THE first anniversary of the reopening of this Institute was held on Tuesday last week, when an inspiring report was read by the superintendent, Rev. Thos. Jackson. The work is in the fullest sense undenominational, and in perfect harmony with the object and wishes of those who were responsible for the erection of the building. During the year over 300 lads have been enrolled as members, and the various departments have been well patronised. A church has been formed which now has over sixty members in fellowship; a Sunday-school and Band of Hope have been established; a "Women's Pleasant Monday Afternoon Meeting" has a membership of over 100. There are also Bible-classes for young men and women, a Christian Endeavour Society, a Young People's Guild, Lodging a House Mission; while open-air services are held.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan; speeches were delivered by Revs. John Atkinson, W. Sawyer, and Messrs. Geo. Nokes, Thos. Lawrence, and Wm. Beckworth.

Soldiers' Home, Gosport.—In these stirring and eventful times such work as this, carried on by the Misses Ridout, is surely more important than ever. Soldier lads who are with us to-day may in a few short months be called away on active service to fight for their country, in India, Egypt, or elsewhere. A young sergeant wrote from the Khyber Pass: "I often think about happy Gosport days, and long for the quiet, restful evening service in Church; but God is ever near, and I realise more and more as the days go by, what it is to be kept by his power." The Sunday afternoon Bible-class has been helpful to many, and the social tea afterwards, when workers make friends with the lads, has always been a popular institution.

Finsbury Park Lads' Institute.—On Thursday week, at the Finsbury Park Hall, a public meeting was held, under the chairmanship of Mr. Cory-Wright, J.P., on behalf of this Institute. The proceedings were begun with a display of physical drill by the probationers of the Institute. Mr. A. Willis, the hon. director, made a special appeal on behalf of the building fund, there being a debt of some £1000, which the committee are anxious to get rid of. Rev. Campbell Morgan said he was there to show his sympathy with the working of the Institute, which is situated in a particularly needy and trying neighbourhood. He appealed in the name of Christ and humanity for aid in the financial burden under which it laboured. Mr. C. F. Cory-Wright commended the instruction the boys received as calculated to make them useful members of society. By being usefully employed at the Institute they were kept from the temptations of the streets.

Distress in South Wales.

HALF a million of men, women, and children in Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire are directly affected by the deadlock now in the coalfields. Already over £1,000,000 has been lost to the community through this strike, and the consequence is want, ruin, and misery in every direction. As twenty-seven of the mission centres of the Welsh Forward Movement are located in the very heart of these affected districts, your readers can easier imagine than I can describe the awful suffering witnessed by us daily and hourly. Our devoted missioners are simply overwhelmed at their utter helplessness to relieve a hundredth part of the pressing needs around them. They are not able to cope with the current expenses of their respective mission centres, let alone extend help to the starving poor about them.

Will your readers please send us immediate help? The blessing of those ready to perish will surely fall upon those who come to the relief of the poor and needy at this time.

JOHN PUGH, Superintendent.

Grange-gardens, Cardiff, May 6.

Warehousemen and Foreign Missions.

AT the recent annual meeting of the City of London Bible-class Union it was suggested that some definite interest should be taken in foreign missionary work, with the result that the Warehousemen and Drapers' Foreign Missionary Society was formed. The objects are to create and foster a spirit of missionary enterprise among business men, also to train for and support workers in the foreign field.

The dismissal of the first missionary, Mr. J. H. Harris, of Messrs. Cook, Son, and Co., took place on Friday evening last at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. Dr. Harry Guinness gave an illustrated lecture on mission work on the Congo, where Mr. Harris is to labour under the direction of the Congo-Balolo Mission. The chair was taken by Mr. J. Kent, of Messrs. Cook, Son, and Co.; he testified of his deep interest in the Society, and appealed to the large gathering for sympathy and support.

It is hoped that before the year closes several other representatives of business houses will have gone forth, and so help forward the evangelisation of the world. Information as to the Society may be obtained of Mr. G. Blight, 22, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.—This mission has concluded a successful series of anniversary services. At the public meeting addresses were given by Rev. Lindsay Young, Capt. Riley, Mr. Fison, and Rev. J. Watkin Davies. Mr. Hogben made some interesting statements concerning the successful work of the past year. One evening Mr. Hogben made a statement concerning the "One by One Working Band," showing that during the year a large number of people have been led to Christ by prayer and effort. The meetings extended over four days.

Bible Carriage and Tent Work.—Meetings under canvas were carried on during 1897 in Kent and Sussex. This good work is in the hands of Mr. D. Perry, Ferndale Cottage, Jarvis Brook, Sussex; and besides the brethren who have been regularly helping him, his son Douglas and Messrs. Hall and Comber, he has had Christian fellowship of some who have spent their holidays in carrying Christ's Gospel to the villages. Many interesting incidents occurred in house-to-house conversation, and in gatherings of the people around the Bible-carriage in the evening on the village greens.

The Rescue and Evangelisation Mission, Sheffield, has long been working to disadvantage on account of having too small a hall. An opportunity has come. The Congregationalists have been using an iron hall for a few years. As they are now about to build a more substantial one they have agreed to sell it to this mission for £200, including seating and heating apparatus. We have also to pay £1 per week for ground rent of the land to build it upon, and there will be cost of taking down and putting up again, making a total of about £300. We shall be very gratefnl for any help towards this special effort, or for the general work. Our people are all very poor, yet all are doing their utmost to help. Our organisation comprises four mission stations, rescue, preventive, and maternity work, and home for servants out of place, who have no home of their own. We have had about 385 cases through our hands, and about eighty-five per cent. have turned out well. (MRS.) E. CORBRIDGE.

250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

RESULTS OF A SPECIAL MISSION.

IN reporting special missions we endeavour to avoid giving numbers, because it is difficult at the moment to decide between passing emotions and genuine turning to God. When, however, some little time has elapsed the results become evidenced by the effects upon the life. Others, again, are sometimes inclined to question the permanence of the mission fruit; hence it is interesting to find what observers on the spot have to say of the results when sufficient time has passed to allow of testing.

In this way we have been interested in letters now in our hands from Wigan, where Mr. George Clarke held a mission in December last. In these letters we find the testimony of the vicar of St. Catherine's and most of the Nonconformist ministers of that place, as well as the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., giving specific names and addresses and indications of definite results.

One minister tells of receiving 115 into his church as the results of the mission. "So far as can be seen the great majority are living as becoming the Gospel. Numbers have joined the Christian Endeavour Society and other bands of earnest workers." It is specially noted by this writer that many who at the time did not seem affected have since then proved to have been touched by the Gospel and have been led to yield. Another pastor reports 29 received, and 18 now preparing to join the fellowship.

The Primitive Methodist ministers write (and their words are illustrative of others): "We received, as a result of the mission conducted by Mr. Clarke, about thirty who had professed conversion. With much joy we report that all of these have so far kept the faith and are living Christlike lives, making progress in the Christian life, and taking up active work. The church itself has received a strong accession of spiritual life, and is prosecuting vigorously a forward movement." Similarly the Y.M.C.A. report fifty-one new members and the Y.W.C.A. forty.

The Presbyterian pastor writes: "I am much pleased with the evidences of life which the major part of our young converts have manifested since the close of the mission. I am also deeply grateful to God for the measure of spiritual quickening which some of my members received. The gracious visitation cannot fail to tell for good on my congregation for many years to come."

MR. CHARLES INGLIS IN CANNING TOWN.

THE hearts of God's people are filled with thanksgiving for all they have been permitted to see in a fortnight's Gospel campaign, conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis in connection with Lady Ashburton's Mission. The Lord has often blessed the visits of his servant to us before, but on no former occasion has the work had such far-reaching results as now. Night after night men and women were brought to Christ through the solemn addresses carried to the heart and conscience by the Holy Spirit. The last Sunday of the Mission will long be remembered. Large numbers that day professed in the inquiry room to trust Christ as their Saviour, and many teachers who had been sowing the seed for years rejoiced to see their boys and girls won for Christ. The meetings for Christians have been greatly blessed, the spiritual life of many having been quickened.—R. B.

Since closing at Canning Town, Mr. Inglis has opened a month's service in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. During the past week much interest has been aroused, and numbers have been pricked to the heart by the power of the Word. Many have decided for Christ, some being most interesting cases. After one of the meetings, for example, a well-dressed man was found in great anxiety about his soul. The way of acceptance was pressed upon him, and eventually he found peace. It then transpired that he was the landlord of a well-known East End public-house. The workers are making special prayer that he may be kept true to the faith of Christ, and that his way (now hedged with difficulties) may be made clear as to his business.

MR. JOSIAH SPIERS IN PERTH.

MR. JOSIAH SPIERS conducted an interesting children's mission at Perth, N.B., from April 17 to May 2, under the auspices of the Perth Evangelistic Association. The meetings were held in three of the principal churches in the city, and were attended by large numbers of children and young people, also by many parents, teachers, and Christian workers of all denominations. Coming as a stranger amongst us, Mr. Spiers, by his lovable and happy style, gained the affections of all, and from the commencement it was felt that he had but one aim in view, viz., the salvation of the young. From his long experience of over thirty years' work amongst children, he has gathered together a great many touching incidents which he uses to illustrate Gospel truth, and these, together with a number of beautiful hymns from "Golden Bells," kept the attention of the children in each meeting from beginning to end. By the power of the Holy Spirit real spiritual awakening was manifest from the beginning, and the impression deepened as the meetings went on.

The good seed of the Kingdom was sown in many young hearts, and evidence is given by not a few that they have begun to love the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour for the first time. Others also who were previously lambs in his fold have been enabled to follow and serve Him more confidently. Many Christians have been refreshed and taught how better to teach and win the young to Christ. Teachers in Sabbath-schools have also received a stimulus in their work, and some who were earnestly disposed but not decided for Christ, have been led into the light, and now rejoice in conscious pardon and peace in believing.—J. A.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Since last month Mr. WILLIAM NOBBS has been labouring at Brinscombe and Chalford, where the Lord's blessing was granted. Next at home in Hereford he found abundant opportunity at Hereford Fair. He has now gone to Crediton, North Devon, whence he goes to Torquay. In June he will be at Redhill. Mr. Nobbs will be glad of prayer for these services.

A cheering mission to men was brought to a close on Sunday week, in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Enniskillen, by Mr. WM. A. BOYD. Every night during the mission the power of God the Holy Spirit was manifest, and many young men "passed from death unto life." The local association was much helped, and a band of young men intends to carry on evangelistic work both in town and country.

Mr. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a month's mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall. The meetings have been well attended, and many souls have been won for the Master's Kingdom. The addresses were very pointed and full of fire. The hearers were led to feel that the evangelist was so much in earnest about their spiritual welfare that they could not withhold their attention, which resulted in much blessing.

A ten days' mission has been held at Southend by Mr. HENRY THORNE, commencing with a workers' meeting on Saturday, April 23, which was a great success. Nearly all the gatherings were held in the Union Hall, Clarence-street, which was so crowded for the Gospel meetings that several evenings large numbers were turned away from the doors owing to there being no room left. The afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated and largely attended. The result of the mission has been much blessing in the winning of precious souls for the Master, and the stirring up and deepening of the spiritual life of the Lord's people.

At Shelley the opening of the tent on Sunday, May 1, was hailed with great delight, and the evangelist, Mr. JOHN HARRIS, met with a warm welcome. The morning message, "There shall be showers of blessing," was prophetic of the days to come, for the promise has been abundantly verified. A wave of blessing and revival is passing over the neighbourhood, and every night there are signs of the Spirit's working. In spite of the wet weather which has prevailed since the erection of the tent, large numbers have gathered night after night. Believers have been encouraged and refreshed, backsliders brought back, and sinners convinced of sin and led to receive Jesus as their Saviour. In one instance two husbands (brothers), with their wives and a brother, have been converted.

E. KING.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. J. NEECH, Guyhirn, May 8-22.
MR. JOSIAH NIX, Halifax, May 8-16.
MR. F. C. SPURR, Malvern, May 14-23.
MR. E. P. TELFORD, Bow, E., May 8-19.
MR. GEORGE CLARKE, Lower Edmonton, May 8-23.
Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, in May, Great Assembly Hall.
GIPSY SMITH, Deptford and Greenwich, May 14-23.
MRS. BAEYERTZ, May, in Aberdeen; June, Clitheroe.
THE WEAVER BROS., Glasgow (Keppoch-hill), May 15-17.
SERGEANT PULLINGER, Welbeck-street, W., May 22; Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.
CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY.—The following missions have been arranged for the months of May, June, July, August, and September; it is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by readers; Rev. W. H. Aitken, May 7-23, Chulmleigh, Devon; May 28-June 13, Milborne Port, Somerset. Rev. Norman Bennet, May 15-21, The Leys School, Cambridge; May 21-28, Wimborne; May 28-30, Chard Grammar School. Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, May 14-24, Hempstead, Saffron Walden. Rev. J. Cushing, May 14-23, Ballyphilip, Portaferry, Co. Down; June 11-20, Saintfield.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission by Mr. James Eyres at Barry Dock Mission Hall for Navvies, May 7-16.

For monthly meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life, at Ipswich, on May 16.

For God's blessing on Sir Arthur Blackwood's Gospel tract, "Eternal Life," which has been translated into Bohemian, and distributed in Prague.

Personalia.

Mr. A. Forder, writing from Nablous on April 23, says: "When three days on my journey towards Arabia I was kicked by a horse, and am now in bed with a broken leg."

Rev. Dr. Lamb, of Ambrym, New Hebrides, a missionary of distinguished (although not protracted) record, of the New Zealand Presbyterian Church, has been overtaken with an illness that has necessitated his withdrawal from work, at least temporarily.

Rev. George C. Needham, in response to pressing invitations from missionaries in Japan, proposes, with Mrs. Needham, shortly to undertake a missionary tour in Japan, and probably also China, Korea, and India, for evangelistic work and the exposition of the Word of God among English and American residents and English-speaking natives.

Bishop Thoburn, of India, as our readers know, is now on a visit of some months to this country. Having spent nearly forty years in varied Christian work throughout India, he has an unrivalled knowledge of the people and their needs. He would be glad to speak at missionary and other meetings during his stay among us. Letters to him should be addressed 67, Torrington-street, London, W.C.

The will of the late Mr. George Muller, founder of the Orphan Houses on Ashley Down, Bristol, has been proved by his son-in-law and sole executor, Mr. James Wright. The testator directed that the Orphan Houses on Ashley Down be carried on after his decease on the same principles on which he founded them in 1835, and that Mr. James Wright, who for more than thirty-seven years had been one of his principal assistants, and whom he appointed, in 1872, assistant director with him, should, after his decease, be the sole director of the five Orphan Houses; and the deceased bequeathed to Mr. James Wright the whole of his real and personal estate. The personal property has been sworn at £160 9s. 4d., of which £60 3s. 4d. was in money. Several papers, last week, made the highly erroneous statement that Mr. Müller's estate was valued at £160,000!

Rev. John McNeill.—Much friendly interest has been evoked in this evangelist's approaching marriage with Miss Millar, among the friends aiding him in the work at the Agricultural Hall. The large body of stewards and the choir have each presented Mr. McNeill with tangible expressions of their hearty goodwill and their sincere wishes for his future welfare and happiness. Friends of Mr. McNeill may be glad to know that some really capital portraits of him have been taken by Mr. J. S. Dodington, of 62, Upper-street, Islington, N. Large photos, 11 in. by 7in., sitting or standing posture, can be had in platinotype, in neat oak frame, 7s. 6d., post free, cabinet size 1s.; and platinotype, 9½in. by 6¾ in., 2s., post free. Mr. Dodington has also secured a fine photo of the Agricultural Hall, seated as for the mission, 2s. 9d. unframed, 6s. 6d. framed, post free.

After-care Association.—Of the large number of men and women of various callings and conditions of life in lunatic asylums in England and Wales, many are discharged in the course of a year recovered. They are mostly very poor and some are friendless, but all are anxious to earn their own living and are often very capable of doing so. Mr. H. Thornhill Roxby is secretary of this Association, which has offices at the Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W., and its chief objects are to facilitate the readmission of poor male and female convalescents from lunatic asylums in social life.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Christ and Childhood.

II.—THE BOYHOOD OF JESUS.

HOLMAN HUNT has painted a beautiful picture called "The Flight into Egypt," in which he has represented the child Jesus in his mother's arms as she rides on the ass led by Joseph. The Holy Babe is looking with joy at the happy band of glorified and radiant little martyrs, who, all unseen by Mary and Joseph, are going with Jesus as children angels and sweet companions in the night. This bright group of joyous infants is like a troup of guardian angel friends who have found this glad service their exceeding great reward. Jesus holds in his small outstretched hand a few ears of corn, for are not these martyred saints the first-fruits of them that sleep in Him?

Jesus and his parents stayed in Egypt till the death of Herod, which took place two years after Christ's birth. Then an angel told Joseph in a dream to take the young child and his mother and go into the land of Israel. Being warned of God, Joseph did not go through Judea, but turned aside into Galilee, and came to the little town of Nazareth, that had a very bad name among the cities of Galilee, and was spoken of as a despised place, but as it was the place where Joseph and Mary had formerly lived, and Joseph had a carpenter's shop, there they settled. Jesus probably remained at Nazareth for twenty-eight years, until he was thirty.

It is in "their own city, Nazareth," that Luke ii. 40 says, "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was on Him." Of the child Samuel it was said, "the child grew, and was in favour both with the Lord and also with men." This is the true and beautiful way for all children to grow up. Of John the Baptist it was written: "The child grew and waxed strong in spirit"; but with Jesus there was more that belonged to little Samuel, John, or even Solomon—He was "filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon Him," and He "increased in wisdom and age (or stature), and in favour with God and man."

1. The child grew and waxed strong in body and in health. 2. The moral nature grew, "becoming full of wisdom" (marginal reading in R.V.) in mind and intellectual power. 3. He grew spiritually in favour with God and man, and the very "grace of God was upon Him."

When Jesus was twelve he took the journey that was the ambition of every Jewish boy, and went up to Jerusalem to attend, with his parents, the feast of the Passover. He saw the Temple for the first time, and there He loved to go. At the time of the return to Galilee Jesus was missing, but his mother did not find it out till probably toward the evening of the first day's journey, thinking him to be with some of their friends in the large company. Then Mary and Joseph came back to Jerusalem, and sought for Him with troubled and anxious hearts in all the likely places they could think of, and making all inquiries. On the third day they were able to trace Him to the Temple, where, in one of the numerous chambers that ran round the courts, they found Him sitting in the midst of the rabbis and teachers, listening to what they had to say and asking them questions, so that all who heard them were astonished at his understanding and answers.

His parents were glad when they saw Him, and were amazed at what they heard. Mary asked Him why He had so treated them, and Jesus answered, "How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house (or about the things of my Father)?" But they did not understand the saying which He spake unto them.

These words of Jesus are of the deepest interest, because they are the first we have given to us, and they show us the absolute devotion to his heavenly Father, and the necessity that guided all his doings.

The fact that Jesus was not understood even by his own mother tells of how much Jesus must have suffered as a boy in loneliness of soul; and if they who loved Him most could not understand Him, how would it be possible for others, who would love Him less, to comprehend the full meaning of his life and words?

Yet, nevertheless, Jesus went back with his parents to Nazareth, and "was subject unto them"—learnt obedience, fulfilled the fourth commandment, was trained and taught by them in the seclusion of the beautiful and peaceful village life of Nazareth. Here for eighteen years He worked in the carpenter's shop, and we may be sure that He did all his work as well as it could be done. Making many things that were useful; among them the yokes for the cattle, which He would turn out smooth and easy, so that they should not gall or rub the necks of the oxen. Thinking also of other people who had rough yokes to bear, and of his own yoke of doing the Father's will, which, if the people would only take with Him, would make all their yoke-bearing easy and all their burdens light.

The Four Youngest Inmates of the Home for Chinese Girls, San Francisco.
(See last week's issue.)

Spring and Youth.

By William Luff.

There is a wonderful parallel between spring and youth, and as I walked in the country I jotted down a few points in which they are alike. Would my young friends like to see these notes? Here they are then.

Spring is a time of beauty. How fresh and lovely everything appears! And is not youth a time of beauty? It ought to be, and is, until sin comes and withers its freshness. Who will give their time of beauty to Jesus that it may be preserved?

Spring is a time of song. All the birds seem to get new voices in the early months of the year: so that God calls it "The time of the singing of birds." Children also love singing; only too often they sing silly and even wicked songs.

Spring is a time of growth. Everything seems pushing upward. And do not the young people say—

> How you grow! how you grow!
> Everybody tells me so?

But do we "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ"? (2 Pet. iii. 18.)

Spring is a time of bloom. The cherry trees, the plum, the pear, and the apple tree all put forth their buds of promise. Does mother see the opening bloom of future fruit upon your young life, my little friend? Now is the time for blossom.

Spring is a time of danger. One frost may spoil all our hopes of fruit, some little blight destroy the tender bloom. How true this is of youth! The frost of coldness, the blight of sin, one hour of exposure, and all is lost.

Spring is a time of anxiety. With what eager eyes the fruit-grower watches his trees, the farmer his crops, and the Sunday-school teacher the class. Will the seed sown spring up? Will the hopeful bloom come to fruit? Will there be a good harvest?

Spring does not last long. Nor does youth; but under the sunshine of God's love, and the showers of God's grace, youth may go on to a summer of blessing. Trust in Jesus, and this shall be the case.

Spring Flowers.

Little children, look around
Where the lovely flowers abound;
Flowers of many a brilliant hue,
Tipped with sparkling drops of dew.

Little children, do you know
Who hath made these flowers to blow?
Brightening e'en the moorland sod—
'Twas your loving Father, God.

Little children, hear his voice
Bidding you in Him rejoice.
He who made the flowers so fair
Loves his children everywhere.

Walton Park, Clevedon. Wm. Kitching.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 120 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

A—Ambrose Adams*, Charlie Ardley, J. H. Archer, Jacob American, Zeldah Albert* Ralph Aldwinckle, Wm. Aston*.

B—Charlotte Bailey*, Geo Brand, Edith R. Ballard, Henrietta Bardot, Janet and Elizabeth Black, Katharine, Lilian, and Teresa Blacklie. Aline and Chappie* Bazett, Edith* and Gertrude Badham, Mary Beck,* Emmie Bennett*. J. K. Bennett, Ethel and John Benger, Leonard Bentall, Dorothy Berry*, A. Bridges, E. Biddicombe, Mabel Birney*, Herbert and Ernest Bond, John Bott, Albert Botting, Lindsay* and Leonard Browne, Chas. Brown, Ralph Bourne, S. V. Boxer, Ashley H. Bowker*, Eva Browne*, Phyllis Boyd*, Gordon Bolton, Harry and Bertie Butler, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Lily Clarke, Walter Carter, Beatrice M. Cashford, James W. Campbell, Daisy* and Lottie* Carmichael, Birdie Caskey, Lilian Kate Carp, Jack J. Clarke, Beryl* and Gladys* Calvert, Mary and Willie Charles, M. Joan Clarke, Rosaline Castein, Colin and G. Campbell, Nellie and Janet Crawford, Maggie and Jessie Carter, Vernon, D. Rosalind, and Jack Clarke, Chas., Isabel* and Mabel Candlin, H. J. Chenery*, Marjorie Collins, Ruth Coupe*, Frances* and Olive Coleman, Dorothy Cooper*, Annie Cooper*, Nina Coote, Arthur G. Cox, Wm. S. Corrick*, Henry S. Curr*, S. A. and Walter Cumbers.

D—J. Ernest Davey, Harold Davis*, Willie R. Davies*. Blossom Davis, Polognia Daws, Violet Dodsworth, Kenneth Dunbar*, Gordon S. Duncan, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke.

E—Muriel Edwards*, L. Ewin*, Muriel Ecroyd, Eva L. Edmundson.

F—Janet Fawkes, Jeanne Faucon, Arthur and Richard Farmer, Marian* and James* Freegard, Kate* and Maggie Fletcher, Louise Filbol*, Willie Ernest, and Reginald Findlay, Wm. and Fanny Field, Hyacinth B. Fitzsimons*, Eric and J. A. Field, Aileen* and F. A., Figgis, Flossie*, Janetta, Maggie* and Agnes* Fullerton.

G—Eva Gray, Maurice Greenleaf*, Daisy*, Alfred, and Mary Greenacre, Mildred Greenwood, Edith Grieve, Alfred* and F. Gibbs, Agnes Grierson, Minnie Giddings*, Dorothy Grove, Daisy Groves*, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Annie Hazledine*, Edith Harris*, Ella Hake*, Nellie Hatchett*, Winifred Harvey, Edith and Emily Hearn, Agnes W. M. Head, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Byrcs Hill, Margaret D. Hogg. Louie Hooper*, Marjorie Hogge, Stanley, Florence, and Francie Hoyte. Violet Holford*, Helen, Harcourt, May V. and Tom Hunter, Edith L. and Mena Hunter, Lila K. Hughes, Ethel Hutchings.

J—J. Sinclair Jackson, Betty Jacobs*, Nellie Jelfs*, Norman* and Kate G.* John, Lizzie Johnstone, Henry B. Johnston.

K—W., Isa, A. D., T., and A.* Kay, Maurice Kalinsky, Stanley, Eva, and Max* Kalb, Flossie Key, Helen L. Knight*, G. Norman King, Ruth M. Knight, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Henry and Nessie* Laing, Arthur J. Lamb, Wm. C. A. and J. D Law, Annie W. and Alex. R. Lemon, Arthur Llewellyn, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Edith and Harry Lowe, Nellie Lovegrove, Mary and Grahame Lloyd.

M—Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Edith Marnham*, H. T. and B. Malaher, Enid, Gladys*, and Beryl* Mather*, Lillie Mallory, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Robert, Aubrey, and Winnie* Marriott, Kathleen J. G. McClure*, Dugald and K.* MacGilp, Abraham*, Thos., Margaret and Bella Mack, Margaret Macphee, Sabina E. Mackintosh, Florence and E. L. Mackenzie. Elsie M. McPherson, John MacMurray, Barbara Maconchy*, Hilda Medill*, Reginald Measor*, May C. Mills, Bessie Millar, Charlotte Millar*, Annie E. Moule, Dorothy and Margaret Morris.

N—Dorrie Nathan*, Edith* and Ernest Nash, Herbert G. Newton*, Mary and Henry Nelligan, John, G., Cissy, and Peter* Nicholson, Maude and Amy Nottage.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes, Katie and Sidney Oliver, F. A. Osmond Lottie and Harriette Orr.

P—Winnie Page*, Dorothy Patten*, Winifred*, Ada*, Jessie*, and Willie Palmer, Haden Palmer*, J. Ernest Pearce*, Laura D. Percy, E. Primrose Pechey, Walter Perryman, Myrtle Perry, W. Petter, W. M. Louie, and Mary Penny, Daisy, Vera, and May Petrides, Clarice M. Peach*, Edwin Peters, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Kathleen Pincott*, Susabel Pim, Ernest Poynder, Jessie*, Lillian*, and Margaret* Poole, Rhoda Porter*.

Q—Minnie and Edith Quick.

R—Marjorie, Edward, and Herbert F.* Rainey, Nora Read, Edith M Robinson, Mildred Robinson*, Isabel, Elmina, and Jessie Roe, Arthur and Cyril Roberts, T. Roberts, Sydney and Olive Robertson, Kate Rosenbloom, Chas. S. Rudge*.

S—Eric*, Gladys E., Mervyn, Llewellyn, Undine, and Gwendoline Shaw, T. M., D. D., and C. D.* Stainer, Flora Shadbolt. Winnie M. Stancoe, Chas. W. Saunders, Edith Saunderson, Margery Smart*, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Harold Sanders, McLeod Staight, Dollie and Bob* Salt, Bessie Scantlebury, Kathleen and Elsie M'Slark, Lilian Skoats, Agnes M. Sterry*, Douglas and Kathleen Shepherd, Marie E. Sleigh, Muriel, Ivy, and Rosetta* Sherwin, Nellie Sery, D. Russell Smith, Esther Simmons, Kate Smith*, Mary C. Spigonovicz, E. Short*, Gertrude, Mildred, and Constance Scott, Emily Stuart*, Herbert M. Stuart*, C. Bessie Symes*.

T—Herbert J. Taylor, Winnie Taylor, Lonie* and Nannie* Tibbits, John W. Thomson*, Wm. D., Nettie* and Katie* Thomson, Frank* and Alice M.* Thompson, Janet Thomson, Harry Thompson, James Tuff, Alice Truelove, Maude F. and Edith Tyson.

U—Queenie Upton*.

V—Gertrude W. Vellacott*.

W—Stewart Watson, Dorothy Warner*, Mary Ware, J. Wm.* and Edith J.* Wheeler, Jessie G. R. West, Maggie Wight, F. White, Eva Winpenny, F. Wilson*, Pringle Wilson*, Ruby and Edith Wilkins, Colin, Arthur*, and H. A. Wright, Ada Willmer*, Evelyn H. Wood.

Y—Annie Yeo.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (121).

1. In Hebron. Seven years, six months.
2. The men of Jabesh Gilead. Blessed be ye of the Lord, that ye have showed this kindness unto Saul.
3. Because Abner had made Isbosheth, the son of Saul, king over Gilead.
4. Two of his servants, Baanah and Rechab.
5. After the battle at the pool of Gibeon, he pursued after Abner, who told him to turn aside, as he did not wish to kill him. But when Asahel refused to do so Abner slew him, Joab and Abishai slew Abner at Hebron, after David had pardoned him, because he had slain their brother.
6. When David went to fetch the ark from the house of Abinadab, it was placed on a new cart, and when the oxen shook it, Uzzah put forth his hand to steady it. And God smote him for his error, and he died.
7. It was taken to the house of Obed-edom, the Gittite. After three months David went to fetch it, and brought it to Jerusalem with great gladness.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*, Ernst, Ralph, and Dora Aldwinkle, A. Rose Anton, W. T. Aldous, Violet Ashworth.

B—Herbert Braddon*, Aline and Chappie Bazett, Florence Bellerby, Edith E. Bensted*, Leslie* and Jasper* Bell, Gordon Bligh, Mabel Birney, Emily Bridgewater, Lindsay and Leonard* Browne, Nellie, Beatrice, and Gertrude Brookfield, Phyllis Boyd*, Gertrude Bush.

C—Eleanor Chance*, Birdie Caskey, D. Rosalind and Jack Clarke, Daisy M. A. and M. Joan Clarke, Rosaline Castein*, Cicely and M. M. Craven, Edith M., Ida, Annie, and Mabel Cole, Irene Coppard, Dorothy Cooper*, F. B. Coleman, Kathleen and Broreton Code.

D—Cecil Davis, Willie Davies*, Vera Dickinson, Ivy, Violet, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby.

F—Richard and Arthur Farmer, Chas. Faillettaz, Ethel Fielder, Eric and J. A. Field, Constance Furlong.

G—David Gardiner*, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Gertrude and Dorothy Green, Mary Gover.

H—Frances Harding, Edith Harris*, Dorothea R. Harris, Dorothy G.* and Evelyn E.* Hewer, Alice M. Hogben*, Harry* and Doris* Hodgkinson, Joshua Hughes-Games.

J—Betty Jacobs,* Florrie Jennings, Agnes Jones.

K—Maurice Kalinsky, Max*, Eva*, and Stanley Kalb, Mary and Ethel Kestin.

L—Henry*, May*, Edward*, and Sidney* Law, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup*, Nellie and Edith Lockhart.

M—Ada Macnutt*, Chas. and G. Macdonald, Miriam, Gracie, Margie, and Sydney Marston, Reginald Measor*, Howard*, Evelyn, and Arthur L. Moir, Helen Morgan.

P—Alice M. Palmer, Herbert Parr, Ethel M.* and Kathleen A.* Pasley, Eva Petter*, Dora M. Phillimore, Kathleen E. Pincott*, Mary E. Plumb*.

R—Nora Read, Edith M. Robinson, Olive and Sydney Robertson, Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Betty Swanston, Margery Smart*, Frederick Seth*, Esther Simmons, Flora Simmons*, Betty Stocks*, Ronald Studd, Herbert M. Stuart*.

T—Violet* and Olive* Tritton, Peveril, Herbert, Laurence, and Arthur Turnbull, Edith and Maude Tyson.

V—Dorothy, May*, and Edwin Vickers, Kenneth Vining*.

W—Edith J. Wheeler, Edie Whiting, Cecile and Phillis Wright.

Foreign list.—Correct answers received from:—

Nos. 111 and 112.—Mildred Fryer* (Sydney). No. 113.—Maria H.* and Cuckoo* Lister. No. 115.—Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 117.—Queenie and Llewellyn Dale (Bombay), Frank* and Vera* Sjöström (Brooklyn). No. 118.—Frank* and Vera* Sjöström.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 122).

1. Who seemed to mistake John the Baptist for Jesus; and sent asking, "Who art thou?"—John.
2. What messengers asked the question?—John.
3. Who, with a guilty conscience, mistook Jesus for John the Baptist? And after what event did the mistake occur?—Matt.
4. What message did John the Baptist send to Jesus from his prison?—Matt.
5. What well-known and beautiful words did John the Baptist twice use (two days following)?—John.
6. Who buried John the Baptist?
7. What did they do after they had buried him?
8. Where are the words used, "John fulfilled his course"—(words which men would have thought inappropriate)?—Acts.
9. Briefly state your impressions as to the motive which led John to send his disciples to Jesus with the question referred to in No. 4. Was it for the establishment of their faith, or for the confirmation of his own?

[Give chapter and verse in each case; those under TEN do Nos. 1, 2, and 3; those under THIRTEEN do the first five.]

Personal.

The flowers sent during this last week have been passed on to the Flower Mission. The kind senders can hardly realise what joy these flowers bring to the sick and suffering.

J. ERNEST PEARCE.—I was very pleased, indeed, with your photo; thank you very much for sending it. I am sorry the questions puzzle you sometimes.

H. B. JOHNSTON.—So glad you are joining, and hope you will send your papers regularly each week.

EDITH HARRIS.—I am glad you need not give up doing the Searcher. I am pleased to welcome your friends, and hope they will be as interested as you are.

UNCLE TOM.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun. May 15	Ezekiel x. 1-15		Th. May 19	Psa.	xxiv. 1-10
M. " 16	" xi. 14-25		F. " 20	"	xxv. 1-22
Tu. " 17	" xviii. 20-32		Sat. " 21	"	xxvi. 1-12
W. " 18	Psa. xxiii. 1-6

(For Special Service Mission Notices see page 38.)

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

May 22.

"THE DAY OF JUDGMENT."—Matt. xxv. 31-46.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He shall reward every man according to his works."—Matt. xvi. 27.

TEACHER should impress that this is only one among many prophetic parables in which Jesus Christ taught something concerning the judgment of the future life. Faith in Christ, communion with Him, and many other radical truths are not referred to here.

Illustration.—We judge of a tree by its fruit, but for the production of good fruit, good soil, air, sunlight, and a special nature are all necessary.

THE COMING JUDGE (31).

Refer to last lesson, where we saw that Christ comes, has come, and will come in various ways, and for various purposes; as Prophet, Healer, Teacher, Saviour, Comforter, but in this parable or prophecy He is coming as Judge.

He comes now in glory with all his holy angels. Compare his position of poverty and toil when on earth with the picture of his majesty and power here. "For the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross."

Lesson.—The evidence of Christ's Divinity in thus proclaiming his return as Judge. What absurdity would this be in ordinary man!

ALL NATIONS (32).

Not merely the lands in which the Gospel has been preached, but heathen, Mohammedan, Buddhist, and Confucian. He will judge them all by the standard of their opportunity. "And every eye shall see Him."

Illustration.—Queen's Jubilee procession, when in her triumph marched representatives from all parts of the world.

ONLY TWO CLASSES (32, 33).

The sheep and the goats. Character has become permanent now. Time was when the shepherd would have all his flock of one kind, viz., sheep. That time has passed; they must now be separated.

No intermediate position then. There is really no intermediate state now. "He that is not for Me is against Me."

"To which class do I belong?" That question may be and ought to be answered.

VERDICT ON THE GOOD (34).

"Come ye who are my Father's blessed ones" "Inherit the kingdom." That spiritual kingdom of joy and peace which awaits the faithful. They are sons of God, and now enter into their inheritance. It is the inevitable result of a good life—"Prepared for you"—not for them as individuals, but their class and kind. God has placed his law before men that "the righteous shall inherit all things."

THE WORKS OF THE GOOD (35, 36).

These are but specimens; each act represents a class of deeds. Important point is that they were done to Christ. "Inasmuch as ye did it." Christ identifies Himself with all the poor, helpless, sick, imprisoned (40).

Illustration. The story of St. Christopher, the great ferryman who carried a little child across the swollen river one dark night, and when he got to the other side he found it to be the Christ.

Apply it to carrying the maimed and poor across the river of trouble. Abou ben Adhem—who loved his fellow men, and found that that was the true way to have his name written first among those who loved the Lord.

VERDICT ON THE WICKED (41).

"Depart": the greatest of all punishments will be to be cast into the "outer darkness," away from the light of God's presence. Their deeds have prepared them for this. The wicked would be most miserable in heaven because there would be no society. The joy of heaven is not the kind of joy they have been accustomed to.

REASON FOR THE VERDICT (42, 43).

No crimes are mentioned. But they simply did no good. The law of Moses is "Thou shalt not"; the law of Christ "Thou shalt." Those who neglect his commandments will be condemned. Compare the parable of the talents and the servant who merely hid his lord's money. They would have succoured the glorified Christ if they had seen Him (44). It is the way of the world, but they did not recognise Him in the guise of the lowly and poor (45).

Note that the duration of the reward and the punishment are the same (46).

Sunday-school Management.

DEAR SIR,—I have noticed observations in THE CHRISTIAN at different times on Sunday-school management and its difficulties. As a Sunday-school manager for more than forty years I might suggest a plan which has been found to work exceedingly well. The village in which it was tried was a large one, and the difficulty of finding suitable teachers had to be met. We adopted the following plan: We looked out for and found a really excellent superintendent (a lady), an able teacher and an earnest Christian. There were ten classes in the school, and our two pupil teachers with others in the village became teachers.

A series of lessons for the year was chosen, and each class (except the youngest) read the appointed chapter. The teacher was expected to question the children carefully on the facts of the chapter. About three-quarters of an hour before closing all rose, and after singing a hymn they marched into a gallery, the youngest class moving off into a class-room with a pupil teacher, who read to them "Peep of Day," etc., with a picture.

The elder ones in the gallery then received an interesting lesson from the superintendent, questions and illustrations being used. This was on the chapter they had read. This was always much liked by the classes and the teachers, the latter listening, and thus learning how to teach. We found many village women—some formerly pupils—who took a real interest in their part of this work, although their weekly duties were many. And we had reason to believe that the deeper teaching given by our superintendent bore fruit in after life.

We never had cause to regret the adoption of this plan. It worked well for a long number of years, and it kept up its interest in the Word of God, without the reading of any story-books, a plan neither desirable nor necessary, yet often adopted where the class teachers are inefficient.—Yours truly, A SUNDAY-SCHOOL MANAGER.

The Student Movement.

DEAR SIR,—One or two errors appeared in your issue of April 28, in the report of Mr. Mott's address. It is the Inter-collegiate Y.M.C.A. of America that has a membership of 35,000 students and professors, with 11,000 in Bible Circles, and not the World's Student Christian Federation. The World's S.C.F. has a corporate and not individual membership—that is to say, the American, British, German, etc. student movements are each affiliated as corporate bodies to the W.S.C.F., and thus themselves constitute this greater union.

It is also inaccurate that the Student Volunteer Movement has sent out 12,000 workers to the mission field. There are not this number of British missionaries at present in the field. For America the numbers are, approximately: 1200 at work abroad and 4000 at home in preparation; and for Great Britain, 500 abroad and 1500 in preparation. This World's Student Christian Federation is three years old, and not twenty as has been stated.—Yours very truly, TISSINGTON TATLOW.

93, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

"Every Man to His Work."—Amid all the endless prattle about "work" and "lay labour," is there not danger that each Christian will forget that he or she is the bearer of one lamp? And if that lamp be well filled, and its light be thrown on one sinner's path, more good will be accomplished than by a whole torchlight procession got up for parade. A crowd is often in the way when an individual is to be rescued.—T. L. Cuyler.

Russian "Sectarians."—The Doukhobortsi, or Spirit Wrestlers, of the Caucasus, have received permission to emigrate at their own expense. Friends in various countries are being informed of this, in the hope that they will be disposed to render financial assistance. The permission is precisely what the Doukhobortsi themselves and their friends have for some time been endeavouring to obtain. Being persecuted by a Government which had uncontrolled power over them, no permanent help could hitherto be rendered them from outside. It has only been possible to mitigate their sufferings to a certain extent by sending them monetary help, which has been afforded with generosity by those who have at heart the sufferings of these Christian martyrs, and especially by the Society of Friends on both sides of the Atlantic. Upwards of £2000 has been forwarded during the last three years, saving many among them from starvation. Inquiries may be addressed to Mr. V. TCHERTKOFF, Purleigh, Essex.

A Churchman's Notes.

IF anyone is tempted at times to think of Evangelical Churchmanship as an effete and dying cause, a visit to the May Meetings ought to reassure him. Surely the great gatherings of the C.M.S. on Tuesday last are enough to make us all "thank God and take courage." The tone of the meetings was clearly buoyant and hopeful, and the second jubilee year was ushered in with great expectation and full confidence.

What a frank and manly ring there was about the Bishop of London's Bible Society speech! The reference to Protestantism was clear and unmistakable, and called forth enthusiastic and prolonged cheers. The whole speech was thoroughly sympathetic, and must prove reassuring to many Protestants at the present juncture.

It must surely be unique that three successive vicars of the same church should take part in one anniversary. Yet the Bishop of Ripon, Rev. E. A. Stuart, and Rev. E. Grose Hodge spoke at the Church Pastoral Aid meetings. They are all former vicars of St. James's, Holloway.

There was no mistaking the tone and purpose of the Church Association and Protestant Alliance meetings. Mr. Kensit's action has had undoubted result in eliciting a sturdier expression of Protestant feeling than has been obtainable for some time. And this will be well, for bishops and others in authority are influenced greatly by definite and purposeful expressions of public opinion.

Dr. Barlow's appointment to be Prebendary of St. Paul's is well earned. There is scarcely any Evangelical clergyman who has done more effective service for the cause of the Gospel in many ways than Dr. Barlow; while his position and work in the London diocese alone might well entitle him to this honorary acknowledgment.

The appointment of Rev. C. H. Turner as Suffragan Bishop of Islington may be regarded as one of the things inevitable, for on two occasions has his name been sent up second (according to rule) when choice for similar positions had to be made. He is not an extreme Churchman, and one good omen is that The Church Times does not mince its words in commenting unfavourably on the appointment.

The meetings of the Church Army were, as usual, full of "go" and interest. The social work of the Army is especially deserving of notice, and much good is assuredly being done. Yet it has one weak spot: there is no proper supervision of men who have left the Labour Homes, and they may relapse and then re-enter Home after Home without detection. But how to stop this is confessedly a difficult problem.

It is really amusing to find the careful attention paid by The Church Times to Methodism. There are frequent articles on the subject. Why is this? It is futile to discuss the "dilemmas" of Methodism, or any other ism, as though the writer's position were free from weakness. Yet there is no standpoint so glaringly illogical as that of The Church Times. It is afraid to move to Rome, its true place, and yet stands condemned by the historical position and Scriptural teaching of the Thirty-nine Articles. Here are "dilemmas" enough, surely!

The choice of the Rev. J. C. Hoare as Bishop of Victoria (Hong Kong) is most fitting, and we shall now watch with interest the episcopate of one who gave such indications of true statesmanship in his recent address at Canon Christopher's missionary breakfast. Q. C.

Ritual in the Church of England.—The Press Association learns that Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., intends to take an early opportunity of bringing, in more than one form, before Parliament the growth of Roman Catholic doctrines and ritual in the Church of England. The hon. member will move in committee on the Benefices Bill an amendment to add to the various incapacities which may disqualify a clergyman for presentation to a living the encouragement of "illegal or Romish doctrines or practices." Mr. Smith also intends to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to the alarming growth of Romish practices in the National Church, to the inability or unwillingness of Bishops to prevent them, and whether he will take into consideration the appointing of a Royal Commission to inquire how best to maintain the Protestant constitution of the Church of England.

[426]

"Health in the Mission Field."

THESE words suggest a problem of great importance, and it is gratifying to know that the problem is in process of solution. It was in order to provide missionaries with instruction in the elements of practical medicine and surgery, for their own comfort and the widening of their Christian usefulness, that Dr. Harford Battersby founded Livingstone College four years ago; and it is satisfactory to learn that men who have passed through the course of study provided by the institution are now labouring in all parts of the world.

Livingstone College has the commendation of the Medical Press, as well as the support of the various missionary societies. Before beginning this much-needed work, Dr. Harford Battersby had considerable experience of the conditions of life in Africa, and he has been particularly desirous of meeting the case of labourers in that vast and trying field. A paper which he read some months ago on "Health in Africa" has been combined with more general information regarding the College and its objects, in a booklet entitled "Health in the Mission Field," which should prove of interest to all students of missionary life and work. (2d. Marshall Bros.)

The considerations advanced in this booklet should enlarge the valued ministry of the College. Early application is desirable for entrance in the new session, to begin in October next. Communications should be addressed to the Principal, at the College, 31 and 33, Hamfrith-road, Stratford, E.

General Booth's Welcome.

THERE was a great gathering of members of the Salvation Army on Monday at the Crystal Palace, when a "welcome-home" demonstration was held in connection with the return of "General" Booth from a tour in the United States and Canada. The gathering was limited to members of branches of the Army in London and the surrounding districts. The General referred with gratification to the fact that the Salvation Army now carried on operations in forty-six countries and colonies, having 4,577 officers in Great Britain and 9046 in other lands. With regard to his recent journey in America and Canada, he stated that during his tour, extending over fifteen weeks, he had addressed 198 meetings, his audiences numbering upwards of 250,000. The Salvation Army was making great advances in Canada and in the United States. When he left New York the British flag was being greeted on all public occasions with the greatest enthusiasm, and there was much talk of an alliance with Great Britain. He would be glad to see England and America working hand in hand in spreading the truth throughout the world.

The welcome meeting was followed by a musical festival.

Bareilly Theological Seminary.—Growth in grace and spiritual power are deemed the most important qualifications for the students, future preachers, and evangelists, who are being trained in this institution, in the N.W.P. of India, of which Rev. D. T. J. Scott is principal. Through the preaching in Hindustani, regularly carried on in the city market-places and in adjacent villages, many souls have been brought to Christ. The Seminary closes its quarter century of existence with a good record, and looks forward to a future of great usefulness. It is felt that a native ministry must save India, and great is the demand for concentrated workers.

Mirzapur and Dudhi Missions.—The first of these places is the chief city of a district bearing the same name, in the N.W. Provinces of India, and embracing 4355 towns and villages. Dudhi is a village of 1102 inhabitants, about 100 miles south-east of the city named. With the exception of two small out-stations of the C.M.S., the London Missionary Society is the only one represented in this extensive and populous district. In addition to the multifarious and trying demands of famine relief, bazaar preaching has been well maintained by the workers. Home visitation, personal touch with those willing to hear, and evenings spent among the people in the villages have afforded many opportunities for the kindly reception generally extended to the missionaries, and which seems to be a hopeful indication of greater willingness to hear and profit by the Gospel than is too often found among more sophisticated hearers in the bazaar. Orphanage, women's work, Sunday and ordinary schools also show signs of progress.

Obituary.

REV. ARTHUR W. G. AITKEN.

With much sorrow we announce the decease on Saturday last of Rev. A. W. G. Aitken, the eldest son son of Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, and curate of Christ Church, Sunderland. Mr. Aitken was only thirty years of age, a man of fine physique, and of great ability. He was extremely popular among young men in parishes where he had worked, and his early death is deeply regretted. His sorely bereaved parents will have the sincere sympathy of their numerous friends.

REV. CHARLES HARRISON, JERSEY.

We regret to record the death of Rev. Charles Harrison, superintendent of the Jersey English Wesleyan Circuit, who has passed away after a brief and painful illness. Mr. Harrison had only been appointed to Jersey at last year's Conference, but during his brief period of work in the island he had earned the love and esteem of those with whom he was brought into contact. He was fifty years of age, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1871. He leaves a widow and family.

MR. JOHN SHORT, NOTTING HILL.

This earnest and devoted servant of Christ, greatly beloved for his tender spirit, his evangelistic gift, and his hearty sympathy with mission work, passed to his rest at his residence in Notting Hill last Thursday evening, after an illness of four days. For many years he had been prominently associated with the Lord's work in the West End, first with the West London Tabernacle (in Mr. Henry Varley's time), and then with Trinity Presbyterian Church, also as a member of the Committee, and latterly the Treasurer of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. Thus he was closely concerned in Christian effort in his own district, but his sympathies went far beyond his locality. He was a warm supporter of the Metropolitan Tabernacle institutions, as well as of many other societies too numerous to name. His genial and loving spirit, combined with his clear grasp of Scripture, and his fluent utterance, made him in many quarters highly appreciated as an evangelist and teacher. It may be noted that in this particular respect his sons are following in his steps. While his singularly modest and retiring disposition prevented him from becoming so widely known as some, he had rendered for many years valuable support and effective aid in the spread of the Gospel.

MR. W. H. ROBERTS, PLYMOUTH.

Y.M.C.A. work in the West of England, and, indeed, throughout the whole country, has sustained a great loss by the death of Mr. W. H. Roberts, Travelling Secretary for the counties of Devon and Cornwall. Mr. Roberts, who originally gave valuable honorary help at Exeter Hall, entered the Y.M.C.A. as a sphere about fourteen years ago, as Secretary of the Ipswich Association. He was subsequently appointed general secretary at Plymouth, and, shortly afterwards, while still retaining superintendence of the Association at this important centre, took up, by invitation of the President, Dr. Hingston, the larger task of supervising and developing the district work. In this he was eminently successful. Not only were the Associations multiplied in number, but their spiritual objects were carefully safeguarded, and ten or eleven were helped to acquire buildings of their own. In public esteem Mr. Roberts stood very high, as was testified at the funeral on the 30th ult. His health had been failing for some time, but the end came somewhat unexpectedly at the comparatively early age of forty-three years. Mr. Roberts leaves behind a widow and seven children—to make provision for whom, in this time of bereavement and loss, many friends in the western counties are uniting their help.

Haifa, Palestine.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, reports the baptism of a young Jew, the fruit of his labours years gone by in Jerusalem. On Easter Monday the new iron room was opened, many friends from the German colony being present. In a letter to a friend in England, Mr. Joseph says:—"It was a great day for us; and I felt that, should the Lord call me away He will assuredly continue the work. In addition to the iron room we have twelve beds ready for sick and suffering Israelites. At present, however, we have no means with which to carry on the work."

Items of Interest.

Home.

The police successfully raided a betting club at King's Cross. Too much vigilance cannot be exercised to suppress these nuisances.

The statement is made that alcoholic candy is largely sold in Manchester and elsewhere. It is imported from Germany, and contains as much alcohol as beer.

Mr. Belsey, chairman of the Council of the Sunday-school Union, expects "some steamer loads" of delegates from America to attend the World's Sunday-school Convention in London next July.

Some interesting figures concerning the distribution of the Jews are given in Blackwood. Out of some 9,000,000, no fewer than 5,000,000 are found in Russia, 1,500,000 in Eastern Europe, 1,000,000 in Western Europe, while in England there are only 101,000.

The following bulletin was issued at Hawarden on Sunday night by Drs. Habershon, Dobie, and Biss, after consultation: "Mr. Gladstone has been more comfortable the last day or two, but the local disease is slowly increasing, and there is a gradual diminution of strength."

Rev. Mr. Stringer, Mrs. Stringer, and Rev. Mr. Young are missionaries on Herschel Island, the most northerly inhabited spot in the Queen's dominions. It is a bleak, treeless island, ice-bound for nine months of the year, and lies above the seventieth parallel of north latitude.

Maurice Hostel, the new settlement for Hoxton, has been founded by the Christian Social Union. Two houses have been secured, one for men, the other for women. Hoxton forms part of the crowded borough of Shoreditch. Its population of over 122,000 is crowded into an area smaller than any in London, and with fewer open spaces.

Charitable Contributions.—The Queen has sent ten guineas to Queen Charlotte's Lying-in Hospital, Marylebone-road.—The late Dr. Waldegrave R. Thompson leaves £1000 to the Irish Church Missions, and the residue of his property, valued at £56,000, to the C.M.S.—A donation of £100 from Messrs. N. M. Rothschild and Sons to the Ophthalmic Hospital.—At a function at the Grand Hotel, £1435 for Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital.

The Coal Trouble.—The outlook is decidedly more hopeful. Large bodies of men are in favour of giving their representatives plenary powers to treat with the employers. The President of the Board of Trade has expressed willingness to receive a deputation asking his intervention. — More reasonable counsels prevailed on Monday, a full meeting of the workmen's committee being convened, when important resolutions are to be submitted.

The Queen Victoria wing of the Morley House Seaside Convalescent Home for Working Men at Dover has been opened. To show practical sympathy with the London Hospital in its financial straits, some members of the Press have organised a bazaar, to be held in the Hotel Cecil at the end of June.—A bazaar in the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, in aid of the Church of England Home for Waifs and Strays, has been opened by the Duke and Duchess of Fife.—The Passmore-Edwards Jubilee Cottage Hospital has been opened at Acton by Mrs. Creighton.

SCOTLAND.

A movement is on foot to celebrate the diamond jubilee of Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell by presenting his portrait to the Free Church Assembly at its approaching meetings. Dr. Mitchell is eighty-two years of age.

The annual Synod of the Methodist Churches of Scotland was held at Aberdeen on May 3. Gratitude was expressed at the encouraging state of the churches in Scotland, and for the forward movement which has taken place in various circuits.

The Congregational Union of Scotland has held its annual sessions. A good deal of interest was manifested in this year's meetings, especially in view of the fact that this was the centenary of the denomination; the birthplace of which was the village of Gilmerton, near Edinburgh, under the preaching of the devoted Haldanes.

The proceedings in connection with the U.P. Synod, also held last week, have been of a quiet and uneventful description. The new Moderator, Dr. Blair, of Dunblane, is a good man, and much esteemed by his brethren. There has been a very large attendance of ministers and delegates. The subject of greatest importance for consideration has been that of the proposed union between the U.P. and Free Churches. There is no doubt that considerable progress has been made towards the consummation of the union. It is satisfactory to know that there is a marked increase in the membership of the Church as a whole. The report of the Home Mission shows a growing demand for the services of evangelists. The U.P. Church has led the van in Scotland in missionary enthusiasm, and the meeting on behalf of foreign missions was remarkable for its fervour and interest.

IRELAND.

The income of the Church of Ireland Jews' Society for the past year has been forty per cent. in advance of that of the previous twelve months, and is the highest ever received by the society in one year.

The ten District Synods of the Methodist Church in Ireland held their annual meetings last week, and encouraging reports on Sunday-schools, temperance, and Christian Endeavour were presented to each.

A social meeting to arouse interest in the Dublin Methodist Tent Mission, recently inaugurated, and to enlist workers, has been held in the parlour of Stephen's Green Church, Dublin, Rev. James Robertson presiding.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The annual May breakfast of the Bury Association was held on Tuesday morning, May 3rd. There was a good attendance.

The Salop-street branch of the Wolverhampton Association held its first annual meeting in the Darlington-street Lecture Hall on Friday evening.

A week's mission on "Christian Evidences" has been concluded by Mr. Arthur J. Waldron (of the Christian Evidence Society), at the Manchester Y.M.C.A.

About a year since a mission school was opened in Chinatown, Philadelphia. Soon after fourteen Christian Chinese asked for a room in which to organise a Y.M.C.A. They met every Sunday, and now there are 165 young men enrolled.

The annual meeting of the Southend Association was held last week, Mr. J. C. Hudson presiding. The report showed good work and steady increase during the year. The Bible-class "straight talks" and other agencies had been blessed to many.

The usual May Day Flower Service was held by the Weston-super-Mare Y.M.C.A. at 7.30 on Sunday morning, May 1. There was a large gathering, and later in the day no fewer than 462 parcels were distributed amongst the poor and sick, each accompanied by a bouquet of flowers.

At the annual May morning breakfast of the Woolwich and Plumstead Association, held on Sunday last at 7.30 a.m., about 450 persons were present. Col. A. N. St. Quintin presided, and very helpful addresses were given by Revs. A. E. Abel and W. H. Rose and Mr. D. Carnegie.

The work of the Association in France is a most important one, but it is specially difficult by reason of the prevailing religious indifference and the active opposition of Romanism. The general secretary of the National Committee, Mons. E. Sautter, has lately been in England seeking to awaken revived interest in the French work.

The Totterdown Y.M.C.A., Wells-road, Bristol, has issued a strong appeal for help in building a new institute and hall. The amount required for purchase of the site and the temporary premises and the erection and furnishing of new buildings is £5000; towards this £2148 has been already given, leaving a sum of £2852 still to be raised.

The spring conferences of the South-east Metropolitan and South-west Suburban Districts respectively were held on Thursday week, the one at New Cross, the other at the rooms of the Kingston-on-Thames Association. Mr. F. W. Lawrence presided at New Cross, and a paper, which gave rise to a helpful discussion, upon "The Relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the Churches," was presented on behalf of Dr. Muir. At Kingston-on-Thames the chair was occupied by Mr. E. P. Bastin.

Foreign.

Invitations have already been issued by the Government of Belgium to the Powers of Europe for a conference on the liquor traffic in West Africa. Much good, we hope, will be the result.

In St. Jean d'Acre (Syria) an attack has been made upon the Greek Church during Mass by Mohammedans, who used petards, daggers, and bludgeons. Many were injured, one fatally.

As a compliment to Great Britain, the Finance Committee of the United States have decided to eliminate the tonnage tax clause from the War Revenue Bill.—The President's Message to the Brazilian Congress expresses the hope that the settlement of the British Guiana boundary will be effected without arbitration.

Russia.—Three new first-class battle-ships are to be built on the Neva, each of 12,675 tons. Twelve smaller ships are under construction.

Austria.—The official celebration of the jubilee of the Emperor Francis Joseph's reign began in Vienna with the opening of the Exhibition to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of his accession.

Crete.—The insurgents have successfully prevented provisions reaching the garrison at Kisamo, although the vessel carrying them was flying the British flag. An Italian warship is to remove a portion of the Turkish troops.

Thessaly.—The Greek Finance Minister has expressed the enduring gratitude of the Greek Government to the delegates of the Powers in relation to the issue of the war indemnity loan.—The public mind is greatly relieved at the prospect of the immediate evacuation of the province.

Canada.—A Bill to authorise a plébiscite on prohibition has been practically adopted by the Dominion House of Commons. The Government declines to pledge itself to introduce a measure to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of liquors in Canada if the popular vote is largely in the affirmative.

The Plague.—Energetic measures are being taken in Burma to prevent the introduction of the plague into that country.—At Hong Kong no signs of decrease are reported. Three Europeans have died in hospital within twenty-four hours, thirty-nine new cases and twenty-eight deaths are announced.—Professor Haffkine's system of inoculation, in Indian villages where it was used, reduced mortality between seventy and ninety per cent.

France.—There have been thirty-six Ministries in France under the Third Republic, and the longest of them lasted only a little over two years. During the Parliament now expired there were six Ministries.—The anniversary of the French charity bazaar fire has been celebrated by special religious services. The first stone of a memorial chapel was laid.—Through the recommendation of the Council of Agriculture, French corn duties will be suppressed until July 1. This will be an immense relief to the wage-earning population.

Italy.—The bread riots are spreading in Italy. At Baynacaballo the soldiers fired upon the mob, killing and wounding both men and women.—Later information of the entire suspension of the import duty on corn has produced a salutary effect throughout the country. No serious disturbances have taken place since.—The bread riots have been resumed with great violence at Leghorn, Florence, Pavia, Milan—at the latter place a state of siege was proclaimed. Eight thousand troops have entered Milan, fierce fights have occurred between the soldiery and the people.

America and Spain.—While the issue of the struggle produces the wildest enthusiasm in the United States, in Spain the initial reverse has given rise to riots, and fears of further serious disturbances or rebellion prevail. News is eagerly awaited of the two fleets now supposed to be nearing Porto Rico—each in search of the other. — There seems little doubt that the Ministers of War and Marine in Madrid are making arrangements for the despatch of reinforcements to the Philippines.—Don Carlos is reported to have said that he will make no hostile movement while the war lasts.

The Far East.—Dissatisfaction among the younger provincial officials in China is spreading, and danger is apprehended for the dynasty. The Court is preparing to migrate from Peking to Singan-fu in Shansi.—It is reported from Shanghai that France and England have come to an agreement with regard to China.—At Hêngchou, in Hunan, at a festival in honour of Buddha, the soldiers (Chinese) destroyed the chapel belonging to the London Mission, and carried off everything portable. — A French priest and two native evangelists have been murdered at Tung-Kiang-Chau in Kwang-si. The French minister is negotiating for reparation.—The long succession of dangerous rapids on the Upper Yangtze have been successfully navigated by Mr. Little in his little steamer. British, American, and Japanese consuls have expressed hearty congratulations.—The Russians continue to fortify Port Arthur with 6in. and 8in. guns, and large shipments of artillery are on their way to the same destination.—Probably the largest cheque ever drawn upon the Bank of England was paid to representatives of the Japanese Government on Saturday on behalf of the Chinese Government for the war indemnity. The amount was £11,008,857.

American Marathi Mission.—A large extent of Indian country is served by the thirty-five missionaries and numerous native helpers of this mission, who are employed in the Bombay, Ahmednagar, Satara, and Sholapur districts, and vicinity. Not only is the field vast, but operations embrace numerous agencies of a religious, evangelistic, medical, industrial, and social character, for the benefit of men, women, and children. Perhaps, among the many missionaries, we may mention Rev. J. E. Abbott, Byculla, Bombay, as a medium of information for British friends who may be interested in this work.

THE BOOK WORLD.

MISSIONARY BOOKS.

A popular narrative of missionary effort in the interior of South Africa has been issued—Au Zambèze: Sur les Pas de nos Missionnaires, par M. Th.-C. (2 francs. Geneva: H. Robert, 2, Petite Fusterie.) Great interest attaches to the work of our French brethren on the Zambezi; and these pages, largely taken up with the labours of M. Coillard and his colleagues, abound in thrilling incidents and narratives of Gospel progress.

A model of condensation, and as comprehensive as it is succinct, is the new volume of "The Guild Library," entitled, The Missionary Expansion of the Reformed Churches, by Rev. J. A. Graham, M.A., of Kalimpong, India. The volume gives a general view of the principles, history, and present position of the various missions; and eight maps and 145 illustrations—largely portraits—accompany the letterpress. (1s. 6d. London: A. & C. Black; Edinburgh: R. & R. Clark.)

Mrs. Stott's charming story of Twenty-six Years of Missionary Work in China has now appeared in a cheap edition. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Many will welcome gladly the opportunity of adding a volume of intrinsic merit and genuine interest to their missionary library. As we pointed out, when reviewing the book on its first issue, it tells of devoted service, of calm faith in face of frequent perils, and of long patience crowned by abundant reaping. The author possesses an easy and fluent style, and, as Rev. J. Hudson Taylor says, "there is not a dull paragraph. Those who begin the book will want to finish it." The photos and illustrations greatly enhance the general attractiveness.

We welcome with special pleasure a new and cheap edition of Memorials of Harold A. Schofield (late of the China Inland Mission), first medical missionary to Shan-si, China. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Not a word needs to be said about the beauty of character and Christian devotion of the subject of this deeply interesting book, which has been compiled, for the most part from letters and diaries, by the missionary's brother, Dr. A. T. Schofield. We are glad, however, of an opportunity to direct attention to the book as one eminently suited for presentation to young Christians. There is an introduction by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, also an admirable portrait, and a facsimile of a sheet of paper on which the successful student set out, for the information of his wife, a list of the scholarships he earned, amounting in all to £1417!

A deeply interesting story of a young man whose heart and life were consecrated to God has appeared under the title Comblé de Joie: En Souvenir de William James Neethling. (Lyons: Bichsel, 10, Rue Lanterne. Geneva: Adresse Office, 4, Boulevard du Théâtre). A nephew of Rev. Andrew Murray, the subject of the sketch was born at Stellenbosch, South Africa, in 1866, and having studied in England and travelled in Europe, he entered with great promise upon a missionary career at Mochuli, in Linchwe's country, to the west of the South African Republic, as a representative of the Dutch Church of South Africa. He died through an accident, after service all too short, as men reckon, but not before his life had afforded many evidences of God's blessing resting upon his word and work. Pastor Coillard writes a preface to the little book, which is quite appropriately dedicated to young men.

In the field of missionary literature there has been no more successful book during recent years than the autobiography of John G. Paton, D.D., missionary to the New Hebrides, edited by his brother, Rev. James Paton, of Glasgow. The two volumes which originally told the story were at length included in one to form a popular edition, which has been in great demand since 1891. Now we welcome a new issue of this edition, enlarged by the addition of a third part, outlining the life and labours of the noble missionary during the past twelve years. Of the parts now famous, it is unnecessary to say anything beyond a word of commendation, in the hope that many who were not readers a decade ago will make a point of becoming such now. The new chapters describe recent toils in many lands, on behalf of the South Sea Islanders, and in promotion of their evangelisation. The new matter enhances the interest of a book which has inspired enthusiasm in many a soul, and has been greatly used of God in deepening concern for the enlightenment of the heathen world. A beautiful portrait of the aged missionary appears as a frontispiece. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

A useful addition to the Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools is Ezra and Nehemiah, with introduction and notes by Professor H. E. Ryle.

Many who are learning or wish to learn French, may find the French Weekly, Vol. II., useful, with its easy reading and imitated pronunciation. (3s. 6d. Pitman & Sons.)

A useful handbook on Home Management has been issued by Ward, Lock & Co. (1d.), containing plain sensible hints on domestic matters affecting health and comfort.

Rev. Charles Bullock has admirably sketched the lives of the late Prebendary Wightman and Mrs. Wightman, author of "Haste to the Rescue," in a little volume Lives Worth Living. (1s. 6d. Home Words Office.)

A carefully compiled book for the school and Home is Little Recitations: for little reciters. (1s. W. & R. Chambers.) The selections were made by R. C. H. Morison, who shows a good appreciation of the youthful mind.

A good book to hand to young people is Life on High Levels, by Margaret E. Sangster. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) In a series of familiar talks on the conduct of life, the author gives wise counsels on many subjects, specially (though not exclusively) addressing herself to thoughtful girls.

A Protestant utterance deserving a wide circulation, is A Reply to Cardinal Vaughan, by Rev. Charles Elgood. It is in the form of a sermon, based on John vi. 53, repudiating sacerdotal pretensions, and maintaining the Evangelical position on sacramental questions. (Skeffington & Son.)

Dr. John Watson's latest book is Companions of the Sorrowful Way. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) In the course of nine brief papers, the author says much that is helpful regarding the sorrowing Christ, and those who walked with Him to the death on the Cross, or witnessed that act of human sin and Divine suffering.

Four discourses, rich in thought, presented in a striking manner, are included in From Strength to Strength, by J. H. Jowett, M.A. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The pages deal with the strengthening of the will, the conscience, the heart, and the mind, and form a welcome addition to the series of "Little Books on Religion."

We have read with great interest in one of the Wesleyan weeklies a series of sketches of village life. These are now issued in book form—Kitty Lonsdale and Some Rumsby Folk. By Emily M. Bryant. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) They will interest more than Methodists, for they are really charming idylls of life in a quiet village far from the haunts of busy men.

Light in the East. By Bishop Thoburn. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) The presence in our midst of Bishop Thoburn lends an added interest to this lucid account of missionary advances in our great Indian dependency. It embodies the experience of long personal observation and effort, and affords many encouraging grounds for increasing the Gospel forces throughout India.

The third annual volume of Trusting and Toiling, like its predecessors, is replete with intelligence of missionary effort on behalf of Israel, especially in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. In a large measure, also, the pages are devoted to articles calculated to excite interest in Israel and promote prayer and work for their salvation. (2s. 6d. W. McCluer, Central Hall, Philpot-lane, E.)

As a popular and concise epitome of the history of the primitive Church, The Early Days of Christianity, by Dean Farrar, has gained wide acceptance. Hence we welcome a cheap edition (1s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) issued in connection with The Quiver. Many will be glad of the opportunity of securing a copy of an informative work. Notwithstanding the low price, the type is clear and readable.

Many will welcome Rev. H. E. Stone's new book Nights of Crisis. (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) The pages deal with turning points in the history of Scripture characters, including Nicodemus, Jacob, Peter, Belshazzar, Paul, and others. The book is full of thought, illustrating and driving home lessons for life and motives for service. A portrait of the author, which appears on the frontispiece, will be prized by many.

Rev. J. S. Exell has all but finished the New Testament division of The Biblical Illustrator. Already the volume dealing with Revelation is out, leaving the Epistles of St. Peter to complete this part of a great undertaking. Here are all but eight hundred pages, filled with sermonic material and longer or shorter outlines of discourses. Surely there is no other work so full, and representing such variety of thought and treatment. Preachers of all orders and degrees speak well of these extraordinary compilations, each filled with the cream of a library, directed to the unfolding of a specific section of the Divine Word. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

A timely publication in view of present-day tendencies is The Service of the Mass in the Greek and Roman Churches. By Charles H. H. Wright, D.D. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) The little book is in two parts; the former explains the ritual, the latter shows the unscriptural and mischievous character of the doctrine underlying the ritual. These pages are an important contribution to the popular literature of a great controversy.

William Law is "in the fashion" with many a preacher to-day, and certainly his writings have a message for our times. Especially is this so with A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life, which has been added to the neat and handy "Temple Classics" series. The text has been edited and revised by Dr. R. F. Horton, who has added marginalia and brief notes explaining the names of the characters. This is a pretty and welcome reissue of a valuable work. (1s. 6d. net. J. M. Dent & Co.)

Stories of frontier life in the Far West have provided material for many a thrilling boy's book, but in The Parson's Proxy, by Kate W. Hamilton (3s. 6d. Andrew Melrose), we find a tale of a different type, illustrating in a striking way the enlightening power of the Bible in the hands of a rough, lawless, drink-sodden frontier man, and the marvellous results of his simple heroism and testimony in reclaiming a whole district. It is as interesting as the aforesaid "adventures," yet full of a higher purpose.

For picturesque exposition Dr. Hugh Macmillan's sermons have a value and charm peculiarly their own. The latest volume, The Spring of the Day, is as rich as its predecessors in illustrative teaching from many fields, especially from the field of nature. The title is furnished by the first discourse, based on 1 Sam. ix. 26; the whole, twenty-eight in number, are luminous in a high degree, filled with matter for children's addresses, and equally sure to prove instructive to persons of maturer years. (5s. Isbister & Co.)

A new work of great interest, by Dr. Andrew Murray, is The Mystery of the Vine (1s. Nisbet), the chapters of which are arranged to form meditations for a month. Dedicated to the young people of the Society of Christian Endeavour, the little book unfolds and applies the teachings of our Lord in the great parable of John xv. The treatment befits the sublimity of the subject, and the pages are calculated to prove a blessing to many a prayerful reader.

Series of volumes of sermons and meditations are very numerous; and among such works a worthy place may be accorded, on grounds of practical utility and handy form, to The Song of the Shepherd: Meditations on the Twenty-third Psalm, by R. S. Duff, D.D., minister of Free St. George's Church, Glasgow: and God's Measure; and Other Sermons, by Rev. J. T. Forbes, M.A., Edinburgh. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) The former volume is characterised by spiritual simplicity and suggestiveness; the latter by forceful exposition and application of Holy Scripture.

The late Bishop Walsham How was esteemed on many grounds, and not least for his words of spiritual counsel spoken at retreats and quiet days in many parts of England. In a goodly volume, entitled The Closed Door (5s. Gardner, Darton & Co.), forty-eight of these instructions and meditations are given. About one-fourth of the whole are communion addresses; and several are on practical topics, such as the pastor's life and the relations of Churchmen to Nonconformists. Though the terms employed, having a High Church flavour, are often objectionable to us, the substance of the book is decidedly helpful, candour and charity being well combined in the general body of teaching.

Dean Spence's work, The Church of England: A History for the People, is calculated to interest and instruct all who would follow the course of Christian life and conflict in our land. In monthly parts (6d. each), it is being widely read; part nineteen is largely occupied with Archbishop Laud, his doings and end. The sectional volumes are specially suited for library use, and the third (6s.) outlines the story of the Reformation. The illustrations are numerous and of a high order; they reproduce many famous paintings and historic documents. The author is eminently fair-minded, and his work will be welcome in many a home. (Cassell & Co.)

In Creed and Life, Rev. C. E. Beeby, vicar of Yardley Wood, near Birmingham, conducts "a critical inquiry concerning the ancient orthodox creed," and professes to present "a declaration of its contents in proof of its capacity to meet the needs of modern life." (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) The inquiry is "critical" in a most imperfect sense, and the "declaration of contents" is singularly defective. The book will work mischief among persons who are ignorant of Scripture; also among such as, through lack of acquaintance with the history of Christian doctrine, are unprepared to recognise ancient and modern errors in the views here advanced as statements of truth.

ROYAL SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.

SILVER WEDDING.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, MAY, 1873,

Miss Weston paid a visit to Devonport to meet her sailor friends.

A Deputation

OF BLUEJACKETS FROM

H.M.S. "Dryad,"

long since broken up, came to see her, to beg her to open a Home without strong drink close to H.M. Dockyard.

GOD

has prospered the work, and now a Pile of Buildings, at a cost of over ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS, occupies the site of the old building and of FOUR PUBLIC-HOUSES. Work for God is carried on unceasingly—Evangelistic Meetings, Bible Classes, Temperance Work, Registry Office, and Work Rooms for Sailors' Wives and Widows, besides the practical work of a large Home, which shelters thousands of men. Enlargements, with an enlarging Navy, is needed here and at Portsmouth. Miss Weston asks for Gifts, large or small, for the

SILVER WEDDING FUND

that she may go forward in God's work among our Sailors.

Cheques and Postal Orders gladly received, addressed to

MISS WESTON,

Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

For Cheques, Agnes E. Weston.

Bankers:—National Provincial Bank of England, Devonport Branch.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The honoured vicar of Islington, Dr. Barlow, has been instituted a Prebendary of St. Paul's.

The Bishop of London's Fund has reached an average income of between £21,000 and £23,000 a year.

The Archbishop of York is undergoing a course of treatment at Aix-les-Bains, and will be absent until June.

The Lord Chancellor has presented Rev. Robert Jones, curate of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, to the rectory of Banham, Norfolk.

A sum of about £6000 has now been promised towards the cost of the erection of a church-house for the diocese of Liverpool on a site purchased last year.

Intelligence has been received of the death of Rev. F. Stephens, who had been engaged for some time on relief work amongst the Cubans. He succumbed to yellow fever.

The Bishops of Winchester and Southwell were met at the consecration of St. Agatha's Church, Portsmouth, by a crowd carrying a banner, "Banish Popery from the Church of England."

The Bishop of Carlisle writes from Ramleh that several months must elapse before he will be permitted to undertake work of any kind, but he is making rapid strides towards recovery.

The charge of St. Dionis', Fulham, vacant by the promotion of Rev. J. S. Sinclair to the vicarage of Cirencester, has been conferred upon the Rev. W. S. Carter, vicar of St. Matthias', Bethnal Green.

The See of Victoria, Hong Kong, vacant by the resignation of Bishop Burdon, has been offered to and accepted by Rev. Joseph C. Hoare. The Bishop-designate, who is a son of the late Canon Hoare, has been a member of the Mid-China Mission of the C.M.S. since 1876.

It is stated that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are negotiating for the purchase of a house within the precincts of Canterbury Cathedral, lately occupied by Sir John Lyell, as a residence for the Primate, to take the place of the palace at Addington, so long the home of the Archbishops of Canterbury.

The death of Rev. George W. Gent, Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, took place somewhat unexpectedly on Monday in London. He was only appointed Principal of St. David's College on June 2 last, and his sudden death, at a comparatively early age, will be a severe blow to the institution.

At a large gathering of clergymen held on Thursday night at Sunderland in connection with the English Church Union, Rev. J. S. W. Burn, of Middlesbrough, moved that all "the priests present should pledge themselves to place the Mass in its proper position." He said he thought the Mass was the chief service in the minds of those who drew up the Prayer Book. If they took the Protestant bull by the horns he thought they might turn it into a docile creature. So, at all events, Ritualists regard the drift of things to-day.

A singular and pathetic coincidence has occurred in respect to three district churches near Leeds. On March 9 the Vicar of Manston, Rev. H. S. Hamilton, resigned after fifty years and four months' ministry in the parish. On April 28 the Vicar of Seacroft, Rev. John Hepher, died somewhat suddenly after a ministry of twenty-one years in Seacroft; and on Thursday, April 29, the Vicar of Whitkirk, Rev. G. M. Platt, was taken ill and expired on Tuesday, May 3, after thirty-four and a-half years' service in Whitkirk parish. The singular fact is that the parishes adjoin, and for the time being are practically without a vicar.

Congregational.

Rev. G. Lang has accepted a call to Swinton, Rotherham.

Rev. Fred Hall, of Wimbledon, has accepted a call to Scarborough.

Rev. Thomas Lord, of West Bromwich, has completed his ninetieth year.

Mr. C. Evan Evans, of Hackney College, has received a call to Harringay Park, London.

Rev. Jonathan Evans has succeeded Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell at Milton Chapel, Rochdale.

Dr. Guinness Rogers celebrated last Sunday the thirty-third anniversary of his pastorate at Clapham.

The work at Albion Chapel, Southampton, is reported as remarkably prosperous; there are in the Sunday-school some 820 scholars.

The 225th May Day lecture was delivered at Stepney Meeting House on Sunday week by the pastor, Rev. Charles Chambers, on "Lessons from the Life of George Müller."

Mr. James Liddiard, having resigned the hon. secretaryship of the L.M.S. Watchers' Band (of which he may be regarded as founder), in connection with the London Missionary Society, Miss Jessie M. Balgarnie will, from July 1, occupy that position.

The L.M.S. directors have opened a special fund to enable their missionaries to enter the hitherto closed province of Hunan, Central China. The members of the Hankow Mission have for many years been working and waiting for the opportunity, and now that the province is about to be thrown open it will be possible for missionaries in the near future to reside there with safety. The directors have pledged themselves to send out two missionaries without delay, one of them to be a medical man, provided guarantees are received of support sufficient to cover the initial outlay on passages and houses, and the estimated expenditure for not less than the first five years.

Baptist.

At Thornton Heath, Rev. T. Lardner reports progress.

Rev. J. C. Carlile has entered on his ministerial duties at Folkestone.

Rev. A. Corbet has been recognised at Lansdowne, Bournemouth.

The work at Harlesden Chapel is reported as full of encouragement.

Rev. J. Cecil Whitaker has resigned the pastorate at Prince's End, Tipton.

At the age of eighty-three, Rev. George Harris has resigned the pastorate at Bishangles, which he has held for ...ty years.

Rev. W. H. Rose, for eleven years pastor at Providence, Reading, has accepted a call to Carmel, Woolwich.

A portrait of Rev. Charles Brown, of Fermo-park, Hornsey, forms the frontispiece of the current number of The Baptist Magazine.

Rev. E. S. Summers, Principal of Serampore College, and Mrs. Summers have arrived in this country on furlough. Their little girl, aged ten years, has died since they landed. She was attacked with bronchitis towards the close of the voyage; pneumonia set in, and the illness proved fatal.

The annual meeting of the Pioneer Mission was held on Monday week at Rye-lane Chapel, Peckham, under the presidency of Mr. Wm. Olney. There was a good attendance. Rev. E. A. Carter set forth the object of the mission—the strengthening of weak churches, and the commencement of new Baptist work in needy districts. In the districts of London, Glasgow, and other large towns they had started new churches, which were growing rapidly. The chairman having spoken sympathetically of the work, Pastors Laws and Harper gave short accounts of Pioneer churches. Revs. J. Wilson and J. W. Ewing heartily commended the work.

Methodist.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference has opened a new chapel at Ilkeston.

The opening of John Wesley's house in the City-road is fixed for the third week in June.

The question of creating a Sustentation Fund is being debated in Primitive Methodist circuits.

A new central mission hall is being erected in Bolton, which it is expected will be the largest mission hall in Methodism. The memorial-stone was laid on Thursday.

Professor Waddy Moss and Dr. Waller attended the North Wales Synod, held at Abergele, under the presidency of Rev. Hugh Jones. The net increase in membership for the year is 249.

The report of the committee on the Zambesi Mission finances has been approved by the missionary authorities. The subject of general missionary finance has been relegated to a small but representative committee.

The three Primitive Methodist mission vans have been employed recently in East Anglia, Lancashire, and Cheshire with most gratifying results, and at a small cost. Feeble village churches have been encouraged and strengthened.

Rev. Jas. Hill, of Bourke-street, Sydney, has somewhat suddenly collapsed in health through excessive work extending over fifteen years in Australia, to say nothing of his labour at Fraserburgh, Scotland, where he laboured before going to the antipodes. He is now on his way home.

The London Primitive Methodist First District has closed its annual assembly at Saffron Walden. Street processions of an enthusiastic order, with nightly open-air services, Gospel services before breakfast, and public meetings night after night in the various Nonconformist places of worship and in the Town Hall, have for a time made Saffron Walden think more of the invasion of their town by Primitive Methodists than of the war between Spain and the United States. There was a magnificent spirit of unity of heart manifested by all the Churches, not excluding the Established Church—at least, so far as hospitality could express that unity, and everybody had rejoicing of heart for the success in all departments of labour experienced by this contingent of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.

Presbyterian.

Rev. A. N. Mackray has now become Moderator of London Presbytery, South.

The new church erected at Walton, Liverpool, at a cost of £6700, has been opened by Principal Dykes.

Rev. Donald Murray, senior minister of Tarbat Church, Ross-shire, has celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday.

Rev. Douglas Watters, of Cardiff, is steadily improving in health, although not able to resume his work.

Mr. Duncan MacColl, an elder of Wynd Free Church, Glasgow, has met with such great success in a series of open-air meetings for Gaelic-speaking Highlanders at the north side of Jamaica-bridge, Glasgow, popularly known as the "Highlanders' Corner," that a hall has been taken for regular evangelistic services.

About 250 members of the Synod attended a Temperance dinner given at the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, the hosts being Mr. Alexander Guthrie and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. Another extra-Synodical gathering was a meeting held in Hope Hall, after the rising of the Synod, for the consideration of questions affecting religion and morals.

Fallen Asleep.

In Ballarat, Australia, Rev. William Thomas, formerly one of the most prominent preachers in Wales.—At Mossley, Alderman J. Mayall, J.P., a devoted helper of Christian work.—At Ormskirk, Mrs. Lambert, wife of the Congregational pastor.—At Dronfield, Mr. Robert Hodgson, an earnest Sunday-school superintendent.—At Halifax, aged seventy, Mr. S. T. Midgley, a prominent and honoured citizen, well-known at the New Connexion Conference, of which he was several times a member, and a representative of the Connexion at the Methodist Œcumenical Council in 1891, member of Halifax Town Council for twenty-nine years, and three times Mayor.—At Fenny Stratford, Mr. Thomas Matthews, aged ninety, for many years an earnest helper.—At Ipswich, Mr. R. Sadd, a worker for forty-four years at Zoar Chapel.—At his residence, Clarendon-street, Nottingham, on 1st inst., Rev. W. H. Cornforth, aged seventy-eight, a well-known and useful Methodist minister.—At Cambridge, Mr. Hugh Ponter, J.P., D.L., an esteemed citizen and much valued Presbyterian elder.—At Clones, Ireland, Dr. Richard Henry, the founder of the Presbyterian church at Clones and an earnest Christian worker.—At Dunfanaghy, co. Donegal, Mr. Chas. A. Ramsay, J.P., an elder in the Presbyterian Church.—At Southport, on 6th inst., Canon Powell, aged 84, who recently retired from the living of Eaglescliffe, North Yorkshire, and before going there had spent thirty years in Bolton as vicar of the parish church. Previously he was for seven years a missionary in Ceylon.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. Nicklins, Dorking; W. P. Saunders, 134, Culford-road, Kingsland, N.; Louie Fricker, 123, Whiston-street, Haggerston, N.E.; S. Howard, The Railway Mission, Society-place, Derby; Rev. H. Burgess, Wesleyan chaplain to the Royal Navy, Ireland Island, Bermuda; Miss Broughton, Eynesbury, St. Neots, Hunts; Mr. E. Carter, 128, Hill-street, Liverpool; A. F. Scudamore, 18, Rawden-place, Riverside, Cardiff: George Clarke, 39, Oxford-road, Altrincham.

Communications Received with Thanks.—W.H.C. J.O.H. S.P. J.L.S. A.S. A.M. S.S.M. W.D.P. W.F.T. L.T. W.T.S. M.W. J.G.T. L.E.T. J.L.P. T.H. J.A.J. H.P. H.U. T.W.P. O.T. J.N.B. J.A. H.F. M.B.G. G.P.G. W.H.R. F.H.H. J.P. G.S. R.N. J.M.S. J.D. F.M.H. J.H. S.B. E.A. C.M. J.F.M. J.F.P. A.F. S.M.A. J.O.J. M.F.L.G. E.C.U. G.E. F.K. B.P. J.S. W.R.C. E.C. W.D.D. S.E.B. G.J.E. M.H.S. S.D.W. M.S. H.C.D. L.G.A.R. H.B. R.B. W.B.A. E.B. T.C. M.P. E.A.T. L.J.T. E.H.K. J.R.D. W.H. A. von M. R.C. J.H.F. L.B.H. T.S. R.C. C.E.E. A. von M. N.B. J.H. J.F.T.H. A.M. M.P.B. E.K. H.J.E. T.J.H.

Appeals.

Guitars for Missionaries.—A lady giving free instruction on this instrument to missionaries going out from Y.W.C.A. will be glad of help in providing instruments, music cases, strings, etc. Address, Miss Sheffield, Central Y.W.C.A., 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

Distress in Wales.—An urgent appeal is made for immediate relief on behalf of the hundreds of poor women and children who have been reduced to a state of distress through the disastrous coal strike. An energetic investigation and relief committee has been formed, two soup kitchens opened, and hundreds are supplied with bread and soup daily. Sad disclosures of suffering are brought to light, and poor women fainting for want. Address, Pastor L. S. Jones, The Manse, Abersychan, or Pastor O. Tidman, Abersychan.

"The Will of God."—In a recent issue, under the heading "Gathered Gold," we gave two stanzas of a poem on "The Will of God," assigned to Madame Guyon. We learn that the lines really belong to a beautiful poem by the late Miss Jean Sophia Pigott. They seem to have been altered and incorporated in several hymns; but in its integrity the poem may be found in Miss Pigott's volume, "A Royal Service."

MAY MEETINGS, 1898.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
MAY.
Thurs. 12	10 to 5	British Women's Temperance Assoc.	s St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. McLaren.
,,	10 to 5	The Congregational Union	m City Temple	Rev. A. Rowland.
,,	3 and 7	Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen	m Exeter Hall	Lord Strathcona.
,,	3 p.m.	Spanish and Port. Church Aid Society	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Bishop of Worcester.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m St. Martin's Town Hall
,,	6.30	British Jews' Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. John Cory.
,,	7 p.m.	Country Towns' Mission	m Exeter Hall (Council Room)	Mr. W. Wainwright.
,,	7.30	Seamen's Christian Friend Society	s East London Tabernacle	Rev. S. J. Jones.
Fri. 13	10 a.m.	The Congregational Union	m Memorial Hall, E.C.	Rev. A. Rowland.
,,	3.30	Invalids' Children's Aid Society	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Earl of Stamford.
,,	6.30	L.M.S., Young People's	m City Temple	Mr. A. E. Hutton, M.P.
,,	7 p.m.	Presbyterian Missions	m Queen's Hall, W.	Rt. Hon. J. Bryce, M.P.
Sat. 14	12 noon.	Soc. Prevention Cruelty to Animals	m Crystal Palace	Duke of York.
,,	All-day.	London Lifeboat Day	Demonstration
Mon. 16	3.30	Country Holidays Fund	m Hotel Metropole	Bishop of London.
Tues. 17	9 a.m.	Religious Tract Society	b Cannon-street Hotel	Mr. E. Spicer, J.P.
,,	10 a.m.	Prim. Meth. Missionary Society	b The City Temple	Mr. E. Oakley.
,,	2.30	,, ,, ,, ,, (Ladies)	m ,, ,, ,,	Mrs. E. C. Rawlings.
,,	6.30	,, ,, ,, ,,	m ,, ,, ,,	Coun. A. Chippendale.
,,	3.30	Khalsa Prayer Union	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Col. Williams, M.P.
,,	5 p.m.	London Police Institute	m Grosvenor House	Duke of Westminster.
,,	7 p.m.	Methodist N.C. Missions	m Exeter Hall
,,	7.30	The Peace Society	m Devonshire House, E.C.	Sir J. W. Pease, M.P.
Wed. 18	3 p.m.	Army Scripture Readers	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Sir George Williams.
,,	3.30	Col. and Cont. Church Society	s St. Martin's-in-the-Fields	Bishop of London.
,,	8 p.m.	Women's Protestant Union	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. T. A. Denny.
Thurs. 19	11 a.m.	Church of England Zenana Missions	s St. James's, Paddington	Bishop Sodor and Man.
,,	11, 3, 7.30	Women's Protestant Union	c Exeter Hall (Lower)	Various.
,,	11.30	Moravian Missions	s Portman Chapel	Rev. Hubert Brooke.
,,	3.30	Foreign Aid Society	m 38, Queen's-gate, S.W.	Major Money-Kyrle.
,,	5 p.m.	Field Lane Institutions	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Marquis Northampton.
,,	4.30	Strangers' Friend Society	m 52, Finsbury-pavement	Mr. J. H. Anderson.
,,	6 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	d 186, Aldersgate-street	,, ,,
Fri. 20	11,3, and 7.30	Women's Protestant Union	c Exeter Hall (Lower)	Various.
,,	6.30	Ch. of Eng. Sunday School Institute	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Ripon.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT,
BOUVERIE HOUSE,
SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	" "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s. 6d.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE mission workers in London who bring so much joy to the young people under their care through the channel of a happy day in the country, are sending to us their usual appeals for help. We hope our readers will respond heartily and with alacrity, so that those friends responsible for the outings may be able to carry out their plans now, while the country is looking its best, and the early summer air is so invigorating.

Last week the British Women's Temperance Association re-elected Lady Henry Somerset as president by 530 votes to 71 against her, a majority of 459. The discussion was, we are glad to know, conducted with a studious avoidance of bitter language, but there is no doubt that feeling was strong. The minority includes some of the oldest and most experienced temperance and purity workers in the Association. In her address on Tuesday, Lady Henry admitted the error into which she had fallen ; but even so the many changes of opinion she has gone through in a year might well cause women, who have any firm grasp of principle, to hesitate before appointing her to their leadership. Meanwhile, the evil system she did so much to introduce in India is in full operation ; and abolitionists have the prospect of years of weary work ere its repeal can be secured.

The latest news respecting Mr. Gladstone is given in the bulletin published after a consultation between Drs. Dobie and Biss : "Mr. Gladstone had a fair night, and is comparatively free from pain. There is evidence of increasing weakness and failure of the circulation." Friends, too, are taking the final farewell of him on "this side." Mr. John Morley has spent two hours at Hawarden. Lord Rendel, also, has visited the Castle. Lord Rosebery remained over Friday night. Mr. Chamberlain has paid his erstwhile leader a warm tribute.

"We, on our part," he said, "only remember his splendid achievements, his marvellous genius, his lofty character, and we admire the example he has set us of courage and resignation in time of suffering, and his sublime and simple confidence in view of the expected change."

After listening to a message of sympathy from the Foreign Press Association of London, Mr. Gladstone said : "I charge you to convey my never-ceasing gratitude, though I myself am in extremis." So the land of realities is quietly drawing near, and the realm of shadows fading away ; while the sufferer, sustained by strong faith, is waiting the coming of the Death Angel. Prayer rises from numberless hearts that his last moments may be full of peace.

In the Daily Chronicle of the 11th inst. appeared two important "leaders," arising out of two series of articles that have been appearing in its columns. One, dealing with the present disturbed state of the Church of England, we largely reproduce on p. 11. It puts the whole case, both doctrinally and practically, in a most concise and admirable form. The other treats of the life of shop-assistants. We cannot refer to all the points our contemporary has made, but this one certainly needs serious consideration :—

As for the Christian Churches, in which so many shopkeepers play a leading part, they are strangely indifferent to the moral dangers of a system which compels young men to be celibates, and pays young women such wages as to tempt them to turn to the streets to augment them. The outlook is gloomy enough ; but we do not think that the country is disposed to give any extended lease of life to a system productive of boundless misery, and which is at variance with every principle adopted in our industrial laws.

A determined united effort on the part of Christian shopkeepers would go far to mitigate the existing terrible abuses, as well as cleanse their own hands of any complicity in them. Theirs is a responsibility which cannot be shirked.

That Mr. Kensit has not exaggerated the Romish abuses of many of the clergy was proved when his petition was presented to the Upper House of Convocation by the Bishop of London. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who regretted the innovations, said that some clergy had been setting the Prayer-book aside in important points, that they were acting without authority and inconsistently with the promise they had made.

The Bishop of Winchester remarked that there were undoubtedly services going on in some of our towns in a few churches which were alien services, and were in fact such services as brought about the Reformation. It was the duty of the Bishops to set their face against such services, for it was their absolute duty to protect parishioners in these important matters. The Bishop of Southwell said there was a very strong undermine of disloyalty to the Church, emanating from secret societies in the interests of the Church of Rome. The conclusion of the debate, given in the language of The Times, suggests that no measures are to be adopted. All it records is : "After further discussion," in which eight bishops are reported to have taken part, "the matter dropped." Some more practical steps were taken in the House of Laymen, when a similar petition to that laid before the Bishops was presented there by Mr. A. Riley. A resolution was carried unanimously

In favour of a closer adherence to the form of Divine worship prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer.

But why not adhere, as far as possible, to the primitive practice of the Apostles? Why not take them as carrying out in their age what they believed to be the Lord's mind concerning the formal conduct of public worship? Surely the New Testament can settle the question. At least, it ought to be appealed to as well as the Prayer-book.

The unsatisfactory part of the discussion in Convocation on Mr. Kensit's petition was that so much exception was taken to his methods, and so much emphasis laid upon certain proceedings of the bishops now going on against the practices of some of the clergy. Mr. Kensit may have erred in judgment, and the bishops may be very busy in private correcting their clergy ; but the thing to be done is to deal at once and effectually with the unscriptural practices which are preparing the nation for the domination of Rome. This main issue must not be confused or lost sight of. Whatever has been done, it has evidently not amounted to much, and present circumstances should be seized to do something firmer. It will be a gross blunder to let the defendants escape while abusing the complainant.

What is wanted is responsible men to come forward with a definite plan of action and a policy which, recognising no suggestions of expediency, is directed simply by the one aim, namely, to be loyal to Christ and his truth, as true Christ's men they would find numbers of clergy, senior and junior, who would rally to the call. It is possible for the policy of "possessing our souls in patience" to become a snare. There is one thing which seems to hamper the action of many leading Evangelicals, viz., a fear lest they should not act as "good Churchmen." If they act as become loyal Christ men, surely this must be action befitting good Churchmen. Let duty to Christ stand first and the rest must follow.

From Italy has come the news of a terrible uprising of the people against the Government. The immediate occasion is a serious rise in the price of bread as a result of the war which has brought actual starvation into thousands of homes. The real cause behind it all is the oppressive taxation of the last fifty years consequent on the suicidal policy of the present dynasty in starting Free Italy as a first-class Power. Another gruesome example of the evils of militarism ! It is more than suspected that the Vatican is also behind the trouble, in the hope that the overthrow of the powers that be will contribute to the re-establishment of the secular authority of the Pope. The soldier and the priest nominally exist to safeguard and quicken the national life. As a matter of fact where they have things their own way they invariably throttle and degrade that life. The Times declares that—

The recognised aim of the Vatican has for some time been to collaborate with the Socialist and Republican parties for the overthrow of the House of Savoy.

The policy of the Romish Church has been ever since it was established to discredit, and, if possible, overturn, the present order by keeping the people away from the poll at elections, and by harassing the Government through Catholic governments, and thus forcing it into alliances which have required immense armaments that the people could ill afford to support. Abstention from the poll has thrown things into the hands of a small number of persons, and hence corruption, misgovernment, and intolerable taxation, which have created poverty, and poverty has kindled rage. There are evidences enough of deliberate and widespread organization for bringing a revolution to pass, but it would have been powerless had the people's patience not been exhausted. When women and children cry for bread something terrible is sure to happen.

When we contrast our own welfare with these disturbances, cogent evidence is being forced on us of the privileges enjoyed by the British nation under a free and Protestant Government. Those who are trying in so many ways to reconvert the people to allegiance to Rome little know what they are doing, nor what a calamitous change it would be if accomplished. As a matter of simple truth, there is no country in the world that is really progressive and enlightened except such as enjoy the liberty of conscience, of judgment, and of person which everywhere follows the acceptance of Evangelical Christianity. In view of this unquestionable fact it is unpatriotic as well as irreligious to play into the hands of the sacerdotalists who form the half-way house to Rome.

"He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him" (Prov. xi. 26). "Corners" are not modern inventions, nor confined to one nation. They are only too common in times of war and straitness. The troubles in Italy and the dearness of bread at home have a partial explanation in the American corner in wheat. The "speculative triumphs" of one man during the last few months are said to have been phenomenal. It might be added that his actual crimes in torturing poor people are also phenomenal. Any more flagrant violation of the golden rule cannot be imagined than that a man should lock away for his own aggrandisement one of the necessaries of life.

An incident in the naval battle off Manila throws a significant reflection on Spanish notions of warfare. When Admiral Dewey overthrew Cavite, a procession of nuns and hospital nurses marched up to the Americans beseeching them to refrain from massacring the sick and wounded, and were much affected on finding that instead the enemy treated them with every kindness and supplied them with stores and comforts. The fact that this humanity was unexpected and wonderful in the eyes of the Spanish more than suggests what would have been their own action under similar circumstances. It is such proofs of the moral standards of this nation in war that justifies American interference in Cuba.

On the other hand, the watchword: "Remember the Maine," which is so often mentioned in American speeches, and which has been even signalled by the flagship to the fleet when going into action, is one that tends to degrade the cause for which the United States is fighting. If any justification exists for the war, it is because it is a humanitarian war, and not a war of revenge. To link it with an event such as the sinking of the Maine is to bring it into the meanest of categories, and is utterly unworthy of a civilised people. Our sympathies as a nation would soon be transferred to the other side (as at least the weaker) if we were really persuaded that the prime motive of the conflict was to avenge the loss of a warship. Fortunately, there is plenty of evidence that the better-minded Americans deplore this attitude on the part of the Senate and the Navy.

One of the speakers at the Congregational Union meetings, in dealing with the causes that make Ritualism popular, pointed out with much force that one of them is the neglect of the objective aspects of the Atonement in many pulpits. The heart needs the preaching of the Saviour's work as a sacrifice for sin, and where that is ignored or ineffectively expounded, men run after erroneous ways of emphasising that essential truth, such as is furnished by the crude realism of Sacerdotalism. The remedy is, more direct Scriptural teaching to satisfy the soul's hunger. Those who have a firm grasp of the sacrifice for sin, offered once for all on the cross, are in no danger of running after the heresy which pretends that in the mass a perpetually renewed sacrifice is made by the priest. A simple and devout faith knows no other Atonement than that offered for all time on the cross.

Rev. Alfred Rowland's address from the chair of the Union was strong in many ways, and an address to be thankful for, but was he correct in affirming that > Outside our colleges, and in a less degree within them as well, dogmatic theology has been deposed by two forces—the one ethical, the other scientific; and with the decline of dogma has come the diminution of division?

A few hours later Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, preaching from the same pulpit a sermon which caused evident pleasure, said:—

> Impoverish your creed, and you will soon sterilise your morality. A sterilised theology issues in an impaired morality. The Apostles put in the forefront of their ministry what were known to our fathers as saving truths. Protestantism re-discovered these lost truths, and Puritanism proceeded from Protestantism.

The next day, Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon preached for the L.M.S. in a similar strain.

The letter published in The Times a few days ago, addressed by Mr. Finch to the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the subject of fermented wines at the Sacrament, deserves more than a passing allusion. It raises, in all seriousness, the important question of placing a temptation in the way of the weak brother who has come to know as his own Saviour the Divine Son of God. It is a fact within the cognizance of many, that the man who has been a slave to the intoxicating cup finds the love of strong drink intensely aroused by the sip of wine at the Lord's table. The question debated in the letter of Mr. Finch is whether the communicant cannot be allowed to commune in only one kind, i.e., to forego the cup, by which we show "the Lord's death till He come."

The Archbishop says, in substance, it is legal to water the wine to almost any extent, so that in taking the cup in obedience to the command of Christ, the taste or smell of wine may become almost infinitesimal. Is not the simplest way to prevent the evil we have alluded to, for the churches to use only unfermented wine at this supreme spiritual feast? That cannot lead to an abuse, nor excite any dormant passion. It is neither the wine nor the bread that gives the ordinance its virtue, but the spiritual apprehension by the communicant of the spiritual truth both the bread and wine represent. "The letter killeth, the Spirit giveth life."

Devout students of the Bible will not care for the frequent attempts made to re-write its matchless words "in modern style," such as is attempted in a new service called "Voices of the Spirit" (Sampson Low). The Book has vindicated itself in the experience of centuries as able to tell its own tale and vindicate its own ménage, so that "he who runs may read." These "adaptations" do not always emanate from those who have the highest faith in the Word, and their issue is always to spoil its simple power and force. It speaks to man as man, is capable of being sufficiently understood by the simple as well as the wise and learned. Oriental and quaint as it may be in phraseology and imagery, its appeal is broadly and perfectly human. The less we tamper with it, the better it does its saving work.

The memoir of the late Principal David Brown of Aberdeen, written by Professor W. G. Blaikie, is just published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton (6s.). As the biographer remarks in a preface, Dr. Brown's "personality and life were quite unique"; his warm sympathy with all Evangelical movements was combined with a lively interest in the theological movements of the day. We anticipate genuine pleasure from a perusal of the volume, and hope to give a detailed notice of it in an early issue.

The character of British control over native races doubtless contrasts favourably with that of most, if not all, civilised nations; but there are times when our representatives make grievous mistakes and are guilty of short-sighted acts of oppression. The news that has come from some of the West African settlements of a general rising at the imposition of the hut-tax seems an illustration in point. Newspaper correspondents of all political shades agree in describing it as unjust. It has resulted in widespread dissatisfaction, and if persisted in threatens to embroil us in one of those desultory and useless conflicts which occasionally stain our annals. There is no more fruitful cause of rebellion in any country than oppressive taxation. Even ignorant and savage nations refuse to submit to it. It is to be hoped this evil will be remedied before it ends in a widespread disaster.

The debate on the future of Rhodesia painfully illustrated the lack of moral tone now prevalent in the House of Commons. Both front benches having joined in "burking" the Special Commission appointed to investigate into the raid just when the real secret was about to be divulged, our political leaders were unable to deal frankly and fairly with the issues at stake. There never was a time when the country was in greater need of strong men to voice its moral sense in the councils of the nation. There is a great mass of righteous opinion that has no chance to express itself at present. So long as the constituencies are willing to be led by mere opportunists and party men, this will continue. A great moral awakening is due, otherwise public life will sink into sad levels of torpor and insipidity that will have calamitous effects on the national destinies.

Another promised advance in humanitarian principles is the reform of the prison system, which is just now under the consideration of the Grand Committee on Law in the House of Commons. The Bill is undergoing important modifications since it was read a second time a few weeks ago. The silent system, which is felt to be such a severe hardship, especially by prisoners undergoing long sentences, is to be modified, and useless labour, such as the treadmill and crank, are to be abolished, while the use of the plank-bed, which results at times in tortures of insomnia, is to be made more merciful and discriminating. It is the general opinion of experts in criminology that these reforms, while making penal servitude less degrading, leave plenty of room for corrective and disciplinary measures. Experimental relaxations of present prison rules have amply proved that "judgment" is more effective when tempered with "mercy."

Certainty in Religion—2.

LET us now examine the affirmation of Unbelief, for Unbelief most dogmatically affirms. Its affirmation, however, is a denial of the Christian verity, and the denial is made in the names of Reason and of Science. In the name of reason we are told that "God is unthinkable," and that the most penetrating intelligence can discover no means of understanding Him. The late Professor Clifford said just before his death, "My researches have revealed to me a soul-less universe looked down upon by a god-less heaven." We are further informed that it is open to us to infer—but that inference, of course, is neither knowledge nor fact—and "anything we know of God is a matter of inference only." In the name of Science we are told that not only is there no evidence for those facts the reality of which the Christian attests, but that there is really no need for them, as the universe is sufficiently accounted for without them; that Evolution sufficiently accounts for the growth of the universe.

What has the Christian to say to these cool affirmations? Formerly we allowed ourselves to be discomposed, but the cry of "Wolf, wolf," no longer agitates us—we have heard it for so long, and we have come to know what it means. Happily our disregard of the cry will not be followed by the fatality which overtook it in the fable. We simply and quietly demand that both Reason and Science shall exhibit to us the apparatus with which they measure God and religion: and that being done we shall

FIRMLY CHALLENGE TWO THINGS,

First, the fitness of their apparatus, and, secondly, the correctness of their way of using it.

Reason can only deal with facts which are presented to it. It cannot invent, it can only manipulate. Imagination is permitted to take wild flights and to invent, and while imagination has its recognised place in the mental life, yet it is the very last faculty which we should think of employing for accurate work. The realm of facts is not limited to the material and to the mental worlds. There are undoubted facts of morals and of spiritual powers. We Christians demand in the name of righteousness and common honour that Reason shall deal with these spiritual facts in a way worthy of their Divine origin, and consonant with their true nature. A new effect is perceived in a person's life; that person ascribes it to a Divine cause. Let the effect then be examined in the light of its alleged cause. We pass to the

OBJECTION MADE BY SCIENCE.

"Science" simply means knowledge, and knowledge may be partial or complete. When therefore men speak of Science contradicting Faith, we quietly ask one or two questions. Do you mean that all science contradicts faith? Is the science which is pitted against faith partial or perfect? And has any man a commission to speak in the name of knowledge of one kind against knowledge of another kind? Or has any man the authority to speak in the name of all knowledge? Now we all know that men have made definite affirmations concerning the sciences of Astronomy, Geology, Chemistry, Biology, etc. These affirmations are accepted by those who have no special knowledge of the facts, upon production of the proofs, and the knowledge thus gained becomes in many cases practical capital with which ordinary men trade. With even greater emphasis an affirmation has been made throughout all the ages concerning the practical knowledge of God, and this has been accompanied with unmistakable proofs in regenerated lives; yet this affirmation is not treated with common courtesy—to say no more, it is bad manners. True science can exclude no department of knowledge from its purview—it is as much bound to regard the evidences of God's contact with men, as it is to study the canals of Mars, and more.

When the biologist or the chemist essays to deal with the matter of religion, using the apparatus of his own particular science, he is as wide of the mark as a person who examines the mechanism of an organ in the hope of discovering the secret of those wondrous melodies which entrance the hearer at a recital. "Spiritual things are spiritually discerned."

F. C. Spurr.

"Mass or Communion Service?"

(From The Daily Chronicle.)

FOLLOWING on other newspaper comments of various kinds, The Times (May 11) discusses the position, and opines that the Bishops ought to act, in order to restrain what the Bishop of Hereford calls the "heady and high-minded clergy." To those who take, like the writer in The Times, a vigorously Protestant point of view, it cannot be pleasant to find a great prelate like the Bishop of London meeting the crisis with "inactivity qualified by epigrams." We strongly suspect that The Times will appeal in vain to the general body of the English bishops, or to the most powerful among them, for any collective utterance to the effect that the practices we are describing are "superstitious mediæval revivals." Nearly all the Bishops have made up their minds to allow this ritual—or the bulk of it—partly because they do not disapprove, and partly because the current among the clergy is too strong for their powers of opposition. The High Church clerics who formed the meeting referred to by The Times probably knew that they lost nothing by the decorous admission that the bishop had full authority to "prohibit" any additions to or omissions from the Book of Common Prayer. It may well be that purely Roman practices, such as "Benediction" and "the Rosary," might be forbidden by the Bishops, and that those who have introduced them might submit. But that does not take us very far; this thing is not a question of a few Roman ritual usages more or less. It is not a question of ritual at all—it is a question of doctrine and belief.

The famous Lincoln judgment decided, if we remember it aright, that certain of the practices now in question were not illegal because and so long as they did not with which in the Roman system they are connected. But it is idle to deal with the case as if the High Churchmen were playing at artistic services or archæology. They are able and high-minded men with definite views of life and of Christian theology. We are convinced that, on the contrary, they, or most of them, are in earnest about the doctrines symbolised by all these revived and interpolated acts and prayers.

REPRESENT THE DOCTRINES

They admit, and indeed assert, that they, broadly stated, are "Catholics," not "Protestants." They are trying to restore what they regard as "Catholic doctrine" as it was before the Reformation. The Reformation itself they regard as, for the most part, an unhappy and unwise incident in the evolution of Christian thought and life. They uphold, of course, the right of the Church of England to go her own way independent of Papal authority, as it now exists. But except in this article of the precise right and office of the "See of Peter," the High Anglicans do profess and intend to hold all that was "of faith" in the "Catholic Church" at the accession of Henry VIII.—and indeed, with very few exceptions, everything that is "of faith" to a Roman Catholic of to-day. And the changes which they have boldly made in the forms of Anglican worship are merely the expression of this far more grave change in their whole view of the religious world.

We know not if we can do justice to the theology of the matter, but it appears to us that the difference between the Protestant and Catholic idea of the chief act of public worship is expressed in the heading we adopted—

"MASS OR COMMUNION SERVICE?"

The pre-Reformation Catholic idea, strange as it seems to Protestants, was that by a sacerdotal miracle, daily renewed, the central sacrifice of Christianity—the death of Christ—was exemplified, "renewed," and "applied," for the benefit of the congregations of the faithful. That is, we suppose, what a man means when he talks of a "Mass"—and that is exactly why the "saying of Mass" was made penal and swept away.

The contrary Protestant view was, and is, that the efficacy of the act of worship lay in a common elevation of the spirit by a number of brethren praying together—and that the relation of the service to the death of Christ was that of a solemn Commemoration Supper. It is true that in one form the Lutherans, and in another the Church of England, did retain the idea of a "Sacrament" in the "Communion." That is, they did not hold that this Supper was a mere solemn partaking of Bread and Wine, but that there was linked with it some miraculous but spiritual perception of the Divine. But that again concerned not the Bread and Wine, but the worshipper. Therefore, any idea of what the Romans call "Transubstantiation"—any idea that the thing itself became substantially changed by the words of a priest—was regarded as idolatrous; and the practice of "reserving the Host" or "worshipping the Host" was vetoed. Therefore also the altars were destroyed, and the "Tabernacles" melted down. The difference between the Protestant and the Catholic view here is no mere as to whether the "change" takes place just one way or just another. These things have in other ages afforded food for theological subtleties, but they do not seem to us to be of consequence for the present purpose. What the High Anglicans are acting upon is practically what the Romans call "Transubstantiation," whether they accept the exact formula or not; and it is that fact which gives coherence to the new-old system of ritual, not only in the "Elevation" of the "Mass" itself, but also in "Reservation," in "Tabernacles" set in gorgeous "Chapels of the Blessed Sacrament" for undisguised "worship," and finally in "Benediction" itself. No man who believes the Protestant view, or anything akin to it, would do these things. To the men who practise them they are of the utmost intellectual and moral importance. And the odd thing is that these two parties exist within the same Church.

QUIBBLE OF METAPHYSICAL SUBTLETIES

It rests with those who are members of the Church of England—and first of all with the Bishops and with Convocation, to settle which of these two contrary opinions is the mind of the Church.

God's Mysterious Way.*

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.—Cowper.

THE vivid New Zealand sun was pouring its noonday rays upon a little boat sailing quickly across the five-mile strait between a low, wooded island and the mainland. Two men were seated in her: Ernest Armstrong, a young fair-haired colonial, owner of a small station on the island, and his servant, Williams, an elderly, weather-beaten man, who had evidently once been a sailor. Early in the day they had gone over in quest of letters to the small township, whose white houses and luxuriant trees made a welcome break in the monotony of a line of tussock-covered hills, bleached a whitey-brown by the summer heat; and now while Williams guided the tiller with one hand, with the other managing the sheet, Ernest eagerly bent over the closely-written pages that brought him news from his South Island home. At last they were finished; then, holding out a bulky envelope towards his companion, in a quiet voice with a peculiarly pleasant intonation, he said:—

"Shall I read this to you, Williams? It must be from your old mate, Morton, as it bears the New Plymouth postmark."

"Aye, aye, sir, do," answered Williams, who had never yet mastered the secrets of the three R's, having run away to sea at thirteen from a cottage home in England, and after a not too careful life had drifted to New Zealand, where he had roamed for many years until a good Providence brought him to anchor eighteen months since in Ernest Armstrong's service. The letter was an interesting one to both "boss" and man, dealing as it did with the fluctuations of a small farmer, working up, as they themselves were doing, in the teeth of difficulties—drought, rabbits, bad times—so that half-an-hour passed unnoticed in which the sky had gradually become overcast. Suddenly, however, a violent puff of wind all but wrenched the rope from Williams, who looking sharply over his shoulder uttered an exclamation of horror. At the same instant Ernest, springing forward, seized the tiller and tried vainly to bring the boat round, while Williams endeavoured to lower the sail. But it was too late; in less time than it takes to write, an inky cloud with torn edges trailed low over the face of the deep, and in its heart was the terrible whirling column of a waterspout. The sail parted with a loud report, and the mast snapped like a reed. The hissing waves, whipped by the shrieking blast into black mountains, from whose crests the ghastly spindrift streamed out like smoke from a volcano, broke over the little craft, washing everything overboard with the exception of the two men, who clung on desperately to the stump of the mast. Very few boats could have lived in such a gale; this one, however, having been built on the lines of a lifeboat, contained air-chambers which enabled her to swim like a cork; consequently after each huge sea she righted herself, and though the men were repeatedly submerged, they rose to the surface again and again.

A HURRICANE WAS UPON THEM,

The afternoon wore away, yet still the storm continued. The waterspout travelled on its dreadful course, but now pitiless hail-scurries kept sweeping up, and the icy cold began to tell, especially on the elder man, whose strength was giving out.

"Master," he said at last, panting like a hard-pressed runner, "it's nearly up with me; I can't hold on many more minutes. But I'm not afraid. You've shown me the way to Jesus, master, and I feel his arms round me now."

Ernest's ashy face lit up as he looked at the weary eyes turned on him.

"Lean on me, Williams," he said; "I'm stronger than you. See, I can hold you up if you rest on my shoulder."

Then, speaking slowly and distinctly, he repeated those words, the comfort of countless souls in agony: "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee."

"It's true, master; He has redeemed me with his own precious blood. I know it. I shall soon be with Him. Only a few more minutes, and his blessed face will shine upon me. And it's you who've brought me to Him in my old age. God bless you for it! What should I have done if I had never known you? These eighteen months have opened my eyes to God's truth, and you've SAVED A SHIPWRECKED SOUL."

"The Lord be praised, brother," said Ernest reverently; "it is all grace; I have only spoken God's Word to you; the gift of life is from Him alone."

"Aye, so it is, but your hand was chosen to reach it to me." Then presently he went on in gasps, "Kiss me, master, once before I die. I've been a wanderer all my life, ever since I left my mother's side, and I'm like a tired child now. You've been mother, friend, and brother to me in the Lord; it's only He as can thank you for it all; I can't." The kiss was given—unutterably solemn embrace in the stress of death, when soul met soul, stripped of all except the awful reality of existence—and immediately after a tremendous billow crashing down upon them capsized the boat, and hurled them both into the gulf beneath.

In that supreme moment only one thought filled Ernest's consciousness—the thought of the nearness of God. No flash of memory brought back the past; no vision of dear ones—not even of her who was dearest of all—came to him, only the absorbing, calm assurance of the being and beauty of the Lord Jesus Christ. Life seemed all gathered up into one single point, and it was as if death were a blinding light which, could he only open his eyes, would reveal the One who alone makes life to be life. It was therefore with a shock and a sense of rebuff that he presently found himself floating on the top of the waves, mechanically of his boat, while the wind blew the drops from his face, and the deep thunder of the sea beat in upon his ears. He looked around; no other head than his rose above those blue-black jags of water; no arm was raised for help; no voice called from the abyss—Williams was gone into the presence of the King, while he was left behind. As he realised this, a sense of unspeakable disappointment came over him, and tears, born of mortal weakness, were wrung from his eyes.

CLINGING TO THE UPTURNED KEEL

The storm, however, momentarily lessened, the regular swing of the boat indicating that the sea was going down, and soon the thud of oars in their rowlocks was heard coming rapidly nearer. In a few more minutes a boat belonging to the owner of the station next his own hove in sight, and he was saved.

An excited knot of watchers was gathered on the landing-stage of the island, and strong hands were held out to receive the half-dead form that was lifted on shore. Among the men—shearers for the most part, and a rough lot at best—was a Maori who a few days previously had had some conversation with Ernest, and whose heart God had doubtless been preparing. His eyes had followed the wreck with intense anxiety, and now that the rescue had been effected, he could restrain himself no longer, exclaiming vehemently: "Only Ernest Armstrong could have lived through such a storm; anyone else would have been lost!"

Ernest heard the words. Summoning all his strength he raised his head, and looking into the eager, dark face bending over him, answered: "No, it was my God who saved me"; then, completely exhausted, he fainted away.

The Maori stood for a moment motionless; but the power of a great light shining in upon his soul, he fell on his knees in the presence of the solemnised men, openly adoring God, and giving himself unreservedly to Him through the Saviour. Not a word was spoken, but many hard eyes grew dim, and who shall say what saving thoughts may not have passed through the minds of the silent spectators?

For the next twenty-four hours Ernest lived over in delirium the terrible experiences related, but at length, when the setting sun was lighting up the now smiling sea, he once more opened his eyes consciously upon the life to which he had so recently been given back, and a stream of thankfulness poured into his heart at the remembrance of God's signal mercy. He was glad to live now, glad—if the Lord should tarry—to have years of willing service granted him, and with deep joy surrendered himself anew to Him who, by means of a storm, had received one soul into eternal rest, while another was newly born into the kingdom.

GERALDINE M. SEYMOUR.

* All the facts here related are true, the names only being altered.

"Fred's Friend—an' Mine."

On'y a slip on a frost-bound trunk,
Want o' keer as 'e struck the blow,
An' now 'e lays on the shanty bunk—
Leastwise, wot's left o' him 'ere below.
When did 'e leave us? Yesternight.
Lorse o' blood's wot the doctor said.
Axe cut deep, for the blade was bright,
An' 'e always kept it sharp, did Fred.

Widder or chillun? No, 'e'd none—
On'y a lass away by the sea,
A couple o' mares, an' 'is axe an' gun,
A shanty down by the lake—an' me.
Poor old Freddy! 'is voice was weak,
One could see 'e was drawin' towards the end.
"Oh, Charlie," 'e sez, "it's late to seek,
An' the time's so short—an' I want—a friend."

"Right here," sez I, an' I took 'is 'and,
But I knew at once it was more nor me
That 'e wanted to 'elp 'im off the land
An' cross the stream, to eternity.
So I told 'im as plain an' 's short 's I could,
For I aint much 'and at talkin' pi,
Folks went to 'eaven whose lives was good,
Wot mother 'd told me in days gone by.

Oh, Sir, I'd 'ave willin' give up my life
To 'ave known one verse o' the Bible then,
For 'is words they cut to my 'eart like a knife,
As I 'eard 'im call for a friend agen.
An' then, in the still o' the night there came Back to my mind a story sweet,
Of how a woman, in sin an' shame,
Was brought by men to the Saviour's feet.

I couldn't quite tell 'ow the story went,
But I did remember about the end,
So over 'is dyin' form I bent,
An' said, "There's Jesus, the sinner's Friend."
Did 'e 'ear me speak? Jest step inside.
Look at the smile on 'is weary face—
That's only the joy o' a man that's died,
With 'is sins forgot, in the Lord's embrace.

An' me? Well, I sat in the empty shack,
When Fred 'ad gone—an'—we'd said good-bye,
While the words as I'd whispered to 'im came back,
An' the winter dawn was in the sky.
An' I knew as I'd told 'im about a love
That I didn't know, an' I didn't feel.
So I tried to think o' the Lord above,
An' at last—I went on my knees, to kneel.

That's all, for the Lord 'e 'eard me pray,
Probably knew as I warn't no 'and,
Jest 'eard me ask 'im to show the way,
An' keep me faithful at 'is command.
You're a friend o' Jesus? That so? Then shake,
For so am I, an' I tell you true,
I know as 'e's One as'll always take
An' stick to a man right through an' through.

H. H. BASHFORD.

The Churches and Evangelistic Missions.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.*

I AM not dealing with that aspect of mission work which is becoming increasingly popular —the union of Churches for aggressive work, in connection with the masses of population which are untouched by ordinary Church operations. I have to speak of the place of Evangelistic Missions in the work of the Churches.

By the term Evangelistic Mission I mean a series of services, in which there shall be the proclamation of the Evangel of the Cross in all the simplicity of first principles, with a view to bringing those who have been living to themselves only, into the Kingdom of God. Such proclamation will partake of the nature of exposition and appeal. The exposition will consist of a presentation of the true ideals of human life, and of the provision of infinite love for those who have failed to realise such ideals. The appeal will declare the claims of God upon the hearers, urging them to immediate and absolute surrender.

That there is a place for such missions few will deny. The question under consideration is that of their true place in Church work.

I. Evangelistic Missions are a natural and necessary outcome of Church life.

This will become evident if we remind ourselves of the constitution and function of the Churches of Christ. The local gathering of believers is a Church, by virtue of the bond of union created in the sharing of a common life. Admission to our Churches does not secure admission to membership in the Church of Christ; on the contrary, membership of the Church catholic is the condition for admission to our fellowship, and that membership is created by the bestowment of life in the new birth. A local Church, then, is the gathering together of a number of those who are inspired and impulsed by the life of God, realised in the indwelling of Christ by the Spirit. It follows that the true function of the Church is the manifestation of the Christ life to men. For the accomplishment of this all the members are necessary. No one person is capable of giving expression to all the varied and beauteous life of Jesus Christ. That life will have a certain manifestation in one person, and quite a different one in another. Through one will be seen his tenderness, through another his strength, through another his hatred of all forms of wrong and oppression. The whole fellowship is necessary for the manifestation of the glory of the Master. The whole company of the children of God is necessary for the display of the life of the Son of God.

It follows that the activities of the fellowship will be the activities of Christ Himself. If his life be the veritable life of his people, it will bring them into perfect accord with his will, and perfect harmony of action with all the enterprises dear to his heart. His life was lived, and given ultimately upon the Cross, for the ransom and renewal of men, and thus of society, and the world. The activities of the Church must necessarily move upon these lines. Consequently there must be a place in the programme of the Church's work for services in which the Evangel of the Cross will be proclaimed, and those outside urged to actual and immediate decision and submission. This is a necessity of the case. A Church sharing the life of the Son of God, and realising in any measure its tenderness, and compassion for the Godless and the hopeless, and yet making no effort for the renewal of such, is an utter impossibility. It is altogether unthinkable.

II. This view of the place of Evangelistic Missions makes it impossible for them to be antagonistic to any other branch of the Church's work.

Nothing is more sad than the fact that there are persons who have come to look upon evangelistic effort as the only form of Church activity, and thus have created a feeling of distrust in the minds of those whose fitness, and whose call therefore, is to other departments of service. Nothing is more disastrous to mission work than the attempt to exalt the office of the mission preacher into the one and only form of Christian ministry. We claim that there is no possible phase of human life to which Christ has no message, and which He is unable to touch and heal and glorify; consequently there must be diversity of gifts, and within the vocation of the ministry there must be room for the man who is a prophet, or a teacher, or a pastor, but who does not possess the gift of the evangelist. Have we not lost much by our neglect of the New Testament orders in this matter of ministry? "Some apostles —some prophets—some evangelists—some pastors and teachers." The conception of the ministry that looks for a combination of these gifts in one man, who is a sort of ministerial "multum in parvo," has much to answer for. The necessity for the evangelist is to-day as great as ever. The form his work is to take may be altered in this land from that of proclaiming the evangel to those who have never heard it, to that of reminding men of familiar truths, and insisting upon their importance. Its essential spirit is the same, that of persuading men to turn to God in Christ. Evangelistic Missions are complementary to every other form of Church work. Their success will ever depend upon the thoroughness with which all other matters are carried out. We have sorrowfully to reckon with the fact that there are in our Churches men of rare gifts and manifest graces of character, who look with grave suspicion upon mission services. This arises too often from the reflections which have been cast upon the work of such men, by unwise advocacy of missions in a way that is, to put the matter in the mildest form, unintelligent.

III. This conception of the place of Missions precludes the possibility of mechanical arrangement for them.

Great missions such as that now in progress in London, and those simultaneous missions being held in connection with the Free Church Councils of this country, necessitate a certain amount of arranging. This fact constitutes their peril, and in some cases their comparative failure. Let it be freely granted that where proper conditions are observed—a subject which does not come within the scope of this paper—they are remarkably owned and blessed of God. Between these missions and missions in our Churches there is, however, a wide difference.

No mission should be held in any church simply by arrangement of the pastor, the officers, or a section of the membership. A resolution proposed, discussed, and carried by a majority never constitutes a warrant for holding special services. The evil results upon church life, of work arranged thus by mechanical methods, have been widespread and lasting. The blighting influence on all the higher aspects of church life, of holding an annual mission, simply because it is a custom, or because it has been voted as likely to help, is well known to those who have engaged in this form of service. For Evangelistic missions to be of deep and permanent benefit to a church, and the district in which the church exists, they should never be undertaken unless the necessities of the case demand it, and this demand will be made by evident tokens within the church itself.

(To be continued.)

* An address to the Congregational Union.

Blackburn.—On Wednesday and Thursday last the closing meetings of this season for the deepening of the spiritual life, held in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association in Blackburn, were held, and were addressed by Dr. White, of Winchester. During the season the Word has been delivered from time to time with much faithfulness, and, we believe, "in demonstration of the Spirit and in power." It is hoped, God willing, to resume these gatherings in the autumn.—W.

"Silly Shillings."

THE FOLLY AND DANGER OF GAMBLING!

MEN gamble to win; gambling appeals to the selfishness of human nature; it is a desire to grow rich without labour, and tens of thousands are ensnared by its false glamour, and are only enlightened when the danger is apparent and their folly exposed. Betting on horse-racing has increased enormously in recent years. In 1865 there was but one sporting paper, and that weekly; to-day their number is legion, and many of them are issued daily.

This evil of betting extends over a wider area than drink, it affects more people—thousands of mere children are engaged in it; and in many of our London factories there is a girl who acts as a "bookmaker"—and it is supposed works almost as much havoc.

The following incidents and facts may be of use to put before those of our friends who are in danger of being beguiled. Our children, our servants, or friends, are all exposed to the danger. As Christians we are safe; but many of the Lord's people little reck the temptations which beset many of their households who have not yet decided to serve our Lord Jesus.

One of the largest and best known professional gamblers—a "bookmaker" who frequents all the race-courses—has erected a magnificent mansion and has had the courage to call it

"SILLY SHILLINGS."

There, on the entrance gates to the house in the north of London, can be seen this object-lesson. This is "giving the game away" with a vengeance, one would think.

Again! in another suburb, another bookmaker has erected a row of small houses from which he regularly receives the rent, and it is an "open secret" (for the name of the same appears on the corner house) that he has named the buildings "Mugs' Cottages."

Yet another eye-opener! A few months ago a "sporting prophet" was sentenced to penal servitude, but not before he had netted from the people who back horses a large fortune; it was proved in evidence at his trial that the British public had sent him £60,000, in hopes that he would send them the names of the winners of certain races. "Perfection Miller" knew about as much of stable secrets as the foolish people who forwarded him the above vast sums.

A well-known "tipster" assured me one day at Epsom that his takings during the "Leger" week at Doncaster were over £1000. The value of the house property he possesses is enormous. It is impossible for the ordinary people who bet to win; the bookmaker makes his book to gain, and in the long run he is sure to do so, and most of them attain to affluence and wealth. Stand by the tables at Monte Carlo, and, while here and there one of the gamblers may win, see how the croupiers rake in the gold and notes time after time; and it is well known to all that though a man may win some thousands in a day, it is almost certain he will return later on, and lose it all. The bank is but a huge bookmaker, it cannot lose, and its average gain is NEARLY A MILLION A YEAR.

At Epsom races, years ago, it was almost with fear and trembling that brethren ventured on the course itself to preach; but accompanied by the late brave Gawin Kirkham and undaunted Miss Alexander, we have held the fort, though it has been rough work, and even on Derby night in the town we have been covered with flour, and the harmonium keys choked up until Miss A. could play no longer.

Now all is changed, and a band of brethren, some forty strong, composed of the Open-air Mission and the London City Mission choir, hold meetings daily on Epsom Course, and addresses containing the old, old Gospel, mixed with loving words of warning, are preached under the shadow of the grand stand, and within hearing even of Royalty itself, to say nothing of the tens of thousands of booklets and other literature. A copy of one leaflet is here appended:—

THE ETERNITY STAKES.

The Start!—"Born in sin" (Ps. li. 5).
The Race!—"All gone out of the way" (Rom. iii. 12).
The Finish!—"After death the judgment" (Heb. ix. 27).
The Weighing Room!—"Thou art weighed in the balances, and are found wanting" (Dan. v. 27).
The Settling Day!—"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Mark viii. 35).

Brethren, pray for us. Chas. Cook.

[429]

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 22.

"It behoved the Christ to suffer."—Acts xvii. 3.

THIS is what our Lord was constantly insisting upon during the closing days of his earthly ministry. "Behoved it not," He asked, "the Christ to suffer these things, and to enter into his glory?" The Jewish nation rejected Him because his conception of Messianic power was so foreign to theirs, but in doing so, doomed themselves to rejection from the purposes of God, at least during the present dispensation.

It behoved Him, that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest. How could He have sympathised with the anguish of human hearts if He had not drunk deeply of the cup of sorrow? How could He have led his flock through the thorny brake if He had not gone to and fro with his bare feet? It behoved Him to be made like unto his brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God. In that He hath suffered, He is able to succour.

It behoved Him, that He might be the sacrifice for sin. The conscience demands that forgiveness should be consistent with righteousness. It was necessary, therefore, if Jesus were to bring us forgiveness, that He should be prepared to make reparation and atonement for sin. He must shed his blood, that He may cleanse his people from their sins: He must be willing to be their scapegoat; He must offer Himself without spot to God, that He may cleanse our consciences from dead works to serve the only and living God.

It behoved Him, that He might reign for evermore.—It is a fundamental principle in God's universe, that suffering, humbly and resignedly borne, leads to royalty and reigning. He who can stoop most profoundly can rise to reign most gloriously. As is the descent, so is the ascent. In proportion to the submission to take the form of a servant is the exaltation to the right hand of power.

MONDAY, May 23.

"A certain Jew named Aquila...with his wife Priscilla."—Acts xviii. 2.

It is a striking spectacle to see Paul, on his entrance to Corinth with which his name was to be so remarkably associated, looking around probably in the Jewish quarter, for manual employment, that he might be sure of his bread. Similarity of craft introduces him to the two whose names are mentioned above—refugees from Rome, who, though then in unbelief, were apparently converted by the words the Apostle addressed to them as they sat together over their daily toil.

How eager Paul was, not only to preach the Gospel to the crowds that thronged the gay and sunny streets of Corinth, but to win individual souls for his Master's kingdom. Some are eager enough in this holy quest, when they occupy the pulpit, and are conscious of the eyes of others being upon them, but they are careless of the individual souls cast in their way. Not so was it with the Master, who went out of his way to find one Samaritan woman, and stopped beneath the tree to call down one publican. Not so was it with Philip, who spoke to the eunuch as eagerly as to Samaria. Not so was it with the Apostle, who was as intense in his endeavours for a gaoler, a Lydia, a Timothy, as for the crowds that were going to destruction.

Is not this God's secret test? If we are not careful about the ones and twos, He will not use us to the crowds. Indeed, it is the experience we get in dealing with individuals that equips us for multitudes.

TUESDAY, May 24.

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?"—Acts xix. 2.

This was Paul's first question of these twelve disciples. He knew perfectly well that they could not have believed without the special grace of the Holy Spirit, but now he asks them if at the moment of regeneration and conversion they received Him. Obviously, his question implies his belief that there is a special enduement of the Spirit of God for a consecrated and useful life over and above his initial work on the soul.

It is a question which is in these words addressed to every Christian reader. You have believed in Christ through the ministry of the Spirit, but did you at that or any subsequent moment receive the infilling and unction of the Pentecostal Spirit? You may not be able to point to some marked manifestation, but are you conscious of those fruits which are the invariable accompaniments of that supreme gift? If not, learn to receive, and receive now.

In how many instances might this inquiry be met by the reply which the Apostle received: "Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost has been given." John the Baptist clearly foretold that Christ would baptize with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, but in his days Pentecost was still more than three years away, and these, his disciples, had never heard that the last days foretold by God had already been inaugurated. Alas! that it should be possible after these centuries for many Christian people to be in ignorance of the special glory and characteristic of this age, and to be content to live without seeking for themselves all that Pentecost means.

WEDNESDAY, May 25.

"Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God, which He purchased with his own blood."—Acts xx. 28.

There are many lessons here.

(1) The Christian worker must not neglect his own soul. He must take heed to himself, as well as to the flock. He must not only take care of other vineyards, but mind his own. Our temptation is to neglect our close walk with God in our eagerness to attract others to the narrow path.

(2) The overseer, elder, or bishop is not set over the flock, but is in it. It is the flock in the which they are made bishops. So to the end of life the most eminent of God's servants must remember that he is but a saved sinner needing the blood and righteousness of Christ as much as the weakest of his flock.

(3) The office of minister is given by the Holy Ghost. It is He who lays on us the burden of souls, and equips us for our work. He, too, is willing to direct and use. How awful and solemn the responsibility! We are accountable to Him. Woe be to us if we exercise our ministry only for the eye and ear of our fellow men.

(4) Notice that the Church is distinctly asserted to be God's. We are his people and the sheep of his pasture. We must tend it for Him, leaving the responsibility with Him, and expecting Him to find wages at last.

(5) The purchase money of the Church is here said to be God's own blood. It is a remarkable expression. It stands alone in the Word of God, but brings out very distinctly the thought that the entire Godhead achieved the work of man's redemption in the offering of the Cross. How dear must we be to God!

THURSDAY, May 26.

"And kneeling down on the beach, we prayed, and bade each other farewell."—Acts xxi. 6.

It is thus that Christians say farewell. On their knees, within sound of the breaking wavelets, men, women, and children, gathered in a weeping circle around the servant of God, who had been to so many of them the Apostle of a new life.

But it is thus that Christians never say farewell. The relationship which is founded in the love of God, which can be made a matter of prayer, which sends great pulses of holy affection through our natures in our most sacred hours, cannot be broken. Of such friendship there is no past or future, but always a blessed present tense. What has been, is, and will be. And as severed hearts meet in prayer, though the bodies may be divided by hundred of miles of sea and land, there is no separation. They are one in the Father's presence, eternally, indissolubly, and blessedly one. Neither height, nor depth, nor things present, nor things to come, can separate those whose love is a satellite in the system of eternal Love.

When we are called to part from those whom we love better than ourselves, let us kneel down and pray; let us abide alike in the attitude and exercise of unceasing intercession; let us realise that space and time are mere accidents of being, and not essential; let us be sure that they who are nearest the King must be near to all who, in heaven or on earth, are nearest Him also. For such there is "no more sea."

FRIDAY, May 27.

"The God of our fathers hath appointed thee to know his will."—Acts xxii. 14.

The will of God is general and particular. We may know it generally from the book of creation, the ten commandments, the beatitudes, and conscience. But, in addition to this, God has a particular will for each of his children. The moon shines on the sea, but there is a special path of moonbeams to the spot where you stand, where you should be born, live, and die; what you should accomplish by your life, and so forth.

God comes still as He did to Saul, with a great summons, calling his own from the midst of their fellows, and entrusting to them the sacred prerogative of knowing, seeing, and hearing. Happy are they who at once arise, leave all, and follow. To them it will be given, as to Paul, to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and to unfold them to others.

You have been appointed to know his will; be sure of this, and if as yet it is not clearly made known, adopt these precautions: 1. Carefully remove all your preconceptions and prejudices, so that your mind and heart can be a tablet for God to write on. 2. Set aside much time for waiting on God, in the study of his Holy Word. 3. Let the glory of Jesus be the supreme consideration with you, to the destruction of every scheme for your personal aggrandisement and ambition. 4. Do not run to and fro, asking your friends and companions what they would recommend. 5. Wait the Lord's leisure, nor dare to act unless you are sure that you are in the line of his purpose. 6. Mark the trend of his providence, for it will certainly corroborate his inner voice. 7. When you have once made up your mind in faith and prayer, dare to act, and never look back. He will not let you be ashamed.

SATURDAY, May 28.

"Brethren, I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day."—Acts xxiii. 1.

Conscience is what one knows with oneself. That at least is an exact translation of this Latin word. It is a man coming to himself, facing himself, looking deep into his own eyes as he stands before the mirror of God's truth. There are varieties of conscience—the weak conscience, which is ever questioning; the defiled conscience, which has a consciousness of neglected duty or unforgiven sin; the morbid conscience, which is perpetually discussing infinitesimal niceties, and splitting hairs. In contrast with these is the good conscience, of which the Apostle speaks.

We have to live with our conscience, and if it is disquieted and restless, we find it to be an evil companion. Like the restless sea, it frets and foams through the dark hours; and is always casting up the bitter memories and sad regrets of byegone days. As it was with King Ahab, so is it with all who have sinned against conscience, they get the vineyard of Naboth, but with it they get Elijah, standing like an incarnate conscience at the door, and taking pleasure and enjoyment from their possession.

Paul could not have made this statement unless he had been very accurate and careful in his daily walk and conversation; but he tells us that he perpetually exercised himself to have a conscience void of offence toward God and man. Let us subject ourselves to a similar discipline, and often expose ourselves to the searching scrutiny of the Holy Spirit, so that we may say with the Apostle, "My conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost." (Acts xxiv. 16; Rom. ix. 1.)

F. B. M.

The Congregational Union.

NOTES BY A MINISTER.

THE Spring gatherings of the Congregational Union last week were characterised by much freshness and force. The report, which was taken as read on Monday evening, was on the whole very encouraging. The Union funds show large receipts, especially in the publication and book-selling department, and there was a balance in hand, after making various substantial grants, of £1092 13s. 11d. Three prominent ex-chairmen had passed away during the year in the persons of Dr. Stoughton, Dr. Newth, and Rev. Thomas Green, the year's obituary including besides such names as those of Rev. John Pulsford (the distinguished Scotch divine) and Rev. W. Roberts (a long-familiar figure on London platforms, especially in missionary and devotional gatherings).

The Church Extension report, dealing with the special Jubilee effort to secure £100,000 for the extinction of chapel debts, and a central fund for initiating new churches in populous neighbourhoods, had nominally reached nearly £70,000, but only £5000 of this was for use as a nucleus for the latter purpose—a somewhat disappointing result, as the need, in many congested districts, is imperative. The Young People's Union report showed some encouraging facts as to the awakening interest of the younger members of the churches in the work of the Union. Preparations are being made on a large scale for worthy representation at the International Congregational Council to be held in Boston, U.S.A., in the autumn of next year.

The Chairman's address, by Rev. Alfred Rowland, B.A., LL.B., of Crouch End, on Tuesday morning, was on the need of concentrating our spiritual and denominational forces. It was characterised by the sound common-sense and practical judgment for which the speaker is well known, and was full of shrewd and telling passages. He claimed that in the past Congregationalism had done splendid service (1) by fostering independence of thought and character; (2) by teaching the members of our churches to use their gifts for the benefit of the community in social and political matters; and (3) by stirring up even the Established Church clergy to a higher activity and a more spiritual conception of their calling. Our present function was in harmony with the past. We were called to stand in the front rank of fighters against Sacerdotalism, to take our place in removing wrongs perpetrated by civil rulers, and in the desperate conflict with intemperance.

Reviewing certain changes that had taken place in public opinion during the last quarter of a century, Mr. Rowland laid great stress on the fact that nescience in theological matters had lost its popularity, and that men were everywhere asking for that a healthy change had come over the so-called "higher classes" by the substitution of athletics for the æsthetic craze of a few years since; and that the denominational spirit so rife a generation ago had steadily declined. In all these facts there was a call to concentration of our sympathies and energies as Evangelical believers and churches. The work was great, and great was the call and the opportunity. The spirit of the address was full of hopefulness and practical stimulus, and it was received with cordial applause by a vast audience that completely filled the City Temple.

POSITIVE PRESENTATIONS OF THE TRUTH;

The question of Sacerdotalism in its religious and educational aspects received considerable attention at the Assembly. Resolutions on the subject were passed at the Tuesday morning session, and two valuable papers were read on Friday, followed by a spirited discussion by Prof. Massie, M.A., of Mansfield College, and by Principal Mitchell, B.A., of Nottingham Institute. The burden of these papers was the need for carefully educating our churches, and especially their younger members, in the principles of the Evangelical faith. Prof. Mitchell earnestly advocated the establishment of catechumen classes in which special preparation for membership might be combined with talks or lectures on the New Testament theory of the church and the ministry. He contended that there was not enough systematic endeavour to meet the sacerdotal heresy with careful and thorough Scripture knowledge, and with the facts of ecclesiastic history, so eloquent by its fatal effects on national and individual religion.

Wednesday was devoted to the claims of the London Missionary Society's work in various parts of the world. The balance-sheet again shows a serious deficit, not in the amounts received, but in the relation of expenditure and income. This is nothing short of a calamity in view of the perpetual in India, China, New Guinea, and other fields. At the evening gathering at the Queen's Hall, which was crowded in every part, a hearty welcome was given to Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, the foreign secretary, and to Messrs. Evan Spicer and Crosfield, who have made a wide tour of the mission field during the last twelve months. The report which they brought back was, on the whole, most inspiriting, and the audience was roused to enthusiam by the record of the changes wrought by missionary work in New Guinea and other parts of the South Seas. If the churches now worthily uphold this society by their gifts and their prayers, there should be a period of unexampled prosperity before its work everywhere. Incidentally it may be mentioned that excellent service was rendered by the deputation in Madagascar, in persuading General Gallieni of the non-political aims of the L.M.S., and so of getting him to modify his repressive attitude towards its work in the island. The Society may never regain its social prestige, but it is yet capable of doing a priceless service to religion in the island.

CALL FOR MORE MISSIONARIES

Side by side with the L.M.S. gatherings (which included a very successful meeting of the Watchers' Band) may be mentioned the Colonial Missionary Society's annual meeting on Tuesday evening. The speakers included Rev. S. P. Sihlali, a Kaffir native minister; Dr. Moxom, a Congregational minister from America, who has come over to make arrangements for the International Council of 1899; Dr. Clifford, who recently made a tour of our colonies, and Dr. Goodrich, of Manchester. Each of these speakers put the claims of the British colonies in a way that ought to waken a hearty and generous response from the churches on behalf of the society, which is doing splendid work on the frontiers of civilisation, but which is sadly hampered for lack of funds.

A notable contribution to the Assembly's deliberations was made on Thursday morning. Mr. Haworth read a paper dealing with the made by the Manchester Board of Missions in giving a new lease of life and usefulness to central churches. The plan is to enlist the services of a devout and capable business man as superintendent of each of these decaying churches, and to enlist with him others who shall give their services to the cause, so that by straight and earnest preaching, and a wise adaptation of old methods, the needs and sympathies of the crowded populations may be met. This experiment deserves to be widely tried in all our large towns. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan followed with a wise and helpful paper on the right time and methods of holding evangelistic services in connection with church life. His chief contention was that such special efforts should not be made when that is at a low ebb, but rather when a thoroughly spiritual atmosphere is abroad, so that the work may be afterwards carried on naturally and without constraint or forcing. The discussion was again full of stimulus.

"SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT"

The only other meeting that needs particular mention was the young people's demonstration on Thursday night, when the City Temple was again packed, and stirring addresses were delivered by Dr. Maclure, head master of Mill Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, and Rev. C. Silvester Horne. Everything went with immense enthusiasm, and the noble appeals by the speakers were greeted with the heartiest applause. There is evidently plenty of healthy young blood in the London churches, which only needs stirring to respond to the lofty claims of Jesus Christ on their allegiance and service. The gatherings as a whole have been not only enjoyable, but stimulating and spiritual in tone.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

MR. J. R. MOTT, travelling secretary of the World's Students' Christian Federation, has been in Oxford, and his addresses to University men are marked by a spirit of intense earnestness. His subject on Tuesday was the claims of world-wide missions on University men. He urged that missions are the first business of the Church, and that University men ought to be the leaders of that Church's work. As he spoke of the "cloud of witnesses"—University men who have given themselves to missionary work—many must have felt the solemn burden of individual work laid upon them. Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Chavasse, the College secretaries and officers of the Christian Union met Mr. Mott at breakfast in the Hannington Hall Library, and an address was given on the secret of Christian work in Colleges.

The first public gathering in connection with the Oxford District Wesleyan Synod was held on Monday evening. The subjects had been chosen with special reference to the young people, and some interesting details of work were given. Mr. Hutton, who presided, stated that a larger number of undergraduates were members of his church than they had had for some years past, and among them there was an intense spirit of devotion and an earnest desire to be practically employed in the service of Christ.

The annual meetings on behalf of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews were held in Hannington Hall. Rev. H. Ashley Nash was one of the deputation, and gave some interesting information of his work at Damascus. Striking instances were given of the power of the Word to convert the soul through private study, notably that of a Jew who was translating the New Testament from a Jewish standpoint. By the time he had finished the Epistle to the Hebrews the seeds of the Christian faith had been sown, and in a short time he re-translated the entire New Testament with a view to sending it out to assist in the conversion of other Jews.

Archdeacon Johnson, of the University Mission to Central Africa, addressed a crowded meeting in the Hall of University College on Wednesday. Speaking of the difficulties of the mission, he mentioned among others the difficulty of adequately dealing with people who had been in slavery all their lives. He appealed for men who would carry God's message to these benighted people, urging that it was surely nobler for young men to go into such a country, and do a work for God, than to go and shoot big game or take part in some petty native war.

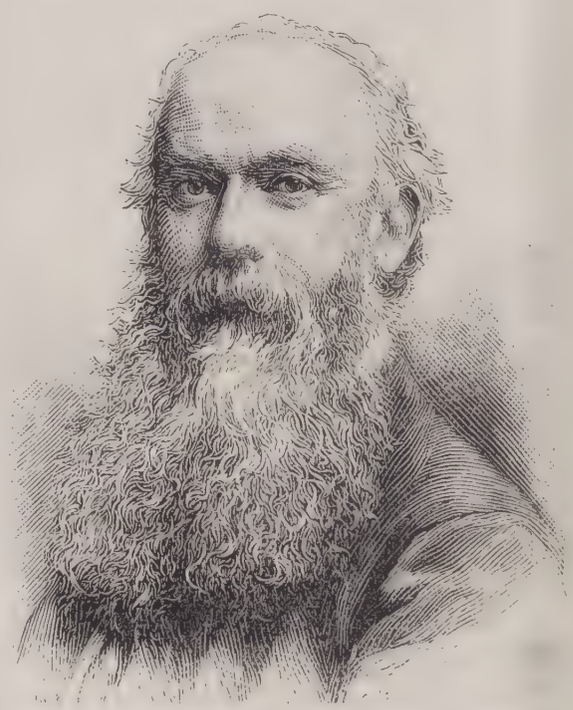
Glossop.—Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes conducted on Sunday week anniversary services at the Gospel Union Mission Hall, Glossop, where he found a flourishing church under the superintendence of Pastor Richard Howton, who has had a very remarkable history. It was a long step from the prize-ring to the pulpit, but Mr. Howton has taken that step, and has taken it well. God's power in reversing the whole current of a man's existence has seldom been seen more conspicuously than in the case of this ex-pugilist, who, when converted to God, was characterised not only by a thirst for righteousness, but also for knowledge. His work in Glossop has secured the blessing of God in the conversion of many drunkards and profligates.

THE LATE

Rev. S. C. Morgan, D.D.

THIS Christian ambassador, whose home-call we lately recorded, has left by his life and work a bright example for other children of God to follow. His loss is greatly mourned by the large circle throughout which his influence was felt; but, at the same time, the character of that influence was such as to lead men to look to our Lord Jesus Christ alone for support, strength, and joy.

Samuel Christopher Morgan was born on July 29, 1836, at All Saints' Vicarage, Birmingham, his father being at that time vicar of All Saints' parish. Through the blessing of God attending the godly training of his mother and father, he early gave his heart to the Lord. Although his mother died while he was still young, her holy example continued to exert a salutary influence over him, and her prayers received very manifest answers. Whilst quite a boy, he began to teach in Sunday-school. Educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, he afterwards passed through Wadham College, Oxford, where he graduated. He took a decided stand for Christ at Oxford, and while consistently pursuing his studies, he engaged in workhouse visiting, tract distribution in surrounding villages, etc.



In 1860, his father being then Vicar of Chepstow, Mr. Morgan was ordained to the curacy of that place, having come out Gospeller in his examination. He entered heartily upon the work of seeking the salvation of souls, both in house-to-house visitation and in the public ministry of the Word. Both these branches of work were blessed of God, and many in Chepstow have since testified that they were led to the Saviour through his instrumentality. The old saying that "A house-going parson makes a church-going people" was fully verified in his case, for crowds of working people were to be seen flocking to the church to hear young Mr. Morgan preach.

In 1862 he married the eldest daughter of the late Dr. C. J. B. Williams, F.R.S. (afterwards Physician Extraordinary to the Queen). Mr. and Mrs. Morgan unitedly sought to carry on the Master's work, and in this they happily continued until the husband's death. In his first incumbency, at Aldershot, Mr. Morgan became intimately associated with Mrs Daniel of the Soldiers' Mission Hall. Later on he became convinced of the great value of special missions, and determined to conduct such missions himself, if asked to do so, as far as he could be spared from the regular parochial work. Soon after, while at a large meeting of clergy, where special missions were disparaged, he stood alone in their defence, with the result that he was asked to read a paper on the subject at the next meeting. The paper which he read was afterwards published, and was a means of leading many clergymen to have missions in their parishes. Mr Morgan afterwards conducted no less than sixty-two missions in various parts of the British Isles. Mrs. Morgan generally accompanied him for the purpose of holding women's meetings. Many of these missions resulted in the ingathering of large numbers to the Church of Christ.

Divine guidance had been markedly seen in the removal from Christ Church, East Greenwich, when overwork and attacks of marsh fever had made it evident that he needed a lighter sphere of work for a time. Just then the much smaller parish of Roxeth, Harrow, was offered to him. For four years he carried on the work in this quiet sphere, getting away, however, frequently to conduct special missions. His strength was now thoroughly restored, and one night he had a dream that he was to evangelise the Welsh. He felt so persuaded that this was of God that he procured a Welsh Grammar and other books, and set to work to learn the Welsh language. Two or three months after he received a telegram offering him the living of Swansea, the Bishop of St. Davids having objected to any but a Welshman with some knowledge of Welsh being appointed He now saw the reason of his dream. In this enormous parish with 40,000 inhabitants he had full scope for his energies, and much blessing attended his evangelistic efforts.

Mr. Oscar J. Snelling, a Nonconformist pastor in Swansea, writes:—

> The remembrance of Dr. Morgan's work in this town is to some of us very precious. We think of him not so much as a Church clergyman, but as a brother beloved. During his residence here he found his friends and his fellowship amongst all the earnest followers of Christ, irrespective of denominational distinction. To me Dr. Morgan stands out as the spiritually minded servant of Christ to whom all the people of God were precious, and who left the impression upon those he came in contact with that he lived that higher life of which he often spoke.

From a photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, London, W.

The strain of eight years in this large parish was, however, telling upon his health, and still more upon that of his wife, so that in 1884 he removed to the parish of St. Mary, Leamington. During the closing years of his life Dr. Morgan was generally without any regular parochial charge, in order that he might be the more free to conduct missions, etc. He has held for short periods several Continental chaplaincies. This last winter Dr. Morgan has been engaged in preaching and conducting Bible-readings at Biarritz and Pau. Dr. Morgan's death occurred after only four days' illness. "Perfect peace through the blood of his Cross" was the happy testimony which he bore shortly before the Saviour called him home. The Roman Catholic doctor afterwards said, "Ah, you must see a Protestant to know how to die well, and Madame and the daughter show how to be brave and resigned."

The Spanish-American War.

ON leaving America I am constrained to express my conviction that the present war with Spain has not been undertaken from any desire to annex Cuba. There is no newspaper or individual or party worthy of consideration on this continent or in Europe that seriously believes anything of the kind. The suspicious destruction of the Maine may have been of some account in hastening the decision, but for years it has only been a question of time when a nation loving to be free should intervene to liberate a people, close to their own shores, groaning and writhing under an oppressive foreign Power, whose iniquity, from the days of Cortez and Pizarro and the Inquisition until now, is surely almost full.

War is always terrible, but peace may come, and often does come, by way of battle. If it would be wrong for a policeman or an unofficial crowd to stand by and see a ruffian beat a weaker man to death, it would have been wrong for the United States Government any longer to allow the hideous cruelty, even to wholesale and cold-blooded murder, of Cuba at the hands of Spain.

The way to do a thing is to do it. In spite of political diplomacy and of invested interests, when the Government at Washington declared war against this wicked oppression, no Power said her nay. There are some who think that had England, even single-handed, defended outraged Armenia against the Turkish assassin, the other Powers would not have dared to write so foul a page in history as their union to defeat such an act of righteousness and mercy.

We have a way of pinning down special passages of Scripture to the support of special views; and God's command to Noah, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed," has been taken possession of in the interest of capital punishment, and to many it contains no other teaching than that murderers must be put to death. But it means far more than this. It was the committal to man of the sword of civil government. For more than a millennium and a-half there had been no government on earth. The fallen angelic usurper had defrauded Adam of his crown, but having severed himself from God, his whole being had fallen into disorder; unable to rule himself, he had proved himself unable to rule the world, and the whole earth, filled with corruption and violence, had been swept away by the flood. Then to Noah God committed the sword of civil government.

If that law remains unabrogated, and if the powers that be bear not the sword in vain toward the individual shedder of man's blood, much more must it be put in force against a nation red-handed with centuries of human blood, not shed in battle, but in treacherous murder of native races—in the slow agonies of tortured saints in the Inquisition, in the concentration of Cubans in open-air prisons to die by famine or pestilence, or by the soldiers' guns if they attempted to escape. The United States Government in this matter is, surely, the sword of God, and so far, at least, its hands are clean of selfish purposes or lust of territorial aggrandisement.

R. Cope Morgan.

Epsom Races.

Dear Sir,—These races are again in view. May 22 to 27 will be memorable dates for our evangelists, who, reinforced by many from the London City Mission, and altogether making up an united band seventy strong, will be toiling in the Gospel day by day.

Once again we seek your readers' help in this arduous campaign. Funds are needed to pay travelling expenses, to provide 125,000 choice publications, for board and lodging and other purposes, and we shall be deeply grateful if our exhausted exchequer may be immediately and liberally replenished in view of the very urgent need. Much prayer is asked for a rich blessing, exceeding any in the past.—Yours faithfully, Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Open-air Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, London.

The London Missionary Society.

THIS great Society, now completing the third year of its second century, had a crowded and enthusiastic gathering last Wednesday week. The report—taken as read—deals at some length with the visits paid by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Messrs. W. Crossfield and Evan Spicer to the Society's stations in the Pacific; while it shows steady prosecution and consolidation of existing work. It is, however, stated that since the inauguration of the Forward Movement considerable additions have been made to the staff of missionaries, but many of the reinforcements thus despatched to the front were inadequately equipped for the service they were expected to render. Buildings, native helpers, and other necessaries were still unprovided. Moreover, the outlay incurred in sending them out, and in meeting the cost of their maintenance, had crippled the board's power to make corresponding grants to the district committees of missionaries for efficiently prosecuting and developing work already in hand. In some directions the grants had actually been reduced, in others they had been kept at the old level, notwithstanding the growth and progress of the missions. The directors felt that the time for remedying this had come. A commencement had been made during the previous year. Now they must go further. To launch out upon new ventures they saw would be rash; but they were prepared energetically to prosecute existing work, and loyally to stand by their missionaries in all reasonable requests for grants. The policy thus formulated and adopted was steadily adhered to throughout the year. The Society's finances cannot, however, be regarded as satisfactory. The direct income of the year has been £117,073 9s. 4d., while the expenditure has been £133,951 2s. 7d. Certain overpluses have been used to meet the need — and so the adverse balance (including past years) is now £8,416 12s. 3d.

Mr. EVAN SPICER, J.P., who presided, touched upon his tour in Madagascar, and proceeded to congratulate the audience on the fact that no report was to be read, the foreign secretary being asked to give an account of his recent visitation of mission stations in New Guinea, the Isles of the Pacific, Australia, Madagascar, and South Africa. For himself, although formerly intensely interested in missions, he felt that until this tour he was comparatively ignorant of the work of the L.M.S. In spite of all he had read, he had hardly realised that in Madagascar Jesus Christ has found a home in thousands of hearts; and hundreds have been content to die for Him. The results of the speaker's observations have convinced him that the Gospel and Christian education must go hand in hand, while there ought always to be a "forward movement," that is constant advance.

A warm address of welcome to the foreign secretary followed by Dr. GUINNESS ROGERS, who dwelt on the high service rendered by Mr. Wardlaw Thompson, and passed on to maintain and declare his own enthusiastic devotion to missions, as a responsibility resting directly on the churches. The time has come, he declared, to drop apologies for Christian missions. A dear grand-daughter of his, who took great interest in foreign missions, had written to James Chalmers, in New Guinea, and in reply Mr. Chalmers had told her of the opening of a new chapel there costing £250, paid for by the natives themselves. The festivities lasted ten days, and they concluded with a banquet for 1000 persons. The festivities cost the natives another £200. And yet a few years ago they were savage cannibals. While it could point to achievements like that, he declared in ringing tones, "the Missionary Society holds the field, and we will stand by it." We have in these days too much criticism. Let us do our work, and the issue is not doubtful. But the return of Mr. Thompson marks the parting of the ways. The society must go on, or it must die. Were they going to let it die? Congregationalists, he thought, had their fair share of the wealth of the country; it was not want of money, it was, rather, want of zeal and of spirituality. The foreign mission enterprise was an essential part of their Christian life. They had the same constraint laid upon them as upon the Apostle Paul—"Woe is me, if I preach not the Gospel."

Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, who was received with hearty cheers, began by recalling how Dr. Griffith John's memorable letter about the opening of Hunan to the Gospel reached him in Sydney, and stirred his whole being, yet, alas! the province is still unoccupied by the L.M.S. by reason of lack of funds. A review followed of the wonderful goodness of God in his recent journey in lands which represent the romantic side of missions. He could never forget the remarkable journey to places of the deepest interest to all students of missions—the spot where John Williams fell, where the Gospel was first spoken in New Guinea, where the martyrs were burned, or hurled over awful rocks in Madagascar, and so on. Nor was it historic interest only, rich as that was, but the wonderful evidences seen and proved of the present triumphs of the Gospel amongst heathen and savage tribes. One passage, dealing with a trip along 600 miles of New Guinea coast, from Port Moresby to the Fly River, where but lately the people were cannibals, inhabited behind the coast by mountain tribes wholly unevangelised, was full of vividity and power—its grand lesson being the urgent need for more men to reach the perishing heathen, who everywhere are pleading for teachers and preachers. He brought out emphatically that the churches in most of the isles were the direct result of the heroism of some devoted and unknown Christian islanders. One of the most encouraging things in the whole was the longing of pastors and people after a breath of the Spirit of God, and a revival of spiritual life. Alas! when Madagascar was reached joy gave place to mourning. The mission buildings were in the hands of the French soldiers or Jesuits, the churches scattered, many of the native evangelists shot or in prison as spies, the native Christians in hiding and in terror. Up to that time the French leaders were inspired with an intense anti-English feeling, which found expression in confiscation and repression. Mr. Wardlaw Thompson believed that a frank interview with General Gallieni had been the means of opening his eyes and gaining relaxation of the hard measures adopted. The change is great. The L.M.S. is not now the premier mission in Madagascar; but there is still a strong body of true and faithful men and women meeting with these new difficulties by faith in God. Yet out of all this will undoubtedly come, as in parallel cases in the past, a fresh manifestation of the power and faithfulness of God.

A presentation followed of a set of missionary volumes to Messrs. Evan Spicer and W. Crossfield, in token of love and appreciation of their valuable services to the society and to the cause of missions. These were suitably acknowledged by the recipients.

The vast empire of China—untouched by the tour on which the attention of the evening had been concentrated—was now spoken for by Rev. ARNOLD FOSTER, who believed that China is now passing through one of the most serious crises in its history. His own interest at the moment was specially directed towards Central China and the province of Hunan, on behalf of which an urgent appeal has been issued by the directors of the L.M.S. After entering at some length into the geographical and economical conditions of the province, he gave as the reason for the present urgency that Hunan is the centre of the most bitter anti-Christian feeling in China. The people are the most energetic and live people of China, and they certainly are worth winning to Christ. Of this spirit he gave some characteristic examples, showing specially that the Hunanese are brave, only it is the heroism of steady fortitude rather than fiery courage. On these facts the speaker based a ringing appeal for the new Hunan mission which the L.M.S. propose to open. The cost is supposed to be £3000, but what is that? The income of the L.M.S. would be instantly doubled were the churches fully awake to the importance of missionary work.

VILLAGE IN MADAGASCAR.

Hebrew Christian Union.

THE annual meeting of the Hebrew Christian Union was held at the Mildmay Conference Hall. The assembly represented many different nationalities and various classes of people. There were clergymen and ministers of various denominations, and representing almost all the Jewish mission, merchants, tradesmen, artisans, etc. The Union was established in succession to a Prayer Union, and aims at doing all that was effected by its predecessor, and more besides.

The President, Rev. S. T. Bachert, pointed out the necessity for such a Union, and with much earnestness appealed to the brethren for the exercise of brotherly love, sympathy, and friendship. The following also took part in the proceedings:—Colonel Morton, Revs. M. M. Ben Oliel, F. L. Denman, G. H. Händler, M. Nachim, Dr. Rosedale, C. P. Sherman, and John Wilkinson, and Messrs. M. Levy and M. Polan.

A weekly prayer-meeting in connection with this Union is being held on Thursday in George-yard Mission Hall, Whitechapel. The hon. secretary is Mr. Israel Sunlight, 135, Highbury New Park, N.

Presbyterian Foreign Missions.

AN enthusiastic audience filled the Queen's Hall on Friday evening, when the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church was held.

The Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P., who presided, recalled his early recollections of missionary meetings in Scotland, pointing out the wonderful development of and changes in the missionary movement since those days. Passing on, he showed why the present time is critical in the history of missions. Ancient religions and superstitions are breaking up, and the grand question is what is to take their place. This process is as noticeable in savage Africa as in the old civilisations of India and China. We are destroying their ancient faiths—what are we giving in their place? On this account we are imperatively called to push forward energetically our missionary work.

A statement circulated at the meeting showed the extent of the work in Amoy, Swatow, and Formosa, as well as at Singapore and Rampore Bauleah (India), with 165 stations, 153 native agents, and fifty-five European missionaries, twenty-five being lady missionaries. Ten medical mission hospitals are open, giving help and healing to some 30,000 annually. The Swatow Hospital is the largest in all China. Great blessing has been granted, many converts have been won, and a self-supporting and self-propagating church is being formed, especially in China, where the utmost effort is being made to evangelise the Chinese by Chinamen. There are now 5466 native communicants in connection with the Presbyterian mission churches.

Rev. W. Macgregor, who landed but a few days previously from Amoy, referred in touching terms to the sense of loss felt by the missionaries in hearing of the death of the late Mr. Hugh M. Matheson. Having worked in China for thirty-five years, he had seen many changes, although it would be a dream to suppose that the vast Chinese question is yet settled. The effect of the recent change on missions has been beneficial. Amongst tokens of advance, he referred to the jubilee of the Amoy Church, lately held. The recent disturbances, he said, has provided missionaries with an audience everywhere. After detailing the position of affairs in the Amoy district, the speaker closed with a glowing plea for more men and more women. The field is open, but more labourers are wanted.

Rev. James M. Macphail, M.D., of the Free Church Mission in Santalia, maintained that what the Malakoff was in the Crimean war that India is in the missionary movement—it is the key of the whole position. After a glance at the complex problems presented by the Indian people, he moved to the work of the Santal Mission among an aboriginal and non-caste tribe, presenting virgin soil to the Gospel. By incident and illustration he showed how honest, brave, and yet superstitious the Santals are. While now at home his work among the Santals is being carried on by men who but a few years ago were naked, ignorant, and savage devil-worshippers.

Rev. John C. Gibson followed with a review of recent internal changes in China, leading, on the whole, critical as some of these have been while in process, to vastly increased facilities for the publication of the Gospel. He did not, therefore, lament difficulties, for often these had proved fresh opportunities; but he did wish to maintain with all his energy that past successes only render more imperative the call to advance and extension. We are not to limit ourselves to immediate success, but to work for the future, laying the foundation of a strong, intelligent, aggressive native Church.

Mr. A. H. L. Fraser, C.S.I. (commissioner of Nagpore, India), appeared, he said, as a witness, and not as a mission worker. He had been himself twenty-six years in India, had visited every province of it, had all the time taken a warm interest in missions, is a member of a native church, sits under a native pastor, and is a member of a native kirk session, hence he knew what he was talking of when he declared that all over India missionaries are full of hope both as regards the number and character of the converts. His testimony to the reality and hopefulness of missions in India was strong and clear, all the more that it was borne by one exceptionally qualified to bear it.

Life and work in Formosa, now passed into Japanese hands, was spoken of by Rev. Duncan Ferguson, who, alas! had to tell of thousands of "head-hunting savages" in the lofty mountains of the island, who have never heard of the Gospel, but who might be reached if there were only more men. Other semi-civilised aborigines have been reached to some extent, while good work is being done among the Chinese of the island. The glory of a church is its missions; and he held that in spite of all difficulties the home churches might well praise God for the triumphs of the Gospel in Formosa and the Pescadore Islands, which have been evangelised by the Chinese Christians of Formosa.

The Spezia Mission.

IN the light of the serious condition of affairs in Italy a special interest attached to the annual meeting of the Spezia Mission recently held at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross. Mr. Eliot Howard presided, and spoke warmly of the work the Mission is accomplishing.

Mr. Heape, who has recently made a long stay in the district covered by the operations of the Mission, said that what especially struck him was the intensely spiritual character of the work. In visiting the schools he was delighted and surprised at the magnitude and thoroughness of the work being done.

Mr. Reader Harris gave a warm testimony to the personal character of Mr. and Mrs. Pullen, who are leaving for Italy. Mr. S. L. Pewtress having spoken, Mr. A. B. Reuss (who has recently returned from Spezia) gave his personal testimony to the Mission and its operations as he saw them. Referring to his departure for Italy, Mr. Pullen pleaded for sympathy, prayer, and practical help. Mrs. H. H. Pullen and Rev. D. H. Moore also spoke.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

A GOODLY assemblage of friends of the Barbican Mission to the Jews greeted Prebendary Webb-Peploe on Wednesday last, on the occasion of the first annual meeting of the Mission over which it has been his privilege to preside. The audience that gathered in the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., included representatives of various sister societies and agencies, and the proceedings were encouraging to the workers, and full of interest to the supporters of the Mission.

The abstract of report, read by the secretary, Prediger Lipshytz, referred with special satisfaction to the Bible-class held every evening in the Mission House. A devout spirit of inquiry has been manifested by the Jews attending it; and whereas it is timed to last an hour, the class has again and again been prolonged for two hours or more, in order that inquiry and discussion might proceed without interruption. In all departments, the spiritual aim of the Mission has been kept prominently to the front. The Converts' Home continues its useful work; during last year thirty-two young men passed through the Home, making a total of 183 since it was opened in 1891. The balance-sheet showed receipts amounting to £913, which amount was £116 less than the expenditure in maintaining the work. In addition to general income, £1100 had been received and promised towards providing the new Mission House, which is to be in memory of the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, first president of the Mission.

In the course of a hearty address, the Chairman spoke of the urgency of the need for a new mission centre, seeing that the lease of the present premises terminates in September next. He would not have become connected with the Mission had he not been fully satisfied with its character, and convinced that it was prepared to go forward in work among the Jews of London. It is the duty of Christians to take the Word of God to the Jews in its Gospel beauty and simplicity; therefore, he esteemed it an honour to be of any service in promoting such a mission.

Addresses followed by several friends. Rev. J. B. Barraclough (Lambeth) urged the claims of the Jews upon the prayerful sympathy of Christians, because of their place in Holy Scripture, because they are still loved by a covenant-keeping God, because from them, as concerning the flesh, Christ came. Rev. F. C. Lovely (Bexley) described the delight which he experienced one evening in attending the Mission Bible-class. He commended the method followed in the work, and insisted that the Divine blessing is assured to all work for God that is done on Scriptural lines. Rev. R. O. T. Thorpe (Anstey, Herts) spoke of movements among the Jews as signs of the times, and specially commended the purpose to associate the new Mission House with the name of Gordon Calthrop. The last speaker was Rev. T. R. Waltenberg (Manchester), who dwelt upon the need of missions to the Jews, and the many doors of opportunity that are open to the Church of Christ to engage in such work at the present time.

Country Towns Mission.

THE annual meeting of this society was held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall, Mr. W. Wainwright presiding. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, showed that the need for such work in our towns, and especially in our villages, is increasing.

Three of the missionaries of the Society gave accounts of their work in town and village, all bearing testimony to the increasing value of the main feature of the Society's work, that of house-to-house visitation, and giving interesting cases of conversion.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch spoke of the real spiritual need amongst our rural populations which such societies were helping to meet, and hoped that the attention of Christians would be increasingly drawn to what is at present a most serious outlook. The Chairman spoke of his experiences in a tour through some villages in Sussex, and said that the deadness in some was almost incredible.

Evangelical Alliance.

ABIDING memories of the late devoted A. J. Arnold, who was for many years the active and honoured general secretary of this Alliance, seemed to touch every point of last week's annual conversazione, held as it was on the familiar ground at Regent's Park College. During the half-hour devoted to social intercourse light refreshments were served; and then Lord Polwarth, president of the Alliance, took the chair for the afternoon meeting in the Library.

In making his brief review of operations during the past year, Rev. H. R. T. Jackson, acting secretary, said that sympathy with the Alliance, not only in its recent great loss but in its work, will be especially valuable to those upon whom responsibility now falls. No fresh intervention of the Alliance has been needed in any part of the world on religious grounds, and Pastor Mascher is coming out of his troubles at Dresden. The week of prayer has shown signs of growth in observance and interest, and the general meetings of the Alliance have done much in the promotion of Christian union. Branches are active, maintaining a prayerful outlook upon public and local events. A distinct revival among Armenians shows that good is coming out of evil, and the Stundist movement spreads despite continued persecution. It is very necessary that Christians who value the spirit of loving unity should rally round an Alliance which takes such high ground, in this respect, among evangelical and Protestant societies.

Mr. C. R. Hurditch moved re-election of the council and its officers. With difficulties increasing on every hand and some tendency to disunion, it is important to support an organisation broad in its sympathies and based upon the very spirit of Scripture.

As seconder of the motion (which was afterwards agreed to), Rev. A. Cavalier testified that the cause of Christian progress calls for an increased regard to Alliance principles in the foreign mission field, where it is cause of sorrow to find home divisions transplanted among the heathen.

In his address from the chair, Lord Polwarth followed other speakers in their tributes to the merits of the late lamented general secretary, who, he said, had more than fulfilled expectations entertained when he was appointed, and had evoked from all the council ever-growing esteem. Though the servant has been removed, the Master is still with us; and we should earnestly pray Him to choose and send one truly fitted for the important functions of the office. The organisation itself has been continually growing in membership, is largely acknowledged as a power for good in our own country and throughout the world, and yet there are multitudes of Christians who know nothing about it. The Alliance basis, neither latitudinarian nor ritualistic, but evangelical, forms a worthy ground of meeting for all denominations. There is ample scope for work, even were the Alliance confined to this land alone; its object being not to make Christian union but to recognise the existence thereof. May God cause the Alliance to be more and more a living power, by virtue of its connection with a risen Head.

Miss Bird (C.M.S.) spoke of Persia's spiritual need; Rev. H. Haigh advocated more Christian literature and more specific missionary training for India; and M. Paul Guignard described the encroachments of Jesuit intrigue upon public life in France. The thanks of the meeting were voted to Principal Gould for use of the college rooms.

British Jews Society.

THE fifty-fifth anniversary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall, Mr. John Cory presiding. There was a large attendance of subscribers and friends, and special hymns, written and set to music by Rev. James Mountain, were sung by the choir of Eccleston Square Church.

Rev. John Dunlop, secretary, read an abstract of the report, which was replete with encouraging facts. The Society has twenty-three missionaries, and many voluntary helpers, all engaged in spreading Gospel truth. It has mission stations in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey, schools for the young being combined with evangelistic agencies. There are also medical missions, but not so many as the committee would like to establish and maintain. Wherever the work has a footing, it is associated with Bible classes and the distribution of Scriptures and tracts in various languages. Another feature is the house-to-house effort of the workers, whereby Jews are met in their homes and helped in the name of Christ. There is no work more important than this, although nothing is left undone in the way of preaching in mission halls and conversations in restaurants. The Society has two Homes for aged Christian Israelites. Financially the year had been a fairly satisfactory one, the receipts (including a balance from the preceding year) amounting to £6598. In view, however, of urgent needs, and liabilities immediately falling due, Mr. Dunlop appealed for £2000. Several friends, including the Chairman, made gifts and promises, some of them conditional, to provoke general response on a liberal scale.

Hearty addresses, commending the work and advocating the claims of the Society, were delivered by Revs. J. B. Barraclough, C. P. Sherman, F. W. Brown, and J. Mountain, also by Mr. Robert Greer. When the meeting closed, about £400 was still wanted to complete the first £1000, a considerable proportion of which will be required to meet the personal needs of the devoted missionaries.

Church Pastoral Aid Society.

THE great Church Home Missions Society has had an encouraging series of meetings. At the public gathering Mr. J. H. Buxton presided. The report began by asking, "How are the ever-growing populations of our crowded cities to be reached and won for Christ?" This is the ever-recurring problem which claims earnest attention. The Church professes to care pastorally for all who dwell on English soil, though, too often, she leaves her children to cry for bread, in the wholly inadequate provision made for their spiritual needs. There has been no slackening in the work of the year.

The Chairman, in presenting this report, maintained that every well-manned Evangelical parish is a bulwark against Ritualism and Sacerdotalism.

The Bishop of Exeter, in a vigorous speech, said that there never were such grand openings for the spread of the Gospel. England was sending the Gospel to Moslem and heathen lands, but while some were going out as messengers of mercy, others going out in commercial capacities were bringing shame on the Christian name. What a good thing it would be if these young men and women had been led to Christ at home. How valuable might their help have been as witnesses for the everlasting Gospel. The C.M.S. and the C.P.A.S were thus very closely knit together. They did not want one less, even of the best men, to go out to the mission field, but they wanted that in every parish God would raise up from the humblest ranks men and women to serve Him. To this end he rejoiced in the work of the C.P.A.S.

The Bishop of Ripon was thankful for the help of the Society in busy towns, but he was more grateful perhaps for the help given in small and scattered parishes, which were just as difficult and heart-breaking as the large and crowded parishes. He was glad that this Society had initiated the custom of giving help to these large and scattered parishes, where the population would not look like a claim, but where the wide distribution of the population, sometimes needing a journey of twenty-two miles to visit a parishioner, rendered the work of the minister exceedingly difficult.

Other speakers included Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., Rev. W. Hodgson, of Widnes, and Rev. E. A. Stuart.

The Christian Mission, Limehouse.

THE anniversary meetings of this Mission were held last week, special services being held all day on the Sunday. On Monday evening Mr. Thomas Jefferson presided. The secretary's report showed that the work was going on vigorously and with blessed results. During the year the Gospel had been faithfully proclaimed day by day in the hall, on the street, and in the homes of the people, and many bright trophies had been won for the Master. The visitation of the district, the book and tract distributing, and the relief of the distressed poor have been diligently gone on with during the year. The superintendent of the Sunday-school reported on the work among the young. The Band of Hope was in a flourishing condition, and the Gospel services for the poor children, at which the free meals were distributed, were also well attended. The treasurer's report showed that the expenditure had exceeded the income by £3 4s. 3d. Several friends addressed the meeting.

Protestant Reformation Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held last week. Col. Sandys, M.P., presided, and urged upon his hearers the necessity of bringing their individual efforts to bear upon those with whom they came into contact. But, above all, it was necessary that Protestants should be federated together in one great powerful body, which could bring about a second Reformation.

The report presented by the secretary, Rev. L. G. A. Roberts, stated that the essential character of the work was that of a mission to Romanists, and the trained missionaries' house-to-house visitation and educational classes were an immense power for good.

Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., called particular attention to the Roman Catholic Disabilities Removal Bill, of which he was to move the rejection. In the Church of Rome not one superstition was confessed, not one massacre regretted. The present war was between light and darkness, tyranny and liberty.

Dr. Harry Guinness mentioned that a Protestant missionary had recently been imprisoned in Manila for circulating the Bible. The real character of Popery was not seen in this country, but abroad, where she had full sway. Lately travelling in South America, he had seen Popery undiluted by Protestantism. When he was in Panama he found a young Roman Catholic Irishman, from New York, who was very bitter against Protestantism, but he said to him that when he got to Panama his eyes would be opened. When they got there they found the headquarters of all the gambling of Panama in the palace of the bishop. Another thing they found in South America was lotteries for masses to be offered for the souls in purgatory. Priests there were called "holy fathers"—fathers they undoubtedly were, but certainly not holy. In South America Rome was a persecuting Church this day, as was proved by the persecution of Protestant missionaries.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., contrasted the state of England and Spain, three hundred years ago, with their condition to-day, and expressed his firm conviction that Spain's mighty empire had crumbled to pieces through her rejection of Reformation principles and acceptance of the Inquisition, which had stamped out every element of true faith, made the people slaves, both in religion and politics, and reduced Spain to what might be called a dying nation. The Anglo-Saxon race accepted the Reformation, and, as a consequence, increased in numbers and in might. Mr. Smith referred to the rise of Sacerdotalism in this country, which had spread as a blight in the National Church, remarking that it was strange the people tolerated the poison. They had to face a conflict. They must gird themselves to fight for a second Reformation.

Canon McCormick, Rev. H. J. Marston, and George Cullwick followed with vigorous speeches.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

THE ninety-first annual meeting of this Society was held in the Mansion House on Monday (May 9), under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. There was a large attendance of subscribers and friends. To provide life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum for the aged Protestant Christian poor in all parts of the United Kingdom is the primary object of the Society. Another branch of the work is the maintenance of four Homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill, in which a portion of the recipients dwell. The total number of pensioners is 1457.

The Lord Mayor, commenting upon the work of the Society, remarked that the particular charity which they were met to support dealt with one of the most difficult subjects of the social system of this country. For some time it had been suggested that a measure should be introduced into the House of Commons dealing with pensions for the aged, and he hoped they would try to induce their representatives to see that such a measure became law. It was an appalling fact that so large a proportion—twenty-five per cent. of the total population over sixty-five years of age—were being maintained by the Poor Law. Their society was providing for a class that ought not to be under the ægis of the Poor Law; it enabled them to keep the wolf from the door, and without their being compelled to become paupers for the rest of their lives. For the support of this work he pleaded most earnestly.

The Lord Bishop of Exeter remarked that they thanked God for the poor. They were his gift to his Church here below—a gift that drew out all the tenderest thoughts of sympathy and love, and enabled us by self-denial to tread in the footsteps of the Master. Dr. Monier said that whatever solution of the difficulty as to providing old age pensions might be come to, there was not very much doubt that it would do away with the necessity for such an institution as the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

Amongst the other speakers were Rev. A. J. Baxter, E. Wilmhurst, E. W. Moore, and Messrs. E. Rawlins, J. H. Tritton, W. H. Collingridge, and W. J. Parks, all of whom spoke in eulogistic terms of the excellent work that the society is carrying forward.

The Female Guardian Society.

THIS useful Women's Rescue Society held its ninety-first annual meeting on Wednesday week in the Institution Hall, Stoke Newington. It was stated that at the beginning of this century the London Female Penitentiary was founded at Pentonville, and the London Female Guardian Society, into which the work merged, was founded in 1812 for the rescue, reclamation, and protection of betrayed and fallen women.

Lord Kinnaird, president of the society, occupied the chair. A special object of the meeting was to obtain, under special circumstances, more financial support. It appears that one of the most important steps since the removal of the institution from Pentonville has been the acquisition of the freehold ground, adjoining Stamford House, upon which stands the residence known as Sidney House. This step the committee were practically compelled to take, as they found that a provisional agreement had been entered into on behalf of the Vestry of Stoke Newington for the purchase of Sidney House and grounds, with the intention of erecting thereon a dust destructor and electric light station. As the society had spent £10,000 on their property, which they considered would be ruined by the proposed undertaking, they acquired the property themselves, and they are now appealing for help to recoup the amount thus expended, which in the meantime has been borrowed by mortgage.

Lord Kinnaird, speaking of the work of this society, said religion was the only means to keep young people right. The chief end of most young persons nowadays seemed how to get out and get as much amusement as possible. As a nation we seemed to be taking more to the frivolous side than the serious. The results of the work of this society were excellent, and he urged its claims upon the public. Rev. G. B. Stephenson warmly supported the work, stating that he felt a great deal of gratitude for an institution of this class. Only Christian love could succeed with those with whom they had to deal. Revs. Joseph Cullin, Dr. John Gritton, and E. Stanley Tape also spoke heartily on behalf of the claims of the society and the good results of its training in the homes.

R.N. Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

THE warm interest now awakened in the hardy trawlers who toil in the North Sea and along our stormy coasts was once more attested by the great and enthusiastic audiences that crowded Exeter Hall last Thursday afternoon and evening to celebrate the anniversary of this Mission. A special choir, including about a hundred fishermen (whose stentorian voices rang through the hall), added a pleasing variety to the proceedings. Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal presided.

From a brief statement read by the secretary, Mr. F. H. Wood, we learned that clergymen and ministers have visited the North Sea fishing fleets during 1897 for the purpose of carrying on spiritual work the amongst men.

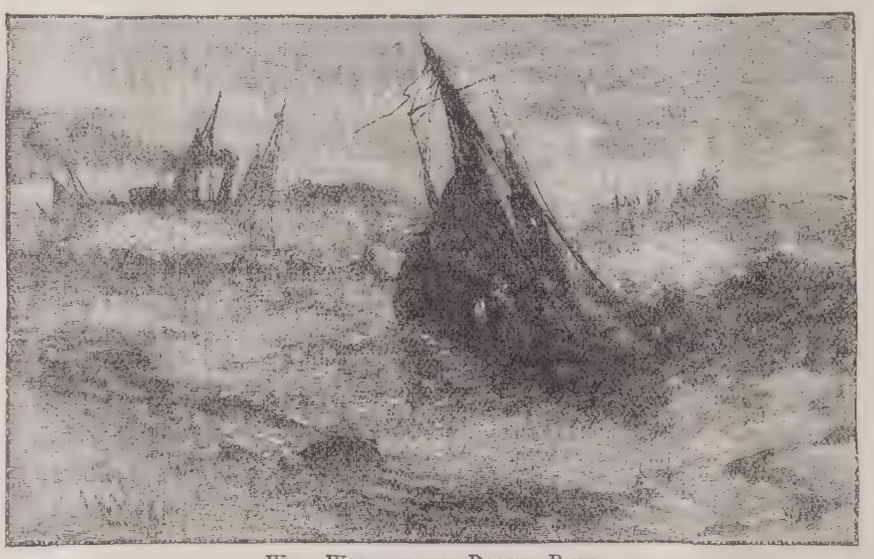
A new institute at Gorleston is being erected at a cost of £2000, consisting of a gymnasium, lecture hall, coffee-bar, and reading and recreation rooms. A new field of work has opened at Aberdeen, now an important fishing port. The Mission vessel Thomas Gray has been used by 600 fishermen weekly as a club and reading-room, and crowded meetings have been held every Sunday. The mission vessel Euston has been despatched to work amongst a fleet of trawlers on the West Coast of England, and the Sophia Wheatly was engaged for several weeks last summer in successful work amongst English and Scotch fishermen off Iceland.

The Chairman, whose long official connection with Canada and the fishing industry entitles him to speak with great weight, said that close observation of the M.D.S.F. work among Britons beyond the sea had convinced him that it is of the greatest importance and deserves the warmest support. A graphic description followed, from personal knowledge, of the state of the people in the bleak, barren, and forbidding region of Labrador, among whom—until the advent of the Mission—there were no doctors, and the poor creatures, injured or sick, had to suffer and die unhelped. So long as the M.D.S.F. continues it must in that land be a medical Mission. He commended the Society most earnestly to the sympathy and support of the public at home.

Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., who described himself as a deep-sea fisherman for fifty years, made an earnest plea on behalf of the toilers of the deep and the endeavours of the Mission to send them the Gospel and the help and healing of Christian love.

The popular and energetic superintendent, Dr. W. T. Grenfell, touched on the vast extent of the Anglo-Saxon fishing industry, and its geographical extension from the Bay of Biscay to Iceland, and from the coasts of Denmark and Norway to Labrador. The men engaged in this calling have to face untold perils and hardships, and need a God to call upon. That is the Gospel they carried to them. The urgency of the Gospel of salvation for fishermen was demonstrated by a series of telling incidents. He also dwelt earnestly on the value of the 'long shore work, and in especial the institutes, such as that at Yarmouth, which is proving the missing link between the work at sea and the men ashore. A few ringing sentences followed on the condition of the scattered fisherfolk of the Labrador coast, and their appalling need for the Gospel and for medical mission work.

Dr. F. W. Willway followed with an amusing and, at times, sadly pathetic, word-picture of life in a gale on the Labrador coast in the present missionary steamer Julia Sheridan, of nineteen tons. The people must be helped, and to help them they must be reached, and to reach them a new and staunch little steamer is needed. His plea for a new steamer was very powerful; £1500 are in hand, and only £1000 more are needed. Surely that will be promptly forthcoming.



The presentation of good conduct stripes to skippers and members of the crews of the mission vessels was made by Lady Elliott, the men being introduced by Dr. Gilbart Smith.

Rev. W. R. Mowll in an earnest address said the Mission had rightly received the title "Royal Naval," for it is on the King's business and doing the King's work. He looked on it as a mission which believes in regeneration, which is carried on in obedience to God, yielding to Him, inculcates total abstinence from strong drink, and holds that every man should live for the glory of God.

Songs and ringing testimonies followed by sturdy fishermen from Ireland, Manxland, Aberdeen, and Lowestoft. Here is one pregnant example of the witness borne: "I don't know much about the Bible, but there's a word, 'He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life.' That's enough for me. I do believe, and I have evidence that I have a life in me I never had before."

The Chairman of the M.D.S.F. Council, Mr. T. B. Miller, followed with a concise statement of the present position, aims, and needs of the Mission, showing that while pressing to the help of the neglected fisherfolk in Labrador, our own trawlers, among whom the work began, are by no means overlooked—the operations in the fleets and ports being as vigorous and earnest as ever.

Another fine meeting was held in the evening, when the story of the work was illustrated by a series of limelight pictures. Addresses were given by Messrs. T. B. Miller, Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, Drs. Grenfell and Willway, and half a dozen enthusiastic fishermen from Crookhaven, Lowestoft, Yarmouth, Folkestone, and Grimsby.

Wild Work on the Dogger Bank.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THIS society continues its useful and soul-saving work among the seamen, ample evidence being afforded at the various meetings held on Tuesday week, in connection with the anniversary, of the fruit of these efforts. As usual in past years, the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, was devoted to the interests of the Mission, brief words being spoken by Revs. W. Fuller Gooch and G. J. Hill.

In the afternoon a good meeting was held at the headquarters, St. George's-street, E., the Countess Schimmelmann being the principal speaker. Mr. Robert Miller presided, and opened with a few words on the importance of effort for the salvation of the men who go down to the sea in ships, taking his illustrations from the present war, and the heroism of the Spanish sailors in Manila Bay.

Rev. G. J. Hill (the secretary) gave a verbal statement showing how wonderfully God is blessing the whole work, not only in Ratcliff-highway, but at the branches established by the society at many ports on the British coasts. The society maintains missionaries, sailors' institutes, rests, bethels, homes, coffee bars, boats, etc., in London, and on the coasts of Sussex, Devon, Cornwall, Lancashire, Cumberland, Scotland, Isle of Man, and Ireland. Much good has been accomplished, and vast numbers of seamen and fishermen have been spiritually and temporally benefited. In order to sustain the society's present operations at least £300 a year must be added to the income.

A rousing address followed by Rev. John Wilson, who rejoiced in this soul-saving, and not merely white-washing work. We need the spirit of Christ, who went to look after the sheep until He found it; we are apt to stop short and lose patience. In illustration he gave one or two remarkable experiences in his own work at Woolwich.

The vicar of Hatcham Park, Rev. Douglas Townend, spoke of the work at Fowey, and its results in the conversion of souls to Christ. He regarded such operations as paying a debt to a class of men to whom we owe much, and as following the example of Christ, whose first call was to sailors. An earnest Bible exposition came next, by Mrs. H. W. Maynard, while Mr. W. H. Seagram bore testimony to the real work and blessing he had witnessed in the hall of the society, making special reference to the work of the Christian seamen—the Christian harbour lights—among their fellows.

The Countess Schimmelmann, in her intense and emphatic style, stirred every heart as she spoke of work among seamen, referring to herself as "the sailors' mother." Seamen like to talk of their voyages, so she would tell them that since last year she had had two shipwrecks—but no lives lost. Her smallest vessel, wholly devoted to God's work,

WENT TO THE BOTTOM.

Talking the next day to some workers—in the presence of two sceptical gentlemen—she made bold to say it was a hard blow, but God could raise it again. The sceptics laughed, so she added: "Well, I have a God who is Almighty. If He will it, He will have it up from the bottom of the sea—if He does not, I don't want it." Very well, within a week the vessel was up, and she was on board again finding nothing spoiled—drinking the coffee, eating the butter and herrings which had been at the bottom. Then she had it out with the infidel scoffers. From another instance of God's tender care the Countess drew wonderful lessons for the comfort of tried Christian workers, and the pressing home of the Gospel on the sailors present.

After a few words by Mr. John McCall, the Chairman pressed earnestly the financial need of the work, adding personal testimony as to the devoted service of Mr. and Mrs. Hill.

In the evening another meeting was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Sir George Williams in the chair, with addresses by Dr. Harry Guinness, Revs. H. Norwell, T. Sissons, Joseph Fletcher, and others.

Irish Church Missions.

THE forty-ninth annual meeting of this Society was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday last week, Canon McCormick presiding.

Rev. N. F. Duncan, M.A. (clerical secretary), read an abstract of the report for the past year, which stated that priestly dominion in Ireland is on the wane. The colporteurs had carried God's Word far and wide to country villages, small hamlets, and isolated homesteads, and in this way thousands of souls had been reached. They had sold to Roman Catholics during the year 5695 copies or portions of Holy Scripture, and 4937 other books, in addition to a sale to Protestants of 3748 books, about one-fifth of which were Scriptures. Altogether 112 fairs were visited. The itinerants estimated that they addressed some 18,000 Roman Catholics and 10,000 Protestants. During the winter months two sets of workers had itinerated with the magic lantern. In the Dublin Mission eighteen schools were under the educational care of the Society. A medical mission had been established in one of the large towns, and was proving eminently successful. Another new agency which had been adopted was that of a movable wooden hall, capable of seating three hundred people; it had been attached to the Dublin Mission with very encouraging results.

The report made an interesting reference to the departure from the Roman Communion of Rev. J. Taafe Finn, till lately Roman Catholic curate of Foxford, co. Mayo. The financial statement showed that the receipts during the year for the ordinary objects of the society had amounted to £15,101 17s. 10d., or an increase of £1587 9s. 1d. over the previous twelve months. On the other hand, the balance-sheet for the year showed that the society closed with an indebtedness to the bankers of £3000.

The Chairman remarked that he believed there was now coming over the Irish people a spirit of independence such as had never previously existed. But with that spirit of independence there was a danger of the people drifting away into infidelity, and to save them from this was an important part of the society's work. Referring to the debt of £3000, he expressed his belief that as a result of earnest prayer, that difficulty would be overcome.

Rev. THOMAS LANCASTER (Bolton) expressed his high appreciation of the work the society is carrying on; and some most interesting and encouraging incidents in connection with it were told by Rev. Philip B. Johnson (superintendent of the Dublin mission) and Mr. H. Mumford (an evangelist of the society).

Colonial Missionary Society.

THE members of this society held their annual meeting at the Memorial Hall, Mr. W. M. Hitchcock presiding. Rev. D. B. Hooke, the secretary, in the annual report, described the work done or assisted by the society in Newfoundland, British Columbia, the West Indies, South Africa, and Australia. In Johannesburg, he said, there was practically no Congregational church two years ago, and now they had nine buildings. In Rhodesia very good work was being done at Gwelo, and a beginning was to be made at Buluwayo. In Western Australia, three years ago they had four churches and four ministers; now there were eleven churches and mission halls, and ten ministers and mission agents. The society's income had grown, but there was nevertheless a deficit of £500.

Mr. Herbert Phillipps, of Adelaide, said that South Australia was very largely a Congregational colony, owing to the influential ministers sent out in early days. Their Anglican friends were making great efforts in Australia, but where they had got a foothold in the country districts the men were being alienated from public worship altogether by their ritualism. Dr. London, a coloured physician from Demerara, asked that ministers might be sent out to churches in that colony, from which the London Missionary Society had had to withdraw its help. Mr. G. Fowlds, representing the New Zealand Congregational Union, and the Rev. S. P. Sihlali, from Cape Colony, also spoke. Mr. W. Crosfield, of Liverpool, was elected chairman of the society in its now incorporated form.

Church of England Zenana Missions.

THE annual meeting of supporters of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society was held in Queen's Hall, Langham-place. The report, read by Rev. G. Tonge, told of progress in most directions, income excepted. But, important as income is, it is not everything; and the buoyant spirit of the addresses showed that a financial deficit is, after all, only a difficulty to be surmounted.

The band of missionaries in home connection was reinforced during the year by twenty-four new workers, of whom two were fully qualified lady doctors. Exclusive of five accepted candidates in different stages of their medical course, the Society has in training nineteen ladies; the greater number of whom, it is hoped, will be ready for foreign service in the autumn. During the year the expenditure amounted to £43,102, which exceeded the income by £4805.

Archdeacon SINCLAIR, who presided, spoke in terms of warm appreciation of the Society and its operations. For eighteen years it had been taking the light of the Gospel to the secluded homes of India, and it was doing a work which women alone could do. He spoke of the zenana visitation, of the normal schools, of the medical missions, and of other agencies, all of which were calculated to have a most beneficent effect upon the lives of the people. The Society began in a small way, but its progress had been well sustained, and now has seventy-two stations, with 216 missionaries in home connection and 106 in local connection, not reckoning hundreds of Bible-women and native helpers.

Miss GIVEN described a visit to Bangalore and Jahalpur, during which she saw much of the work of the devoted missionaries. Dr. ARTHUR NEVE, of the C.M.S. Mission at Kashmir, in the course of a like testimony, specially mentioned the name of Miss Hewlett. "I cannot tell you," he added, "the value of that woman to the Punjab." Dr. Neve mentioned several interesting incidents of an encouraging character. A Mohammedan priest at the hospital was observed to be weeping at the thought (as he put it) of the love and kindness of those who came from over the sea. They could understand a man working amongst them, but they could not make it out why women should thus leave their families and their friends. They were beginning to find the true answer, "The love of Christ constraineth" them.

Miss BARDSLEY, of the C.E.Z.M.S. Mohammedan Mission at Calcutta, asked earnest prayer for secret believers. At the same time, speaking of the great need, she said that there are still villages of from eight to ten miles from Calcutta where the women had never heard the name of Jesus. Canon MCCORMICK followed with a short and hearty address.

The R.T.S. Breakfast.

THE annual breakfast in connection with the foreign missionary work of the Religious Tract Society was held on Tuesday morning in the Cannon-street Hotel, the Great Hall being crowded. Mr. Evan Spicer, J.P., presided.

The first speaker was Bishop THOBURN, who devoted himself to tracing the remarkable opening up of India during the last thirty years. A quarter of a century ago literature, such as this Society sends out, could scarce find an entrance—now there is a great and growing demand. India is awakening; men are inquiring; the masses are beginning to turn with expectant eyes towards the rising sun; and the question is, Will the churches rise to their opportunities?

M. EMMANUEL SAUTTER gave cheering details of the work of the Société des Traités Religieux de Paris, describing tract work in all parts of the land, and the quiet progress of the Gospel in this way.

The Servian Minister, his Excellency CH. MIJATOVICH, followed with a thankful account of the work of the Society in the Balkan Peninsula, and particularly among the Servian people—who twenty years ago had neither a Christian book nor magazine of a popular and evangelistic kind.

Africa was represented by Rev. J. R. M. STEPHENS, who told of work among the black boys at the Stanley Falls, on the Congo; and Mr. A. B. FISHER, who gave a marvellous story of the printing press among the Bagandese. It was delightful to find these two missionaries, who entered Africa from opposite sides, and sent by different societies, were now within 200 miles of each other—that is, almost in touch—in the heart of the Dark Continent.

China was represented by Rev. THOMAS BRAMFITT (Hankow) and Rev. E. O. WILLIAMS (C.I.M.), who agreed that recent changes are only opening the way for the entrance of the Gospel. Both speakers gave strong evidence of the usefulness of Christian literature in mission work in China.

India was again recalled by Rev. I. H. HACKER, who exhibited specimens of the Tamil tracts and papers (evangelistic and temperance) which the Society enables the missionaries to print and circulate, and gave incidents showing the results of the "Present-day Tracts" and other publications among the educated Hindoos.

B.W.T.A.

THE business meetings of the National Council occupied Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week. At the first sitting Lady Henry Somerset delivered an address, dealing with her own position as president, and also conducted a memorial service for Miss Willard and others. Subsequently the Council by a very large majority requested Lady Henry Somerset to retain the presidency, and she consented, stipulating that no active work should be required of her during the year. The other officers elected were Mrs. Eva McLaren, vice-president; Miss Gorham, treasurer; Miss Agnes Slack, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, and Mrs. Osborn, hon. secretaries. Encouraging reports were presented, showing progress in all departments, including the Industrial Farm Colony at Duxhurst, to which Lady Henry Somerset stated that the past year had been fully as successful as the best friends of the institution could have anticipated. Resolutions were adopted reaffirming the demand for the direct popular veto, for Sunday closing, the repeal of grocers' licences, the care of habitual inebriates, maintaining hostility to State regulation of vice, etc.

Mr. McNeill in London.

MISSION IN SHOREDITCH.

THESE lines are written in the middle of the eight days' mission at Shoreditch. After a quarter of a century's work in Shoreditch (says a correspondent) one knows the place and the people, and how well-nigh impossible it is to move them. It is one thing to get a crowd in the Agricultural Hall, but quite another to get one in a place like Shoreditch night after night. It is close to the City, and far away from any suburb; there are no people of leisure or ease in the whole neighbourhood. The many thousands living in Bethnal Green and Shoreditch work late and get tired. In spite of all this, thousands have come to hear Mr. McNeill, and have keenly relished his living, earnest message of mercy and grace.

The Lord has been in each service; the powers of the world to come have been felt amongst the people. There has been a solemn awe and hush over the crowd, and God has seemed to be speaking to every soul. No tongue can tell what blessed results will follow these services. In this case they will be carefully gathered up and garnered in the churches round the part where the mission is being held.

THE ALBERT HALL MISSION.

As noted last week, the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington, which has, perhaps, the finest auditorium in London, has been secured for two weeks' Gospel services. The meetings will commence on Monday, June 13, and will continue each week-day afternoon and evening, Saturdays included, till June 25; the hall is not available for Sunday meetings, being otherwise engaged.

This West-end Mission will complete the series of campaigns held by Mr. McNeill in different parts of the metropolis. It will tap a part of London hitherto untouched by this special effort, and we earnestly trust it will lay a worthy top-stone on the whole. At a meeting of West-end clergy and ministers, held on Monday, much interest was expressed in the proposed meetings, and the hearty co-operation of local friends may be expected. A great deal of volunteer help will be needed, and all who can act during these two weeks, either as stewards, or singers in the choir, are invited to tender their services at once to Mr. J. H. Putterill, of Exeter Hall, Strand, who is organising the mission, and who so efficiently acted in the like capacity at the Agricultural Hall.

Dublin Medical Mission.

UNDER the authority of Luke ix. 2, this Mission was started six years ago in the poorest parish of Dublin. It has very largely developed, and has been much owned of God. Of the three doctors who are active in this merciful work, two devote their entire time to the Mission, going from room to room in some of the lowest parts of the city, visiting patients too ill to attend the dispensaries, and yet never neglecting one who requires attention. The matron and Bible-woman are much loved and respected by those with whom they come in contact; and the time of the nurse has been fully occupied in visiting from house to house, bringing the message of life and comfort to those surrounded by poverty, misery and sin.

The dispensary has been kept in full working order during the past year; and the average attendance in the mornings, when the medical work is preceded by an evangelistic service, has been maintained. Sunday night meetings and children's gatherings are also held. Many men who are at work in the daytime gladly avail themselves of the opportunity to hear the Gospel and receive treatment during the Tuesday evening attendance at the dispensary, and this boon is much valued.

It is interesting to find a poor Catholic gas labourer writing to The Irish Times testifying that but for the kindness shown to his sick wife in connection with this Mission, she would have lost her life. The hon. treasurer is Dr. Henry Bewley, 26, Lower Baggot-street. Repairs and medicines are items which involve a deficit of £125 on the year's accounts.

Requests for Prayer.

Prayer for a daughter that she may be delivered from the curse of strong drink.

For much blessing on the convention meetings of the Christian Endeavour Society to be held in Glasgow, May 28 to 31.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Child-Life in London.

II.—HOMELESS CHILDREN.

LAST month I told you about crippled children in pain and weariness; now let me tell you of other little ones who suffer much, although most of them are not lame or paralysed.

You all love your home, I am sure, it is the truest and happiest place; all you need is provided for you; and besides, you have mother, and you know the old song says that "home is where mother is." You all agree in that, don't you? But have you ever thought how many little children in this great big city have no home—not even a poor little dull room? I want to tell you of some of these I have seen.

A few of us were holding a service on Sunday evening in a common lodging-house in Spitalfields — these are strange places, perhaps some day I may tell you about them. Now just as we were singing a hymn about the loving Jesus, who should come in but a poor woman, looking very ill, and behind her were two miserable and ragged little girls and one small boy, weary with tramping the streets all day long. They were allowed to sit by the fire and warm themselves, but they had nothing to eat till one of the rough men gave them a few spoonfuls out of a mess he had in a pot. One of Miss Macpherson's ladies began to talk to the mother, and found that the father had run away three years before; that she had tried to work to keep the children, but now she was so weak—and she did look very ill—she could not work. So she lost her home, and she and her little ones were walking about homeless and hungry. I need hardly tell you that Miss Macpherson, seeing how ill the woman was, had her sent to the hospital, and took care of the children—who are now, I believe, doing well in Canada.

But some are even worse off than this. These had a mother who wanted to do her best for them. How terrible to think that there are children found who have actually been turned out of their own home, by a stepfather or stepmother, and told they were not wanted and could go and do as they liked. Yes, I have met with sad cases of this kind: homeless little ones, wandering about with nowhere to go, except to lie down under a hay waggon, archway, or wherever they can get shelter at night. What do they do for food? Some begin very young to sell matches. Some beg, when there is no policeman near. Some find bakers, coffee-houses, restaurants, or fish shops, which give away, at closing time, broken bits of food or fish which won't keep to next day. So they manage to exist: but is it not a sad, weary, hopeless life? These are the sort of children Dr. Barnardo is always watching for. Many of the boys and girls to be seen at his great show in the Royal Albert Hall were saved from a life of this kind.

This helper of the helpless tells in his Night and Day of two boys, John and Joseph, who had suffered so much from the neglect of a drunken father and mother that they became almost deaf and dumb, and when they were admitted "were more like frightened animals than human beings." With their three little sisters they used to "search the street, and court, and alley for broken fragments of food, which they greedily devoured as dogs would do."

He also tells the story of "the widow and children of a poor fellow who, nearly two years ago, committed suicide in the canal at Bow. These found themselves, after many nights' tramping about the streets, outside our night shelter in Notting Hill. It was a painful story the mother told of herself and of her children. Piteous to think that a decent creature like this should have been reduced so low, and that a sweet girl like Elsie, now in her twelfth year, should have had for all these weary days and nights only the shelter of the streets, with their evil companionship. For her I felt even more deeply than for the boys, although these were but seven and eight years of age. Yet, when the poor, broken-down woman, without shelter or friends, besought admission for her children I could do none other than comply and open my doors to give all three admission."

One night, past eleven o'clock, a policeman knocked at the door of the Boys' Home in Stepney Causeway. He had found a boy of fourteen "sleeping out," and had kindly brought him, hoping he would be received, and he was. Tom's father had died of consumption, and some time after his mother had also died. Since then he had been "picking up a living on the streets," and sleeping about in corners with other street arabs. I saw him lately, and now he is as bright and happy as any of you; but those who saw him the night the policeman fetched him to the Home tell me that he was then in a fearful state with hunger and cold and misery. He had not one friend in the world till he found kind friends at Stepney.

Now, one more pitiful story, and that must suffice for the present, lest Uncle Tom should say that I am taking too much space on his page.

Arthur is only eight, but for two years he had been tramping about the country with his mother, who lived by fruit-picking and street-singing, sleeping in common lodging-houses. She found her way to London, where she became utterly homeless and destitute, without even the means to pay for a night's shelter. Then she came to Dr. Barnardo, and sought admission for this child to save him from the streets. His father had not been heard of for five years. The poor boy was in a miserable and neglected condition when rescued.

I might give you hundreds of similar cases, but these will show you what it means to be homeless in London, and the kind of children that Miss Macpherson, Dr. Barnardo, and others are rescuing. Next month I will, perhaps, tell you of very respectable children whose parents have died, and who have thus become homeless.

Pearl Fisher.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 121 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

A—Douglas A. Adams*, Daisy Annett*, J. H. Archer, Wm. Aston*.

B—Edith M.* and Gertrude Badham, Katharine and Lilian Blackie, Elizabeth* and Janet* Black, Jas. Barker, Albert Id. Baker, Hilda Bassett, Henriette Bardot*, Edith R. Ballard*, Geo. Brand, Massy* and Couyers* Baker, Charlotte Bailey, Ethel and John Benger, Frank and Leonard Bentall, Mary Beck*, Ashley H. Bowker, Ralph Bourne, Herbert Bond, John Bott, Robt. G. and Eva* Browne, Gordon Bolton, Bertie Butler*, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Alice E. Crang*, Lily Clarke*, Lois M. Craven*, Jack J. Clarke*, Gladys Calvert, Colin Campbell*, Beatrice Cashford*, Mabel* and Isabel* Candlin, Mary* and Willie Charles, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, Walter*, Maggie*, and Jessie* Carter, Mabel Clay, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Henry J. Cheney*, Ruth Coupe*, Arthur G. Cox, Edith* and Dora* Corrie, Nina Coote*, Annie Cooper*, Marjorie Collins, Walter, Susie, and Ethel Cumbers.

D—Polognia Daws, Harold Davis*, Jas. E. Davey*, Gordon S. Duncan, Kenneth Dunbar, Rhoda B. Dunlop, Marjory* and Dorothy* Dyke.

E—Sarah Evans, Muriel Edwards*, Leonard Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Jeanne Faucon, Janet Fawkes, Marian and James Freegard, Eva Fletcher*, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Aileen*, and F. A.* Figgis, Louise Filhol*, Eva M. Fielder, Flossie, Maggie*, Agnes*, and Janetta* Fullarton.

G—Stephanie Gray, Margaret, Edith, and Stuart Gray, Albert and Maudie Gray, W. J. Greenwood, Alfred* and Frank* Gibbs, Edith Grieve, Lillie Grierson, Dorothy Grove, Thos. Groombridge*, Daisy Groves.

H—Ella Hake*, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Kitty and Bessie Hampton, Jack Harris*, Dorothy E. Harris, Harry Haybittle, Agnes W. M. Head, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Marjorie R. Hogge, Louie Hooper*, Violet A. Holford, Francie, Florence, and Stanley Hoyte, Edith and Mena Hunter, Lila R. Hughes, Dorothy Hughes-Games, May V. Harcourt and Helen Hunter, Tom M. Hunter.

J—Nellie Jelfs*, Norman* and Kate G.* Johns, Dora Joyce, H. B. Johnston, Lizzie Johnstone.

K—Tom, Willie*, Alex., A. D., and J. M.* Kay, Netta Kay, Lilian Kitson, Ruth M. and H. Lilian Knight, G. Norman King, Eileen B. Knowles, Minnie Knowlman.

L—Henry and Nessie Laing, Arthur J. Lamb, Wm. C. A. Law, Ethel Larwill, Elsie and Guinefred* Leigh, Edith and Harry Lowe, Lillian*, —, and Grahame Lloyd, Nellie Lovegrove.

M—S. E. Mackintosh*, Margaret J. Macphee, Elsie M. McPherson*, John MacMurray, Barbara and J. K. Macouchy, Florence Mackenzie, Thos. Maggie, Bella, and Abraham Mack, Gracie B. and Kathleen J. G. McClure, Dugald and R. G. MacGilp, Bruce and Harry Malaher, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Robert*, Winnie*, and Aubrey* Marriott, Cecil Mallory, Lillie Mallory, E. L. Mather, J. H. and Gladys Mather, Dora Marples, Hilda Medill, Charlotte* and Bessie H. Millar, May C. Mills, Annie E. Moule, Gwendoline L. Moir*, L. J. Morice, Ethel E. Morgan.

N—Dorothy* and Henderson* Nathan, Edie and Ernest Nash, Herbert G. Newton*, Peter*, Cissy*, and John G. Nicholson.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes, F. A. Osmond, Lottie and Harriette Orr, Katie and Sidney Oliver.

P—Jessie Palmer*, Dorothy Patten, Winnie Page*, Willie, Ada, Maggie* and Winnie* Palmer, Laura D. Percy, Mary and L. Penny, Clarice M. Peach*, Vera and May Petrides, Louie and Nelly M. Peachey, Walter C. Perryman*, J. Ernest Pearce*, Evelyn P. Pechey*, Susabel Pim, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Jessie*, Lillian* and Margaret* Pook, Rhoda Porter.*

R—Edward and Marjorie* Rainey, Phillis Riddle, Cyril and Arthur M. Roberts, Ethel M. Rogers, Elmina* and Jessie Roe, Theodore and Eileen Roberts, Mildred Robinson*, Chas. S. Rudge.*

S—Kathleen and Elsie Slack, C. D., D. D., and T. Stanier, Stuart U. Scragg, Daisy Stanger, W. Stangoe, Eric, Gladys E., Wilfred, Undine, Lewellyn, and Gwendoline Shaw, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Douglas* and Kathleen* Shepherd, Marie E. Sleigh, Agnes M. Sterry*, Janet Speed, Ivy, Rosetta,* and Muriel Sherwin, Lilian Skeats, Nellie Sery*, Florrie Smith, Kate Smith, Reginald Skinner, D. W. Sinclair, Mary C. Spiranovich, Constance* and Mildred Scott, Jessie* and Ethel Snowball, Edward Short, Emily Stuart, C. Bessie Symes, Lizzie D. Symon.

T—Winnie Taylor, Olive Trench, Nannie and Louie* Tibbits, Nettie, Kate*, and Willie* D. Thompson, Frank and Alice M. Thompson, Frank* and Herbert Tomkins, Harry Thompson, Alice Truelove*, Neville Tufnell, Jas. T. Tuff.

U.—Bessie E. Unsworth, Queenie Upton.

V.—Gertrude W. Vellacott, Elsie Vigars*, Dorothy Vigers*.

W.—May Watson, Violet Walker, J. Wm. Wheeler, Mabel Wheeler, Frank Wilson*, Chas. Williams, Edith M. and Arthur H. Williams, Ruby and Edith Wilkins, Ada Willmer, F. K. White, Arthur, Colin, and H. A. Wright, Noel Wright*, Evelyn H. Wood.

Y.—Annie Yeo, Edgar Yerbury*.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (122).

1. The Jews (John i. 19).
2. The priests and Levites (John i. 19).
3. Herod; after he had beheaded John (Matt. xiv. 2).
4. Art thou He who should come, or do we look for another? (Matt. xi. 3).
5. Behold the Lamb of God (John i. 29 and 36).
6. His disciples (Matt. xiv. 12).
7. They went and told Jesus (Matt. xiv. 12).
8. In Acts xiii. 25.
9. John probably sent his disciples to Jesus to confirm his own faith that He was the promised Messiah, which faith might have weakened during his imprisonment, and also to strengthen his disciples' belief in Christ.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A.—Ralph, Dora, and Ernest Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, A. Ross Anton, W. T. Aldous*.

B.—Florence Blackman*, Herbert Braddon*, J. and Edith Barker, Jasper Bell*, Emily Bridgewater, Daisy, May*, and Gordon Bligh, Gertrude, Beatrice, and Nellie Brookfield, Phyllis Boyd*, Lindsay Browne* Gertrude Bush.

C.—Birdie Caskey*, Eleanor Chance, J. A. Chamberlain, Ida, Mabel, Edith*, and Annie M.* Cole, Brereton* and Kathleen Code, Irene Coppard, F. B. Coleman.

D.—Dorothy and Ralph Daintree, Cecil Davis, Vera Dickinson, Nellie Dowsett, Violet Dodsworth, Ivy, Kitty, and Violet Donaldson-Selby.

F.—James and Marian G.* Freegard, J. A. and Eric A. Field, Ethel Fielder, Eva Fielder*, Constance Furlong.

G.—Bertie and Clarice* Gale, Albert and Maudie Gray, Dorothy and Gertrude Green, Emma Goodier, Mary Gover.

H.—Dorothea R. Harris, Edith Harris*, Florence Harbud*, Frances Harding, Jack* and Tom Harris, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Harry and Doris Hodgkinson, Stanley, Francie, and Florence Hoyte, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games.

J—Dora Jay, Florrie Jennings.

K—Cara, Mary, and Ethel Kestin.

L—Sidney*, May*, Henry*, and Edward Law, — Lawrence, Blanche Lindup*, Nellie* and Edith* Lockhart.

M—Margie* and Gracie* Marston, Edith Marnham, J. H. and Beryl Mather, Aubrey, Robert*, and Winnie* Marriott, Reginald Measor*, Eva Monti*, Howard*, Arthur*, and Evelyn* Moir, L. and — Morice.

N—Mary and Henry Neligan, Eleanor Noel.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Herbert Parr, Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Haden Palmer*, Alice M. Palmer*, Myrtle Perry, Rhoda Porter, Mary E. Plumb*.

R—Ernest Ross.

S—Harold Sanders, Margaret Stabb, Daisy Stanger*, Frederick Seth, Ivy, Muriel, and Rosetta Sherwin, Evelyn C. F. Smith, Florrie Smith*, Flora Simmons*, Jessie* and Ethel* Snowball, Gertrude E. Scott, Herbert Stuart*, Ronald Studd*.

T—Olive* and Violet* Tritton, Herbert Tomkins, Peveril, Herbert*, Laurence, and A. P. Turnbull, Maude* and Edith Tyson.

V—Kenneth Vining, Edwin, Dorothy, and May Vickers.

W—J. Wm. Wheeler*, Cecil, Phillis, and Noel Wright, Edie Whiting, Edith M. Williams.

Foreign list.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 114. Maria H. and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). No. 116. Daisy McArthur (S. Africa), Henry and Annie Baillie (Canada). No. 117. Dora E. Wallace (Canada).

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 123).

Say in which verses the prayers given below occur.

Find a response to each in the other chapters named, and write it out.

1. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weak (Ps. i. to vii.; response, 2 Cor. xii.).
2. O Lord, heal me, for my bones are vexed (Ps. i. to vii.; response, Ex. xv.).
3. Order my steps in thy Word (Ps. cxix.; response, Ps. xxxvii.).
4. Rejoice the soul of thy servant (Ps. lxxxvi.; response, John xvi.).
5. Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk (Ps. cxliii.; response, Ez. xxxvi.).
6. Be not far from me, for trouble is near (Ps. xxii.; response, Matt. xxviii.).

[Children under TEN do Nos. 4 and 6; under THIRTEEN Nos. 1, 4, 6.]

Personal.

Some of my young friends have kindly sent me their photographs. I am always pleased to receive them, even if only "midgets," so that I can see what my nephews and nieces are like.

Again the hon. sec. of the Bible Flower Mission sends many thanks for the boxes of flowers I have forwarded from some of my kind "nephews" and "nieces." Primroses and cowslips seem to be specially appreciated. Also many thanks to those sending blotters and pincushions for the soldiers.

Jas. Barker.—Always give your age, with your name and address, at the top of the page. Your paper would look better if you left a broad margin in which you could write the number of the answer and the reference; also leave a space between each answer. Your writing is neat.

Violet Walker.—You need not get your weekly Searcher signed, but for the Prize Competition it is absolutely necessary to do so.

Maudie N. Gray.—The quarter commenced at No. 117. Please give your age when sending in your Searcher every week.

Uncle Tom.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun.	May 22	Psa. xxvii. 1-14	Th.	May 26	Ez. xxxiv. 11-19
M.	„ 23	Ez. xxxiii. 1-11	F.	„ 27	„ xxxiv. 20-31
Tu.	„ 24	„ xxxiii. 12-20	Sat.	„ 28	„ xxxvi. 22-32
W.	„ 25	„ xxxiv. 1-10

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Pershore, May 20-25; Leicester, May 26; Nottingham, May 27-31. Mr. Tyler, Preston, Bagot, and neighbourhood, May 20-24; Beansdale, May 25; Hatton, May 26; Sharnbrook, near Bedford, May 27-June 6: Kingswood, and neighbourhood, June 11-14. Mr. Callender, Southport, to May 21; Cambridge, May 23-27; Oxford, May 28-June 1; Acton, June 10. Mr. E. Hughes, Lewisham, May 27. Mr. Hewlett, with caravan, Ifield, to May 28; Three Bridges, May 28-June 12; Crawley, June 13-27. Mr. Cutting, with caravan, Kersey, near Hadleigh, from May 6. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Colyton, Devon. Mr. Spiers, McCheyne Memorial Church, Dundee, May 20-June 3. Mr. J. H. Greene, Southhill, Bigglewade, from May 24.

Working-Girls' Saturday Afternoons.

Hon. Emily Kinnaird and Miss Morley, hon. secretaries of the London Young Women's Christian Association, write from 25, George-street, Hanover-square: "Will anyone living within easy distance of London invite a party of from twenty to 200 girls to spend a Saturday afternoon or Bank Holiday in their garden, providing tea? During the next three months we are anxious to arrange such parties for the hundreds, even thousands, of girls employed in houses of business, workrooms, factories, and laundries, to whom such a day is a pleasant break in the monotonous toil of the week. Will any one responding to this call communicate with Miss Butler, 13, Onslow-square, hon. sec. 'Saturday Afternoons in the Country'?"

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Railway Mission in India.

SCATTERED throughout Bengal there are numerous groups of Europeans and Eurasians, many of them composed of a mere handful of persons, while a few are considerable communities. Nearly all are without the public means of grace. A few of these communities are difficult of access, being off the line of railway, but for the most part it is not so. The railway employees themselves form groups at many different centres.

On entering upon a recent fortnight's mission among these people a night was first spent in the train, our destination, some 300 miles distant, being reached at 11 a.m. the next day. Here we were kindly welcomed by the station-master and his wife, and proceeded to arrange for a service to be held the next day. To the surprise of some, nine persons were present. The whole of that night was also spent in the train, and at seven the next morning we were welcomed at another railway centre. Some hours were spent in visiting, and in the afternoon almost the whole community met for worship. Then another night was spent in the train. Next day at noon we reached another railway centre. Whilst the notices were going round we ourselves went round also, and saw everyone in the place. A number of interesting interviews took place, some objections to the service were overcome and much kindness met with. A large number assembled at the hour appointed, and a hearty service was held.

We took train again, and arrived at our next halting-place at midnight. Next morning arrangements were made for a service in the evening, which was duly held and seemingly much appreciated. The next morning, Sunday, we had a quiet Communion service with our host and his wife. The following day an address was given to Bengalis. At ten p.m., away by train, and after a long night of travelling rested for a day with a friend who had kindly pressed us to do so, and then journeyed back home.

It is remarkable that with only a few hours' notice a congregation can be gathered together. Of course, it is necessary that the missioner should know his way about and the ways of the people, and also that he should have some tact, and refuse to be put off. This readiness on the part of the people to attend meetings ought to be taken more advantage of, and doubtless would be if friends who are able to do so would more worthily support the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, and so make it possible for that society to employ additional itinerating evangelists. H. Rylands Brown.

Work in Buenos Aires.

BURDENED with the desire to reach the careless multitudes of this city, now numbering over 740,000, towards the close of last year I petitioned the chief of police to be allowed to hold open-air meetings in one of the principal squares of the city. The petition was granted, and every Sunday afternoon a little company occupies the band-stand in the centre of the square, reading and expounding the Word of God, preaching the Gospel, and testifying to the saving power of Christ. It is a wonderful sight, and full of significance, to see in this Roman Catholic country hundreds of people quietly listening to the Gospel in the open air. The attention is remarkable.

We desired to follow up the work, and, through the kindness of a Christian gentleman, who offered to pay the rent for the first three months, we have opened a hall, into which the people are flocking to hear the Gospel. We have evidence that the seed is falling on good ground, and will bring forth fruit.

There are other parts of this great city where the people have no preacher of the Gospel. From North America the Alliance Mission workers are coming to South America, but this is a vast continent twice the size of Europe, and the labourers are few and quite insufficient. May each reader ponder his responsibility to do what he can to meet the need. W. Charles K. Torre.

Casilla del Correo 796, Buenos Aires.

Chinese Converts at Work.

AT the request of a Christian friend, I am glad to be able to give you a brief account of the life of the Chinese Christians in the Imperial Medical College, Tientsin. There are, among the total number of twenty-five students, eighteen Christians in the so-called heathen government in Tientsin, China.

Most of them are true, earnest followers of Christ, and hold the banner of the Cross wherever they are or before whomsoever they are brought in contact with:—

They have one object to live for, to evangelise their own country. In school they join together as a band of champions to triumphantly fight against the foes. Through their instrumentality, many souls have been brought to the Lord Jesus. Most of them are students of different schools in connection with the Chinese Government.

Unable personally to proclaim the glad tidings of joy to every sorrowful heart in their sin-cursed country, they send out substitutes to every province of China, supported with their "doing without" penny. In vacation, instead of seeking after ease and rest on the sea-shore or mountain-side, they are busily engaged in preaching Christ; some distribute the Gospel to both high and low classes, others visit the schools with the messages of salvation, and some write to their relatives and friends about Jesus, the wonderful Saviour they have found.

Let us not merely wonder, but give thanks to God for this all-sufficient grace so manifested in them, and also pray that the Lord would make them a great blessing to their country.

Tientsin. J. Wantch.

Prayer for Persia.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask for special prayer at this time for the work of God in the city of Kirman, Eastern Persia? Kirman is said to have been visited by the Apostle St. Thomas, and was the seat of an ancient bishopric. All signs of Christianity have long since disappeared.

In 1896 Bishop and Miss Stuart paid the place a short visit, and during the last twelve months Rev. H. Carless has laboured there. The C.M.S. are now strengthening the work by the appointment of a married missionary. Will your readers specially remember Kirman and seek for a great blessing on the work there, that the people may be deeply convinced that the Gospel is God's truth and God's message to themselves, and that all the workers may be mighty in the Scriptures and full of faith and the Holy Ghost?

The present state of the East calls loudly on the whole body of Christ to unite in constant and believing prayer for the blind followers of the false prophet. Thus by prayer and faith they will make the great mountain of Islam become a plain, until at last the "headstone is brought forth with shoutings, crying grace, grace, unto it."—Yours faithfully, A. R. Blackett, C.M.S.

Julfa, Ispahan, Persia.

Slavery in Egypt.

LORD CROMER has done a distinguished service to the cause of humanity in his splendid efforts on behalf of slaves in Egypt. The case is stated in a few sentences contained in a brief letter to Mr. Allen, the secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. It runs as follows:—"You may like to know that the last Slavery Convention, concluded some two years ago, is working very well. The main point was to allow freed slaves to marry, but at the same time not in appearance to make any change in the Mohammedan law, which forbids marriage without manumission by the master or mistress. We could not oblige the latter to give a freedom certificate, so we turned the difficulty by making it a criminal offence to interfere with the liberty of the subject.

"Cases of this description are rare. At the same time they occasionally occur. As a matter of fact, we have never had to bring the law into force, as the threat of prosecution has, so far, always been found sufficient to induce the owner to give the freedom certificate. This is rather what I hoped and anticipated."

The immense benefit of such a legal remedy for a disregard of the marriage tie is evident. Lord Cromer's long and persistent advocacy of a cause so humane has a rich reward in the blessing it has brought to hundreds who were unable to plead for themselves.

St. Paul's Institute, Tarsus.

THIS Institute, which is connected with the American Mission, has a course of study covering eight years, that is, four years of preparatory work and four at college. The course is essentially the same as that of the other missionary colleges in Turkey, the only difference being that circumstances compel the giving of instruction in perhaps more languages than are found in other schools—namely, in English, French, German, Turkish, Armenian, Greek, and Arabic. Work in three languages is required of each student. There are eleven competent teachers, besides tutors from among the students.

The boys number 134, of whom fifty-nine are in the college department. The students (ninety-five of them boarders) come from seven of the provinces (vilayets) of the Empire. Twenty-one of them are Greeks by birth, the rest Armenians. More than forty of them are studying for the Christian ministry. Several are out this year teaching in the cities and villages of the Mission. Every student is required to pay to the extent of his ability.

Dr. Christie, preacher of the Institute, writes:—"Our first care is for the spiritual life and the morals of our students. The Bible is a regular text-book; public worship is held twice a day; prayer meetings and Sabbath services are arranged in number and character to assist earnest souls towards a steady advance in the spiritual life. Special visitations of the Divine Spirit are prayed for and expected; no year has passed without them, and none of these revivals are without blessed and permanent influence upon the school. The one of last year was a work of great power, lifting the whole school to a higher plane of life and activity.

"The Institute is nine years old. Until four years ago it had no property of any kind. Now, by the kindness of friends—especially of Mrs. Shepard, of New York—we have three buildings and about three acres of land, situated in the southern suburbs of Tarsus, on the highest ground in the city. There are schoolrooms, recitation-rooms, kitchen and dining-room for 150 students, and sleeping places for 120, besides three rooms for the missionary and his family. We lack apparatus and books of reference. In these respects the department of astronomy is the only one properly equipped.

"Our poorer boys work in part payment of their board and tuition, and they are the very best students we have. There are over fifty of these excellent men in the school, and we need for their assistance 2000 dols. a year. Many of our boys lost fathers, brothers, uncles, and other natural protectors in the massacres, together with their little all of property. It means something to hear these Christian sufferers pray for the conversion of the murderers and robbers who have done all they could to destroy them."

Communications to Dr. Christie should be addressed to him at the British Post Office, Constantinople.

Protestants in Barcelona.

I ASK the earnest prayers of all Christian friends for poor Spain in this terrible crisis through which she is passing, and their practical sympathy for the Protestants of Spain, especially of Barcelona, who belong almost all to the working classes, among which there has been great distress for months. The Protestants are the greatest sufferers, because they are excluded from all public relief, which is administered through the priests and nuns. The price of the necessaries of life has reached an enormous height, and is still rising, so that even bread is almost beyond the reach of the poor. Speedy help is needed.

The hatred against the Americans and English is fanned by some mischievous papers who represent this war as the struggle between the Anglo-Saxon Protestant races and the Latin Roman Catholic race, and therefore the Protestants in Spain are regarded as partisans of the enemy. Christian love knows no country, but helps those who need help, and therefore your readers will strengthen the hands of our brethren in Spain and enable them to render practical help to those who are under their charge. Any gifts for Barcelona, either for the hospital or the temporary needs of the Protestants there, I will gladly forward if sent to me.

Anna von Mielecka.

Ridgemead, Englefield Green.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN ABERDEEN.

MRS. BAEYERTZ has closed a sixteen days' mission in connection with St. Clement's Free Church in this city. From the outset large audiences gathered nightly to hear the message of grace from her lips. The church, which seats about 800, was quite inadequate to accommodate the multitudes who flocked to hear the evangelist on the Sabbath day. Four of the Sabbath services were therefore held in the Music Hall, and it was filled to its utmost capacity. On week evenings the attendances were large. Two meetings were special in their character, one of them being for women and the other for men. The latter was a remarkable and deeply impressive meeting. The Bible-readings held at the Y.M.C.A., Union-street, proved in a high degree instructive and helpful to believers.

The closing day, with its three services, will long live in the memory of those present. As an example of the interest awakened, it may be stated that one member of the congregation, a dressmaker, arranged to give her girls a holiday in order that she might with them spend the day in waiting on God. The evening meeting was held in the West Free Church, which is both larger and more central than our church. It was filled by a most sympathetic and devout congregation. The subject of address was "Holiness," and all must have felt that God was speaking to us by his servant. A prayer meeting closed the mission. Such was the feeling of the vast audience that comparatively few went at the close of the address. We should say that well on to 1000 persons waited to pray and professedly to commit themselves to God in an act of surrender to his will.

The results are manifest in the enlargement of soul experienced by God's people in their deepened trust and joy, and in their closer fellowship. There have been, so far as human judgment can enable us to speak, not a few conversions. There was no night without some professions of decision. These converts must be our care. We trust and believe that further fruit shall be found even after many days. AND. D. DONALDSON, Minister.

GIPSY SMITH IN WEST BROMWICH.

A MOST interesting account, from the pen of Rev. A. W. Oakley, Baptist Minister, appears in the West Bromwich Chronicle, of the mission recently held by Gipsy Smith in the town.

The idea of a large united mission for West Bromwich was acceptable to both ministers and churches, and as Gipsy Smith had proved himself specially endowed for this work, a feeling of great satisfaction and thankfulness was expressed that we had been able to secure him.

The mission commenced in earnest on Sunday night, when the first dropping of a great shower began to fall. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday the stream of blessing continued, increasing in force and volume. Night after night the capacious building was packed from end to end. A sea of eager, expectant faces directed a steady gaze to the platform. Thirteen hundred voices rose in praise. Thirteen hundred hearts united in petition. And what of these magnificent gatherings? Have they ended where they began? No; they have borne abundant fruit. Night after night the inquiry-rooms have been filled with earnest seekers. Already up to Thursday night 453 have acknowledged the good they have received. Many there are whose names we do not know, but we are able to say that this great wave of spiritual enthusiasm will touch nearly every church, Nonconformist and Episcopal, throughout the district, and we trust it will have an abiding effect upon the life of the whole town.

MR. W. R. LANE IN HULL.

ON Sunday last, Mr. Lane closed a fifteen days' mission in Prospect-street Presbyterian Church, Hull. It was his first visit to Hull, and we are a little slow in rallying round a stranger. There were several other special services at the same time; and at the beginning the missioner's voice almost failed him through a chill. Notwithstanding these and other difficulties, it has been a memorable and blessed time.

The meetings steadily grew in attendance, in interest, in impressiveness, with a cumulative power, right on through the whole mission. From the first day to the last there was spiritual fruit reaped. Many Christians, of various denominations, received decided help towards a fuller, richer, more useful, more powerful spiritual life; many backsliders have been graciously restored; and a large number of conversions have taken place. But we are sure that the number of those who have received definite blessing far exceeds those whose names have been given. More fruit will be reaped in the immediate future.

Altogether, it has been a most blessed time, for which we give hearty thanks to God, and in connection with which we remember his servant with grateful affection, and follow him with earnest prayer. J. J. M.

PROTESTANT VAN WORK.

THE Protestant mission work in the villages of Shropshire in connection with the Bishop Hooper Protestant Van has of late been well sustained. Interesting congregations are addressed night after night. The Lord has opened up the way during the past winter months so that meetings have been held in many strange places—in barns, granaries, cart-houses, carpenters' shops, kitchens, and even in a mill-house.

It is cheering to find how willing the people are to welcome the van and to make these places comfortable for the meetings. At one place an earnest woman cleared out her cart-house and made it very comfortable, bringing large curtains out of her house and nailing them up to keep the cold out. We had splendid meetings, and the people were sorry when the meetings came to an end. At another place the carpenter of the village fitted up his workshop for meetings, and for seven nights we had seasons of blessing. Several nights the shop was packed; it held about 200 persons. A Christian farmer opened his granary for meetings; holding about 300 people. SAMUEL BRADFIELD, Church Association Evangelist.

MESSRS. WEAVER BROTHERS.

DURING the last four weeks these brethren have been conducting special missions at Wrexham and Cardiff under the auspices of the Welsh Forward Movement. Good work was done at the former place; Christians were revived, and a number professed conversion to God. The centre of operations at Cardiff was Grangetown, which is in close proximity to the great Bute Docks. Here the meetings were held in the fine new hall recently built for the Welsh Forward Movement. This bright hall, which seats over 1100, was filled on Sundays, and well attended during the week. Many professed conversion during the mission, and the churches of the district will surely receive considerable additions in consequence of the earnest ministry of our two devoted brothers.

Cardiff. J. PUGH, Superintendent.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Pastor John McCallum writes from Dunrossness, Shetland Isles, describing services held by Mr. W. E. GEIL, from America. The people were interested, the meetings well attended, and many of the unsaved were compelled to accept the Saviour.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, for many years connected with the Evangelisation Society, has returned from the United States. During his six months' stay he held services at Garfield City, New York, Washington, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and other places. In many ways God honoured and used his servant. He was privileged to address the Conferences of the Methodist Ministers in New York and the Baptist Ministers in Philadelphia, also the Conference of Coloured Ministers in the latter city.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, in May, Great Assembly Hall.
GIPSY SMITH, Deptford and Greenwich, May 14-23.
Mrs. BAEYERTZ, May, in Aberdeen; June, Clitheroe.
The WEAVER BROS., Keppoch-hill, Glasgow, to May 27.
Mr. W. R. LANE, Plymouth, 22; Bromley, 23; Brighton, June 5.
Mr. E. P. TELFORD, Wisherton, May 22; Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
Rev. W. H. AITKEN, Chumleigh, to May 23; Milborne Port, May 28-June 15.
Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, Lower Edmonton, to May 23; Wigan, June 5-9; Bristol, June 12-27.
SERGEANT PULLINGER, Welbeck-street, W., May 22; Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

May 29.

"THE LORD'S SUPPER."—Matt. xxvi. 17-30.

GOLDEN TEXT: "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come."—1 Cor. xi. 26.

FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD (17).

Feast of the Passover: No leavened bread used Unleavened bread symbol of

(1) The haste with which they had to leave Egypt. Could not wait for bread to rise.
(2) Their bondage (hence also called "bread of affliction").
(3) The purity of their nation—fermentation is putrefaction.

Preparations needed: Bread, wine, lamb and bitter herbs. Also room in which to keep the feast.

THE MAN WITH THE PITCHER (Mark)

Marks the secrecy with which all Christ's movements had to be made. This probably pre-arranged. May have been to save Himself from the Jews directly, or from Judas. His hour was at hand but was not yet come (18).

Lesson.—It is folly to rush needlessly into danger or temptation. Where duty calls we must go, but all precautions we must and ought to take.

WHEN EVEN WAS COME (20).

Picture the waiting for that eve. Christ who knew all, calm; disciples could not have been so near to Him without some vague idea that the end was approaching. Yet they quarreled who should be first (Luke). The motive may have been of the best, viz., to be near Jesus.

Lessons. — Strife and selfish aggrandisement should not enter into the holy experience of life.

The Church is a home, and all there should be equal.

THE SERVANT OF ALL IS THE GREATEST.

This was the practical parable which Jesus taught. He who was Lord of all washed his disciples' feet (John and Luke). The lesson was that he who wished to be great must not strive for high places, but become the servant of those around him. This is the high and only road to greatness.

Illustration.—Life of Mr. Gladstone, a life of service, therefore a great man.

THE WARNING TO JUDAS (21-25).

The disciples each accused himself, "Is it I?" (22). When a vague charge is made we, as a rule, suspect each other. Let each examine himself, No man knows the evil lurking in his own heart. The real culprit in this case did not confess. There might have been hope for him if he had.

At the moment of speaking Christ and Judas were partaking of something from the same dish, and Christ pointed to this as a sign of his betrayer (23).

Lesson.—It is possible to betray Christ to-day by being ashamed of Him, by telling lies to save ourselves from trouble, by selling truth for money.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

The feast was over and the burden of the Cross seemed already to weigh on the heart of Christ. He wished to tell his disciples something of his great tragedy which was so soon to take place. He blessed the bread, and brake, and said in effect: "So shall my body be broken for you. Eat ye of this—so shall ye partake of my suffering." Similarly with the wine: "As that is poured out, so shall my blood be shed.

A MEMORIAL

Christ gave to them not for once, but for all time: "Do this in remembrance of Me." It was to be a parting gift. When they looked on these emblems they were to think of Christ.

Illustration.—A mother giving to her son a Bible when he leaves home; he will treasure it all his days, as a memorial of her who gave it to him.

A PARABLE.

This service is a picture which speaks to us of Christ's death. It teaches us that we, too, must sacrifice as He did; must become partakers of his suffering. That we can only do this by spiritual communion with Him: "Eating his flesh and drinking his blood."

Teachers of the senior classes should emphasise the metaphorical and parabolic nature of this Supper, and point out the grossness of the Romanists, who try to explain the words and the feast with childish literalism.

Home for Aged and Dying.

HOW often have our best sympathies been called forth during our thirty years' labour amongst the poor, in behalf of enfeebled and aged "poor of the flock," who, having maintained a consistent and godly walk till life's closing days, having outlived lover and friend, and passed beyond the possible chance of earning even an odd shilling, bent with age and tottering with infirmities, are found in the gloaming of life's hardly-fought battle, knocking at the workhouse door. We have in mind at the moment the case of a sincere Christian who, being a widow of nearly fourscore years, laboured for her own maintenance until quite recently, avoiding the asking and accepting of charitable help. It is grievous that such aged ones should pass their closing days amid the promiscuous and often vicious company found in London workhouses, so we have for the present gladly removed poor Martha Haviland to our Lancing Homes (Convalescent Branch).

We have also another most happy follower of our Saviour for very many years, now in her seventy-fourth year, equally deserving of our confidence and help. Often has this aged one told us in her darkest hours of personal suffering, when her enfeebled health prevented her from earning even the odd shilling, she felt sure her heavenly Father would never let her go to the workhouse. But the time of trial came a few weeks since, and Mrs. Mead had to yield up her little room, and with tears she told us she could no longer sustain herself. The workhouse seemed after all within sight, but by the help of one or two specially kind friends we felt encouraged to offer temporarily, at least, an asylum at our Lancing Homes for this dear drooping and dying Christian. She knew not how to praise the Lord sufficiently for thus coming to her deliverance at the eleventh hour.

The help received in aid of the "Home" is, so far, considerably less than half the sum we require to carry out our proposal to set aside for the aged and dying the small house known as Lorne Cottage, hitherto used as a "Men's Cottage Home." Lancing is a seaside village near Worthing, and proverbially healthy and quiet. About £130 is still needed to make up the amount required (£200) to meet the first year's working expenses, for, say, five inmates at £30 each, inclusive of all outgoings, and £50 for rent and small allowance to matron.

We would make it clear that in selecting these aged friends we have necessarily to pass by many whose claims to such special consideration were not sufficiently established. Some friend may feel it "love's easy burden" to undertake the cost of keeping one of these poor and infirm ones, and so gladden their steps to the grave. Communications marked "Aged Widows' Fund" would be gratefully received.

WILLIAM CHORLEY,
Director, N.E. London Gospel Missions.
6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

The Walworth Creche.

MANY a poor slum baby finds a friend in Mrs. F. Kinghorne, of 18, Wilson-road, Camberwell, who carries on this good work in South-street, S.E. The third year has seen many tokens of Divine blessing in connection with the little institution. Among the letters of encouragement and sympathy received, was one from a navvy, who wrote: "Please accept these few stamps towards your great and noble work among the poor children."

Unexpected visits paid to the Crèche have revealed the cleanliness which prevails, and the kind care bestowed on the poor little ones by the two nurses in charge. Mothers and babies must go together, hence it is but natural to find this effort connected with Richmond-street mothers' meeting. Thus, left-off garments sent by kind friends, and which do not serve for mother, brother, or sister, come in for baby. Everything appears to be conducted on strictly economical principles, and all contributions are used solely for the benefit of the children.

Southsea.—The annual Convention here on the deepening of the spiritual life, convened by Rev. F. Baldey, is fixed for May 30 to June 3, in St. Simon's School-room, Clarendon-road. A number of well-known friends and workers are expected to give addresses. All information can be had from Rev. F. Baldey, Vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea.

THE BOOK WORLD.

The latest re-issue in the "Keswick Library" series is Need and Fulness, by Dr. Handley Moule. In the course of nine brief addresses we have in this little work much precious teaching. (6d. net. Marshall Bros.)

Many will welcome The Christian Worker's Scrap Book, designed to receive newspaper cuttings likely to "point a moral and adorn a tale in Evangelistic effort." The pages are in sections, so as to facilitate the grouping of contents, and there are index sheets at the end of the book. (Marshall Bros.)

Mr. F. F. Belsey, chairman of the Council of the Sunday School Union, has done good work in compiling The Sunday School Red Book, a manual of instruction and advice for superintendents. Many a worker among the young will read the pages with gratitude and to practical profit. (1s. Sunday School Union.)

Mr. C. H. Kelly is issuing a second series of "Helps Heavenward"; and if all the books prove as good as Rev. Thomas F. Lockyer's Saints of Christ (1s. 6d.), they will be fully worthy the noble designation. The pages are replete with good counsels, presented in a striking manner. This is a capital book for young Christians.

A useful publication in Mr. H. L. Hastings's Anti-Infidel Library is The Bible Triumphant: A Reply to an infidel work entitled "144 Self-contradictions of the Bible," by Elizabeth A. Reed. Though the book answered is no longer before the public, the same criticisms and questions are still being propounded. Therefore Mrs. Reed's pages will still serve a useful purpose. (1s. Boston, U.S.A.: H. L. Hastings; London: Marshall Bros.)

Dr. F. E. Clark, president of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, has addressed some wholesome words to his friends in The Great Secret. (1s. Sunday School Union.) The chapters show that health, beauty, happiness, friend-making, common-sense, and success are best attained and secured by communion with God, on which some thoughts are presented in answer to the question, "What is it to Practise the Presence of God?"

The history of preaching is a subject having lessons for many beside preachers; and some of those lessons are admirably pointed in The Message and the Messengers, by Rev. Fleming James, D.D., Professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Care in the Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) As a sketch of preaching and a description of varying styles, the book will be welcome to many; as an enforcement of essential conditions of sound and abiding work, it is likely to be read to practical profit by many a Christian worker.

Publications on 'the Blessed Hope" are not only numerous, but very varied in point of view and incidental character. The Coming of Christ, by J. H. Burridge, is a thoughtful little work, in its second edition. Its special features may be inferred from three questions propounded on the title-page—What is the Coming? Will all or only part be caught up? Will or will not the Church pass through the great tribulation? These are not questions that we would obtrude upon the attention of inquirers regarding God's purpose as revealed in prophecy; but some who are perplexed on these points may be helped by Mr. Burridge's pages. (1s. 6d. Glasgow: Pickering & Inglis, 73, Bothwell-street.)

Many who use the Bristol Tune Book will welcome heartily the appearance of The Bristol Chant, Anthem, and Service Book, intended to meet the need of congregations who wish to chant the Psalms and certain portions of Scripture to simple yet appropriate music. Pieces are also provided, by eminent composers, for special services such as marriages, baptisms, funerals, watch-night and chapel opening, and seasons such as Christmas and Easter. A variety of anthems are also provided. The whole forms a very complete and useful addition to the well-known and widely-used tune book. (4s. London: Novello, Ewer, & Co.; Bristol: W. C. Hemmons.) Sectional parts, chants, or anthems only are also to be had separately.

"Present Day Preachers," edited by F. A. Atkins, has already given us a volume by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse; now we have No. II. in The Burdens of Life, and other sermons. By Rev. Alfred Rowland. (3s. 6d. H. Marshall & Sons.) The chairman for the year of the Congregational Union is a popular preacher of no mean order. The sixteen sermons in the volume deal chiefly with things concerning life and walk, but four of them are devoted to such subjects as "The Drink Curse," "The Use and Abuse of Money," "The Rights of Women in the Church," and "The Pope's Supremacy." The exposition of 1 Kings vi. 7, "Building in Silence," sets forth the value of the quiet, unseen work done by many who spend their lives in modest and unknown service.

A new and interesting system of learning French is provided in a Practical French Grammar, by Messrs. A. Garnaud and W. G. Isbister. (1s. Pitman & Sons.) It certainly seem intelligible and easy—while the pronunciation is indicated by imitation. The same publishers issue L'Avare, one of Molière's comedies, by way of practice in good French reading.

Another essay at a simple mode of language tuition is made by Marlborough & Co. in a new series of the "Self-taught Library"—the first of which, French Self-taught (1s. and 1s. 6d.), will shortly be followed by German and other languages—based on, but distinct from, an earlier series of the same title. The lessons seem practical and intelligible, and the phonetic pronunciation easy to follow.

A new and original work of great utility is Cassell's Family Lawyer: A Popular Exposition of the Civil Law of England and Scotland. By a Barrister-at-Law. (10s. 6d.) The object of this large volume is to explain, in a manner so simple that everyone can understand it, the law as it affects average people in their every-day life. The six main divisions of the book will indicate its wide scope: The Law of (1) the Family Man, (2) the Householder, (3) the Business-man, (4) the Borrower and Lender, (5) as to Inheritances and Trusts, and for (6) the Citizen. The sub-sections are very numerous, covering a large area of duty and obligation, rights and privileges. As a handbook on matters that touch numerous interests—domestic and commercial, social and civil—this book will be of service to many, and its value is increased by the exhaustive index with which it is furnished.

Dr. W. T. Davison, of Handsworth College, Birmingham, has published a collection of essays on great themes, the first of the ten, The Christian Interpretation of Life, giving the title to the goodly volume. (4s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Among other subjects treated are "The Seat of Authority in Religion," "The Foundations of Christian Faith," "Christianity and Greek Thought," "The Evidential Value of Christian Experience," and "The Realisation of Christian Unity." With the exception of the first, the essays have appeared in the London Quarterly Review. They are calculated to assist thought in many readers in their present accessible form. In most cases the topics are viewed under varied aspects by different minds; but whether or not we always follow Dr. Davison, we cannot but approve his reverential mood and profound erudition as shown throughout these very stimulating studies.

HURRY UP! a stirring Gospel appeal. (6d. per doz. E. Hawkins, 19, Southfield-road, Cotham, Bristol.)

A simple booklet on the Lord's Return, which many will be glad to read and circulate, is IN A MOMENT. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

THE SURRENDER. By G. W. Butler. The Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Hackney, N.E. A useful tract for letters addressed to believers.

SOUND THE ALARM! A rousing note on the temperance question, sounded by Mr. W. Morlock, police-court missionary at Cheltenham. (1d. Harvey Bros., Cheltenham.)

THE BIBLE—NOT THE WORD OF GOD? By J. Davies-Smith. A good answer to an unbelieving question. Many will be helped by this compact little book. (1d. Alfred Holness.)

AHIMAZ. By "Syringa." (Budd and Gillatt, St. Leonards. 2d.) A booklet on the narrative of 2 Sam. xviii., containing many helpful thoughts and earnest exhortation for believers.

The author of "Soldier Tim" has narrated an incident hitherto unrecorded in the history of the Tower of London in a booklet THE LORD WILL PROVIDE (Elliot Stock). A pathetic interest breathes in the pages.

THE BEAUTIFUL PRAYER. By Stanhope Gray, music by Lennox Lindsay. (2s. Holloway, 78, New Oxford-street.) A sweet song, telling the story of conversion, set to a simple yet graceful melody. Doubtless it will be a favourite with many.

Mr. G. H. Pember's remarkable work, EARTH'S EARLIEST AGES, which has done so much to place spiritualism and theosophy in their true and ungodly light, has been translated into German by Countess L. Groeben. It is published by Friedrich, at Leipzig.

The Open-Air Mission has reissued (eighth edition, 1d.) WHAT IS "PREACHING CHRIST"? by the late Rev. A. Saphir, D.D.; also THE LORD'S WORK AT FAIRS AND RACES (second edition, 1d.). The former is timely and suggestive for all preachers, while the latter will deeply interest all who rejoice in the publication of the Gospel among the masses of the caravan.

Rev. Samuel Pearson, author of "Week-day Living" and "Scholars of Christ," is about to publish through Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. a new volume of practical sermons, entitled "Why Worship?" The book is especially addressed to the young man of the day, athlete or sportsman, who is careless about church-going, and seeks to show from various standpoints the advantages of public worship.

STUDIES IN THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS, by Principal Moule, of Cambridge, is the title of a capital booklet issued by The British College Christian Union, 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C. A preliminary section gives a scheme of study by A. H. Plumptre, M.A., late chaplain of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford. The pages are calculated to prove of great service in devotional study. (2d. each, 1s. 6d. per doz.)

EVENING COMMUNION: A Sermon, by Richard Thursfield, M.A., rector of St. Michael's-in-Bedwardine, Worcester. A reissue of a thoughtful discourse, with a prefatory letter, heartily endorsing the position maintained, by the late Bishop of Worcester, and a postscript intimating that the present Bishop of the diocese has boldly defended evening communion. (1d. Worcester: Humphreys & Co., College-street.)

Items of Interest.

Home.

Last Saturday was the third Life Boat Saturday for London. Street collections were universal.

A missionary exhibition has been opened by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at Kensington Town-hall, to extend over four days.

The price of wheat continues to increase, and the position is becoming serious. Roughly, there is only about enough wheat in hand for a month's food supply.

We are glad to learn that the State Children's Aid Society is moving to prevent children in the Sutton Poor Law Schools to beg from visitors to Epsom racecourse on Derby Day.

The curious old custom of "praying for the crops" was observed on Sunday at Hitchin. The pastoral service was an impressive one, the singing of the hymns being very hearty.

The annual exhibition of work done by students of the Borough Polytechnic was held on Saturday, and drew a large number of visitors. There is a good deal of stimulus in these exhibitions that should be encouraged in every way.—The skilled labour market monthly memorandum gives the number of unemployed at the end of April in the trade union returns as 2.9 against 2.5 per cent. in April, 1897.

The Duke of Westminster has opened on his Eaton Hall Estate an admirably equipped village institute at Aldford. A sale of work was also opened by the Duchess of Westminster to provide certain articles of furniture. The institute was a gift from his Grace.—Lord Masham has offered to give £30,000 or £40,000 for the erection of an institute on the site of his old home in Manningham Park, Bradford, which is now public property.—For the sixth time Marylebone has refused to have a free library.

The Coal Trouble.—A deputation of South Wales Members of Parliament and municipal representatives waited upon Mr. Ritchie as regards the intervention of the Board of Trade to settle the strike.—The East Durham Miners' Federation have unanimously decided that the coalowners of Durham County be requested to advance immediately miners' wages 20 per cent.—A conference of Welsh delegates has been held, which may help to end the dispute.—The coal labourers at Gibraltar who went out on strike have resumed work at increased wages to be paid in Spanish money.—A conference at Newcastle between coalowners and miners has been adjourned to see what benefit has been derived from enhanced prices.—Great distress prevails amongst Welsh miners; some at Dowlais are receiving "relief," 500 are "breaking stones."

Charitable Contributions.—100 guineas from Her Majesty to Middlesex Hospital; £20 from Duke of Cambridge to Ophthalmic Hospital; £1000 anonymously to endow a bed in St. Thomas's in memory of Charles Kingsley; 30 guineas from the Fishmongers' Company for the North-Eastern Hospital for Children; the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs ten guineas and five guineas respectively to the Church of England Young Men's Society; £500 anonymously to the Church Army; the Drapers' Company 100 guineas to Middlesex Hospital; Baroness Hirsch £100 to Queen Charlotte's Lying-in Hospital; £25 from the Goldsmiths' Company and 20 guineas from the Skinners' Company to the North London Hospital for Consumption; £80 from the King of the Hellenes, £5 5s. from Prince and Princess Charles of Denmark, £10 10s. from the Lord Mayor, to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society; £100 from Stern Bros., £100 from E. B. H., 50 guineas from G. C. Croft, and 20 guineas from the Salters' Co., for the London Hospital; £300, through Robarts and Co., to the bicentenary fund of the S.P.C.K.

SCOTLAND.

Largely attended meetings took place in Glasgow last week, in connection with the Foreign Missionary Society of the Scottish Episcopal Church.

Dr. Grenfell, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, has been addressing meetings in Scotland in connection with the medical mission work being done by the society.

The Edinburgh Deaf and Dumb Society has been instrumental during the past year in bringing help and gladness to many hearts and homes in Scotland. Special services for them are conducted every Lord's day in various large centres throughout the country.

A correspondent writes:—"A quiet but useful work has been carried on for years among the foundry boys and other workmen in one of the western districts of Glasgow by the Misses Junor. On the register of the home in Herbert-street are about sixty members of them unmarried, and all professedly converted. They support one young man at the university, give help to another, and specially care for one native worker in the mission-field. The work is unsectarian and deeply spiritual, and with the ever-changing personnel is a means of usefulness far and wide."

IRELAND.

Open-air evangelistic meetings have recently been held in Dublin and various parts of the South of Ireland.

During the past three months the agents of the Irish Colportage Association sold nearly £400 worth of books.

Rev. Wm. Beatty, of India, and Rev. Jas. Carson, of China, both Presbyterian missionaries, are now home on furlough.

The Belfast Auxiliary of the Church Missionary Society contributed last year nearly £4000 to the funds of the Society.

It is proposed to extend the work of the Federation of Evangelical Free Churches to Ireland, and meetings are about to be held in Dublin for that purpose.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Spring Conference of the north-western district was held at the Y.M.C.A., Keswick.

The first All Ireland Y.M.C.A. Conference will be held at Londonderry, from the 24th to the 26th inst.

The Marquis of Northampton has promised to open the new building of the Northampton Association in July.

The total membership of the Gloucester Association now stands at 610. This gives an increase on the year of about 300.

New rooms have been opened at 121, Duke-street, Barrow-in-Furness. An inaugural address was delivered by Ald. Wansborough.

Associations have recently been formed at Chester, Carmarthen, Aberavon, and Port Talbot—and auxiliaries at Briton Ferry and Treorkey.

The annual breakfast of the Derby Association was held on Friday morning. The Mayor presided, and expressed his hearty appreciation of the work of the local Y.M.C.A.

Mr. R. H. Fisher has just entered on the eleventh year of his special Sunday evening addresses at the North Liverpool Association. Constant testimonies are being received to the value of these services.

The annual meeting of members of the Brighton Association was held on the 11th inst., Mr. Joshua Smith occupying the chair. A most satisfactory report was presented of both the Y.M.C.A. and home departments. An address on "The Privileges and Responsibilities of Members" was given by Mr. W. Hind Smith, of Exeter Hall.

Two new secretaries for China are being sent out by the American and Canadian International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations. One (Mr. Robert R. Gailey) has been assigned to Tientsin to take up the work already organised there, in order to relieve the present secretary (Mr. D. Willard Lyon) for work in connection with the National Committee. The other (Mr. Robert E. Lewis) has been designated for Shanghai to develop a work for English-speaking Chinese, and ultimately for Chinese who do not speak English; also to co-operate as far as practicable with the existing Y.M.C.A. in that port.

On Sunday, May 8, a re-opening service was held in the building of the Mountpottinger (Belfast) Y.M.C.A., which has been closed during the last two months for considerable alterations and extensions absolutely necessary in order to cope with the large and increasing membership. Rev. James Cregan gave an address to an overflowing audience. On Sunday, 15th inst., the services were conducted by Rev. Robert Duff, M.A., of Mountpottinger Church. At the Central Belfast Association the successful Sabbath afternoon Gospel services, conducted throughout the winter, were brought to a close on the 8th inst. Mr. W. S. Mollan presided, and an address was given by Mr. D. A. Black.

Foreign.

The Banque de Paris has concluded a loan of 10,000,000 frs. to Spain.

Lord Aberdeen's resignation as Governor-General of Canada has been accepted by Her Majesty.

A water famine is threatened at Key West. Water is now fetching ten cents a gallon.—The American press is united in declaring that America should hold the Philippines as a colony.

Mr. Chamberlain's recent speech is being severely criticised in some Continental cities, especially Paris, Berlin, and Madrid. In New York it is received with a chorus of warm friendliness.

Greece.—A large number of Thessalian refugees are leaving Athens.—The Greek and foreign military delegates for the delimitation of the frontier have left Volo.—The evacuation of Thessaly by the Turks has begun. Twelve steamers carrying troops have left Volo.

Austria-Hungary.—The Government demand for 30,000,000fl. for small arms and fortifications is very unpopular, and is tending to dissatisfaction with the Triple Alliance.

Holland.—M. Bahlmann, one of the leading Catholic members of the Second Chamber, swooned while addressing the Assembly, and died in a few minutes on the floor of the House.

Turkey.—The Russian Embassy has presented a note to the Porte demanding a settlement of the arrears of the war indemnity.—Reports from Constantinople state that Turkey agrees to the arrangements proposed by the Powers for the evacuation of Thessaly and payment of the Greek war indemnity.

Russia.—Newspaper reports of the famine in the south-east and east of Russia appear to have been somewhat exaggerated, although terrible suffering and loss have occurred. The distribution of money and wheat has afforded some relief.—A telegram from St. Petersburg asserts that England has suggested the expediency of making Europe independent of America for grain supplies by means of State granaries. This has excited considerable atrention in Berlin.

Africa.—The new Indian regiment raised for service in Uganda has embarked from Bombay.—Three chiefs have been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the rising in Sierra Leone.—The swearing-in of President Kruger in the Transvaal attracted large crowds to Pretoria. The President addressed the Volksraad and a few invited guests on the balcony of the Government buildings.—Colonel Woodgate is marching against the rebels in Kwalu (Sierra Leone), after successful operations in the Karene district.—A French Soudanese Mission has been attacked and disarmed. A punitive force has been despatched from the Niger.—Fighting continues in Sierra Leone.—The Niger negotiations are proceeding slowly.—The French have evacuated Kishi, in the Lagos hinterland, and the British flag has been hoisted there.

The Far East.—France claims, as compensation for the murder of a French missionary, an indemnity of £4000, the erection of a memorial church and a railway concession to the Kwang-tung coast.—Serious riots have occurred in the province of Hu-pei; the Custom House and the British Consulate are destroyed.—Infantry regiments are to be despatched to Wei-hai-wei about the end of the year. The Russian Consul at Tien-Tsin has notified his colleagues that foreigners will not be allowed to land at Port Arthur or Ta-lien-wan without passports vised by him.—The Japanese War Office has provided for the withdrawal of the troops (Japanese) from Wei-hai-wei within four weeks.—It was the Japanese, not the British Consulate, which was destroyed in the riots at Sha-shi.—Russia and Japan have signed a protocol undertaking definitely to recognise the independence of Korea.—It is reported that Japan is about to raise a foreign loan of £15,000,000.

The American-Spanish War.—The latest and most important news is contained in a telegram from Madrid to the effect that Señor Sagasta and the Spanish Cabinet have resigned. In the face of prevalent public feeling in Spain this step seems to have been inevitable. — The "hide-and-seek" manœuvres of the Spanish fleet have completely deceived the Americans, having been heard of off Martinique, then at Curaçoa, but its subsequent whereabouts are now uncertain. — The transport Gussie has had to return to Key West, not having been able to land supplies for the Cuban insurgents. Cables have been cut at Cienfuegos and other places.—From Manila news comes of great scarcity of provisions. A Spanish gunboat which entered the harbour in ignorance of the result of the battle of Cavite was compelled to surrender.—Orders have been given for 30,000 men to be got ready at Tampa for the invasion of Cuba.

Italy.—Rioting and bloodshed have taken place in Milan and Naples, where a state of siege was proclaimed, and in Tuscany, etc.—Great anxiety prevails in political circles.—Telegraphic communication is restricted by censorship. But it is believed that recent riots bear a political character, organised by the associations of navvies and railway employés, in which there is a strong Socialist element.—Fresh riots are reported from Lombardy.—All the Socialist editors in Italy have been arrested.—"Rampant anarchy and armed rebellion" described the condition for three days. Half of Italy is under the jurisdiction of generals entrusted with extraordinary civil and military powers.—The Italian Chambers have been prorogued sine die. The Government is calling out reserves and taking further precautionary measures. Complete tranquillity is said to prevail at Milan. The Swiss Government promises to put down the agitation among the Italian workmen.—Milan is reported quiet again. Courts-martial are dealing with the captured rebels. 700 prisoners have been taken, including sixty-four monks.

Obituary.

DR. FRANCIS CHARLES BRETT.

This devoted Christian medical man recently passed away at Bridlington, Yorkshire, as the result of a carriage accident when visiting his patients. He had practised for thirty years in Bridlington, and had endeared himself to all by his bright and genial manner, his large-hearted liberality and ready sympathy, his accessibility, striking unselfishness, unsparing self-denial, and, above all, his earnestness and singleness of heart as a Christian. In addition to helping in other forms of Christian and soul-saving work, for the last fifteen years, as far as his professional duties allowed, he had visited on Sunday evenings the lodging-houses frequented by tramps, and there prayed, sang, and spoke to this friendless and neglected class.

Personalia.

Rev. David Baron has now returned to London from his lengthened tour on the Continent and the Holy Land. Next week we hope to give some notes from his letters.

Mrs. G. E. Ardill, of Sydney, will be glad to conduct Gospel temperance meetings in Great Britain during the next three months. Letters can be addressed to her at the office of the CHRISTIAN.

Mr. James Seth, Sage Professor of Moral Philosophy in Cornell University, has been appointed to the chair of Moral Philosophy, vacant by the death of Prof. H. Calderwood. Mr. Seth has a distinguished career.

Mr. Newton Jones, evangelist, who has been visiting New Zealand for the sake of his health, was to leave that country for England on April 14. He has benefited greatly by the change, and hopes to resume Gospel work on his return.

Rev. Henry Arnold Thomas, M.A., who has been enthusiastically elected as chairman for 1899 of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, is the son of Rev. David Thomas, so long minister of Highbury Chapel, Bristol, who in 1865 filled the chair of the Union. He is a man of great spiritual force. He is pre-eminently a true man, whom his friends trust to the uttermost. His sermons are described by one who knows him well as "full of spiritual insight, rich in thought, expressed in chastened and forcible style, with a glow of holy enthusiasm which moves the hearts of his hearers."

Employment of Epileptics. — The colony founded at Chalfont St. Peter, Bucks, continues to grow, and the experiment of dealing with epileptics in this way is proving a great success. The "Passmore Edwards Home" for men was the first opened, and then the Eleanor Home for women was erected. Last week, in the presence of a large company, the Duchess of Marlborough opened "Victoria House," another home for men; the Duke of Marlborough laid the memorial-stone of a home for boys; and Mrs. Passmore Edwards laid the foundation-stone of a home for girls. The donor of these three new homes is Mr. Passmore Edwards, who also gave the land. A meeting was held in a marquee, at which Mr. E. Montefiore Micholls stated that through the liberality of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Greene the committee would shortly be able to begin to provide another men's home, and a small hospital or sanatorium would be provided by Mrs. Dearmer. Another home would also be started, and other needful developments would be carried out as soon as the funds permitted.

Young Women's Christian Association.— At the headquarters of this association, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., on Friday afternoon, the Duchess of Portland formally opened the new Morley Hall and gymnasium, presented to the association by Mr. Howard Morley as a Jubilee gift in memory of his father, the late Mr. Samuel Morley. The new building has been constructed and equipped at a cost of about £400. Viscount Portman (chairman) said the opening of the hall was the completion of a scheme for acquiring freehold premises as a centre for the association, and girls all over the world might look to those premises as a home. The building would form a centre for improvement and recreation for hard-working girls in the district, and classes of all kinds would be held there. Addresses were delivered by Miss H. S. Pollock, Mr. W. T. Paton, and Rev. F. B. Meyer, and at the close the Duchess of Portland formally declared the new building to be open. Donations amounting to about £1000—including £100 from the chairman—were announced in connection with an appeal for £2000, the deficit on the working of the association during the past year.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Bishop Moule of Mid-China has completed forty years of missionary labour. He lately celebrated his seventieth birthday.

£1600 have been contributed towards the building of a vicarage at Christ Church, Carnforth, and the enlargement of the church.

A sale of work on behalf of the South American Society will be held next Thursday at the offices of the Society, Clifford's-inn, Fleet-street.

The Bishop of Liverpool, who entered last week upon his eighty-third year, is the oldest Bishop on the English Bench, and is still vigorous.

It has been decided that Bishop Selwyn's work in Melanesia should be commemorated by the erection of a church at St. Luke's, Siota, in the Solomon Islands.

The Southport Clerical and Lay Evangelical Conference will take place on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 24th and 25th inst. The programme is full of promise, and the list of speakers justifies expectation of a successful gathering.

The "Community of the Resurrection," which consists of eleven clergymen, of whom Canon Gore is the head, have now taken up their residence at Hall Croft, Mirfield. The ceremony of "blessing the house" was performed by the Bishop of Wakefield.

A movement has been started for the erection of a memorial to Bishop Butler in Stanhope, where he was rector from 1725 till 1740. It was at Stanhope that the famous "Analogy" was written, but there are no traces of Butler's association with the town except his handwriting in the parish registers and a row of lime trees which he planted in the street.

At a recent sitting in the Upper House of Convocation the Bishop of London presented a petition from Mr. Kensit calling attention to the ritualistic practices in the Church of England. The Archbishop of Canterbury felt that there was real reason why the bishops should take counsel together on the matter. The Bishop of Worcester has declared that the time had come for the Church of England to show firmly her true Protestant character.

Congregational.

Beeth Chapel has celebrated its centenary.

Rev. D. C. Tincker has accepted a call to Wigan.

A new chapel is to be built on Princes Avenue, Hull.

Rev. M. F. Peterson has entered on his new charge at Nottingham.

Mr. C. Evan Evans, of Hackney College, has received a call to Harringay Park, N.

Rev. J. H. Harley, late of St. Neots, has been recognised in his new pastorate at Bedford Chapel, Camden Town.

It is proposed to amalgamate Victoria Park Tabernacle and Trinity Chapel, Mile End New Town, under the pastorate of Rev. Dolfan Lewis.

Rev. F. Hastings will represent the English Free Churches at the meetings to be held at the end of the month to celebrate the tercentenary of the Edict of Nantes.

At last week's meetings at Swindon of the Wilts and East Somerset Association Rev. H. Arnold Thomas preached, and addresses were delivered by Rev. S. G. Matthews on "Church Extension" and Rev. A. T. Pearse on "Free Church Councils."

Baptist.

Rev. J. S. Geale has entered on his new charge at Herne Bay.

Mr. S. Hassall has been ordained at Sussex-street, Brighton.

Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Luton, has accepted a call to Westbourne.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon has been recruiting for a few days at Tynemouth.

The centenary of Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, is being celebrated this week.

Professor J. T. Marshall, who has been elected president of Manchester College, is distinguished for scholarship in Aramaic, Hebrew, and Greek. The post of classical tutor, vacant by the promotion of Prof. Marshall, has been offered to Rev. H. Ellis, of Farsley.

Rev. J. Lawson Forfeitt and Mrs. Forfeitt have sailed for the Congo. They will proceed to Matadi, about 100 miles from the mouth of the river, and the starting-point of the new Congo railway, to inquire and report as to the advantage of making this place the base of the mission operations.

The oldest Baptist minister, Rev. John Aldis, celebrated his ninetieth birthday on Wednesday last week. He was born at Colchester on May 11, 1808, and is now living in retirement at Beckington, near Bath. Mr. Aldis came to Maze Pond Chapel, London, in 1838, and while holding the pastorate he became one of the best-known of the Metropolitan Baptist ministers.

Methodist.

Rev. F. W. Moon, who has laboured twenty years in the Bahamas, is coming home on furlough.

The Methodist Evangelisation Society is anxious to introduce Gospel cars into France, for village work.

Interesting services have been held in connection with the Bristol (Redland) Circuit Mission anniversary.

The annual meeting on behalf of Wesleyan Home Missions, held at Wesley's Chapel, was largely attended.

The Thanksgiving Fund of the Primitive Methodist Connexion has reached £46,000. It is about to be closed.

Rev. Wm. Arthur, M.A. (the Nestor of the English Wesleyan Church), will this year reach his diamond jubilee.

Mr. Thomas Moremon, the blind evangelist, has conducted two successful missions at Stithians and Tolskithy, Redruth circuit.

Another Gospel car has been purchased by the Wesleyan Home Mission department, making nine in all. It is intended to increase the number to twelve.

The Central Methodist Mission in Sydney, New South Wales, which is worked on the lines of the great British town missions, reports for the past year vigorous advance and many indications of blessing.

In connection with the Wesleyan Mission, Sudbury, an active forward movement is being initiated. Sudbury is a town of considerable commercial and industrial importance in Suffolk, with a population of 7000. The Wesleyan Methodist Mission was started in 1894, in a district entirely untouched by Methodism. A suitable hall was engaged, and under the care of an evangelist the cause has prospered.

Presbyterian.

The Presbyterians are commencing services at Bexhill-on-Sea.

Rev. J. M. Ferguson, formerly of Woolwich, has accepted a call to Southend.

Rev. Duncan Macrae, of Wood Green, is now Moderator of the London Presbytery, North.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Herdman, who for thirty-two years has been minister at Melrose, has resigned his charge.

Rev. David Munro is retiring from the pastorate of Coldingham, Berwick, at the ripe age of eighty-one.

A conference has been held on "Territorial evangelisation in London, with special reference to the changing condition and social needs of populous neighbourhoods." It was opened by Rev. D. McQueen. Revs. Z. B. Woffendale A. Ramsay, W. Harris, Dr. Gibson, S. Hester, D. Fotheringham, and Messrs. Robert Whyte and R. T. Turnbull took part in the discussion. Some speakers favoured a Presbyterian "Settlement" for East London.

Fallen Asleep.

At Whitkirk, Rev. G. M. PLATT, vicar of the parish.—At Orpington, Mr. JAMES BIGGS, formerly a well-known worker at Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel; one of his sons died as a missionary on the Congo.—At Farnham, aged forty-three, Mr. WILLIAM NEAL, a valued Bible-class leader and Christian worker, and a successful local journalist.—At Knotty Ash, Rev. J. W. WALKER, aged sixty-five, a useful and beloved mission pastor.—At Short Heath, on 8th inst., Mrs. SYLVANUS SQUIRE, a valued worker, who passed away while conducting a prayer meeting.—At Nottingham, Mr. J. CRIPWELL, an acceptable local preacher.—At Tettenhall, Rev. DANIEL GRIFFITHS, aged ninety-one, for many years a faithful village pastor.—At Lancaster, on 8th inst., Mr. ISAAC SMITH, a devoted S.S. superintendent and temperance worker.—At Northampton, Mr. HENRY CHOWN, aged sixty-six, a son of the famous Rev. J. P. Chown, and well known as a leader among Baptists.—At Headingley, Rev. GEORGE ROBINSON, one of the leading ministers in Free Methodism.—At Port Glasgow, Baillie JOHN ROSS, aged sixty-five, an earnest and devoted Christian worker.—At Ligoneil, Mrs. STOREY, widow of Rev. Wilson J. Storey, Methodist minister, aged eighty years.—At Dublin, Dr. SAMUEL GORDON, founder of the Gordon Home, and one of the founders of the Meath Industrial School.

Appeals.

SOLDIERS IN CAMP.—The 3rd and 4th Battalions Yorkshire Regiment will be in camp at Redcar from 30th May to 9th July, and I should like to have a tent in which to hold meetings, as well as to meet and talk with the men; also, where men so inclined could come during the day to read, write, etc. I would also like to get literature, etc., and would be glad of any help in the direction of attaining these objects. Address, Captain J. G. DOWNES, The Barracks, Richmond, Yorks.

MAY MEETINGS, 1898.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.		Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
MAY.
Thurs. 19	11 a.m.	Church of England Zenana Missions ..	s	St. James's, Paddington	Bishop Sodor and Man
,,	11, 3, 7.30	Women's Protestant Union.....	c	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Various.
,,	11.30	Moravian Missions	s	Portman Chapel	Rev. Hubert Brooke.
,,	3.30	Foreign Aid Society	m	38, Queen's-gate, S.W.	Major Money-Kyrle.
,,	5 p.m.	Field Lane Institutions	m	St. Martin's Town Hall.....	Marquis Northampton.
,,	4.30	Strangers' Friend Society.....	m	52, Finsbury-pavement	Mr. J. H. Anderson.
,,	6 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	c	186, Aldersgate-street	,, ,,
Fri. 20	11, 3, and 7.30	Women's Protestant Union.....	c	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Various.
,,	6.30	Ch. of Eng. Sunday School Institute ..	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Ripon.
Mon. 23	6.30	Friends' Foreign Missions	m	12, Bishopsgate-street Without	Mr. George Cadbury.
,,	7.30	Met. Tab. Colportage Association.....	m	The Stockwell Orphanage.....	Pastor T. Spurgeon.
Tues. 24	3.30	Friendless and Fallen	m	Exeter Hall, Lower.....	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
,,	7 p.m.	The Bible League	m	Mildmay Conference Hall	Preb. Webb-Peploe.
,,	7.30	The Y.M.C.A.....	m	Exeter Hall	Sir George Williams.
Wed. 25	4 p.m.	,, ,, ...	m	Mansion House.....	The Lord Mayor.
,,	11 a.m.	Ch. Eng. Waifs and Strays Society	m	Chapter House, St. Paul's	Lt.-Gen. R. W. Lowry.
,,	2.30	Christian Evidence Society	m	St. Martin's Town Hall.	Bishop of Stepney.
,,	3 p.m.	China Inland Mission	m	Mildmay Conference Hall	Sir George Williams
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ...	m	,, ,, ,, ...	Mr. Theo. Howard.
,,	6.30	Friends' Temperance Union	m	Devonshire House	Mr. Walter Robson.
Thurs. 26	10 a.m.	Infant Orphan Asylum	m	Cannon-street Hotel	Mr. John Deacon.
,,	3 p.m.	National Refuges	m	Exeter Hall.....	Earl of Jersey.
,,	7 p.m.	Christian Community.....	m	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Sir George Williams.
,,	7.30	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.....	s	St. Mary Aldermary	Rev. James Ormiston.
,,	7.30	National Protestant Church Union	m	St. Martin's Town Hall
,,	7.30	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	s	Park Chapel, Chelsea.....	Rev. W. R. Mowll.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, May 16, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

	£	s.	d.
North Africa Mission—Faith, South Devon, 5s.; L. M. H., £1; (Mr. Marshall's Book Fund) Faith, S. Devon, 5s.	1	10	0
Protestant Priests in France—M. M. M., £2 10s.; (Rev. A. Monteagan, 7s. 6d.	2	17	6
Women's Armenian Relief Fund—Leslie	1	0	0
Friends of Armenia (Mr. Crosfield)—E. E. D.	0	2	6
China Inland Mission—L. M. K., £1; J. H. M., £2	3	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India—L. M. H.	1	0	0
Moravian Missions—L. M. H., £1; D. St. A., £1	2	0	0
Rev. K. Behesnilian (Armenian Widows and Orphans)—B. S., £1; Faith, 5s.; Three Children (Sweet Money), 6d.; A Cheltenham Friend, £5; Miss M. S., 10s.; Evangelistic and Rescue Work) Manchester and Salford Mission, £2 2s.; Zion Chapel, Manchester, £3 10s. 6d.	12	8	0
Ch. Missionary Soc.—E. D., Sidcup, 5s.; G. D., £3	3	5	0
Cuban Sufferers' Relief—Miss P., senior	0	7	0
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—Miss P., senior	0	7	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—M. K. C. B., 5s.; A Widow's Mite, 5s.; Faith, S. Devon, 5s.; E. R. H., £2; T. D. H., 2s. 6d.; R. U., 10s.; J. H. M., £5; A. W. R., 2s. 6d.	8	10	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—A Widow's Mite, 5s.; R. U., 10s.; A. S. G., 5s.; J. H. M., £2; A Thankoffering, 5s.; For His Dear Sake, 2s.; (Day in Country) E. R. H., 2s. 6d.; (Holiday Fund) L. L., 5s.	3	14	6
Bristol Orphan Houses—Faith, S. Devon, 5s.; E.D., Sidcup, 5s.	0	10	0
Dr. Stephenson's Childrens' Homes—A Wesleyan	1	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—E. A. N., 5s.; D. St. A., £1; A. S. G., 5s.; J. H. M., £5; E. D., Sidcup, 5s. (Medical Mission) A Wesleyan, £1	7	15	0
Glasgow City Mission—S.	1	0	0
Dublin Deaf and Dumb Assoc.—M. S., £1; M., £1 1s.	2	1	0
Royal N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—L. M. H., £1; R. U., 10s.; A. S. G., 5s.	1	15	0
Friendless and Fallen—S. H.	0	5	0
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—J. H. M., £3; (Emigration) H. R., £1	4	0	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—E.	1	0	0
Midday Institutions (King's Daughters)—R. U.	0	10	0
Church of England Temperance Society—R. U.	0	10	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—A. S. G.	0	5	0
Late Mrs. Hutton's Crèche—J. H. M.	2	0	0
Tower Hamlets Mission—J. H. M.	3	0	0
London Bible and Domestic Mission—J. H. M.	3	0	0
Mrs. Meredith's Institutions (Prison)—J. H. M., £1 10s.; (Princess Mary Village Homes) J. H. M., £1 10s.	3	0	0
Mrs. Eardley's Homes, Bow—J. H. M.	2	0	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—J. H. M.	1	0	0
Met. Tabernacle Rebuilding Fund—E. D., Sidcup, 5s.; F. A. E., 5s.	0	10	0
Northern Police Convalescent Home, Harrogate—F.C.	0	5	0
Flower Girls' Mission—Miss P., sen., 7s.; For His Dear Sake, 1s.	0	8	0
Late Miss Daniells' Soldiers' Homes—O. T.	1	0	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—J. M.	0	10	0
Total	£77	5	6

[ADVERTISEMENTS.]

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—Sympathy, 7s. 6d.

Mr. Fegan's Homes.—A Grateful Mother, £1.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.—One who loves the country, 10/-.

Missionaries' Literature Association.—Gal. vi. 10, parcel of magazines, cards, etc.

The London Samaritan Society and Convalescent Home and Hospital.—C. A. C., £1 1s.; O., 5s.; S., 1s. 6d.; J., 10s.; A. B. W., £2 2s.; M. P., 4s. 10d.; A. T. K., £1 1s.

Notices.

Communications Received with thanks.—J.B. J.S. C.B.H. B.B. A.G. H.C.W. J.M. E.O.W. J.O. H.H.P. F.H.G.G. J.A.O.C. F.N. G.R.S. M.A. J.R.M. J.McC. S.L. P.P. S.C. J.K. J.F.M. W.W. A.B. S.W. W.C.M. T.C. J.T. A.B.B. C.E.P. J.M. J.B.S. R.H. W.A.I M.S.B. J.M.M. E.S.G. W.P. C.G.M. G.M.H. G.S. G.H.M. J.V.S. J.R.W. W.B.D. S.S.P. M.H.S. W.G.T. A.D.D. S.G.D. F.B. T.H.A. W.H.G. R.B. J.W.T. W.W.C. T.J.C. W.W.W. J.O.H. W.C. E.P. F.B. B.N. R.M.L. A.G.H. M.E.S. J.J.M. J.P. W.J.T. C.G. H.W.

Applicants for Tracts.—Miss Somerville, 3, Graces-road, Camberwell, S.E.; Miss Cook, 3, Denmark-road, Coldhabour-lane, Camberwell, S.E.; George Lyons, 76, Collier-street, Pentonville, N.; Miss Mann, 14, Cloudesley-square, Liverpool-road, N.; L. C. Howard, 17, Hale-street, Lenton-street, Islington, N.; Mrs. Stephenson, 50, Great Russell-street, Birmingham; Mrs. Powley, 86, Nursery-road, Hockley, Birmingham; Ralph Hunter, 74, Withnell-road, South Shore, Blackpool; John Down, Lane Cottage, Chase-road, Southgate, N.; Arthur West, 4, Mill Cottages, Chelmsford-road, Southgate, N.;—Hill, Chase Side, near Chelmsford-road, Southgate, N.; Miss Helen Davidson, "Cavers," Palmer's Green, N. (children's); George Needham, 65, Rochdale-road, Manchester; James Dawson, 14, Cranbrook-street, Stacksteads, near Manchester; Arthur [illegible], Front-street, Nawton, R.S.O., Yorkshire; H. Smith, Town-grove, Cheetham, Manchester; Miss Willoughby, 10, Cathles-road, Balham, S.W.; Amelia Woodman, Blossom-road, Ickenham, near Uxbridge; Superintendent Irishmen's Mission, Society-place, Derby; R. Birch, 18, [illegible], Old Kent-road, London, S.E.; P. Butler, [illegible], Sunderland; Mr. Geo. Parker, 65, Winston-[illegible], N.; Mr. H. [illegible], 9a, Welling-[illegible].

THE NATIONAL REFUGES
FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.
"ARETHUSA" AND "CHICHESTER" TRAINING SHIPS.

164, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C.

PRESIDENT - - THE EARL OF JERSEY, G.C.M.G.

As this Society is a National one, not simply Metropolitan, admission is ensured to a destitute child from whatever part of the kingdom it may come. 900 CHILDREN MAINTAINED. NO VOTES ARE REQUIRED. FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED. Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary or Finance Secretary, or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

H. BRISTOW WALLEN, Secretary. HENRY G. COPELAND, Finance and Deputation Secretary.

THE 15TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE FOR THE STUDY OF PROPHETIC SCRIPTURE
AND PRACTICAL CONSECRATION

Will (D.V.) be held in

THE CONFERENCE HALL, 143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.,

JUNE 14th, 15th, and 16th.

ALL EARNESTLY INVITED.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION,
Collingwood Street, New Cut.

WILL YOU HELP US

to give 1200 Poor Children a Day's Holiday in the Country, and to send a number of weakly little ones to a Country Holiday Home for a Fortnight, and to Help the Sick Poor?

Donations can be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., D.L., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; and to T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

URGENT APPEAL ON BEHALF OF
THE ISLAND AND COAST SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

A.D. 1833.

This Society was established to provide good Scriptural Schools on the bleak coasts of Ireland and on the Islands adjacent. In such places an overwhelming majority of the population is Roman Catholic, and unless our scattered children are gathered into these little centres they must be gradually lost to the Protestant Faith.

At present it maintains 40 such Schools.

In great need the Committee urgently appeal for help to all who value Scriptural Truth.

Contributions may be sent to the Provincial Bank, College-street, Dublin; or to the Secretary, Rev. C. W. Fleury, M.A., 8, Dawson-street, Dublin.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,
CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

Founder: C. H. SPURGEON.

President & Treasurer: Rev. J. A. SPURGEON, D.D., LL.D.

A HOME AND SCHOOL FOR 500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN.

No Votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management, without regard to class or creed.

The Managers Require

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS
A Year in Voluntary Contributions.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, addressed to the care of the Secretary, Mr. F. G. Ladds, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS.—Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal Form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY
126th Annual Meeting
Will be held
On THURSDAY, MAY 26th,
At EXETER HALL (Lower).

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS will preside at 7 p.m.

ADDRESSES will be delivered by the Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, Rev. J. Flemming Shearer, Rev. John Bond, Rev. J. G Train, Norwood; and F. A. Bevan, Esq., Treasurer. SOLOS by Miss Mary Spicer.

Tea & Coffee at 6 p.m. Usual Collection will be made.

J. ATKINSON, Secretary.

THE YARROW CONVALESCENT HOME
For Children of the Better Classes,
BROADSTAIRS.

For Boys from 4 to 14 years, and Girls from 4 to 16 years. No letters required.

This Home has been established and endowed for 100 children of parents who, being in reduced circumstances, are not in a position to pay the entire cost of a change of sea air for their children during convalescence.

THE BUILDING BEING HEATED & VENTILATED UPON THE MOST MODERN PRINCIPLES IS EQUALLY AVAILABLE IN WINTER AS SUMMER.

Payment of 5s. per week towards maintenance of each child and 3s. 6d. for the return railway journey. Particulars and forms of application for admission on receipt of stamp.—Apply to

T. F. MYERS, Secretary, 73a, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT,
BOUVERIE HOUSE,
SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols.	" "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	"

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT is doing the nation good to be still and weep for her great son, William Ewart Gladstone. Pain is a mystery, but there are uses in it which rich and poor alike can experience and acknowledge. Christian fortitude, based on Christian faith, has been teaching the world some of the noblest lessons of submission and endurance during the last few months, as the world has heard how the aged statesman bore his pain with his eyes fixed on the words of truth—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee."

The finest sermon preached this May, the grandest vindication given of the Christian faith, has been the way in which this Christian from his youth died—as thousands of believers die every year in cottage homes and humble places where none but simple neighbours know how brave and how blessed they were—with the words of familiar and precious hymns sounding in his ears, with promises of grace before him, and with broken prayers on his lips. And for a while the nation turns from war and politics and speculation, to think of death and eternity.

The simple faith of the dying man has been so impressive in its reality that the world of letters has suddenly become religious. Facts have overturned theories, and agnosticism, atheism, pessimism seem for the time to have grown conscious of their own incompetency to express a great reality except in terms borrowed from the Christian vocabulary.

Another noticeable feature is the unanimous tribute paid not only by the churches, but by every speaker in Parliament. to the value of a Christian career in high places. In thus honouring Mr. Gladstone's career these speakers have really been honouring the Master whom he served, and who gave his life its noblest quality. A better or more impressive testimony to the truth and grandeur of the Christian faith could scarcely be found. Once more the world has confessed that the best Christian evidences are to be found in the lives of sincere and earnest Christian men.

The extraordinary hold exercised by Mr. Gladstone on Nonconformists, considering their total disagreement with his ecclesiastical position, is a unique fact in the history of politics. The reason, however, is not far to seek. At least, as The Spectator of last week put it, he was a thorough Puritan, holding "with a strength of conviction which admitted of no change that the moral law was the supreme guide." Because he put this in front of all other questions, he drew after him the most serious and spiritual of his contemporaries with a magnetism that was irresistible ; and he helped to deepen and ennoble public life in a way no other statesman has ever done. Now that he has gone we look round with apprehension for a successor in this high office of voicing the national conscience. Anyone who is to take the place of the lost leader must be a Christian before all other things.

Death is a great reconciler ; it is so to-day as men at home forget their political and ecclesiastical differences, and join in expressions of sorrow for the public servant whom we have lost, and of praise for all his great services. That he made mistakes, and has left us some things we should be better without, is only to say that he was human, and on these no one expatiates. And in these times of close and rapid intercourse between nations, the death of Mr. Gladstone is also having a healing effect on international animosities, and is drawing the peoples nearer to each other in bonds of goodwill. Nothing is more remarkable than the expressions of admiration, of regret, and of sympathy, which have been sent from all parts of the world and from all kinds of persons. Our country ought to find it easier henceforward to undertake every just and righteous cause. At any rate this lesson is clear, that we as a nation are more loved and better trusted for being on the side of the oppressed.

Most of the usual May meeting gatherings are now at an end. The reports on the whole testify to great buoyancy and hopefulness of spirit, and an earnest desire to meet the practical demands of Christian work. The question of Christian unity has been well to the front, and the tone in which it has been discussed proves that the various Evangelical churches are overlooking their differences and growingly conscious of their common aims and ideals. Into all the villages and towns of the country the accounts of these gatherings have penetrated to be read and pondered by thousands who were unable to attend them, to cheer many a lonely worker, and give heart of grace to those who are labouring under depressing conditions. The attendances have been large, and in some cases immense, but they represented only a small fraction of the millions who through the year will share in their benefits.

One of the advantages that appear to be coming within reach of the world through the present war between Spain and the United States is a better understanding, perhaps a permanent alliance, between the United States and this country. Trouble often clears the vision, and sweeps away jealousy ; it seems to be doing so now. It will be a gain to every great human cause if these two powerful nations are henceforth banded together as one. And yet we shall make a fatal mistake if we depend upon their alliance and not upon the application of Christian truth for making the alliance itself Christian in principle and in influence. The alliance will reflect the spirit and tone of the two nations.

The distressing industrial war in South Wales is causing untold misery to thousands of families, and the end is still uncertain. The men have made one important step forward by giving plenary powers to their leaders in conference with the masters. It is to be earnestly hoped that the latter will show a conciliatory spirit in their dealings with these representatives. The industrial and commercial aspects of the struggle are disastrous, and it will be years before its evil affects can be undone. All the more reason for mutual concession and a settlement that shall ensure a friendly result, satisfactory to both parties. The orderliness and patience of those who are suffering most severely is an added reason for this.

In his address on "The Churches and Evangelistic Missions" (p. 13), Rev. Campbell Morgan emphasises an important consideration as to the after-results of missions. It is a sad state of things when a minister has to say, as was said to him :—

> If a hundred converts were added to us, I should not know what to do with them. The Church is not in a fit state to nurture their new life.

And then missions are criticised on the ground that the "converts do not stand." But whose is the fault ?

In the correspondence on the "Leakage from Methodism," still going on in the Methodist Times, strong remarks are made as to the neglect of pastoral visitation by ministers and class-leaders as one of the prime causes. In all Christian churches neglect of this great duty, where it exists, is a grave fault. Preaching and organisation alone can never build up a church. There is need, both for the sake of the minister and his people, of personal dealing. The multiplicity of engagements and the many calls on ministers' time tend to make such visitation increasingly difficult. But nothing should be allowed to interfere with the periodical visitation of families and individuals. It is well known that many a church has dated a fresh lease of life from the advent of a minister of but moderate preaching powers who has the gift of successful pastoral work.

The need of pastoral visitation arises from the fact that the preacher must know the individual difficulties and trials of his people in order to be able to address them adequately. In many crises, comfort, direction, warning, rebuke can be effectively and lovingly administered inp rivate which would be out of place in public. Personal contact on a spiritual basis brings preacher and people en rapport, turns an official relation into one of friendship, and at times enables the exact word to be spoken that is needed to give a soul release from some gnawing perplexity or overwhelming fear. Ministers should see to it that where a conflict of duties arises, other and less essential duties should be postponed for this. Other things being equal, the minister who is a good pastor will make the most effective preacher and do most good.

It is proposed by several leading Nonconformists to establish a Parliamentary Council for the purpose of resisting the strong tide of Romanising influence. A circular which has been widely circulated says :—

> Thousands of villages and towns possess only Anglican or Roman Catholic schools. Over nine millions of the population have no Board school in their midst. Besides this, the administration of the Education Acts has become more partial to clerical interests than for many years past, and every subterfuge is adopted to prevent the establishment of School Boards. Nonconformists are practically excluded from the teaching profession in many towns and villages.

Reasons for action are found in the pledge given by the Government to establish a Roman Catholic University in Ireland endowed out of public funds, in the unceasing efforts of the Anglican clergy to secure the control of elementary schools and higher education, and in the refusal of Parliament to remove Nonconformist grievances. The battle will be an uphill one, but, although some of the great papers which ought to aid in it will be on the other side, help will doubtless come from unexpected quarters.

It has been the favourite device of the Pope for some time past to pose as a friend of peace. He has been suggested as the head of an international peace congress; his name has frequently been mentioned as an arbiter in disputes; he was said to be greatly pained by the hostilities between Spain and the United States; yet what has he done to stay the bloodshed and to smooth the troubles at his own door? Nothing at present; he and his cardinals let the fire burn, while they stand on one side. The Daily News, which has done so much to forward early and accurate information, recently said that—

An interesting correspondence has passed between the Cardinal Archbishop of Milan and the General in command of the district. Cardinal Ferrari wrote to apologise for his absence during the riot, and to express regret for what had occurred. General Bava Beccoria replied that he also deplored the Cardinal's absence, and that he regretted the silence of the clergy when they might have done so much to avoid bloodshed. This is a remarkable feature of the situation which must attract the notice of Europe. From the beginning of this lamentable conflict, amounting almost to civil war, no word has come from the Vatican or from any representative of the Church in denunciation of violence or in favour of peace. In considering the causes of the revolt and the responsibility for it, this most significant piece of negative evidence will assuredly not be forgotten.

How much the Pope could do, if he would, to save Italy from misery, hunger, starvation, and strife!

Miss Betham Edwards contributes a thoughtful article to the Christian World, on the present position of French Protestantism, laying stress on two facts. The first is the settled malignity of the attacks made upon it by Catholic authorities, both in the Press and socially. An attempt is being widely made to join the forces of anti-Semitism and anti-Protestantism, both Jews and "Nonconformists" being described as "foreign bodies without country and without patriotism, infectious bacteria to be expelled from society by means of some powerful serum." The second fact is that in spite of this attack and abuse Protestantism is steadily winning its way. There is an increase of accredited organs, and of centres of work, and of new churches. These are extending their influence by the humanitarian reforms which they advocate, notably that of temperance, in which direction they are doing excellent work.

If County Councils have the powers to make bye-laws that put street-preaching and the singing of hymns among objectionable street noises, of which persons may complain, and which the police may interfere with and stop, then it will be for voters to ask candidates for County Councils what opinions they entertain on this question, and what they will do if they are returned. The public-house party wishes to prevent open-air preaching, and has now got a case in their favour; it will be for voters to see that the public-house party is either not represented at all on the Councils, or that it forms a small minority.

This is an age of innovations, good and bad. The latest and the most remarkable is the new use to which our soldier-heroes are to be put. Private Findlater (of Dargai fame), who was decorated recently with the Victoria Cross by the Queen, is, we are told, to popularise his deeds by piping at a music-hall at twenty-five guineas a night. This, assuredly, is the lowest point to which cheap fame could descend, even in an age of claptrap. The money-making passion takes queer shapes, but when it turns heroism into £ s. d. in this vulgar fashion, it should be in a fair way to defeat its own object. The public that can tolerate the scheme must be badly in need of a new sensation. Military glory that ends in music-hall plaudits is not likely to have much fascination for heroes with any self-respect. True courage, devotion, self-sacrifice, seek for other rewards.

There is no more cogent sign of the real triumph of temperance principles than the realisation, on the part of military authorities, of the importance of dissociating active service from drinking habits. We learn that Sir Herbert Kitchener's stern refusal to permit intoxicants to be taken up the Nile is to be followed by the American Provost-Marshal in his conduct of the Cuban campaign. All kinds of teetotal drinks, as well as "molasses, cakes, pie, and candy," but no whisky, will be allowed. Probably the splendid results of the temperance policy of the Sirdar in Egypt has strengthened the conviction of the American general that the use of spirituous liquors and thorough physical efficiency in campaigning are incompatible. Those who have fought so hard, in the teeth of every imaginable opposition and ridicule, to popularise the scientific aspect of teetotalism will be delighted with this further proof of the spread of their views.

A summary of the total income of the missionary societies in this country proves that the income all round is steadily increasing, and that the somewhat serious deficits shown on their balance-sheets is really due to their inability to keep pace with the ever-increasing demands for extension. This total in the financial year just ended is close on two million pounds, exclusive of some results not yet reported. This is a large sum, but it might be a good deal larger considering the general wave of prosperity that the country is enjoying, and the extraordinary expansion of opportunity that has recently opened up. The difficulties of the "closed door" are giving way to the difficulties of the "open door," but if the enthusiasm of the early missionary advocates was adequately kept up, an added impetus would be given to the work, which would speedily carry the Gospel into every corner of the world, and ensure its being preached literally to "every creature."

The fact is always being forced upon our attention that the conversion of the heathen world will never be accomplished by means of the missionary only; the Christian trader, the Christian traveller, the Christian teacher, the Christian in every form is wanted. It seems to us as if there is coming a special call, just now, for the Christian schoolmaster in the Far East. Dr. Griffith John says of the persecuting province of Hunan, in China, so recently opened to the Gospel:

There are tens of thousands in Hunan thirsting for a knowledge of the English language and Western lore.

If Frenchmen and Frenchwomen can obtain a living in the country by teaching their own language, cannot some Christian Englishmen master Chinese, and make it their business to teach English to Chinamen, at the same time using their position to make known the Gospel of God's grace?

The alarming increase of limited liability companies forms the subject of an important article in the Nineteenth Century from the pen of Mr. S. F. Van Oss. It is estimated that about one-tenth of the total wealth of the country is now invested in these companies. The result of this joint ownership is in many ways very serious. It means the lessening of personal responsibility, the gradual vanishing of the generation of "old, solid, sturdy business men," who built up the commercial greatness of the country, and the increase of vague impersonal vested interests, whose conscience is often very hard to find. Present profits, rather than solid future results, are the one aim of the promoters. The system tends also to increase and accentuate industrial difficulties. It might be added that it is becoming increasingly common for Christian people to invest their savings in questionable concerns, over which they have practically no control. The drink trade has found in this a tremendous accession of strength, and the temperance cause a new and obstinate obstacle to reform.

The Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty towards Animals is doing a good work by its system of prizes for the best essay on the subject, written by pupils in public and private elementary schools. This year as many as 136,465 essays were sent in from 864 board, 324 denominational, and 151 private schools, an average of 101 essays per school. By this means the duty of kindness towards the brute creation is brought before the minds of children and young people in a manner that tends to enlist their active sympathies. Nearly all cruelty of this kind—at least among the young—is due to thoughtlessness. Anything that awakens interest and reflection in the matter tends therefore to the awakening of the moral sense. Such methods as these are more effective than many prosecutions. Remedial measures may be good, as they are at times certainly necessary; but preventive tactics are better.

Mr. Moody on Mr. Müller.

MR. MOODY is now at Northfield again, working for a time amongst his students. At a recent George Müller Memorial Service he gave to 400 of these some wonderful object-lessons from the life and work of that grand old servant of God, showing how God can change and then mightily use one of the wickedest of young men. The account of such an example was listened to with almost breathless astonishment, especially as to George Müller's early days, when, as a young man at college, he landed himself in prison, and by forging and stealing nearly broke his father's heart.

Dr. A. T. Pierson at the same time painted a vivid picture of the whole of Müller's life and walk, making it evident to all the students that Müller's God could do the same with any young man present during 1900, as He did with Müller during the most of 1800, if heart, hand, and life were but given up to God as Müller's were.

Mr. Moody loves to drive home practical lessons of what God can make of even a young man such as George Müller was. During week evenings the students are just now carrying on some most spirited debates upon international questions, the warmest of which has been as to "the advancement or otherwise of the Chinese nation by the dismemberment of China"—a most profitable question.

The Spirit and the Word.

By Rev. Dr. CULROSS.

WHEN Jesus told his disciples that He was about to leave them, sorrow filled their hearts. But his departure is introductory to the coming of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, "whom the Father will send in my name." "When He is come He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

In John xvi. 8 Christ sets forth what the Holy Spirit's coming meant in that stupendous enterprise on which he was sending them. "When He is come, He will convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." This threefold conviction, which means the bringing of men over to God's side, is effected by the Holy Spirit. In effecting it He does not work directly, but mediately, as the Paraclete or Adviser of the disciples: not apart from the disciples, but in and through them, using them instrumentally. This is a matter to be well understood. This heavenly Agent does not supersede the witnessing of the disciples; He does not work on the world without, but with and through them, and so He convinces the world of sin, and righteousness, and judgment.

Farther, though the disciples had enjoyed the personal teaching of Jesus, they were not yet in possession of all the truth. He had still many things to say to them that they were not yet prepared to receive. "But when the Spirit is come, He will lead you into all the truth," and shall give you to see the truth in its fulness and unity. The work of the Spirit in the Apostles after Pentecost may be condensed into these words: "He shall glorify Me." This glorifying of Christ consisted in making clear to them what they had so dimly perceived—the ineffable glory of the redeeming Christ. Christ whom they had known after the flesh they would henceforth know in his heavenly dignity. We must look for of Christ, then, after Pentecost, in the teaching of the disciples in their letters and ministry.

THE MANIFESTING OF THE GLORY

This shows us the value which Christ means we should attach to the New Testament Epistles as an exhibition of "all the truth," and a filling up of the many things which Christ had to say, but which they were not yet prepared to receive.

Accepting Christ's word I must believe in a real teaching of the Holy Spirit, mysterious in its mode but blissful in its results. If we do not have the fulness of truth set forth in the apostolic writings, then Christ's promise is still unfulfilled. Such a fulfilment the apostolic writings claim to be.

Thus we read: "Ye know the commandments we gave you by the Holy Ghost...He, therefore, that despiseth, despiseth not man but God, who hath also given us his Holy Spirit." Again, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit...that we may know the things that are freely given to us of God; which things we also speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." Once more, referring to the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, the apostle declares that "it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." Any criticism of the New Testament which overlooks this, or makes nothing of it, which pits Christ against Paul, and babbles about the "dimness of apostolic Christianity," any such criticism of all, and must begin at the beginning over again.

OMITS THE MOST IMPORTANT DATA

But the giving of the sacred writings of the New Covenant by Divine inspiration does not exhaust the Lord's promise. As the Apostles needed the Holy Spirit's grace to pen the writings, not less do we need that same Spirit's grace to enter into the deep and glorious meanings they set forth and to realise their power. Look at the case in this way. A good school-book in a boy's hand does not of necessity ensure the acquisition of knowledge: there must be also a learner's spirit, and as much depends on this as on the school-book. So with regard to Divine truth. On our part there must be child-like humility—that is to say, a meek and quiet spirit, a circumcised heart, an obedient will, and fearless surrender to God; and for this condition of mind and heart we are dependent on the indwelling Spirit, by whose inspiration the writings were given.

On the other hand, pride, self-sufficiency, insincerity, shut out the light. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the lowly." He takes them into his intimacies, and shows them his holy covenant. He who has this lowliness, though with no special mental ability and no advantages of education, has and a comprehension to which scholars and critics are strangers.

AN INSIGHT INTO DIVINE TRUTH

To affirm all this is to affirm both the necessity and reality of the renewing and teaching of the Holy Ghost, the Creator of child-likeness. Under his teaching, "a glory gilds the sacred page," the Bible becomes a new book to us, words that once perplexed us become plain; dim pages become luminous and radiant with sweet meanings; truths that had stood separate and even in seeming antagonism become one, like the pictures in a stereoscope; the soul's horizon is widened, and realms are illumined that had lain in obscurity or darkness. This is not matter for logical argument, but for the test of experience.

Accepting Christ's word, I believe in a real personal teaching of the Holy Ghost, mysterious in its mode but blissful in its results, a teaching whereby we cease from mere notions and opinions, and come to "know;" a teaching which does not dispense with the Bible, but knows it; which does not supersede patient study, but is its gracious reward. To some this may appear an opening of the door to the wildest extravagance and fanaticism; in point of fact, it is our true safeguard against error, and our true security for sobermindedness. The subject is one of unspeakable importance to-day. The doctrine of Divine teaching has a place in our creed, yet how often it is practically ignored. This ignoring is one of the deepest and deadliest heritages of this or any age. And it will be one of the most hopeful of signs when we humbly confess our foolishness and ignorance and say from the heart, "I believe in the Holy Ghost."

I have said nothing and have nothing to say against the severest scientific and critical investigation. The man who would forbid this is no friend to truth, and simply betrays by his fears his own secret doubt or unbelief. To stifle inquiry is to create suspicion that the Bible will not stand examination. I know there is a criticism—from which may God deliver us—which calls forth the rebuke, "Thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men"—a criticism which mistakes plausible conjecture for proof—a criticism which, for all its learning and intellectual acumen, manifests the sheerest incapacity of spiritual thought—a criticism which stumbles about among the things of God like the men whom John Bunyan describes with their eyes put out, stumbling among the tombs—a criticism arrogant and lordly, vainly puffed up in its fleshly mind—which deposes Jesus Christ from the place of authority and then quietly a criticism which judges by a standard of its own what is credible and what is incredible, unawed by what Jesus Christ says: "The word that I have spoken the same shall judge you in the last day." But all criticism is not of such kind, and need not be so, as the memory of a man like Samuel Prideaux Tregelles reminds us.

SITS DOWN IN THE VACANT CHAIR;

The fundamental thing is that all our investigations be prosecuted in the spirit of childlike humility, with reverent faith in God, a sense of responsibility, and willingness to do his will. Take two books—one on Spectrum Analysis, the other dealing with the cry, "Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me?" You could not read the two books aloud in the same tone of voice without a sense of incongruity. They appeal to totally different faculties of our being, and the man who is interested in the one may be totally untouched by the other. The words of the Apostle are profoundly significant in this connection: "The natural man"—the man whose intellectual nature is awake, while his spiritual nature is dormant and unquickened—this man "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The meaning of words and the rules of grammar are the same, yet we cannot examine sacred Scripture as we should examine any other ancient writing—say a tragedy of Euripides or the Odes of Horace. The Bible makes appeal to another set of faculties within us, and no man can enter into its thoughts apart from a quickened spiritual nature, a heart-felt consciousness of sin, and what I may call a sense of God. The starting-point of all true criticism (even of the letter) is here: "Ye must be born again."

A Whitsuntide Hymn.

Come, Holy Spirit, come,
Sweet breath of Heaven Divine,
And condescend within our hearts
To make thy lowly shrine.

Come as the gentle dew
To childhood's opening flowers,
In glory's sunshine from above,
And blessings' tenderest showers.

Come to the glad young soul,
Soft as a mother's kiss;
Baptize with love and sanctify
Each deed, and thought, and wish.

Come with the balm of peace,
With joy's melodious lyre;
Oh! fan these flickering sparks within
To love's immortal fire.

Guide us in wisdom's path,
In virtue's narrow way;
Teach us to do our Father's will,
His mandates to obey.

Harriet Julia Evans.

[459]

Certainty in Religion—3.

(Concluded.)

HOW may a soul be sure of God? The human mind may deduce very much about God from what it perceives in nature, but there must be a revelation from God Himself if He is to be accurately known. We cannot pierce the veil—He must lift it from his side. Has He done so? The answer is a triumphant and certain Yes. In ancient times He spake to the fathers in fragments, but in Jesus Christ He has finally and fully spoken. And the Spirit of Jesus is with the Church to-day, waiting to penetrate the lives of all who will fulfil the human condition, which is faith.

Men are impatient when we speak to them about faith. "Faith," say they; "when it comes to the point, you always demand blind belief, and it is this which we refuse to render." You mistake, gentlemen. Faith is nothing of the sort. Faith is the exercise of the spiritual organ, responding to the action of the Spirit of God. "We receive the Spirit that we may know." And whoever will receive the Holy Spirit shall know. This is not the abnegation of reason; it is the uplifting and illuminating of reason. Certainty is allowed in every other department of life upon fulfilling the conditions of learning. By what right is it denied to those who have fulfilled the conditions requisite for knowing God?

We commenced by asking if absolute certainty in religion is possible. We have demonstrated both by doctrine and by testimony that it is. I have to say, then, in terminating this conference, that since the way to certainty is open to us all, it is our own fault if we miss it. "If thou seek Him He will be found of thee." Seek, above all things, gentlemen, this supreme knowledge. It will deliver you from the corruption of the world; it will guide you into all wisdom.

For the right direction of our life in this the time of our mortal pilgrimage the soul must be certain of God; and if in the hour of death we would have repose of spirit, this can only be assured to us by that same certainty. Certainty of God means true life here and hereafter; ignorance of God means darkness and death both here and in eternity.

F. C. Spurr.

Showmen's Mission. —I would again ask prayer on behalf of the travelling show people; I would also ask, wherever fairs are held, that Christian work might be done amongst the vans, by personal visitation, Sabbath meetings, and children's meetings. The Lord is blessing the work of his servants amongst these wandering people, and we do desire that it may extend to every fair in the land. I shall be glad to give every information respecting the mission.

E. Millington, Hon. Sec.

Layerthorpe-grove, York.

The Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission are seeking to extend the valuable work of "rescue, relief, and prevention," which they have been carrying on for some years, and the meeting recently held in Manchester will no doubt help them on their way. It is wonderful how much good work of this kind can go on almost under people's eyes without attracting much attention. Some idea of the scale on which this part of the mission's work is done may be gathered from the fact that, on an average, over 300 people a year have been placed in permanent situations by its efforts, and that 6000 men and 3448 women were helped in some definite way during the past year. Notwithstanding these figures, the committee are careful to avoid the evils and absurdities of "indiscriminate philanthropy." Dr. McLaren happily described the social work of the mission in an appreciative letter by saying that it was "conceived and carried on with a sanctified common sense not always found in conjunction with philanthropic efforts." The estimated cost of the sites and buildings which are required for the extensions resolved upon is £15,000. Towards this sum £9000 has been subscribed.

The White Rosebush.

A WHITSUNTIDE STORY.

THREE timber-built cottages stood together just off the goose green in a Surrey village. They stood under the protection of a beautiful old church, whose spire cast its shadows on the green, and enabled the humble housewives of the neighbourhood to tell the time of day without troubling to look at such things as clocks.

Sally Grainger's cottage was farthest from the church; it had a south wall next the high road, upon which luxuriated a pear tree, while in the centre of her tiny garden grew a beautiful white rosebush.

"I do believe as that rosebush is the pride of your life," said Jane Aldridge to Sarah one day, as she walked round the bush, nipping off here, brushing there, and syringing all over, till not a speck of dust remained upon the leaves.

"Why, 'tis more trouble to you than a child," she added. "My Billy don't get the attention that rosebush does."

"Ah, my dear," was Sally's slow reply, "he'd pay for it if he did! You see, I 'a'nt got a Billy. My old man's out all day, and I've done my work inside, and I'm one o' them as believe we didn't ought to keep nothing to let it spoil."

"Well, 'tis fine to be you," was the sharp rejoinder, "to be out coddlin' your roses all day. If you had my Billy for a week to care for, he'd tire you out, so there!" Jane entered her cottage and slammed the door.

"Dear, dear," soliloquised Sally, "all through my poor rosebush!" When the rosebush awoke one fine summer morning it was to find itself decked as a bride. Beautiful buds, exquisite snowy blooms, fresh, fragrant and fair, made it a most lovely thing to look upon.

A gentleman, passing down the road, paused to admire the loveliness of it. Jane Aldridge stood at her door. "Lovely!" exclaimed the gentleman, "fresh from God's hand, and, like all his gifts, perfect." He caught Jane's eye.

"Hush, you wouldn't say that if you knew how Sally Grainger cossets the thing!" said Jane; "Why, 'tis her idol—she's that proud of it she can't do enough for it. Why, she gives it a bath!" The gentleman did not join in Jane's loud laughter—he was looking at the rose, and remarked very quietly—"Well done, Sally Grainger! Your patient care for one of God's most beautiful gifts is its own reward. You have not spoiled his work by neglect; it is as lovely as when He gave it."

The stranger passed on; but Jane was dumb with anger. Billy was out on the goose green, a sorry sight—dirty, unkempt, his clothes and boots ragged and in holes, his gait and conduct aimless, yet mischievous. His mother noticed all this for the first time with something of annoyance.

"Come here, you good-for-nothing disgrace!" she called to him; "to see you one'd think you hadn't got a home nor a mother! Go and clean yourself." She pushed him indoors.

"What for?" asked Billy. "I'm all right—let me be!" He slipped out to the common again, and Jane shook her fist at his retreating figure until the rosebush came into her mind, when she turned her furious gaze upon that. "Not spoiled it by neglect!" she repeated. "Ha, it'll be spoiled soon—not a sight of it shall stand to anger and fool a body any longer than I can help, so look out, Sally Grainger!"

Meanwhile Sally was rejoiced to think that Whitsuntide was to-morrow, and that she was to make an offering of her beloved roses at the flower-service; besides having promised a bunch of the flowers to a young friend of hers, who was to be made a bride in the little church on Whit-Monday.

She went out to water the bush in the cool of the evening. Billy Aldridge was throwing stones at the geese who were waddling home across the green. Sally called to him: "Billy, my boy, don't do that—you'll maim the birds. I've got a picture-book here as you may like to have if you'll come and fetch it. And here's some roses for your mother." Jane, in her kitchen, heard all that was said, and she took every word as an insult to herself, for she was conscience-nipped. "Taking pity on my Billy!" she muttered; "as if he wants her things; but I thrash that boy for bein' fool enough to listen to her."

When Billy appeared with the book and the roses his mother snatched them from him, and, catching him by the arm, shook and slapped him until she was breathless, and then flung him from her. He fell upon the corner of the kitchen fender, and seemed stunned for a minute; but, rubbing his head, rose sobbing, and was pushed upstairs to bed by his angry mother.

"That'll teach him," she said to herself, "not to go beggin' of Sally."

The next morning it was a glorious Whit-Sunday, but in both Sally and Jane's cottages there was wonderment and grief. For in the night the beautiful rosebush had been hacked into a mass of dead leaves and faded blossoms, and on his bed Billy lay and moaned, rolling his head from side to side, and staring, with eyes that saw her not, upon his half-frantic mother.

"I'll go and fetch Mrs. Grainger in," said William Aldridge to his wife. "She allus knows what to do when a body's in trouble.

"Oh, no, no!" sobbed Jane; "not her. I couldn't look at her. Besides, she's in trouble, too; her rosebush is dead."

William stared at his wife, then he seemed to understand. But for all that he slipped out, and rapped at Sally's door. She came to it, and as William stepped into the spotless room he saw on the table one of his wife's earrings—a hideous thing in black vulcanite. "Mrs. Grainger," said he, awkwardly, "I don't feel as if I'd ought to ask it"—he glanced at the eardrop—"but could 'ee look at our Billy?"

Sally saw there was trouble; she forgot herself at once, and in two minutes was standing by poor Billy's untidy bed.

"'Tis the brain," said she; "has he had a fall, do you know?" Then Jane told of the "accident" the night before, how when she was slapping him she pushed him, and he fell on the fender.

"I shall want to know more of this," said William, darkly; "but first I'm going for the doctor. Happen you've killed the boy."

Sally said nothing of her loss; she put wet cloths upon Billy's head, darkened the window, and then taking Jane's hand in hers, she drew her to her knees by the bedside, and prayed God to send his light and love into stricken hearts, and to heal and forgive where sin had blinded and blighted. Jane's sobs shook the little bed.

"Oh," she cried, "You to forgive! Oh, if I could undo it all! I don't want to be forgiven; I'm not fit; I'm only fit to die."

"No, you poor thing, that's what you're not fit for, yet," said Sally. "We're none of us ready to die till we're forgiven."

The doctor came. He shook his head. "Concussion," said he.

"Oh, will he live, doctor?" asked the distracted mother. "Well, that depends," was the reply, "upon how he's nursed."

"I'm going to nurse him, sir," said Sally, "under your orders."

* * *

It is ten years later. Billy, "a man without a mind," sits at his mother's door, the picture of cleanly neatness. Two things delight him—a showy picture book or a bunch of Sally's roses. For though she can no longer tend them, her little garden is full of them. Jane Aldridge has made a hedge of them, all cut from the parent rose, which, after all, was not dead at the root, but only spoiled for a few years. And it is Jane Aldridge who tends her bedridden friend Sally, and keeps her and the cottage "as clane as a pink," as they say in the village, for Sally's cottage is the meeting-place of many kindly and brave Christian hearts. Jane has brought some roses into Sally's bedroom.

"Ten years to-morrow," says Jane, "since you showed me what the love of God could do. And to think you nursed my Billy, though you knew I'd killed your beautiful rose! Oh, what a sin is jealousy, or envy! 'T'as made my poor Billy a fool."

"Just think, though," says Sally, whose "rheumatiz" has not ruffled her religion, but strengthened it, "that he's God's fool. He would not hurt a thing God made, and how kind he is to little ones, and how he loves to sit by me and listen to my poor little hymns."

"I shall never be able to do enough for all you've done for me and mine," says she, "and Whitsuntide always reminds me of it. You've been Christ's blessed angel to us."

For William Aldridge and his wife are one in Christ now, and their love for their poor, harmless, afflicted son is a tender and gracious thing to see, and Billy is very happy.

M. Butler Gerds.

The Churches and Evangelistic Missions.*

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

IV. Evangelistic services should never be undertaken with the deepening of the Church's life as their first reason.

THERE is made sometimes a very common mistake. A church has passed into the sad condition of lukewarmness and consequent indifference to the sorrow and sin of the masses around. The enterprises of God are neglected. Congregations still assemble, and some aspects of social life are maintained, but those branches of church life which form the true sphere of spiritual development are languishing. The tennis club is popular and much talked about, the prayer-meeting seldom attended, and never referred to; the concert crowded, the church meeting deserted; the cycle run a success, the open-air work in the slum a forlorn hope, still maintained by a faithful few, but neglected by the majority of the fellowship; the lecture society a great and growing society, the admissions to Church fellowship almost a minus quantity. I am not depreciating the value of all these varied successes. I do not desire to contrast them with the other and failing sections of a church's life. The contrast exists. I have not made it. All should be so successful as to preclude the possibility of contrast.

Now it is decided that a mission should be held to resuscitate the dying agencies, to deepen the church's spiritual life.

NO MORE SERIOUS BLUNDER

could possibly be made. Missions under these conditions are absolutely out of place. They are foredoomed to failure. Think of what such a mission will be like. No prayerful preparation, and therefore no spirit of expectation. The attitude of the majority of the members towards the missioner will be that of critical toleration, and sometimes more critical than tolerant. In a recent mission I conducted I found that prayer-meetings had been held the previous week, attended by a very small section of the membership. During that week of prayer there was a ball at the house of one of the church officers, and on another evening a progressive whist party at the house of a wealthy member of the congregation, at which many members were present. The atmosphere was not conducive to the realisation of the purpose of such services. Finding this to be the condition of affairs, I set aside the addresses which I intended to deliver, and laid myself out to give teaching on the true conception of Christian life to church members; and by the time the mission ended the church was approaching fitness for holding an evangelistic mission.

THE PRIMARY CONDITION.

The deepening of a church's spiritual life should never be sought by the holding of such services. The reverse is true. A church should seek for the deepening of its spiritual life as a preparation for the holding of a mission. The very first necessity is that the church should be a living embodiment and concrete example of the life of Jesus, which is to be proclaimed as the highest ideal for men, and offered by the way of the Cross to all those who submit themselves to God.

I believe that there is abroad in our church life to-day a discontent with low levels of Christian life, and I certainly regard this as among the most hopeful of the signs of the times. That spirit of dissatisfaction is the condition for holding missions to the churches. Where it obtains, conventions and conferences are required not for the declaring of some new secret, or the cultivation of a new and effeminate pietism, but for instruction in true spiritual life, and for prayer and fellowship in the things of God. Let such gatherings be multiplied, and the results in church life will be seen in the preparedness of the churches for evangelistic services.

* An address to the Congregational Union.

V. The responsibility of conserving the life of the newly-born rests upon the Church undertaking a mission.

This is a further reason in support of the view already advanced. A friend of mine, the pastor of one of our churches, a man of choice gifts and great graciousness of character, said to me recently, "If a hundred converts were added to us, I should not know what to do with them. The church is not in a fit state to nurture their new life." Surely no stronger proof could be given of the unfitness of such a people to hold mission services.

WHAT ABOUT THE CONVERTS?

A favourite form of criticism of our work is that which questions the abiding nature of the results tabulated, and I am bound to admit the perfect relevance and fairness of the criticism. If so many scores or hundreds were a year ago registered as converted men and women, it is perfectly right that we should want to know what has become of them.

I may say, in passing, that the whole system of counting heads, and printing numbers in the columns of a newspaper, is in my view a practice wholly out of harmony with the true Christly worker, and savours much of self-advertisement. But if the people were converted, where are they? The story of declension and lapse is an appalling one, and reflects not on the mission so much as on the inattention and carelessness of the church, and reveals almost without exception the fact that the church was not prepared for a mission and ought not to have undertaken so solemn a responsibility. Keep these services in their true place, and the life which originates them will be the force which will conserve the results.

(To be concluded.)

Work for the Prisoners.

By D. L. MOODY.

FEW persons, even those engaged in Christian and philanthropic labours, are fully acquainted with the work of the Prison Fund in connection with the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago. It was started in the spring of 1895, and with the aid of kind friends has been sustained since, although the Fund is usually, and especially now, in pressing need of replenishing. Up to March 1, 1898, more than 239,000 copies of the Bible, New Testament, and good religious books had been carefully distributed to the inmates of penal institutions in the United States and Canada.

The need of such work is very great, and experience has shown that it is a kind of Christian labour that is frequently overlooked. Every earnest effort put forth to provide good or better reading matter for the prisoners has been very much appreciated by this class. The men thus confined have necessarily plenty of time to think and read, and it is just the nick of time in which to save them.

Many striking testimonies have been received from chaplains and others as to the results of the work. In one prison the chaplain writes: "The books which were sent to the N—— Prison have been received, and have done a wonderful amount of good; they were sought after and read eagerly by the men. They were put in the cells, and then passed on from one cell to another, and so on through hundreds of cells." Another says: "The books for gaol arrived all right; the poor unfortunate men and women grasped at them, and were delighted to get such good reading. Since then I have been to the prison and inquired about the effects of them; some of the hardest men tell how they enjoyed the books." Another writes: "Many were led to accept Christ as their personal Saviour by reading these books."

In one of the Rescue Missions in Chicago a man arose, and holding one of the books in his hand, said he thanked God, as that book was the means through God's hand of bringing him to Christ while confined in Cook County gaol.

I should be glad to hear from any friends who can aid in the good work.

East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Mr. Baron's Tour.

STARTING on his journey home from his recent tour, Rev. David Baron sent us, from Constantinople, a brief outline of his wanderings since his communication from Port Said, given in our issue of April 14. Accompanied by Pastor Gordon, of Budapest, the greater part of his time had been spent in Palestine, where, in addition to Jaffa, Jerusalem, Hebron, Haifa, Nazareth, and Tiberias, he paid brief visits to three of the Jewish colonies. Mr. Baron writes:—

"In Palestine one gets some idea of the difficulties and complications bound up with the Jewish question, and as an instance I may mention the fact that, so far, the 'National Movement,' and the growth of 'Zionism' among the Dispersion in Europe, has had the effect of temporarily closing the door of Palestine still closer against the Jews. Whether for its own political ends, or in obedience to pressure on the Turkish Government from Russia and France, as some assert, it is only with difficulty, and at the cost of much bakhsheesh, that individual Jews are allowed to land in the ports of Palestine or Syria. Religiously, is spreading over the Jews in Palestine, and, as might have been foreseen, the more numerous and powerful they become in the land the more difficult it becomes openly to carry on Christian work among them. This is particularly felt in Jerusalem, where the Jews are far more numerous than the Turks and all the Christian sects combined. In Jaffa and Hebron, in the south and away north in Galilee the spirit of opposition and fear shows that the Jews are beginning to feel something of the power of Christian missions; but, at the same time, it is not to be denied that in Palestine, where the bulk of the Jewish population is dependent on the haluka (or alms-money sent from many lands), and where religion is for the most part the means of their livelihood, the difficulties in the way of permanently established missions are enormously greater than in Europe, and the missionaries have therefore all the greater need of the prayers and sympathy of fellow-Christians.

A WAVE OF FANATICISM

"As strangers and wanderers, we did not encounter the spirit of opposition to the same extent as residents, and it was our privilege to turn the thoughts of many a Jew to Christ and his Gospel before they quite knew who we were. Even in Jerusalem we found an open door among some.

"In some cases it was manifest that the Lord was guiding us to those whose hearts were prepared for the Gospel. A beautiful instance of it was on board the Austrian Lloyd steamer going to Haifa. I had been speaking to a group of Jewish deck passengers, some of whom noisily opposed, when one of the ship's officers (the engineer) called me aside, saying, 'I listened to your discussions with these people, and feel grieved at the way they opposed you. But I became interested myself, and want to hear more.' I soon found that he was a son of Israel, and of

A NOBLE, INQUIRING SPIRIT.

"We spent over an hour in earnest conversation, when he had to go off to duty, but immediately he was free, instead of going to sleep, he joined us again. As we opened up to him the Scriptures, and showed him how Christ was the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end of all God's revelation, and that in Him alone is our hope, he seemed literally to drink in the Word. Late in the night, when all were asleep, he still sat up with us, reading the New Testament, and we felt sure that God had begun a work in his heart, which may He perfect till the day of Christ!

"In Tiberias my dear fellow-labourer, Pastor Gordon, was laid up with fever, but the Lord raised him up after two days, so that we were able to resume our journey to Syria. One of the privileges of this tour has been the happy fellowship we have enjoyed with many devoted brethren and sisters of all the various missions. We had a splendid meeting of Jews here (Constantinople) in the Free Church of Scotland Mission."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 29.

"After the Way which they call a sect, so serve I the God of our fathers."—Acts xxiv. 14 (R.V.).

FOR want of a better term by which to set forth Christianity, whether by friend or foe is immaterial, the new principle which it represented was called the Way (Acts ix. 2; xix. 9, 23; xxii. 4; xxiv. 22).

It is a beautiful and significant phrase. Christ is Himself the Way. He has opened the way to God. Through the heavens He passed in his ascension, leaving behind Him at every step a way by which we may travel till every one of us in Zion appears before God. In Christ we have found the way to the Father, and have learnt a rule of life. The word Methodist is closely akin to this. The followers of Wesley have been obeying on a new method which their illustrious founder opened.

"Men of the Way," such is the designation by which Christians should be known. They are pilgrims and strangers, wayfarers, having no abiding city, but always passing on. We may say of them as the Psalmist did of the pilgrim hosts that went up yearly to worship at the feast, "Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee, in whose heart are the highways to Zion." Psa. lxxxiv. 5 (R.V.).

And is not this the way that Isaiah spoke of when he said, "An highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness." Isa. xxxv. 8-10.

This is the way I long had sought,
And mourned because I found it not;
Till late I heard my Saviour say,
Come hither, soul, I am the Way.

MONDAY, May 30.

"One Jesus, who was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive."—Acts xxv. 19.

Festus talked lightly enough about Jesus. It was only a question in his mind of some Jewish superstition hardly worth debating. What did it matter to him or his imperial master whether Jesus was alive or dead? Was it not a fact that He was dead, crucified under Pontius Pilate? How little Festus realised the importance of that death, not to the Jews alone, but to himself! How little he understood that his own continued life was due to that death of which he spoke so lightly! Generations of luxury and years of self-indulgence had blunted his perception; as for all religious questions—they were mere superstition!

Now contrast with this sated worldling, a flatterer, an office-seeker, prepared to sell his soul for gold, the noble Apostle whose character stands out in unsullied light. It was no dead Christ that he proclaimed. Though He had died, according to the Scriptures, he knew that He was risen, and alive for evermore. His faith did not go back to the cross, but rose perpetually to the throne.

He affirmed that He was alive. On the abundant testimony of those who had spoken with Him after his resurrection; on the strength of his own vision when Christ had laid an arrest on him hard by Damascus; because of the mighty works that emanated from his hand; because of the daily fellowship which brought him into the presence of his Lord, in spite of clanking chain and iron bar—he affirmed that Jesus was alive.

"Faith is an affirmation, and an act
That bids eternal truth be present fact."

TUESDAY, May 31.

"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."—Acts xxvi. 19.

To us, also, the heavenly visions come. On our summer holidays, rising between us and some soaring Alp, or meeting us in our walk beside the gently-breaking sea, on beds of pain and in chambers of watching, visions of the risen Lord, visions of his infinite grief and pain which we have caused, visions of the possibilities of our life as a minister and witness of the things which we have seen, visions of results far down the vista wherein dark souls should become light, slaves emancipated, the defiled saintly. Ah, visions of God! unlike the will-o'-the-wisp, ye leave an indelible impression that moulds and ennobles all after-years! Pitiable the soul to which visions of a holier, sweeter life never come, or, if they come, are never seen.

The one important matter is our treatment of them. We may indolently refuse to follow the beckoning hand and obey the voice that calls. We may return to our evil courses and follow the devices and desires of our own hearts. We may cling to the prison cell, instead of following the angel that strikes us on our side, and bids us go forth into freedom. And if so, like Balaam, we shall become spiritually blind, and fail to see visions that the dumb creatures recognise, and that would fain arrest us in our perilous career.

On the other hand, if we will obey the vision, we shall not only retain the impression, and feel its prolonged and enthralling power, but shall receive still further manifestations of the will of God. "A witness both of the things wherein thou hast seen Me, and of the things wherein I will appear unto thee." Those that use their eyes aright shall have a growing perception of the things of God.

WEDNESDAY, June 1.

"There stood by me this night an angel of the God whose I am, and whom also I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul."—Acts xxvii. 23.

Yes, the angels of God can find their way through the murkiest air, and alight on the most weather-beaten vessel that ever ploughed its difficult way through the stormy seas. Wheresoever thou art, O child of God, reading these words, God's angels have their eyes fixed lovingly on thee, and in a moment, if it were God's will to give thee eyes, thou wouldest behold them.

But if, like Paul, we would have the angel ministry, with their assurances against fear, like him we must be able to comply with two conditions, of being owned and being loyal.

Whose I am. We are his by creation, by purchase, by consecration. That sentiment of being owned, which in the case of slaves is inimical to the highest development, is the elementary condition of our truest growth and well-being. We belong to someone who is infinitely worthy. We cannot do as we would with ourselves. We may not take our own course. It matters to our Lord infinitely what becomes of us. His sheep, his body, his bride, his other self.

Whom I serve. The word rendered serve is the deepest and most expressive term that Paul could employ of the prostration of the soul at the feet of God. It is significant of the most absolute devotion. It is employed of the glorified, who serve Him day and night in the temple, and of whom it is said that his servants shall do Him service. The heavenly life begins here; and as we follow its course, angels minister to us, and the stars in their courses fight for us.

THURSDAY, June 2.

"And he abode two whole years in his own hired dwelling," etc.—Acts xxviii. 30, 31.

Thus, abruptly, does this fifth Gospel close. It has been well said that a close so abrupt suggests a continuance and a sequel. The curtain of silence falls when Paul's life is not brought to a close, and his work at Rome is still in process; and does not this indicate the design of the Holy Spirit that we should believe that the book of Acts of the Apostles is never complete, but is really conterminous with the present age? Thus, every generation of every life adds its own gold link to the chain, which reaches from the upper chamber in the earthly Jerusalem to the bridal chamber of the New Jerusalem, uniting in one glorious succession all in whom Jesus continues by the Spirit to speak and work.

When the late Bishop of Ripon read of the labours and sufferings of John Williams in the South Seas, he laid down the narrative, exclaiming, "This is the twenty-ninth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles." May we not rather say the five hundredth or five thousandth? Between the stories of Paul and of John Williams, you must insert many which have been recorded of God's remembrancing angels only, and many others which are filling our shelves with missionary romance and biography more interesting than novels, more wonderful than dreams.

"The book is left incomplete, as it always will be while one believer is left to teach and preach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ and to fill up that which is believed of the afflictions of Christ in his own flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church." And the question arises, Have you wrought or suffered for Jesus in such wise as to add some verses to these chapters, which are being written?

FRIDAY, June 3.

"Therein is revealed a righteousness of God from faith unto faith."—Rom. i. 17.

It is important to understand this verse, because it is the key to the Epistle. In the deepest sense, righteousness stands for two things, our standing before God and our personal character—our position and our condition—what we are in Jesus and what we are in ourselves by the Holy Spirit.

Righteousness then covers justification and sanctification, whereof the former is treated in the first five chapters of this Epistle, and to this we confine ourselves.

There is a difference between forgiveness and justification. A child may be detected in a fault and forgiven, but the fault is a flaw on the character, like a crack in a glass vase. But a man may be unlawfully accused, and when it is ascertained that he has not done that which was wrongfully imputed to him, he leaves the court without a stain on his character, perfectly justified; the law has nothing to say against him, he deserves and receives its approbation and protection.

Thus is it with us. We are not merely forgiven, great and wonderful as that act of love and grace is; but we are treated as though we had never sinned; we are treated as though we had always complied with the demands of the law with perfect rectitude. Instead of the law being against us, as we deserve, it is on our side, defending and protecting us. Our salvation actually rests on law. We may claim it as an absolute right. God forgives us not only of his clemency, but has no alternative, if He would be faithful and just. And all this because of his infinite grace, in the person of Jesus, He has perfectly met the claims of a broken law.

SATURDAY, June 4.

"The work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness therewith."—Rom. ii. 15.

This is a great announcement, and shows how God can judge men who have never heard of the Bible or the Decalogue. The latter is engraven on their hearts, and is witnessed to by conscience.

Conscience is an original faculty. We are no more called upon to investigate its origin than the mathematician to inquire how the mind can add, or multiply, or divide; or than the artist to ask why we can appreciate the beautiful. It is part of the make-up and constitution of our moral nature. The word ought, which Webster thought the greatest of words, lies behind conscience, and invests it with the certainty and irresistibleness of the throne of God.

Conscience is the judgment-seat of God set up within our nature. You may always know when conscience speaks. She never hesitates, or questions, or pronounces on the expediency of a course; but, as any case is presented to her, she pronounces absolutely and directly upon it as right or wrong. Thus she anticipates the verdict of the great white throne.

Doubtless conscience may be impaired in its action by long neglect, or by the determined preference of human maxims as our rule of action; but it is always liable to resurrection when the voice of God is sounding. The office of the minister, like "Old Mortality" in the story, is to go through the world, chisel in hand, clearing the inscriptions of the law from the grit of growth which has rendered them almost illegible in too many cases. F. B. M.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Visit to Beulah.

AMONG the lovely hills of Alameda County, five miles from Oakland, California, is the Mills College, an institution for ladies, established in 1871 by Rev. Cyrus J. Mills, D.D. (who died April 20, 1884), and his wife, Mrs. Susan L. Mills, former missionaries to India, with the aim of training young ladies not only into intelligent and cultivated, but also truly Christian women.

The buildings are among the finest for school purposes west of the Rocky Mountains. They furnish accommodation for two hundred pupils, with their teachers. Hygienic laws are strictly observed. Extensive lawns and gardens, giving ample opportunity for outdoor exercises, add to the comfort and happiness of the pupils.

Near by on a hill-slope is the residence of Mr. and Mrs. G. Montgomery, the founders of Beulah, the nucleus of a small temperance town, mostly composed of Christians. Tired workers find rest under the hospitable roof of the "Home of Peace," a spacious building erected for the purpose of receiving visitors and taking care of the weary ones. With a lovely view over the hilly country are two orphan homes, one, "The Birds' Nest," full of little birdies from two years of age; the other, larger in proportion, receives girls for training as useful helps and steadfast Christians. From her girlhood it has been Mrs. Montgomery's wish to have at least forty orphans. The number having increased to sixty, she is now aspiring to even so many orphan Homes.

At a distance of some minutes' walk is a rescue home of the Salvation Army, partly supported by Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, who, as enthusiastic Salvationists, are zealous in promoting every branch of the S.A. work.

There is as yet no church in Beulah, but spiritual food is not wanting among the faithful, and those who have not been born again are being instructed, like Nicodemus. Meetings are held on Sundays and during the week at the Home of Peace, where neighbours and teachers, as well as the inmates of the Rescue Home, gather together to take of the Bread of Life freely.

We had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Montgomery at a noon prayer meeting at one of the Peniel Missions in San Francisco, and gladly accepted the invitation to his home. As we sat in the parlour admiring some Japanese views, we heard the story of our host's conversion. It was on a pleasure trip to Japan, undertaken chiefly for the restoration of shattered health, that he bade good-bye to folly and sin. To speak in his own words: "Alone in my state room, separated from my worldly companions, the Spirit of God came to me once again. It was made very clear to me that God was calling for the last time, saying, 'My Spirit shall not always strive with men. If you do not yield now, I shall never come again.'" As he realised the dreadful danger of hardening the heart against God's pardoning love, he fell upon his knees, confessing his sins, and taking hold of the promise in John iii. 16. From that day his heart was filled with peace, but for some time thereafter his mind was greatly exercised as to whether he should not give away all he had and follow the Master as a missionary living by faith. Finally God made it clear to him that he was the appointed steward of means which he should use to the glory of Him who gave them. As the above sketch shows, both Mr. George S. and Mrs. Carrie Judd Montgomery are devoted workers in the vineyard of the Lord. The latter is the editor of a monthly journal, Triumphs of Faith, a work that has been laid on her heart since her wonderful recovery from a long and painful illness (spinal trouble, with complications), resulting in utter prostration, and death approaching fast. No doctor could help; but the Great Physician healed her in answer to prayer. Mr. Montgomery has also passed through the experience of being healed by the Lord. In a little book entitled "The Prayer of Faith," by Carrie Judd Montgomery, these and other testimonies are given, with details as to the cases. It is also related that Faith Montgomery, their only child, a bright little girl, was healed in the same way when in a dangerous condition.

WILMA MORGAN.

Indian Widows and Orphans.

THE Pandita Ramabai is now in America. For the past ten years the friends there have supported the "Shâradâ Sadan" at Poona, and have had the joy of knowing that during that time no fewer than 350 child-widows and girls have shared in its advantages.

As the result of the famine, three hundred additional widows have almost suddenly come into the Pandita's hands, and on their behalf a second school has been started at Khedgaum.

The association in America has been reconstructed, and its object will be "to promote and assist in the education and to ameliorate the condition of widows, deserted wives, and unmarried women and girls, all of the higher castes in India."

The two schools will be on a different footing. In the Shâradâ Sadan the inmates will have full liberty to keep their caste and religion. They will have, however, every facility to learn Christianity, and embrace it if they choose to do so. In the Umkti school at Khedgaum the work will be entirely Christian, as it is designed to be a special Christian mission for the widows and women of the higher castes. The expenses of both institutions will amount to 20,000 dollars (equal to £4000) annually.

The Pandita is looking earnestly to Christians in England to take a share in this labour of love on behalf of a class so large and so needy as the high-caste widows of India, who, if they are her countrywomen, are our fellow-subjects.

It is plain that the growth and expansion of this work is almost limitless, and it is one with which, from its peculiar features, none of our Zenana Missionary societies (centres of untold blessing as they are for India) can efficiently deal on any large scale.

Khedgaum, where the new work is carried on, is thirty-four miles from Poona (East) on the railway. Buildings "well planned and under wise supervision" have been erected for the three hundred or more widows. The entire farm of 120 acres is under cultivation, and three wells have been dug. Rev. D. O. Fox, A.M.E.M., says: "Things look as if the Pandita is likely to be as good a manager of a farm as she is of the Home."

It is hoped that this may be the centre of missionary efforts on the surrounding districts. Already that work has begun. Miss Abrams, in charge of the Khedgaum work during Ramabai's absence, writes to her, on March 25: "Agibai goes out to preach. Having the tonga, she goes to a large number of villages, I think fourteen or fifteen. And she gets large numbers to hear her gladly. I pray that there may soon be a turning to the Lord among the people."

In the autumn, God willing, the Pandita will be in England, on her return to India. We trust she will there plead the widows' cause herself, and that a small council may be formed to share with her a part of this burden for the Lord's sake. Meantime, the widows at Khedgaum have to be fed and clothed and taught. May God incline some of his people to send aid at once for this purpose, that by "many thanksgivings unto Him" He may be glorified.

G. A. JACOB, Colonel,
JAMES L. MAXWELL, M.D.

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

THE sixth year of this work for God has closed with a record of steady progress, under Divine care and guidance. The hon. sec., Mr. J. T. Isaac, 163, St. George's-street, London, E., has had frequent news of wanderers brought back to God's fold, and of lives, even in dark Africa, made glad and bright by Christ's presence and power.

Mr. and Mrs. George Knapman, who have been present on the island for over two years, have found abundant opportunities for varied service in connection with the Rest. Regular visitation of vessels in the harbour has opened the way for large distribution of Christian literature; services at the Rest have been well sustained on Thursdays and Sundays when the men are allowed ashore; and every care is taken to make the place worthy of its name, as a home and shelter for our seamen when separated from friends and country.

Services for the native population, conducted in the Swahili language, have borne good fruit; and Mrs. Knapman is active in classes for the women and girls, most of whom are water-carriers. Access has also been obtained to houses of the better class, where women spend most of their time shut within four walls. With more lady helpers, this part of the work might be greatly developed. Additional helpers will soon be required to relieve Mr. and Mrs. Knapman, who will need rest and change.

Four blue-jackets belonging to one ship newly arrived in the harbour were induced to enter the Rest. Three were the worse for drink, but all remained for the meeting. In a few days they returned and signed the pledge, but on the following night one, a Scotsman, came and said "I was bound to do more last night before turning in, so I fell on my knees and asked God to pardon me. He did, and my mates won't be long after me." On the following Sunday his two friends and another sailor all left the Rest rejoicing in Christ. These four seamen, by their consistent lives on board ship, are witnessing for Jesus, and bringing others to Him.

Additional workers are needed, and with increased funds, medical and industrial branches of the mission could be organised. Mr. Isaac will be glad to correspond with any who feel led to offer themselves for this foreign service.

Notes From Italy.

THE May issue of "A Voice from Italy" contains several deeply interesting items of intelligence. At Naples, Rev. Dr. Gay has had the pleasure of baptising a Jewish merchant, and admitting him to the communion along with three ex-Romanists. A young man, formerly a monk, a professor of literature and philosophy, has recently been received into the college of the Evangelical Church of Italy.

A pastor, who has been making a tour of inspection in Central Italy, writes of Schiavi d'Abruzzo, a village in the Adriatic:—

"I was astonished to find poor, ignorant, aged people (the oldest seventy and his wife sixty-seven) repeating correctly passages from both Testaments, Psalms, and hymns, and portions of sermons heard during the last four or five years. Truly the Gospel works miracles! And what interested me greatly was to find the respect in which they are held by their Romish neighbours, and the good influence which they exert all around them."

The Waldensian Church Missions are doing excellent work in the midst of the darkness. In a recent circular, Major Frobisher says: "Strange enough, whilst the prospects of the work seem to say 'Forward!' the treasury, with its peculiar eloquence, seems to say, 'Stand still, or curtail; I am empty.' The 138 missionary agents must receive their salary every month, or they will starve."

The offices of the Society are 118, Pall Mall, London, S.W.

Amelie les Bains.—The French pastor at Perpignan, M. Arand, is desiring to erect a Protestant church here, which could be used for both French and English services. At present a room is lent only on alternate Sundays, and M. Arand (who is an ex-priest), comes over from Perpignan to conduct the services. He refuses all pay and gives the amounts collected at the services to the fund for the new building. He has advanced money and secured a good site, and now only needs £250 for the building. The Lord has blessed this good man's work in various places. Any friends desiring to help the work should communicate with Pasteur Arand, 4, Place St. Joseph, Perpignan, France.

The Late W. E. Gladstone.

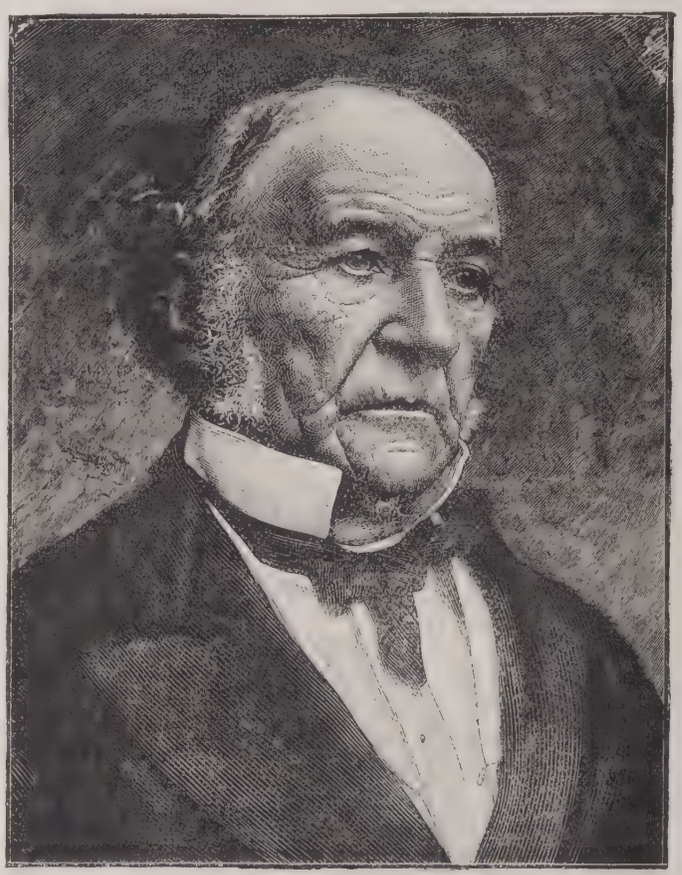
AFTER a tedious and painful illness, borne with heroic and Christian fortitude, Mr. Gladstone passed peacefully "from one sleep into another," early on the morning of Thursday, May 19. For weeks, the whole Empire—indeed the whole civilised world—had been watching in spirit by the bedside at Hawarden; and now, with one consent they mourn the passing away from their midst of the great statesman—the most prominent public figure of the present century.

Mr. Gladstone was first of all, in the public knowledge of him, a politician. With that aspect of his character and life-work it is not our province here and now to speak. Perhaps no statesman who ever served his country and his kin awoke fiercer opposition on the one hand and more unfaltering allegiance on the other. But through all the praise and the blame it is true, as The Times well remarks, that "his motives were high and his hands were clean." His rule of life was a sharp and simple distinction between right and wrong. He implicitly followed his conscience whether to do or not to do.

The deceased statesman was a strong upholder of the State Church, but, Churchman though he was, Mr. Gladstone had no warmer or more faithful supporters than Nonconformists, because they believed that beyond and beneath the outward form of his ecclesiastical proclivities he had a strong grasp of the realities of the Christian faith, and a keen sympathy with all Christian and philanthropic effort, without distinction of party. The cause of national freedom and of wide enfranchisement found in him a passoinate and eloquent advocate.

In all his relations Mr. Gladstone was essentially religious. The daily papers have been dwelling upon his conspicuous patriotism, and it is impossible not to see him here as a man of faith. "I cannot tell you," he once said in a great public utterance, "what I think of the nobleness of the inheritance that has descended upon us, of the sacredness of the duty of maintaining it. I will not condescend to make it a part of controversial politics. It is a part of my being, of my flesh and blood, of my heart and soul." Throughout his life, and in all his service, he was ever recognising God and appealing to religious principles.

One of his many books, designed to establish faith and counteract destructive criticism, was "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture," originally written as a series of articles in Good Words. Popular in form and eloquent in style, these chapters furnished useful solutions of several Bible problems, and constituted a powerful call, on practical and common-sense grounds, for a halt in the depreciatory analysis of the Old Testament records.



By several publications Mr. Gladstone did good Christian service. It is gratifying, however, to know that the Bible was, to him, not merely a subject of academic study, but a precious possession and an everyday companion. This was made singularly clear in the closing paragraphs of the fervent plea for the Book which he contributed, in the form of an Introduction, to "The People's Bible History," edited by Dr. G. C. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., published just three years ago. Having commended the Holy Scriptures to the serious attention of "the class of which I have been a member for more than three-score continuous years—the class engaged in political employment, and invested with so considerable a power in governing the affairs and in shaping the destinies of mankind"—he concluded:—

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." As they have lived and wrought, so they will live and work. From the teacher's chair and from the pastor's pulpit; in the humblest hymn that ever mounted to the ear of God from beneath a cottage roof, and in the rich, melodious choir of the noblest cathedral, "their sound is gone out into all lands, and their words into the ends of the world" (Psa. xix. 4). Nor here alone, but in a thousand silent and unsuspected forms will they unweariedly prosecute their holy office.

Who doubts that, times without number, particular portions of Scripture find their way to the human soul, as if embassies from on high, each with its own commission of comfort, of guidance, or of warning? What crisis, what trouble, what perplexity of life has failed or can fail to draw from this inexhaustible treasure-house its proper supply? What profession, what position is not daily and hourly enriched by these words, which repetition never weakens, which carry with them now, as in the days of their first utterance, the freshness of youth and immortality? When the solitary student opens all his heart to drink them in, they will reward his toil.

And in forms yet more hidden and withdrawn, in the retirement of the chamber, in the stillness of the night season, upon the bed of sickness, and in the face of death, the Bible will be there, its several words, how often winged with their several and special messages, to heal and to soothe, to uplift and uphold, to invigorate and stir. Nay, more, perhaps, than this, amid the crowds of the court, or the forum, or the street, or the market-place, when every thought of every soul seems to be set upon the excitements of ambition, or of business, or of pleasure, there too, even there, the still small voice of the Holy Bible will be heard, and the soul, aided by some blessed word, may find wings like a dove, may flee away and be at rest.

These words cannot be conceived as other than the outcome of true religious experience; and it is well for a nation that those who conduct the affairs of State should have such convictions, living for eternity while working in time, and serving God while seeking their country's good.

His passing away has been most pathetic, and yet in keeping with the storm and stress that have characterised his life. The bravery and resignation with which he suffered, and his Christian acquiescence in the physical trials he had to endure, will make his deathbed memorable. We can but thank God for endowing him with such capacities, and enabling him to exercise them so largely for the benefit of his countrymen and of humanity.

HIS SON-IN-LAW'S TRIBUTE.

The pulpit and other public tributes to the memory and worth of Mr. Gladstone have been legion, and space would entirely fail for wide quotation even of the briefest kind. One of the most touching was that by his son-in-law, Rev. H. Drew, of Buckley, a neighbouring parish to Hawarden; his words have a peculiar interest because of his special knowledge and close opportunities for observation. Mr. Drew said in the course of his sadly interesting sermon:—"I think of some words which he said to me on one of those days before he went upstairs for the last time. He had asked me to take his arm and help him walk two or three times up and down his study, and he spoke of the yearning for rest, the longing for release, the burden of physical existence, the heaviness of the dispensation. Then he paused and said, with all that wonderful solemnity and conviction that his voice commanded, 'But I remain totally unshaken in my resolute belief in the wisdom and will of God'; and then he added, 'Do not think me unhappy. The consolations are wonderful. The wealth of prayer which is being offered up is the greatest possible comfort.' It is a joy to us to know how deeply he was moved and how thankful he was for the kindness and love shed upon him by the world. He received it with such touching humility. He was, I may say, so surprised, as though he had not deserved it, so profoundly impressed by it, and the words were often on his lips, 'kindness, kindness everywhere—nothing but kindness.'

"He was most tolerant of other men's views, however different from his own, and could associate and even be intimate with those who differed totally from him on the highest of all subjects. But his own opinions never wavered—they rested on what he termed 'the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture,' and upon the historical tradition or traditional history of the Church. He desired, as all Christians must in a sense desire, the union of Christendom, but there never was a wilder misconception than to suppose that he ever contemplated joining the Church of Rome. He did not parade his religion, but he never concealed it. He never used conventional phrases about sacred subjects, nor dragged religion into ordinary talk, but if he were challenged it all came out in a moment.

"When living as a young man in chambers in London before his marriage, he always had family prayers with his little household, and for many years after his marriage, and until the pressure of public life became too great, his constant practice was to write, week by week, a short sermon upon the epistle or gospel for the day, and to preach it at Sunday prayers with his family and household.

"Mr. Gladstone's ardent desire as a young man was to take Holy Orders, and to devote himself directly to God in the ministry of his Church. There is existing (the time will come when doubtless the world will know it) a most remarkable letter written to his father when he was just leaving the University, in which he set forth fully his earnest desire to become a clergyman, but his father was bent upon his entering Parliament, and in obedience to his wish the cherished hope was abandoned. Who can doubt for a moment that in his case all was ordered for the greater good of man?

"He desired intensely to die in peace and goodwill with all. No man could have had that desire more richly and more ungrudingly fulfilled."

A Business Man's Victory.

"He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God" (Rev. iii. 3). "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. ii. 10).

IT is a beautiful spring evening; the last day of the week. The breath of this much-loved season of the year seems to penetrate even the smoky, stuffy, middle-sized town situated in the valley. It is pressing upon the brow of a young fellow, who has just come out of a house at the end of the town. In some circumstances he would be quick to notice it, but this evening it escapes his notice. His face, not handsome, is marked by a seriousness that perhaps does not help to improve it. That morning he had had a letter from a business firm in the town, offering him an extremely lucrative position if he would throw his interest into the business and serve them to the best of his ability. Such offers do not come every day to young men. This would probably not have come to him if those concerned in it had not known his father; moreover they had ascertained the good character he bore at the office where he now worked.

Not much to look serious about you think? But he knew this about the business: If he entered it he must be prepared to see things done, and to do them, that, to put it plainly, are not quite honest. Almost, but not quite! Well, this young fellow was, will it sound strange to modern ears? a disciple of Jesus Christ, and was striving to do the will of God. The letter had been sent to him at the office, so none in his home knew anything about it. He had come out this Saturday evening to settle the matter in his mind, and decide upon the answer to be sent back on Monday morning.

He walked away from the town, towards the common, over the common, and away for a climb over those hills! Satan walked with him. What a splendid opening it was! What might it not lead to? There would be enough and to spare for them all in the little home circle. They would be able to move to a larger and more convenient house; perhaps keep a carriage; what a luxury that would be for his mother! Then there was his sister. She would no longer have to earn her own living, as she did now, so uncomplainingly and patiently, though he knew full well what it meant to her. That young brother, too, so quick and clever, would have no obstacles in the way of a brilliant and successful career. In short, it would be a blessing to them all; there lay the way to wealth and prosperity. Then to think of the help they would be able to give to others; the charitable works of all kinds they would be able to support; the pleasures they would be able to enjoy themselves, and afford to others! It was dazzling!

But what about those things not quite honest? "Pooh! Do you set yourself up as being better than Mr. So-and-So, who is of the firm, and a Church member, too! Why, man, they all go to church; they are liberal in their donations, regular in their attendance, faultless in their conduct! So, you are trying to cast out the mote out of your brother's eye! They are all good people; there can't be much harm in it after all." Oh! how tempting it is!

He had reached the summit of the hill. What beauty and calm without, what fear and conflict within. Is he going to yield to the whispered suggestions? Is he going to shut his eyes to the evil of it? Is he going to yield his allegiance? On that silent and lonely hilltop he stood, with bowed head; his whole attitude expressed a stern inward battle. A few moments pass thus, of which the adversary does not waste one.

Suddenly the bowed head is raised—he draws himself up. The soft glow from the setting sun lights up the face raised to heaven; three words escape his lips, breathed rather than spoken, "I am thine!" The light shining upon him seemed to him as the search-light of God's spirit, penetrating to his very soul. "Will you also go away?" His heart replied again from its depths, "I," and his soul was in his face now, "I," he whispered, "am thine!" There was no man there then, save Jesus only! Victory through his Lord Jesus Christ. Victory! Victory! The soft breeze whispered it, the light, green-tipped branches waved their joy; the birds carried the joyful sound through the air. With the young man it was well; it was glory in his soul!

He went down filled with joy and peace. He went down to strive in life honestly, manfully, courageously; he went down to be a light in that little home—in the office; he went to be a help and a blessing to his fellow men; he went down to fill his mother's eyes with tears of love, and joy, and thanksgiving—to cause his sister to praise God for his unselfishness, gentleness, and sympathy, to be to his brother a guide, a help, a counsellor, pointing him to and showing him daily the plain and narrow path of righteousness. He went down to be all this, not in his own strength—oh, no: in the strength of the Lord. He went down to serve God.

The letter of refusal lay upon the desk in the office of the firm from which it had come. What did they say? What would the world say? "Fool?" Oh, I can see God lay his hand upon that young shoulder; it is a touch full of blessing, for has not that soul chosen to serve Him rather than Mammon? I can hear God say in the face of heaven and earth, "A hero!"

"Who, then, is Willing?"

WHATEVER may be the faults of our missionaries, idleness is not one of them, and it is pitiful to read of the numerous and difficult labours which must be undertaken by them simply because the workers are so few, so miserably few.

I have before me a letter from three men in India, which reveals a state of things common to most mission centres there or elsewhere. They write: "We have been very busy; the returns had to be made up and accounts settled for the year. Some sixty-five separate monthly accounts have to be kept, some of them involving considerable writing. All these have to be balanced in December."

So much for the book-keeping of the station. In addition to this, missionaries are expected to be architects, builders, carpenters, and general managers, for churches, preaching-halls, schools, and teachers' houses have to be erected. Concerning these they write: "All building is tedious work, and trying to both flesh and spirit."

After telling of the 150,000 copies of books, pamphlets, and papers sent out from their press, the editing of which is a heavy responsibility, they further mention a Christian newspaper, which has a weekly circulation of 3000. This they think "might do much more good if they had time to use it to full purpose."

They also write: "We have sundry schemes on hand to make our press a still more powerful Christian agency; but this cannot be done till a person can give the whole of his time to the management of the press and the editing of books, tracts, and periodicals. If the 'children of light' were as wise in their generation as the 'children of this world' this would have been done long ago, and publications suitable for all classes of the community would have been available to meet the needs of the people."

Much more might be said about church work, college work, school work, etc. The fact that impressed me most was this: Hundreds, thousands of our fellow-subjects are dying in darkness either entirely heathen, or with the false light of materialism and pantheism. They need the Scriptures, they need pure Christian literature; but this can only, or chiefly, be supplied through the missionary press which is on the spot, and can best adapt itself to their requirements. Alas! that these starving souls should have to go elsewhere for their literary food.

The great need of the work is Christian editors. There must be men and women in England who feel that this may be a call to them to dedicate that wonderful dower of intellectual activity which God has given them, and who truly pray—

Take my intellect, and use
Every power as Thou shalt choose.

A. J. EKINS.

8, Warkworth-terrace, Cambridge.

Helping God's Work.

THE subject of maintaining Gospel effort is at present engaging many minds; and from time to time we receive communications embodying suggestions, new and old, practicable and otherwise. Three contributions to a consideration of the matter are now before us, and we summarise them for the benefit of our readers.

The first is from Rev. EDWARD STORROW, of Brighton, the venerable writer on missionary work and economy. He asks how the resources of the Church of God can be so increased and husbanded as to be adequate to meet all reasonable demands. He maintains the following as fundamental principles: "A higher, nobler type of spirituality; a deeper consciousness of stewardship and responsibility to God for money and its use; as much pleasure in giving as now we have in getting; more of the mind of Christ and more of the fruits of the Spirit would fill to overflowing the treasury of God." After a word of caution against the undue multiplication of societies and in advocacy of care in the expenditure of funds, Mr. Storrow says: "The assumption that we have a right to with the money we earn and possess may be law, but it is not Gospel. Our money belongs to God more than to ourselves, and his will should be considered in the use of it all. Would it not be a wise and safe course for all young Christians to begin to give to God as soon as they begin to earn, be it little or much? Parents give for their children, and thus the children fail to acquire the habit of giving for themselves." Mr. Storrow urges all Christians to consecrate a fixed proportion of their income to the cause of God, and maintains that a resolve never to accumulate—to live in the same style on £500 a year as on £100—would lift many lives out of grossness into dignity. Again, economy in domestic affairs, for Christ's sake and the poor, is not mean, but dignified.

DO AS WE PLEASE

The second communication is from Dr. JOHN MOIR, of Edinburgh, who contends that Christians must not only make offerings in aid of God's work, but of all their increase. He writes: "By claiming the tithe as his own, God makes us his debtors to that extent, and so coincides with the habits or principles of the world. There are thousands who will make a point of paying their debts, and make sacrifices for that purpose, who will not put themselves about to make a gift. The payment of the tithe is a duty or just claim; the withholding of which is sin—robbery of God. But there is a pleasure in giving, and God loves a cheerful giver. Therefore, while limiting his claim to the tithe, God permits us the pleasure of making freewill offerings, which would not be in our power if God claimed all we have as his. It is the universal acknowledgment of all who lay aside God's tithe that they not only give ungrudgingly, but give more than otherwise, and do not stop at the tithe. Christians who object to the tithe are those who have never adopted it. The arrangement commends itself as just, reasonable, and efficient. By the tithe God has provided the means for carrying on his work; and if 'we bring all the tithes into the storehouse,' God will pour us out such a blessing in spiritual results that 'there shall not be room enough to receive it.'"

BRING FORWARD THE TITHE

The third is from Pastor JAMES FANSTONE, well known for his work in Brazil. He asks whether money contributed to church maintenance is "given to God," and writes: "A free gift requires no equivalent in return.

MUCH OF THAT WHICH IS GIVEN to churches at home is given to be received again in one form or another. Some of it is given to be expended on denominational aggrandisement, which gratifies our pride. Much is spent to secure ornate and musical worship—a luxury which suits our æsthetic tastes. A talented and highly-cultured ministry is sought and obtained that we may be constantly entertained at an intellectual feast. We pay for such with our money, and are careful to get what we pay for. We spend our money and look for the equivalent. In casting up the Lord's tithes, we may not say that what we spend on our church connexions is given to God. We give to God only that from which we expect to derive no personal benefit; and this should be over and above what we spend on our church relations at home. What is given to missions among the heathen is truly given to God."

THE MAY MEETINGS.

Christian Instruction Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society took place recently at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park. Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS took the chair, and with his usual earnestness commended the work of the Deaconess' Mission to the practical sympathy of his large and interested audience.

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN laid emphasis on the fact that the Society is doing much to demonstrate the full value of woman's work in evangelising the masses. The Society's deaconesses, working in over thirty districts within the area of Greater London, carry with them, wherever they go, the blessed Gospel of peace with God and good-will towards man. As practical proof of "good-will," these consecrated women of education, visit the needy, minister to the sick, care for the dying, and in numberless ways prove themselves true and faithful friends to "the least" of these, his "brethren." Two of the deaconesses, representing such different districts as St. Giles's and Westminster, gave brief and deeply interesting reports of their work, the former causing no little amusement by asking what a mere man would do who found himself at the door of a room inhabited by a broken-armed mother, a couple of sickly babies, and a few small children, unwashed and unfed!

The only saddening note in this pleasant meeting was struck by the treasurer, Mr. THOS. DENCE, whose balance-sheet bore forcible testimony to the fact that this most Christ-like mission is not meeting with the pecuniary support it deserves. True, some five or six suburban churches, either collectively or through some individual members, are helping to give some needy sister-church the unspeakable help of a devoted deaconess, but, none the less, unless speedy and substantial aid is received, it will become a sorrowful necessity to curtail even the present limited number, "which," added Mr. Dence, "but for lack of funds, could easily be multiplied twenty-fold."

Friends of the Lord's poor are invited to apply for fuller information to the Secretary, Miss A. R. Neuman, 35, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Christian Literature Society.

AT the annual meeting of the Christian Literature Society for India, the Secretary reported the maintenance of all the three branches of the work—vernacular, village education, the training of Christian teachers, and the spread of good literature. Some 8000 children had been brought under direct Christian educative influence. Those trained at the Society's institution at Ahmednagar are now at work in different missions throughout the country. As to books, over 100 new volumes were issued during the year, besides many new editions. It was stated that the recent disasters in India had seriously affected the finances.

The claims of the Society's work were earnestly advocated by Lord Northbrook (chairman), Lieut.-General Brownlow, Rev. F. D. Waldock, of Ceylon, Rev. I. H. Hacker, of Travancore, and Mr. Henry Morris.

Strangers' Friend Society.

THE annual meeting of the Benevolent or Strangers' Friend Society took place last week at the office, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., under the chairmanship of Mr. Edmund Ives. A second meeting was held in the evening in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street.

The report points out that the society is very comprehensive in the bestowment of its charity, as all creeds, classes and nationalities can claim it; personal investigation (except in very special circumstances) invariably precedes relief, and this is done with facility by the district committee, who have the assistance of a band of 165 Christian visitors, neither of whom receive a penny for their devoted service. The charitably-disposed who desire to dispense their own bounty, without the assistance of some such agency, mostly find it to be impracticable in a city like London, where so many impostors exist.

The evening meeting was largely attended, and speakers from various districts of London related some very touching stories of cases which had come under their personal notice during the year, and which the society had in many ways been the means of very materially helping.

The Peace Society.

THE annual meeting of the Peace Society was held last week in the Friends' Meeting House, Bishopsgate. Sir J. W. PEASE, M.P., who presided, said the Press and the Church were on their side more than ever before. He regretted that America no longer set a good example in this matter. He agreed that Spain had ruled Cuba badly, but the Americans, instead of attempting to apply moral suasion through nations like our own, were producing a greater evil than that which they were endeavouring to remove.

Sir ARTHUR ARNOLD moved a resolution expressing satisfaction that arbitration was now continually appealed to by statesmen, and confidently anticipating its organisation on a permanent basis. He could not agree that it would make for peace if we were to make an isolated reduction of armaments. Nor was he an advocate of peace at any price; but he hoped diplomacy would never put off the splendid armour of courtesy, and he deeply regretted Mr. Chamberlain's recent offensive and insulting reference to Russia.

Another resolution was moved by Mr. JOHN WILSON, M.P. (Mid Durham), expressing apprehension at the proceedings in North-West India, the Soudan, and the Far East, and at the complications between this country and France in Western Africa, and earnestly hoping that the Government would maintain such an attitude of friendliness and conciliation as might bring about a pacific and equitable solution of all questions at issue. Mr. CARVELL WILLIAMS, M.P., seconded the motion. Mr. L. B. SWANN moved a third resolution expressing profound regret at the present war, and hoping that it might remain limited in area and come to a speedy end. Mr. J. F. HANSON, a citizen of the United States, seconded the resolution, but he pointed out that his country had been looking on for three years at the starvation and butchery going on within ninety miles of its shores, hoping and remonstrating without avail, and had perhaps only done what this country would have done. The resolution was adopted, with a rider expressing sympathy with those Russians who are suffering exile and death because of their conscientious objections to military service.

In the Secretary's report attention was called to the attempts which are being sedulously made to militarise and navalise the nation, especially to the efforts in that direction among the young, and the new movement—the Boys' Life Guards Brigade, founded by Rev. T. Leonard, Colne—as being entirely free from the military element of the other organisations, and as training its members in the saving, not the destroying, of life is specially recommended.

The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society.

THE annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, the Bishop of Worcester presiding. Rev. Dr. Noyes (hon. sec.) read the report, which stated that although, through the death of Archbishop Plunket, they lost a third of their income, yet the committee had been able to close the year free from debt, though they had been obliged to reduce the pastors' stipends. They hoped to have good financial results from the visit of Bishop Cabrera, who had come to England to speak and preach on behalf of the society.

The Bishop of WORCESTER hoped that they would be able to help these struggling churches to do the work to which God had called them. He hoped that the society would be supported, because he believed it was really a bulwark of the Church of England.

Bishop CABRERA gave an interesting account of the work of, and flourishing condition of, the Reformed Church, and of the number of Romish priests who continually come to him to be taught respecting the Gospel. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE assured Bishop Cabrera of the sympathy with himself and his fellow Reformers in their struggle to free themselves from unlawful terms of communion, and pledged the meeting to maintain the funds of the society, and urged the necessity of completing the Episcopal Endowment Fund. Bishop INGHAM of the Falkland Islands followed on similar lines.

The evening meeting, held in St. Martin's Town Hall, was presided over by Mr. J. H. BUXTON, J.P., who warmly welcomed Bishop Cabrera, and referred to Spain as the ruling power of the powers of the world 200 years ago—a country of terrific power at sea, and on land the greatest empire—and though Spain was so great and has still most remarkable natural wealth, and was one of the first countries in Europe which received Christianity, yet few great institutions are found for the care of the orphan, the poor, and Spain as a nation is going down-hill. Out of a population of 18,000,000 two-thirds cannot read. What was the cause of this fall from, and waning of, power? He believed it was the want of the light of the Gospel. Priestcraft and not the pure light of the Gospel had ruled the land. He was thankful for the work done by the society and the progress God had given them. He considered that Bibles should be circulated throughout the land, and they would be found irresistible in spreading the Gospel, and thus bring light to this darkened nation.

The Bishop of Clogher and the Bishop of Exeter spoke, and Bishop Cabrera, Canon McCormick, and Rev. A. E. Barnes Lawrence gave accounts of the work carried on by the Society.

Army Scripture Readers' Society.

AT the annual meeting of this Society, held on Wednesday week in the Lower Exeter Hall, Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS presided.

Colonel PHILLIPS read an abstract of the annual report, stating that the Society had now over seventy readers at work in various parts of the United Kingdom and abroad. Two new readers had been appointed to work among the troops at Reading and Bristol, and another new reader was now on probation in London, and the committee hoped to appoint two more immediately. The report expressed the hope that the time was not far distant when each county would realise its obligations to their territorial regiments, and provide a reader for each battalion, thus fulfilling the desire of the Commander-in-Chief who wrote: "I sincerely wish that every regiment in the army had a Scripture reader attached to it."

The CHAIRMAN heartily maintained the claim of this useful society. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE said he felt the work of that society was Christlike in its methods. The readers were the "Soldiers' Friends." They went amongst the men in a spirit of friendliness, and were particularly anxious to be friends and helpers to the lad who was leaving home and parents to go forward to the wild waste of army life. Those lads were embarking, as it were, on a dangerous wilderness, and it was their duty to provide in the best way possible for their welfare. He looked upon that work as a very real work. They represented one great power helping the nation in a most solemn and very spiritual sense. Colonel RAPER thought that, considering the success which had been attained, the society claimed their general and liberal support. Rev. R. DEANE OLIVER said that, as one of the Chaplains to the Forces, he was able to testify to the personal value of the readers supplied by the society. In his own work at Aldershot, the reader there was his right hand man. Colonel WELLESLEY ROBINSON said that they wanted largely increased support if their work was to be enlarged and extended.

Women's Protestant Union.

THE annual missionary conference of workers among Roman Catholics in different countries, promoted by this Union, was held at Exeter Hall last week. At the closing meeting, Dr. BARNARDO, who presided, said they could never forget that Mr. Gladstone in the midst of manifold duties had found time to publish his noble contributions to the Romish controversy, which had immensely strengthened the hands of the Protestants. He added that he did not think Roman Catholicism was increasing, but the spirit of it was, and he had little patience with the apologies that were offered for Mr. Kensit's protests. One fruit of those proceedings was to be seen in more definitely Protestant statements by bishops than he remembered having seen before.

The following resolution was passed unanimously at every meeting of the conference:—"That, having regard to the rapid advance of Ritualism in our national Protestant Church and the steady encroachments of Romanism all over the land, together with the seeming countenance given to both by many of our Bishops and rulers, this meeting desires to place on record its deep sense of responsibility in reference to the existing state of things in the Establishment, so dishonouring to God, and views with profound sorrow the necessity for the unusual action recently taken in several London churches, but feels that, ordinary means having failed to arrest the progress of Romish and ritualistic practices in our midst, the present situation demands the adoption of such extreme measures. And this meeting hereby enters its solemn protest against every attempt to betray our country into the hands of the enemies of Protestant truth and liberty, or to undermine the principles of the glorious Reformation from which the nation has so long reaped incalculable blessings; and it further resolves by all lawful means to resist the encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism, and to assist those who are doing the same."

A number of friends, including Canon McCormick and Rev. J. E. Wakerley, spoke at the various gatherings.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage.

A WELCOME surprise greeted Pastor Thomas Spurgeon on Monday night at the thirty-first annual meeting of this Association. At the close of his report Mr. Stephen Wigner, the secretary, handed Pastor Spurgeon a cheque for fifty guineas, collected by the colporteurs for the building fund of the new Tabernacle, with the intimation that there was more to follow. A collecting card shown him at the same time revealed the fact that many of the sums were very small, the largest being only 2s.

Mr. Spurgeon, in his reply, warmly thanking the colporteurs, told of a poor widow he had heard of that day who had given a like amount, 2s., towards the fund. During the last month, he said, he had signed his name more frequently than ever in his life before, in answering letters of sympathy and in endorsing cheques and postal orders.

The meeting was held in the Spurgeon Memorial Hall, a spacious and handsome building in the grounds of the Stockwell Orphanage, and was largely attended. A number of the colporteurs were present, and the hand-bell ringers of the Orphanage entertained the audience between the speeches. The staff now consists of fifty-four colporteurs, who effected sales amounting to £6826, and representing a total of 759,456 publications, of which 9357 were either Bibles or Testaments. In addition, the colporteurs have conducted 6824 public services in chapels, mission rooms, and in the open air, in addition to paying "multitudes of visits to the sick and distressed." The financial account shows receipts £4335 (including profit on sales) and a deficiency of £86. An urgent appeal was made for increased subscriptions, as the committee desire to extend the work of the Association. Several of the colporteurs spoke, giving particulars of the varied work in which they are engaged.

Field Lane Refuges.

THE annual demonstration in connection with these institutions was held at St. Martin's Town Hall. The Marquis of Northampton presided. The report, presented by Mr. Peregrine Platt, stated that the Bible Ragged Schools at the Central-buildings in Clerkenwell had had a gross attendance of 32,446. Habits of thrift were encouraged by penny banks, provident funds, and boot and clothing clubs. The temperance meetings had had an attendance of 17,841; the crèche, 4116; the Ragged Church, 27,521. At the refuges 869 deserving persons had been admitted, and 326 helped back to employment. Through the kindness of certain great London firms 16,000 poor families had been supplied with meals from the remains of warehouse dinners. In the certified industrial schools at Hampstead there were now 130 boys and seventy-six girls. The year's income had been £8003, including about £4600 for the industrial schools, voluntary contributions providing the remainder.

During the evening a display of drill was given by the children of the industrial schools.

Workmen's Trains.—Efforts are being made to improve the service of "workmen's trains." Since so many of the labouring classes in London live at a distance from their work, we are glad the facilities for cheaper and more convenient travel are being considered.

The Scotch Assemblies.

THESE Presbyterian Parliaments are now in full session in Edinburgh. In the Established Church the Moderator, who this year is Dr. Leishman, of Govan, gives his principal address at the close of the proceedings. In the Free Assembly unusual interest was felt in the opening address of the Moderator, Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh. It was on "The Minister in Himself"—a thoroughly characteristic deliverance, and quite Puritan in tone and scope. He urged the greatest possible self-examination on the part of Gospel ministers and a close cultivation of all the inner virtues. He touched on such points as personal humility, prayer, endurance, etc. As to the matter of silently enduring offences and contradictions, he took exceedingly high ground, as a brief extract will show:—

Unless you are blameless men; unless you are inoffensive men; unless you are men of much patience; unless you are the most long-suffering of men, and the most full of kindness and of love unfeigned of all men, you need go no further in your ministry. First and last, almost as much as all your work and all your prayer, be so humble-minded men as to give no offence in anything. Give any one of your people offence in anything, and you had better send him his disjunction lines at once. Never explain, never debate, never dispute with any of your people. With all other men you meet you may; but never with any of your own people. Give them all their own way; give up your very birthright to them; give up your very citizenship to them. Say, be it so; and please not yourself but them. And that not to the aged only, and the wise, and the experienced, and the able in mind, and the saintly in heart. But, still more, to the weak, and to the opinionative, and to the ignorant, and to the self-willed. The more men there are in your congregation who make it a condition that you shall yield to them, that is the best congregation in all the Free Church for you. Even Christ pleased not himself in this world. This was the best of all possible worlds in all His Father's universe for Him. And he endured all the contradictions of this world, till his already perfection was made still more perfect.

At the second sitting of the Established Assembly there were interesting discussions on colonial chaplaincies, and on the developments of women's home mission work.

At the Free Assembly, the report of the Committee for the Conversion of the Jews, presented by Dr. J. G. Cunningham, took account of evangelistic, medical, and educational agencies in Europe and Asia. It appeared that the various departments of work, at Budapest, Breslau, Constantinople, Tiberias, and Safed, are in active operation, and notwithstanding hostility on the part of the Jews in some centres, there is encouragement in labour among young and old. In the Holy Land there have been outbreaks of fanaticism, and special difficulties had been experienced. This was an evidence of the influence of the mission, and no cause for discouragement.

Several addresses were delivered in justification of work among the Jews, and answering the objections commonly raised. Principal Miller, of Madras, remarked that success is not always indicated by the counting of heads. The work demands patience; and the history of the Mission showed that the Church of Christ possesses a considerable measure of waiting power. Dr. Thomas Nicol, convener of the Church of Scotland's Jewish Mission Committee, gave his impressions of the work as he recently saw it in Palestine.

Dr. John Smith, of Broughton-place U.P. Church, told a similar story. Answering the objection, Why continue the work? the latter said: "We have no option; we dare not forget the holy land that the Master has ear-marked for missionary enterprise. Again, the situation was far from stereotyped. Whatever the motives might be, they found the Jews themselves turning back to that land. Outside the walls of Jerusalem there was a great new Jerusalem arising. Then the Christian Churches of Europe and America seemed to be turning with new zeal and fresh interest to that land. Russia especially, quickening the Greek Church, was seeking to obtain a wider and deeper hold of that nation. One could not travel through the land without feeling that there was an element of change, that events were converging upon something new, the precise nature of which might not for some time be revealed."

East London Tabernacle.

AS we recently announced, the East London Tabernacle has at length "settled" a minister in succession to Pastor A. G. Brown, and it is hoped that the large building in the Burdett-road, Bow, which for many years past has been the scene of splendid work on soundly spiritual lines, will continue to be the home and centre of many-sided evangelistic and philanthropic effort. The new minister is Pastor Sydney J. Jones, a "Spurgeon" man, who for the past few years has directed the work in Liverpool which was so long and honourably associated with the name of the late W. P. Lockhart. On Tuesday last week Mr. Jones was "recognised" as pastor at a large public meeting, and all friends of the Tabernacle work will pray that the enthusiasm then shown by members of the church and congregation may find continual expression in varied endeavours, in which a whole-hearted minister shall enjoy the support of a loyal and united Christian fellowship.

Mr. T. A. Denny, an old friend of the church and its work, presided; and after devotional exercises, a statement of experiences and expectations was made by Mr. G. W. Ovenden, as spokesman for the diaconate. The goodness of God in the gift of the late pastor, whose labours for thirty years were a great benediction, was duly acknowledged; and it was mentioned with joy that, in the interregnum of over twelve months, the church had kept well together, the roll bearing 2244 names on the first Sunday in April, when Mr. Jones began his ministry. Mr. Ovenden added that the church had sought Divine guidance in all its acts and engagements, and already there are signs of good things under the new pastor. The next speaker was Dr. Howard, of Liverpool, who, while regretting the loss sustained by the church at Toxteth Tabernacle, commended the choice of the East London friends. He bespoke hearty co-operation with the young pastor, of whose earnestness and sincerity he spoke in terms of warm appreciation.

Pastor A. G. Brown, who spoke of himself as "such an one as Brown the aged," rejoiced with his old church in its present joy. His mind surveyed the thirty years during which he ministered in East London, and he praised God for all the good that had been done. It was fitting that Jones should follow Brown, and he hoped that the new pastorate would extend over a similarly long period, and be still more largely blessed of God. Expressing himself confident that the old truths would still be taught in the Tabernacle, Mr. Brown commended the new pastor to the warm sympathy of the people who had so loyally stood by him.

Hearty words followed by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who gloried in the prospect of the Gospel of God's grace being still the burden of the preaching in the East London Tabernacle. Dr. Harry Guinness, whose sympathy in the work was a great comfort to the church while pastorless, announced with pleasure that Mr. Jones took a warm interest in the cause of foreign missions. A few words of welcome were also spoken by Rev. J. W. Atkinson, as representing the Congregational ministers of the district.

The new pastor's turn to speak did not come until the evening was far spent. The reception accorded him was very cordial, and his response was as modest as it was spiritually reassuring. A loving tone pervaded his words, as he declared himself for God's Book and the service of Christ. His faith was in the message, not the messenger. Through the grace of Christ he had apprehended the Gospel, which he could therefore call his own, and he believed that it would prove for the betterment and uplifting of those who might come under his ministry. Mr. Jones intimated that the works that had gathered about the Tabernacle would be maintained; mission effort, with various benevolent adjuncts, would be promoted as friends might come forward for their support. The work could not live on the past; the demands of the day must be met, and therein the work must live. In conclusion, Mr. Jones announced prayer-meetings for intercession to be held every evening during the week beginning May 22.

Buried in the Country.—IV.

"YOU'VE got hold of the women, but I must do something for those lads who are always lounging about the place," remarked my brother, one Saturday afternoon, as we were returning from a ride. "They look as if they hadn't an interest in life, dawdling their time away like that," pointing, as he spoke, to a knot of boys of 15, 16, and 17, who were sheepishly watching us from a distance. A few minutes' silence, and then he added, "I have it—I'll manage it somehow, though it will be a bit awkward to run, when I'm so busy; still, you must help, and A. might help also"—mentioning a young friend who was staying with us just then. "We'll have two things for them—one to keep their hands out of mischief on Saturday afternoons, and one to do the same on week nights." By the first of these other "things" I found my brother meant a cricket club, with himself as president and captain and trainer. In a paddock belonging to the grounds of the old Manor house, where we were installed, there was space enough to allow of a good cricket pitch without annoyance to anyone. And this was forthwith handed over to the club which was to be.

In a month the club was an accomplished fact; and a very great boon it proved, not only to the lads, but to many of the older men in the village as well. Fives, rounders, bowls, hockey, and other games were gradually introduced, and the vicar was so greatly struck by the improvement in the street lounging that this plan had caused, that he started prize-giving on his own account, to such an extent that the recreation club ran a danger of becoming utterly spoilt!

The other "thing" which my brother had in his mind for the lads in the evenings was more of an experiment, and at first we were doubtful if we could get the boys to take an interest in the plan. Very simple lessons in wood-carving he had thought of, and this we tried to carry out—at first with very scant success, but later on with an abundant measure thereof. Both he and I could carve, and knew the fascination of the work when once entered upon, and we thought that if we could teach some of these village lads we should not only be giving them a pleasant employment, but training them in eye and hand.

ELEMENTARY CARVING,

There was one drawback, however, to the plan, and that a serious one. Many tools would be needed. Tools were costly, and funds were not over-abundant among village lads! At the least, the outfit for each boy would cost 7s. or 8s., and that would be quite beyond their powers. What should we do? Why not teach chip or Swedish carving, someone suggested, that only needs two or three tools, and since all the patterns are geometrical in design, the boys will be trained to greater accuracy of work. The force of this suggestion struck us both, and especially on the score of expense. We determined the cost must be kept down as much as possible, and that it would be far better for simple work to be done, and done well and accurately, than to attempt anything very elaborate.

When next we rode over to the market town, not many miles distant, we went to a tool-maker and explained our needs. The latter, "to oblige a class," consented to make us the requisite chisels at a reduction in price, and accordingly we ordered a dozen "spade" chisels, and a dozen "veiners," at 9d. each tool. With these two tools, let me say, it is marvellous how much and how good work can be done, and the exquisite results that may be obtained in the way of ornamental design. Twelve blocks of lime wood, ½ inch thick and six inches square, costing 6d. each, were our next purchases, and a small hand grindstone and oil-slip completed the lot. Two shillings accordingly covered the expense for each boy whom we taught, and by asking each of our pupils to pay twopence weekly during the twelve weeks that the class continued, we made the plan self-supporting. Compasses, pencils, and rulers we provided as common property. The designs I got from the School of Wood Carving at South Kensington; the School publishes several sheets of these, graduated in complexity; and though of course it is perfectly easy, when the principle of chip carving is understood, to make one's own designs, these sheets save time and labour. I gummed them on to stiff cardboard, and cut them up (as each sheet contained twenty or thirty designs).

We found it was much better to make every boy set out his designs with compasses and ruler by himself, than to do it for him, and the first two lessons in carving that my brother gave to the twelve boys who formed the class were to give them a few simple rules and explanations as to the dividing up of circles and lines—in fact, the elements of geometry. Luckily, we had a magic-lantern, and having hired some wood-carving slides, were able to show the lads how they must begin and what in the way of results they might hope to arrive at. Many more than twelve wanted to join the class, but we declined to teach more than these at a time, telling the others they should have their turn when the three months were up, or perhaps even we might have a second class during the week. This last ultimately we did have. After a boy had covered his block of wood on both sides with designs, we let him try his hand on any box or stool or other article which he could get hold of. Bellows, book covers, boxes, frames, etc., the lads covered with carving, and several of them became so proficient that they sold their work and got orders for more.

All through that winter, with strict regularity, the boys turned up on Thursday nights for their carving hour, occasionally whittling away a piece of their thumb or finger with the wood, but quite happy, for all that, especially as I had a stock of bandages and plaster at hand for such emergencies.

This wood-carving class did us good service in a deeper way than merely as a means of entertaining the village boys. By it we were able to get to know them individually and very well, and to win their love and respect. That won, the way was readily opened in many cases for more serious talk. We were able to draw them to attend a Bible-class, and to join us, when the shyness had worn off, in other religious gatherings.

RUS.

Solace for the Sleepless.

"The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."—Matt. viii. 20; Luke ix. 58.

LORD JESUS, oft I lie awake,
And vainly long for sleep.
Thou did'st our human nature take,
And painful vigils keep.
Oh! let thy love my pillow be,
To rest my weary soul in Thee.

Thou hadst no home, with comforts dear,
Wherein to lay thy head:
A manger was thy cradle here,
A cross thy dying bed.
Remember all thy life-long grief,
And send my anxious heart relief.

And if it be thy Father's will
That sleep forsake mine eyes,
Thy loving grace will grant me still
What nature's strength denies.
Waking or sleeping, bid me rest
In peace upon my Saviour's breast.

W. BLAKE ATKINSON.

8, Arundell-terrace, Weston-super-Mare.

A Worker in Guildford.—For a number of years a capital work for the reclamation and improvement of waif boys and girls in Guildford has been carried on by Mr. Macdonald. He has been the instrument of much blessing to this class, and there are numberless cases of those who are now doing good honest work in the world in consequence of the loving sympathy and kindly training bestowed on them. Unhappily the chief worker is now himself laid aside with a serious and incurable internal complaint, and desires the prayers and sympathy of his friends. His address is Mr. Macdonald, Ardkeen, Albury-road, Guildford.

The World-Wide Circle of Prayer, started two years ago, continues to grow. It is believed that nearly 20,000 Christians from all the Evangelical Churches are united by it in definite prayer on the first day in every month, for the fuller manifestation of the Holy Spirit. About 500 representative ministers have signed a circular in recommendation of this practice. Rev. J. O. West, M.A., to whose labours as hon. sec. this progress is largely due, will, with the guidance of a representative committee in Birmingham, seek to strengthen the organisation of the Union, and further its work by addressing united gatherings of Christian people in different parts of the country. Particulars from Mr. John Blackham, Hon. Gen. Lay Secretary, Hill Top, West Bromwich.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

June 5.

"JESUS CONDEMNED."—Matt. xxvii. 11—26.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—I. Tim. i. 15.

TEACHER should take class through history between last lesson and this: From Supper to Gethsemane, Judas' betrayal, Peter's denial, Trial before the Sanhedrim. All leading up to this trial before Pilate. The Sanhedrim had adjudged Jesus worthy of death, but they had no power to put it into execution.

THE CHARGE AGAINST JESUS (12).

That He proclaimed Himself to be "Son of God" would be no crime at Roman Law, so they brought three other charges:—

(1) Inciting to revolt against Rome (Luke xxiii. 2).

(2) Rebellion in refusing to pay tribute.

(3) Treason, claiming to be King.

Pilate held an interview with the Jews outside the court, while Jesus was inside (John xviii. 28-32).

PRIVATE TALK WITH JESUS (11).

Pilate has now returned to Jesus, and asks the question in v. 2. The word thou is emphasized as though Pilate thought it was impossible for one so bereft to be a king. Christ's answer means "What you say is true."

Teacher should contrast the two senses in which Jesus and Pilate were thinking of kingship. Beware lest we make a similar material blunder. Christ's kingship is spiritual—his kingdom within us.

CHRIST'S SILENCE (13, 14).

When accused He answered not a word. Not that He was afraid, not that the charges were true. But there was no convincing of enraged Jews that they were lying.

Compare—His silent glance at Peter when he sinned—so when we sin.

His silence before the ignorant disciples.

His silence before our childish prayers and petulant rebellion.

PILATE SEEKS TO SAVE HIM (15, 16).

Pilate regarded this as a happy thought. It would not have saved Jesus, but it would have relieved Pilate of responsibility in the matter. "I release unto you" (18)

DREAM OF PILATE'S WIFE (19).

Pilate's wife may have been a secret disciple or admirer of Jesus.

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS (22)?

Pilate's question must be asked by all. All who have heard his name must either reject or accept Him. Thousands reject Him to-day. Time will come when they will say, "What shall I do without Jesus?" What are you doing with Him?

In your hearts enthrone Him,
There let Him subdue
All that is not holy,
All that is not true.

PILATE WASHES HIS HANDS (24).

That did not remove the guilt from him. The murderer's hand is ever stained with blood, from which no washing with water can cleanse.

No washing in holy water will cleanse the soul from sin.

Not all the blood of beasts
On Jewish altars slain
Could give the guilty conscience peace,
Or wash away the stain.
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb,
Takes all our sins away,
A Sacrifice of nobler name,
And richer blood than they.

HIS BLOOD BE ON US (25).

And their prayer was answered. His blood was upon them and their children. The very people who cried "Crucify Him" were massacred in their thousands some thirty years afterwards at the fall of Jerusalem, which Christ foretold.

Lessons.—The unrepentant cannot escape from the results of their own sin.

Beware of rash oaths and statements. You have no right to lay your sins on your successors.

THEY SCOURGED JESUS (26).

Scourge—a bunch of whips. The end of each whip loaded with spikes of lead or bone, which cut into the flesh.

So the trial was ended. Jesus condemned to crucifixion. We hate the men who brought Him to this. Let us not be of those who "crucify afresh the Son of God" (Heb. vi. 6).

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Flowers.

By REV. JOHN MITCHELL.

THERE is one thing about flowers which I do not like, and that is their long names, so difficult to remember and so hard to spell. I like a pretty name for a pretty flower just as I like a pretty name for a pretty child. Jesus wants to write his own best name in our hearts if we will only come to Him. Those who have it ought to be careful not to do anything to bring dishonour upon the name of Jesus.

Flowers love the sun. They get their beauty from him, and they keep his company as long as they can. When the sun goes away they close up for the night. Jesus is the great Sun, who shines into our souls to make them beautiful with his own loveliness. How happy are all who ask Him to shine in and to drive away all the darkness of sin! He has done much for us, and those must be wicked indeed who do not love Him.

Flowers are of different sizes and shapes. We can admire them all. The smallest flower has a beauty which the largest has not, and one is more suitable for some things than the other. You would not wear a sunflower in your coat, or dress, but you would wear a forget-me-not. There is no cause for envy among flowers, for all serve the purpose for which God made them. And there should not be envy among girls and boys, although all are not the same size or appearance. All may be happy and useful, each in his own place.

Flowers speak of God. He makes them grow and gives them their form. He turns the sun upon them, and lo! they are painted most lovely colours. He makes the seasons to suit them, and feeds them with the soil and the air needful to their growth. God is beautiful Himself; and the flowers reflect his beauty. A great man used to pray, "Make me beautiful within." That is just what God wants you and me to be. All outward beauty fades, but the beauty of the soul, cleansed by the precious blood of Christ, is everlasting.

Flowers are innocent. Could they look back upon their life they could do so without a blush. Not so with us. Our thoughts, words, and actions have not been all pure and holy. The past tells us of sin and error. We have not been so good as we might have been. We cannot undo the past evil we have done. Our only hope for the future is by trusting Christ and seeking his forgiveness.

Some beautiful flowers are poisonous. The lovely foxglove, which you see so often, is very poisonous in every part. Yes, what is lovely may be dangerous, and carry death with it. How many pleasures of the world are like the foxglove! They are attractive and pleasing, but carry death in them. But we must not blame the flower. The poison is a medicine, and has been very useful in saving life when properly used. The doctor knows how to give it that it may not kill, but save the patient. When God does what seems strange we may be quite sure He has some good purpose to serve in so doing.

All flowers are not alike in their stems. If the flower is a heavy one, the stem is thick and strong to bear it. Everything, even the smallest trifle, has been considered by God, who made them. God is great, yet He cares for little things. And if He condescends to show his wisdom and goodness in the flowers of the field, how much more will He love to show his wisdom and goodness in us!

Honey-tipped Sins.

By REV. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

Henry M. Stanley tells us that when he was passing through the forests of Africa, the most formidable foes he encountered were the Wambutti dwarfs. These diminutive men had only little bows and arrows for weapons, so small that they looked like children's playthings; but upon the tip of each tiny arrow was a drop of poison which would kill an elephant or a man as surely and quickly as a rifle. They would steal through the dense forest, and, waiting in ambush, let fly their arrows before they could be discovered. They dug ditches and carefully covered them over with sticks and leaves. They fixed spikes in the ground and tipped them with poison. Into these ditches and on these spikes man and beast would fall or step to their death. One of the strangest things about it was that their poison was made of honey.

It is thus the Evil One wages his destructive warfare against God's people, and especially the young. Stealthily, under cover of darkness, by treachery, with weapons seemingly harmless, through the sweets of life, he comes clothed as an "angel of light." Yet how deadly are the little honey-coated sins which he administers! How sure the destruction of him who is deceived into wandering from the straight and narrow way.

What are some of these sins usually thought of as little sins? There are sins which by comparison with great sins men call little. Ill-tempered in family life, at school, and in commercial and church relations; a light and frivolous spirit; slandering and backbiting; vanity and folly in dress; indulgence in hurtful amusements; careless and impure conversation; pride, etc. There are a host of these "little foxes" we might easily find.

What is the harm they do? They injure our consciences by hardening them; they keep us from feeling the sweet companionship of Christ; they grieve the Holy Spirit; and especially, they make way for greater sins.

There is an Indian story of a morsel of a dwarf, who asked a king to give him all the ground he could cover with three strides. The king, seeing him so small, said "Certainly," whereupon the dwarf suddenly shot up into a tremendous giant, covering all the land with the first stride, all the water with the second, and with the third he knocked the king down and took his throne.

It is said that a man one day strolling along in the country happened to see a magnificent golden eagle flying bravely upward toward the sky. He watched it with delight and admiration as it so strongly mounted upward, but presently he saw that something was wrong with it. It seemed unable to go any higher. Soon it began to fall, and presently it lay at his feet a lifeless mass. What could be the matter? No human hand had harmed it. No sportsman's shot had reached it. He went and examined the bird, and what did he find? It had carried up with it a little weasel in its talons, and as it had drawn its talons near to its body for flight, the little creature had wormed itself partly out of them, and had drunk the life-blood from the eagle's breast.

How like this it is with sin! It may appear a very little thing one is at first tempted to do, but presently it fastens upon the soul and works death and destruction.

How must little sins be dealt with? Not tenderly, not connivingly. We must watch against and pray against and fight against even the smallest of them, or by and by we will be overcome of sin and fall into utter ruin. Look out, dear young people. Make no place in your life for so-called minor evils. Sometimes honey-tipped sins prove the most destructive. —Selected.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 122.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Ambrose D. Adams, Wm. C. Anderson, Jacob American, Daisy Allen, J. H. Archer.

B—Janet* and Elizabeth* Black, Albert P. Baker, Henriette Bardot*, Gertrude and Edith* Badham, Chappie and Aline* Bazett, Geo. Brand, Charlotte* and Mabel* Bailey, Conyers, Massy, and Allen Baker, Edith Ballard*, Edith Bonsted*, John K. Bennett, Mary Beck*, Leonard and Frank Bentall, John and Ethel Benger, Frances J. Bennett, Mabel Birney*, A. Bridges, Gordon Bolton, Ashley H. Bowker, S. V. Boxer, Albert Botting, John Bott, Ralph Bourne, C. Brown, Ernest and Herbert Bond, Eva Browne*, Ernestine Buhl, Harry and Bertie Butler.

C—Lois M. Craven*, Walter Carter, Alice E. Craug, Mabel Clay, Gladys* and Beryl* Calvert, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, M. M. and Cicely Craven, Mary and Willie Charles, Maggie and Jessie Carter, Jack J. Clarke*, Beatrice M. Cashford*, Lily Clarke, D. Rosalind and Jack Clarke, Isabel Candlin*, Louise Chevier, Bessie Cheale, Henry J. Cheney*, Dora Corrie, Dorothy Cooper*, Annie Cooper*, Ruth Coupe*, Nina Coote*, Arthur G. Cox, Marjorie Collins, Emily Church, Susie and Walter Cumbers, Nellie, Thomas* and Henry S.* Curr.

D—Pologuia Daws*, Blossom Davis, J. Ernest Davey*, Kenneth Dunbar, Gordon S. Duncan, Marjory and Dorothy* Dyke.

E—Muriel Edwards*, Sarah Evans, L. Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd, Eva Edmundson*.

F—Jeanne Faucon, Charles Faillettaz*, Richard and Arthur Farmer, Sibyll Fawkes, Janet Fawkes*, Kate, Bessie, Maggie, Mabel, and Eva* Fletcher, Louise Filhol, Aileen* and F. A.* Figgis, Hyacinth B. Fitz-Simons, Willie, Reginald, and Ernest Findlay, Flossie*, Janetta, Agnes*, and Maggie* Fullarton.

G—Margaret, Edith*, and Stuart Gray, David Gardiner*, Ivan Garrod, Mary E. and Daisy Greenacre, Mildred Greenwood, Maurice Greenleaf, A. and F. Gibbs, Minnie Giddings, Edith Grieve, Dorothy Grove, Thos. Groombridge*, Daisy Groves.

H—Annie E. Hazledine, Dorothy E. Harris*, Edith* and Winifred* Harvey, Ella Hake*, Edith and Emily Hearn, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Dorothy Hinton, Nora Hill, Georgette Hoffmann, Lucie Houdain, Margaret Hogg, Louie Hooper, Alice M. Hogben, Marjorie R. Hogge*, Lila K. Hughes, Helen, May, Harcourt*, and Tom Hunter, Edith and Mena Hunter, Ethel Hutchings, Eva Hutchings.

J—J. Sinclair Jackson*, Nellie Jelfs*, Henry B. Johnston, Lizzie Johnstone*, Dudley Joyce, Norman* and Kate* Johns.

K—Thos., A. D., A., and Isa* Kay, Marjorie Kitson, G. Norman King, H. Lilian and Ruth Knight, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Henry and Nessie Laing, Arthur J. Lamb, Alex. R. and Annie W. Lemon, Guinefred Leigh, Murray and Grahame* Lloyd, Nellie Lovegrove, Edith and Henry Lowe.

M—Jean H. Maxwell, Marjery and Trevor J. Matthews, Mary D. Maitland-Kirwan, H. T. Malaher*, Avie Mallory, Lillie Mallory, Enid Mather, Gladys Mather, Ada B. Macnutt*, Margaret, Bella*, Thos., and Abraham Mack, Chas.* and Geo.* Macdonald, Florence Mackenzie, K. and Dugald MacGlip, Ethel Mackenzie, Margaret Macphee, S. E. Macintosh, Barbara* and John K. Maconchy, Hilda Medill, Charlotte Millar*, Francis and Alice W. Milne, May C. Mills*, Gwendoline Moir*, Annie E. Moule, Dora Muir.

N—Ernest and Edie* Nash, Dorothy and Henderson Nathan*, Herbert G. Newton.

O—Eva and Maude Oakes, Sidney and Katie Oliver, Lottie and Harriette Orr, F. A. Osmond.

P—Winnie Page, Dorothy Patten, Winnie, Maggie, Ada, Willie, and Jessie Palmer, Willie Petter, Edwin T. Peters, Walter C. Perryman*, Eva Petter, Evelyn P. Pechey*, Laura D. Percy, J. Ernest Pearce*, Mary, Louie, and W. M. Penny, Clarice M. Peach, Joanna Pearman, Isabel W. Phipps*, Francis S. Phillips, Kathleen Pincott*, Lillian, Margaret, and Jessie Pook, Cyril Pomeroy, Ernest Poynder.

Q—Minnie and Edith Quick.

R—Edward, Marjorie, and Herbert Rainey, Nora Read, Cyril M. Roberts, Ethel M. Rogers, Jessie, Isabel, and Elmina Roe, Sydney and Olive Robertson, Mildred Robinson, Hugh Russell-Smith.

S—Edith Saunderson, Betty Swanston, Eric*, Gladys E., Wilfred, Llewellyn, Undine and Gwendoline* K. Shaw, C. D., D. D., and T. M. Stanier, Constance Schaeffer, Elsie M. Stark, Margery Smart, Dollie and Bob Salt, Stuart A. Scragg*, Flora Shadbolt, W. Stangoe, Chas. W. Saunders, Ida Schwengeler, Janet Speed, Agnes M. Sterry, Douglas Shepherd*, Marie E. Sleigh, Nellie Sery*, Kate Smith, E. Short*, Emily Stuart, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Nannie and Louie* Tibbits, John W. Thomson, Nettie*, Willie, and Kate* Thomson, H. Toller*, Frank and Alice M.* Thompson, Harry Thompson, Neville Tufnell.

V—Gertrude Vellacott, Elsie Vigars, Dorothy Vigers.*

W—Stewart Watson, Violet Walker, May Watson, Pringle Wilson*, Edith M. Wilkins, Ada Willmer, Maggie Wright, Wilfred, Arthur*, and H. A. Wright, F. Wilson, Eva Winpenny, Florrie White.

Y—Edgar Yerbury, Annie Yeo.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (123).

1. Ps. vi. 2. My strength is made perfect in weakness (2 Cor. xii. 9).
2. Ps. vi. 2. I am the Lord that healeth thee (Ex. xv. 26).
3. Ps. cxix. 133. The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord (Ps. xxxvii. 23).
4. Ps. lxxxvi. 4. Your heart shall rejoice (John xvi. 22).
5. Ps. cxliii. 8. I will cause you to walk in my statutes (Ezek. xxxvi. 27).
6. Ps. xxii. 11. Lo, I am with you alway (Matt. xxviii. 20).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert, Jessie Alen, Dora, Ernst, and R. Aldwinckle Constance M. Atkinson, A. Rose Anton, W. T. Aldous, Violet Ashworth.

B—Chappie and Aline Bazett, Edith R. Ballard; Herbert H. Braddow*, Florence Blackman*, Jas. and Edith Barker, Edith Bensted, Jasper* and Leslie* Ball, Mary Beck, Emily Bridgewater, Daisy, May, and Gordon Bligh, Gertrude, Nellie, and Beatrice Brookfield, Lindsay* and Leonard* Browne, Phyllis Boyd*, Gertrude M. Bush.

C—Millicent M. Craven, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Eleanor Chance Chas. H., Mabel, and Isabel Candlin, Rosaline Castein, Edith M., Annie M., and Mabel Cole, Kathleen* and Brereton Code, Irene Coppard.

D—Ralph and Dorothy* Daintree, Winnifred de Rusett*, Vera Dickinson*, Nellie Dowsett, Kitty*, Violet, and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Violet Dodsworth.

E—Leonard Ewin.

F—Richard and Arthur Farmer, Charles Faillettaz, Eric and J. A. Field, Eva Fielder, Constance Furlong.

G—David Gardiner*, Clarice* and Bertie Gale, Maudie and Albert G.* Grey, Dorothy Green, Mary Gover.

H—Frances Harding, Nellie Hatchett, Jack ard Thos. Harris, Rose Hamilton*, Dorothea R. Harris, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Byres Hill, Theodora Hill, Dorris and Harry Hodgkinson, Louie Hooper, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games.

J—Dora Jay, Betty Jacobs, Florrie Jennings*, Norman* and Kate* Johns, Dora Joyce.

K—Max, Eva, and Stanley Kalv, Maurice Kilinsky, Mary, Ethel, and Carn Kestin.

L—E. Lawrence, Sidney, Henry, May, and Edward Law, Blanche Lindup*, Cecilia Lichtenstein, Harry and Edith Lowe, Nellie and Edith Lockhart.

M—Chas. and Geo. Macdonald, Ada B. McNutt*, Gracie and Margie Marston, Winnie and Robert Marriott, Reginald Measor, Ellen Morgan, Annie Moule, Arthur and Evelyn Moir.

N—Eleanor and Valerie Noel.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Kathleen* and Ethel M.* Pasley, Winnie Page*, Alice M. Palmer,* Dora M. Phillimore, Francis S. Phillips, Kathleen E. Pincott*, Rhoda Porter, Mary E. Plumb.*

R—Kate Rosenbloom, Ernest Ross.

S—Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Harold Sanders, Daisy Stanger, Annie Shepherd, Janet Speed, Ada M. Spencer*, Douglas* and Kathleen* Shepherd, Cicely C. Sherbrooke, Frederick Seth, Reginald Skinner, Esther Simmons, Flora Simmons, Betty Stocks, Constance*, Gertrude, and Mildred Scott, Jessie* and Ethel Snowball, Herbert M. Stuart, Ronald Studd.

T—Frank and Herbert Tomkins, Arthur Peveril, Herbert and E. Laurence Turnbull, Edith and Maude* Tyson.

U—Queenie and Lily Upton.

V—Dorothy Vigers, May and Hilda Vickers, Kenneth J. Vining.

W—Edith Williams, Cecile, Noel, and Phillis Wright.

FOREIGN LIST.

Prize Competition.—Division II. Second prize, Llewellyn Dale; hon. mention, Henry W. M. Baillie, Dora Ellen Wallace. Division III. Second prize, Jean McNicoll Scott, Queenie Dale; Hon. Mention, Annie Baillie.

Correct answers received:—

No. 111. Alice M. Hitchcock (Texas). Nos. 113 and 114. Mildred Fryer (Sydney). No. 117. Jean McN. Scott (Canada). No. 118. Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale (Bombay), Jean McN. Scott (Canada). No. 119. Frank and Vera Sjostrom (New York), Jean McN. Scott. No. 120. Francis W. B. Field (Germany), Frank Sjostrom. No. 121. Francis Field.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 124).

(AN ACROSTIC.)

1. { A place where men rejoiced the truth to know,
   { Yet daily searched to learn if things were so. Acts xvii.
2. Who in the fields did meditate at eve? Gen. xxiv.
3. What village did a wondrous Babe receive?
4. What grandmother her wise instruction gave? 2 Tim.
5. What son, too late, a blessing came to crave? Gen. xx. to xxv.
6. Who said, Lord, let thy servant now in peace depart? Luke.
7. What priest misjudged a woman sore at heart? Sam.
8. Who, claiming to give all, kept back a part? Acts v.
9. { Who at the prayer-meeting glad tidings had?
   { But those who heard, mistrusting, called her mad. Acts xii.
10. A steward of Herod, known to us by name. Luke viii.
11. What wicked favourite was brought to shame? Esther.
12. What prophet was by hungry ravens fed? 1 Kings.
13. What much-loved wife did exiled Jacob wed? Gen.

Initials of the answers spell,
As will be quickly shown,
A title which you know right well—
I hope it is your own!

[Give chapter and verse as well as answer. Children under TEN do the first five; under THIRTEEN the first nine.]

Personal.

I was glad to receive the large hamper of flowers from the Children's Flower Service, and also the other smaller packages.

FRANCES J. BENNETT.—Am sorry you have been ill, and so could not send your weekly Searcher.

THEODORA HILL.—Thank you for your letter. You will find the enclosure acknowledged in the Donation List.

JAMES BARKER.—It is necessary for your papers to be correct nine times during the quarter. A list of those eligible are printed the week of the competition.

LOUISE CHEVRIER.—I am very glad indeed to welcome you, and hope you will tell your friends about the Searcher.

UNCLE TOM.

(For Special Service Mission Notices see page 26.)

Home Missions.

Life in Earnest.

THE PONTYMOILE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE annual narrative of this undenominational mission opens with a review of the past twenty years' labours, and of the way in which Mr. Wintle was led into what has proved a great and fruitful work.

The evangelistic agencies in connection with the mission seem capable of dealing with every condition of life and circumstance. If the people of the district have not listened to God's good news, they have at least had the chance to hear, and it is not the fault of the mission if they have not heard and profited. The two chief branches of the work are the regular campaigns of the mission services at the halls, and the guerilla warfare of the open-air efforts; but there are many other ways into which the message is carried far and wide. By cottage services the Word of Life is carried into the very homes of the people; where there were not suitable halls or buildings, tent services have been held, and on several occasions travelling theatres have been hired for the Sunday for the purpose of holding services. Some people were attracted by the novelty who would never enter a hall dedicated to religious work, and much good has been done. The snares of evil are spread abroad so cunningly, and temptations are so numerous, that it is necessary to meet mine with countermine, and to seize every opportunity of bringing the souls and hearts of men into touch with the Gospel. The theatre services have often been fruitful of good influence and conversions. The mission believes in commencing early, and active Sunday-school work is supplemented by children's meetings, at which successful efforts are made to win the children before the evil day comes upon them.

Details are also given of work among tramps and in common lodging-houses; and of the deeply interesting rescue work on behalf of ruined and tempted girls, with the useful preventive home. The prisoners' branch also supplies good matter; while the winter's work among the destitute is described fully. Without the mission's help hundreds must have starved or sought the relief of the poor-house, but fortunately the superintendent's appeal for help was generously answered, the work of feeding the multitude was carried on successfully, and it is still being done on limited lines. This is a record of earnest, helpful, soul-saving work, which ought to win the sympathy and support of many readers. The superintendent is Mr. T. M. Wintle, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon., South Wales.

The Connellan Mission.

IN his recently-published report, Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin, says that "Ireland is becoming one of the most interesting mission fields in all the world." The grasp of Rome on the minds and hearts of the people is being loosened by the educating and enlightening influences of Gospel truth. Numbers of Roman Catholics read Mr. Connellan's little monthly The Catholic, with the result that the mists of error and superstition in which they have been cradled and reared are being lifted, and the true light is shining into perplexed and burdened hearts.

The weekly Gospel meetings and Bible-classes in Dublin continue to be well attended, and the workers are constantly encouraged by seeing fruit of their labours. Throughout the country districts Gospel light is silently but steadily and surely at work. There are many signs that the old order of priestly rule is passing away in Ireland, and in this work of letting the oppressed go free the Connellan Mission is bearing a noble part. Mention is made in the report of the attempt to suppress Mr. Connellan's lectures at Manchester and elsewhere—an attempt which miserably failed, and which has recoiled on the plotters themselves. Romish priests do not love the light of free discussion, but they can no more improve Christ's Gospel than they can prevent the sun from rising.

[407]

Medical Mission, Southwark.

INTERESTING meetings were held on Monday, May 16, in the afternoon and evening, at the Southwark Home Hall, Holland-street, Southwark, S.E., in connection with the opening there of a new Medical Mission. At the afternoon meeting, Dr. Maxwell reviewed the general progress of Medical Mission work in recent times. In London, the pioneer of the movement was Dr. Saunders, who started a mission in St. Giles in 1870. Since then Missions have been established in Islington, Marylebone, Whitechapel, Ratcliff Highway, and Lambeth. Dr. Henry Soltau and Mr. T. B. Miller also spoke.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, speaking on the financial aspect of the work, said that through the kindness of friends they had enough to start with. To carry on the mission about £480 a year would be needed. He referred to the great blessing and encouragement vouchsafed in the Home Mission work, in the three months since the opening of the hall, illustrating his remarks with several striking cases of conversion, and of the usefulness of some of the converts.

In the evening Dr. Owen gave an interesting account of Medical Mission work in Lambeth. Several friends gave addresses. At the close, some who were anxious about salvation were dealt with personally.

The assistance of lady workers on Tuesdays and Fridays at 10 a.m. in singing the Gospel, attending the sick poor, etc., is much needed. Gifts of flowers, bodily comforts, etc., will be much appreciated.

Mr. McNeill in West London.

DEAR SIR,—We ask the prayers, efforts, and sympathy of your readers on behalf of the approaching mission in the West End. Rev. John McNeill will give two addresses every day in the Albert Hall from June 13 to June 25 inclusive, excepting on Sunday. We earnestly desire that we may be directed as to the best method of making these meetings known amongst our friends, our Bible-classes, acquaintances, and servants. Will those who read this letter take upon their hearts the burden of this mission, bearing it up before the Lord in fervent, believing, expectant prayer, and using every possible means in their power of bringing souls to Christ during this most important opportunity? If the Christians and workers belonging to the various churches and philanthropic societies in this part of London will throw their influence heartily into the meetings, it is impossible to say what good may be effected, and we can safely say that they will return to their own spheres of work greatly refreshed, strengthened, and encouraged.

It may interest some of those who are living at a distance to know that the meetings at the Agricultural Hall were attended by many thousands of people nightly, and were wholly unique in interest. The variety, life, and vigour of the services, the hearty singing, and remarkable addresses kept these vast crowds spellbound night after night without the slightest evidence of weariness or movement, and the results were indeed blessed. We know something of individual blessing through the inquiry room work. But how widely the influence of those three weeks' teachings have extended only the Heavenly record can reveal.—Yours truly,

E. R. HOPE.

Our Sailor Lads. — The Arethusa boys have just been before the London public as helpers in the Lifeboat cause, but the Arethusa and Chichester are themselves greatly in need of aid. The funds for the making of the boys who form the crews of these vessels into sailors come only from voluntary sources, and the ranks of the helpers require considerable recruiting. Nearly 7000 boys of good character have been trained in these ships, 20 per cent. entering the Royal Navy, and 70 per cent. passing into the Merchant Service. The Arethusa and Chichester Hammock Fund has been specially instituted so that further aid may be secured for maintaining the work unimpaired. In view of the great want of British sailors, as well as on account of the philanthropic aspect of the work, we appeal for assistance. The society—the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children—has eight Homes in the country and in London for boys and girls, but any sum, however small, sent through this appeal will be allocated to the "Hammock Fund." The treasurer is Mr. W. E. Hubbard, 4, St. Helen's-place, E.C.

HENRY G. COPELAND, Finance Secretary.

The Servants' Mission.

THIS useful mission issues its 31st annual report, showing the great need for earnest work among the servants of the upper classes, who are often surrounded by influences of a worldly and delusive type. The original plan is still followed by visiting the places where fashionable parties are being held, receptions, Her Majesty's Drawing Rooms, etc.; to distribute Gospel books and converse with the coachmen and footmen; conduct Bible-classes and social gatherings; giving Gospel addresses in the mission room and in the open-air during the summer months; total abstinence meetings, etc. Many cases of manifest blessing have resulted, and there are not a few in home and foreign mission work who were won for God through the mission.

"Much good work is carried on by the members of the Christian Servants' Association, which is an outcome of the mission, in the houses and neighbourhoods in which they reside. These, with other Christian servants, are invited once a quarter to a social tea, followed by a meeting for mutual help and encouragement.

A butler says:—"We will pray that you may have a blessed time on Thursday. Should so much like to be with you all, as such fellowship fills the soul with joy and peace. Christians too seldom experience the fulness of blessing to which they are called."

A footman says:—"I have had the pleasure in collecting for the Lord's cause among the servants, and in giving away tracts. We have been to two this season, and I visited the cottagers, giving them books, and praying that God would bless to their souls his own Word."

A housemaid says:—I am sending you the collecting card, and am glad that it is full this time. Please send me another. I cannot say I like begging, but it is good sometimes to do some things which one does not like, and when I know that it is so much needed I feel that I must try again. I should not have got what I have without asking the Lord to help me."

A cook-housekeeper, who has since gone out to India to take charge of a house of rest for missionaries, says:—"I feel it such a privilege to be able to ask your fellowship in prayer for still further guidance in the path of obedience. The Lord seems to be clearly calling me to go, but has not yet revealed the time. 'If it tarry, wait for it,' is my message."

Interesting particulars are also given of the Men and Women Servants' Homes, but for these we must refer readers to the report. It may be had of the superintendent, Mr. James Goodchild, 109, Eaton-terrace, S.W.

Home of Industry.

AT our workers' meetings last week, we had the joy of welcoming back some who had given youth and strength to the Lord's work among the heathen, and who had been permitted to see the work prosper in their hands. Lord Radstock presided.

Mr. WILLIAM RUDLAND, who had spent over thirty years in China, said that in his district the natives are taking up the work and are themselves opening new stations. When he went to Tai-chow, twelve years ago, there were no converts, and it was most difficult to get an opening into any of the villages; now, the converts number 5000, and it is almost impossible to tabulate the number of enquirers. Two hundred stations have been opened, and this in a radius of about fifty square miles.

Mr. EDWARD GLENNY having spoken cheeringly of the work in North Africa, in spite of opposition and persecution, Miss MOORE, of the L.M.S., told of six years' work in Upolu, the central island of the Samoan group, 120 miles in circumference. She and her colleague, Miss Schultz, have charge of a girls' school for training native Christian workers. There are ninety-six at present in the school, and no less than thirty who have passed through the school are now actively engaged in work for Christ in Samoa and other islands.

Lord RADSTOCK gave a very solemn and practical word, based on 1 Thess. i. 1: "The Church... which is in God the Father." The meeting closed with a season of earnest prayer.

29, Bethnal-Green-road. A. MACPHERSON.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

A YEAR'S GOSPELLING.

THE annual report of the Evangelization Society is pregnant in vital facts bearing on evangelistic work generally—the crying need, and the abundant results. Its importance, as supplementing ordinary effort, is shown in a letter from the vicar of a parish, appealing for help, who states that there are seventy-two thousand souls in his parish, and church and chapel accommodation for about twelve thousand.

The past year has been one of great encouragement. "We have been permitted to hear of the conversion of many hundreds through the missions we have been privileged to supply in England, Wales, and Scotland."

A well-known leader in evangelistic work writes:—"Since 1876 we have had several missions, the most successful being the first, conducted by Mr. Notman soon after he joined our society, and a recent one taken by Mr. James Shields; but all along there have been converts who have in most cases stood very well."

Details are given of special missions in all parts of the land—North, South, East, and West—in large cities, manufacturing towns, villages, and rural districts. Everywhere there is evidence to show that, to a greater or less extent, the Gospel has reached hearts and led men and women to Christ. Clergymen, ministers of various denominations, Christian workers, country gentlemen, manufacturers, and farmers unite in bearing this testimony. During the year 19,456 evangelistic meetings have been held by 244 evangelists, the total audiences being about two millions.

The report contains many cheering incidents, illustrating the power of the Gospel and its fruit in newness of life. Here are one or two out of many such:—

"On the first Sunday of the year I was preaching at ——. At the close of the morning meeting a young man came up and introduced himself as one who had been converted at meetings I held some years ago, and said that his brother was also blessed at the same time. At the close of the evening meeting the said brother came and told me of the night he was converted, and said that he was now a worker in connection with an open-air band."

"On Friday last I went to the booking-office window at —— Station. After getting my ticket the booking clerk said: 'I should know your face; don't you remember me? I was converted at your meetings at B—— fifteen years ago.' This young man is now an earnest Christian worker."

"Not very long ago, a young man — a home missionary—asked me if I had ever conducted a mission in ——. I replied that I had, but a good many years ago. 'Yes,' he said, 'it will be ten years in July. It was then as a lad that I attended your meetings there and was brought to know the Lord, and now here I am, a home missionary, looking forward to the time when I shall become a foreign missionary.'"

"During a tent mission in ——, a young man came to me and asked if I had ever preached in ——. 'Yes. But why do you ask me?' He replied: 'My companion in Glasgow was writing, and told me that at one of your meetings there he was brought to the knowledge of the Truth whilst you were speaking.' This was nine years ago, and the young man is now chairman of one of the Lodging-house Missions."

The Hon. Secretary, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C., will gladly send the report to any interested.

TENT WORK IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

AN occasional paper, just issued, reviews the work of the past twenty-four years in Gloucestershire and Somersetshire, and adds:—"We pitched our first tent last year at Staple Hill, a populous and rapidly-growing suburb of Bristol. Forty consecutive Gospel services were held, and the Lord gave testimony in conversions. A united tent mission was also conducted for a fortnight in the village of Nailsea to encouraging congregations, with cheering results. Another tent was erected in the needy village of Clutton, and in the midst of a most promising work of grace a violent storm blew the tent to ribbons, without any possibility of repairs. As sufficient funds have not yet come to hand to secure two new tents to replace those too old and rotten for repairs, together with the careful overhauling and renewal of ropes, etc., necessary, meanwhile, we make use of those we have, and only as the sinews of war are supplied by the Lord's stewards are we warranted to go forward. Already several spiritually dark and needy villages have been brought to notice, which we hope to visit with tents, as means are forthcoming. During the summer months our large Bible carriage did an excellent work, being away from Bristol the whole of the season, visiting over fifty towns and villages in Somersetshire and Gloucestershire.

63, Ashley-road, Bristol. JAS. A. VICARY.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

The WEAVER BROS. commenced a fortnight's evangelistic meetings at Keppochhill, Glasgow, on May 15. They had a capital start, large audiences being present afternoon and evening. Much interest is being manifested, with evident signs of blessing.

A tent mission has been held by Mr. JOHN HARRIS at Shelley, Sheffield. The closing meeting was held on Sunday evening, when the tent was packed and extra sitting accommodation had to be procured. The mission, which lasted three weeks, has proved a season of much blessing to many who gathered night after night to hear the Gospel message, simply but faithfully, earnestly and lovingly proclaimed. Many have testified to blessing received. Many who at first could only cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner," have learned to pray for others. It has touched many a heart to hear children pray for their parents, and wives for their husbands—in many instances these prayers have been answered. Altogether, it has been a memorable and blessed season.

Mr. HENRY THORNE has concluded a ten days' Gospel mission at the Enfield Tabernacle (pastor Geo. W. White). The Mission was preceded by a week of prayer, which prepared the way for blessing. All through the week God was felt to be very near. The Bible-readings were well attended, and proved very helpful to believers, special interest being evinced in the study of our Lord's second coming. Two meetings for young people were held, the second being crowded to excess, and about 100 children indicated their desire to know Christ as their Saviour, and asked for special prayer. The Gospel meetings were also times of blessing, and in the after-meetings souls were led into the glorious liberty of God's children. At the closing service testimony was borne to the blessing received.

In connection with the new docks being made at Barry there are at present upwards of a thousand men employed, and the Navvies' Mission located there is doing a good work amongst the men and their families. On Saturday, May 7, Mr. JAMES EYRES, who had been invited to conduct a ten days' mission, met the workers. On the first Sunday two meetings were held, and three on the second; and one on each of the week evenings. Notwithstanding the lateness of the season being against getting large crowds, and the fact that there had been a short mission held quite recently amongst them, yet the Sunday evening congregations were excellent. The week evening congregations, though not so large, were more representative of the district. There is much cause for thankfulness for the number of decisions that took place, also for the increased spiritual life resulting from the services.—W. S.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mrs. BAEYERTZ, June, Clitheroe.
Mr. J. NEECH, Shawford, May 29 to June 5.
Mr. W. R. LANE, Bromley, 29; Brighton, June 5.
Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, in May, Great Assembly Hall.
Rev. W. H. AITKEN, Milborne Port, May 28-June 13.
Mr. E. P. TELFORD, Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, Wigan, June 5-9; Bristol, June 12-27.
SERGEANT PULLINGER, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.
Mr. W. MONRO COLLINGS, Bedfont, May 29, 30; Swaythling, June 5.

EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY PRAYER LIST.—Amongst other missions now being held are the following: Clydebank, J. W. Moodie; Glasgow, C. Galletly; Lockerbie, C. G. Roger; Coupar (Fife), T. Canning; Irvine, H. Young; Pittenweem, J. Galletly; Cumbernauld, D. M. Bayne; Lugar, R. Hill; Liddington, J. H. Haynes; Lindfield, J. Lovell; Partridge Green, A. Clark; Friston, James Clark; Shelley, J. Harris; Takeley, J. Whiting; Langford, E. Bailey; Robertsbridge, N. Taylor; Marlborough, J. B. Rochfort; Hillmorton, C. Noakes; Great Whelnetham, J. G. Stanger; Old Bolingbroke, J. Shields; Old Hill, S. Vivian; Upper Parkstone, J. Greenwood; Corsham Side, C. Jolliffe; Moreton-in-Marsh, S. Bryant; Whitchurch, R. Williams.

OBITUARY.

CANON POWELL, DURHAM.

A standard-bearer has been removed (says The Record) by the death of Canon Powell, late Rector of Eaglescliffe, in the county of Durham. He was one of the early missionaries of the C.M.S. in Ceylon, arriving in that island in the late thirties. For many years after his retirement from the mission-field he did a most useful work at Bolton, in Lancashire, removing in 1866 to Eaglescliffe on the retirement of his father-in-law, the late Canon Hull. The present Bishop of Qu'Appelle owes his inspiration for missionary work very largely to Canon Powell's influence. Through his death a vacancy occurs in the ranks of the C.M.S. Hon. Life Governors.

MR. JAMES BALFOUR-MELVILLE.

By the death of this esteemed friend there has passed away one who for many years occupied a prominent place as a standard-bearer in evangelistic work in Scotland. The deceased was the second son of Mr. James Balfour, of Pilrig, a well-known family in Edinburgh, of which city he was a native. Educated at the University, he became a member of his father's firm, and grew up to be a prominent member of the old school of Edinburgh lawyers. For many years he was known as James Balfour, but when his eldest brother died he succeeded to the Mount Melville estates, and was afterwards known as James Balfour-Melville.

During his long and active professional career he held important offices, but to many he was best known as a devoted, earnest Christian worker. Years ago he was one of a coterie of well-known laymen like the late Earl of Kintore, Mr. Gordon, of Parkhill, Mr. Grant, of Arndilly, and others, who were leaders in revival work in past days in Scotland.

An intimate friend of the late Brownlow North, he was closely associated with him in the work carried on in Scotland, and was present at his death-bed. He took an active and leading part in Mr. Moody's meetings. Mr. Balfour conducted many evangelistic meetings in various parts of the country, and his addresses were characterized by great solidity, clearness, and simplicity.

Perhaps the work in which he was most used was in individual dealing with inquirers. Some of the books and tracts which he published have been a means of great blessing. He took a leading part in the Noon Prayer-meeting and in the Perth Conference. An elder of the Free Church, he was for many years a well-known member of the Colonial and Continental Committee of that Church. About ten years ago he left Edinburgh for St. Andrews, where he has since resided, and where his wife, who was a most estimable lady, and took a great interest in work amongst soldiers, died last June. Mr. Balfour was over eighty years of age, and died from the shock subsequent upon an accident when swallowing a piece of meat at dinner, at his residence at St. Andrews.

Requests for Prayer.

For Whit-Monday services at Godmanchester.

For a missionary entering upon work in Upper and Lower Tooting.

For services by Mr. William Forbes at Elgin and Burghead, N.B., to begin on Sunday, 29th.

For work this week at the Epsom races: that the word spoken among the masses may find its way to many hearts.

That the Lord's presence may go with a curate to a new sphere of labour, and that he may be made a channel of great blessing to all to whom he may minister in the future.

"I Want to have a New Name."—This was the remark of a heathen woman to a missionary in the Niger territory of West Africa. She meant that she wished to receive Christian baptism, to break with heathen customs, and to "live the life that Christians live." A new name is nothing without a new life. Those who overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, will inherit the Lord's blessed promise: "To him will I give to eat of the hidden manna; and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." By the new life in Christ we are permitted to anticipate this full joy.

THE BOOK WORLD.

IN DEFENCE OF THE FAITH.

IN a day when every form of error receives literary commendation, and the feet of the unwary are ever being directed into false ways, it is a pleasure as well as a duty to call attention to books designed to set forth the claims of Christianity, or to defend the same from misrepresentation and hostile attack. We have read with peculiar satisfaction the noble volume* in which Professor Aloys Berthoud writes, as sound theologian and profound philosopher, with the special object of commending Christianity to heart and mind; and we cannot doubt but the book will exercise a truly blessed and powerful ministry for many days among French-speaking peoples.

The work is not a demonstration of method, but a course of inquiry. Theory may be pursued by others; Professor Berthoud is as practical as he is serious. He is impressed with human need, and conscious of the Divine provision to meet that need. His desire is to implant the same deep and settled convictions in other minds, and in the endeavour he boldly challenges a host of enemies of God's honour and man's welfare. This Apology is in three parts, the first of which deals with man, surveys with wonderful insight the great religions of the world, and then indicates the answer of Christianity to the soul's need. The second part discusses the relation of Christianity to science, and deals with the supernatural in various aspects, ever with remarkable clearness, and to excellent purpose in showing the true reasonableness of our most holy faith. The third part is historical and argumentative; here we see the preparation for Christianity in Old Testament story; then the ministry, death, and resurrection of Christ are outlined with succinctness and force; finally, there is a section on Christianity proving itself—in the conversion of St. Paul, the punishment of the Jewish people, and the progress of the Gospel throughout the world.

Thus, this volume of 670 large pages shows the moral necessity, the practical possibility, and the absolute reality of Christianity, conceived in a broad and comprehensive sense. It does not deal with doctrines in detail, but it includes them in terms of New Testament integrity. The author writes in the evident hope that he may lead some to the serene conviction of the celebrated Sir James Simpson, who, when asked what was the greatest discovery that he had made in the course of his life, replied with joy, "The discovery that I have a Saviour." Strong in definitions and distinctions, the book is a delight to the thoughtful mind; unrelenting in the exposure of atheistical sophistries, the pages are a refreshment to the Christian reader; while devotion to Christ and loyalty to Scripture authority indicate, in our judgment, the truly strong man, who knows himself as well as the greatness of his theme. Professor Berthoud is very clear in placing the moral above the mental in the relations of man and his Maker. Access to the Divine is not the right of mind, but the privilege of conscience. Moral relations are more fundamental than scientific attainments. God is not revealed to those who, by their own efforts, become "wise and prudent," but to those who, through Godward dependence and obedience, are worthy the designation of "children."

In one of the many beautiful passages on Christian faith and worldly knowledge, the author says, in effect:—

> The Bible and science have no account to settle, and it is well to maintain, against all and sundry, their respective independence. They tend towards the same point of the horizon—where the sun rises; but their means of action, the spheres in which they move, are essentially different. For one there is earth, for the other heaven. One goes afoot—that is science. The other has wings—that is religion. And though it may be impossible to trace between them an absolute boundary, and to determine the plane on which they should subsist, it is in the interest of the one and the other that they remain distinct and autonomous. It is not becoming for the bird to wish to creep, nor for the serpent to wish to fly.

Very justly it will be gathered that, metaphysical to a fault in studies calling for such treatment, Prof. Berthoud is singularly practical in Christian exposition and appeal. In a chapter of great value on the conditions of religious certainty, he lays it down most positively that the beginning of religious life, the point of departure in moral elevation, is self-renunciation. "He that willeth to do God's will, shall know of the doctrine." In the concluding chapter, he addresses the reader in terms which we render with some freedom as follows:—

> "Are you a Christian?" Everything is there. Is Jesus your King, your "Master," in the domain of thought as well as in that of action? Have you such confidence in Him that you are able without reserve to surrender yourself to Him? Are you prepared, according to his express command, to leave all and follow Him? You quite understand—leave all! Your rest, your idols, your self, your position, your family, your money, your church, your thoughts, your very life? If you trample upon His words, at least those which do not suit your taste, if you set at naught his sovereign rights, if you form regarding Him an opinion which you would not dare to express to his face, what right have you to assume the name of "Christian"?
>
> What! Would you say to Him: "I am a Christian, Lord! But I have not the honour of knowing Thee; and that matters little, for other men answer for me,—I prefer that my relations with Thee should not be too direct, provided my salvation is assured..by proxy!" And you call that being a Christian? Why thus deceive yourself? "If anyone loveth father or mother more than Me, he is not worthy of Me" (Matt. x. 37).
>
> Or rather will you say to Him: "I am a Christian, Lord! But, to be frank, I only call Thee Lord by custom or accommodation. What wilt Thou have? The times have advanced, and we know more than Thou upon essential matters. Thou wast singularly mistaken regarding thyself! Yet for all that we believe in Thee—with a certain reserve!" Enough, stop there upon the down-grade of blasphemy! "He that is not for Me is against Me" (Matt. xii. 30).
>
> Are you a Christian? This question, which the Roman judges put to their victims before sending them to death, is also the one which the Supreme Judge will put to men to whom the truth has been made known. It is the vital question.

* APOLOGIE DU CHRISTIANISME. Par Aloys Berthoud, Professeur à l'Ecole de Théologie de l'Oratoire à Genève 1897. Lausanne: Georges Bridel & Cie., éditeurs.)

GLADSTONE LITERATURE.

Mr. T. F. Unwin has published a Roll of Thoughts from Mr. Gladstone's writings and utterances, compiled by E. S. Dalton (1s. 6d.). It contains much that is elevating and impressive. Mr. James Bowden has made timely issue of a shilling popular sketch of Gladstone the Man, by David Williamson. A special issue of The Graphic (1s.) gives an account of the deceased statesman's career, with profuse illustrations, portraits of contemporary politicians, etc.

The Empire Reciter (1s. S. S. Union) is a capital collection of pieces suitable for recitation at Band of Hope and other gatherings.

Carlisle Cathedral (1s. net. Isbister & Co.) is the latest issue of this firm's beautiful "Cathedral Series" of handbooks. The author is Chancellor Ferguson, and the illustrator is Alexander Ansted.

The thorns twine in all our lives, though it is not all pain. In Silver Thorns the authoress, Florence H. Davies, gives six stories from life, illustrating the sorrows which come to all, and the profit they minister. (1s. 6d. Saxon & Co.)

The latest addition to "The Keswick Library" (Marshall Bros.), is John the Baptist, by Dr. Elder Cumming, a study of the life and witness of the great forerunner, and emphasising certain points bearing closely on spiritual life and Christian walk.

The new secretary of the Protestant Alliance, Mr. S. W. Brett, has issued a tiny book entitled Fables (6d., C. J. Thynne), showing in plain language the hollow nature of the "cunningly devised fables" wherewith Rome supports her arrogant claims and unscriptural dogmas.

The story of a noble and useful life is simply told in the latest addition to the "Splendid Lives" series—Frances E. Willard, by Florence Witts. (1s. Sunday School Union.) Many will be thankful for the opportunity to place such a brief biography, full of high purpose, in the hands of their daughters.

Mr. Henry Miller's little work A Guide to Ecclesiastical Law, for Churchwardens and Parishioners, has met the inquiries of many who have been vexed by the advance of illegal practices in the Church of England. The sixth edition has been brought up to date in matters of detail. (1s. Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand.)

Devotional manuals giving a portion for every day in the year are legion to-day; yet there may be a place for Daily Steps Heavenward, compiled by Mrs. Augustus A. Lyne, which provides a text of Scripture for every day of the year, followed by original verses, as varied in metre as the words of Divine counsel and comfort are varied in subject and application. (Elliot Stock.)

There is a sturdy Protestant ring in The Elector King and Priest, by A. S. Lamb, which will commend it to many. Its theme is the duty of every Christian possessing a vote to use that power against the inroads of idolatry in the Church as established by law. The author calls for the formation of an Independent Protestant Party. (1s. Nisbet & Co.)

The systematic study of the Bible is recognised by many of the utmost importance; hence The Bible Readers' Chart, by W. C. Fletcher (6d. Fletcher, Oxford), will be welcomed. Its aim, as Canon Christopher says, in a brief preface, is to "lead to a clearer view of the Bible as a whole, and of the order of its various parts." It contains many helpful hints, tersely put.

Sermon literature for young people, whether to be read directly by them or to be embodied in pulpit teaching for their benefit, is a useful and growing class. Many will welcome the latest accession, Sermons to Boys and Girls, by Rev. John Eames, B.A., which contains fifteen discourses, pointed and well-constructed. The index gives a list of the many anecdotes and illustrations that brighten the pages. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.)

Many will welcome a cheap edition of Beautiful Joe: the autobiography of a dog. By Marshall Saunders. (2s. Jarrold & Sons.) Originally published in Canada, it has already proved itself an immense success not only in this country, but in America and Canada, where several hundred thousand copies have been sold. Its motif is the inculcation of kindness to animals. The pleasing tale of life from a dog's point of view should do much to enforce humane and kindly lessons.

Among American preachers, Dr. Louis Albert Banks is making a reputation for interesting and striking discourse now addressed to the young and now to persons of mature years. Ina new volume, The Christian Gentleman (3s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) he speaks to youths on life and conduct, work and duty. From the first chapter, on the temple of the human body, to the last, on the new chivalry, the pages are as readable as they are timely, and worthy the attention of young men and their friends.

"Where is British Guiana?" asked a teacher, the unexpected reply being, "On the map of the world." The information was lacking in precision, but it not unfairly represents the general knowledge as to this colony. We welcome, therefore, British Guiana, by Rev. L. Crookall (6s. T. Fisher Unwin), giving a readable account (well illustrated) of the land, its products, and people—Creoles, Africans, and Indians—and of the missionary work in progress. At times the author is inclined to be discursive, but he has an observant eye and the art of telling pleasantly what he has seen.

Little as is known of our Lord's earlier years in Joseph's house in Galilee, there are yet, as Rev. G. Campbell Morgan shows in Hidden Years at Nazareth (1s., Nisbet & Co.), many lessons to be learned—if only from the silence of Scripture—as to these thirty years of quiet home life. The author draws a wonderful picture of Jesus as the apprentice, the improver, the carpenter in his little shop, with the shavings around him and the tools in his hand, till when the moment comes "his feet no more make music among the rustling shavings," and God says, "I am pleased."

A very useful "International Teacher's Edition" of the Holy Bible has been issued from the London Bible Warehouse, 53, Paternoster-row. Printed in bold emerald type, this Bible is accompanied by "The Bible Reader's Manual," which is a compilation of varied interest and great value. The manual covers a wide field of information on the Scriptures and their story; and there are maps and illustratiens, as well as a handy concordance. This work was edited by Dr. C. H. H. Wright, whose fame as a theologian and Oriental scholar are universally admitted. Though nominally costing 10s. 6d., this volume is sent post free for 4s. 11d. from the address given.

An earnest and reverent study of an important theme by Archdeacon Hughes-Games, of Hull, has been issued by Nisbet & Co. in The Nature of the Resurrection Body (3s. 6d.). The various hints afforded in Scripture are gathered together, and viewed in the light of the analogy of our Lord's risen body, leading to important and interesting conclusions concerning the resurrection body, its character, faculties, and capabilities for the new and higher sphere of glory. The book is one to stir the heart of the believer, not only in the prospect of personal bliss, but yet more in the vision and fellowship of God and the Lamb, in the marvellous opportunities of full knowledge hereafter of what has seemed dark and mysterious, and in the sweet fellowship of the glorified saints. One chapter is devoted to the solemn question of the state of the risen impenitent; and another to that perpetually-present theme—the recognition of friends in heaven.

NOVELTIES IN LETTER CARDS.—In these days of economising time and labour every well-planned device to this end is acceptable to busy people. The SOVRAN LETTER CARDS are designed to meet quite a number of varied requirements. Pattern A, with reply card attached for all communications, ½d. postage. Pattern B, with reply card attached for closed correspondence, 1d. postage. Pattern C, with two reply cards, for closed correspondence, 1d. postage. Pattern D, with two reply cards attached for all communications, ½d. postage. Prices in quantities quoted on application to 29, King-street, Covent Garden. ROLL TOP DESKS seem now to be coming into universal office and library use, and their convenience is inestimable with their abundance of drawers, pigeon-holes, and automatic closing lock. This last is of great importance, as it enables the user to leave his papers undisturbed and undisturbable until his return. Messrs. Turner, Holborn-viaduct, seem to head the list of firms supplying this desideratum.

Items of Interest.

Home.

There are 104 inmates in the Home at Belvedere connected with the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, and 295 pensioners receiving £1 a month.

A conference has been held in support of the Central Bureau for the Employment of Women, at which Mrs. Creighton, Mrs. Bryant, and Sir R. Ciffen were the speakers.

The entries in the British Museum catalogue under the name of William Ewart Gladstone cover twenty-two printed pages, and embrace a period of exactly sixty years, his first work ("The State in its Relations with the Church") having been issued in 1838.

Statistics recently published show that the sum raised last year by twenty-six missionary societies reached £1,948,480. As an expression of faith in the power of the Gospel, this is encouraging. Yet it does not suffice to send forth all the labourers who are waiting to go.

Mr. Lyulph Stanley, at a meeting of the Association of School Boards, proposed that in any separate local authority for secondary education the representation of school boards should be equal to that of the county or borough councils. Secondary technical education is of national importance, and should be vigorously carried on.

The Queen has inspected at Windsor veteran soldiers and sailors who served in the Crimean war and the Indian Mutiny.—By order of Her Majesty the grounds of the Rangers' Lodge at Greenwich and the Royal Palace at Kew will henceforth be open to the public; while the grounds of the Queen's Cottage at Kew will be formally added to Kew Gardens.

We trust that the deputation which waited on the Home Secretary recently to call attention to the suffering of the workers in the potteries through lead-poisoning will bring about some amelioration of the conditions under which labour is there carried on.—Proceedings are on foot against a well-known firm for infringing special rules for the protection of those employed in making lucifer matches.

Mr. Asquith says: — The condition of shop assistants, both male and female, but especially female, constitute a crying, social and industrial scandal as regards the hours of labour, the modes of payment, the conditions under which they have their meals and sleep, etc. Much attention is being given to the wrongs of this class of workers.—The Children's Country Holiday Fund has been greatly assisted by a function at the Hotel Métropole, presided over by the Bishop of London. Mr. Asquith, M.P., Lord E. Talbot, M.P., and Lord Thring also took part in the proceedings.

The Coal Trouble.—At the miners' conference it was resolved that Mr. Ritchie's suggestions be adopted in relation to the resumed negotiations, and that one delegate from each colliery be selected to form the Consultative Committee.—It is hoped that a joint conference of miners and coal-owners will take place almost immediately.—Owing to the South Wales coal strike, an order of 80,000 tons of Welsh coal from the Roumanian Government cannot be executed—part of it has gone to Germany.—At a meeting of the Coalowners' Association on Saturday, the owners declined to meet the men on the conditions proposed. Very serious may be the results of this protracted dispute.

Charitable Contributions.—Sums varying from twenty guineas to £500 have been received for the London Hospital Special Fund, including £100 from the Queen.—As a result of the joint appeal of the Lord Mayor and Mr. Sydney Holland subscriptions have been received to the amount of £4250 and donations reaching to £39000, on behalf of the London Hospital.—Several other amounts ranging from £5 5s. to £25 have been received towards the memorial to the Duchess of Teck, making the total sum raised £9100.—£4000 raised at a meeting at Grosvenor House for the Belgrave Hospital for Women and Children.—At a function for the North London Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, subscriptions and donations amounted to £2134.—£15 from the boys of Christ's Hospital for the Arethusa and Chichester Training Ships, this being their twenty-seventh annual subscription of that amount towards helping poor boys of good character who wish to go to sea.

THE Y.M.C.A.

At Darwen, a series of special services for men only has been conducted by the travelling secretary for Lancashire, and a Y.M.C.A. was formed in the town on Tuesday evening. Over fifty members have already joined.

The spring conference of the North-West Metropolitan District Union was held in the rooms of the Hammersmith Association on the 17th inst. There was a good representation of delegates from the various Associations in the district. After the transaction of routine business, and the presentation of reports from individual Associations, a paper upon "The Y.M.C.A. as an Aggressive Spiritual Movement" was presented by Mr. Frank Howe, and gave rise to an interesting and helpful discussion.

The annual conference of the North Wales District Union was held at Chester on Wednesday, 18th inst. There was a good attendance. Mr. A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire, read a paper on "How to Win Young Men for Christ." The inaugural meeting of the Chester Y.M.C.A. was held in the evening. The president, Mr. Pritchard, took the chair. There was a large representation of young men, and addresses were given by Messrs. R. D. Thomas, W. H. Ralston, Fisher, and Yapp.

The spring conference of the South Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, held in the Municipal Buildings, Windsor, on the 18th inst., proved a most successful gathering. At the afternoon session about one hundred delegates were present, and the Vicar of Windsor occupied the chair. After a brief survey of Y.M.C.A. work by Mr. W. Hind Smith—representing the National Council—a special address, which was very greatly appreciated, was delivered by Canon Fleming, upon the subject of "Christian Work." A public meeting was held in the Town Hall in the evening, when the Mayor of Windsor occupied the chair. Addresses were given by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of Portman-square Chapel, and Mr. Hind Smith. It is believed that the Conference will have given much stimulus to the work throughout the District Union, the counties of Bucks, Oxon, Berks, and part of Hants.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The annual conference for Ireland was held on May 18, 19, 20, in Dublin. Mrs. E. W. Moore (Richmond) and Miss Jackson (Richmond) were the English representatives. Various aspects of Association work were reported on and discussed. The conference was helpful and inspiring, and was attended by a considerable number of secretaries and workers.

Foreign.

There is a steady decrease of British trade with Sweden. German trade, however, with that nation is considerably increasing.

Three officers of the Tirah expedition and two privates have received the Victoria Cross for exceptional bravery on the Indian frontier.

The second zone of Thessaly has been evacuated. A pitiable state of desolation is reported. Villages have been burnt and churches polluted by the Turks.

For the improvement of the Danube it has been decided by the European Commission to make a cutting five miles long which will convert the Sulina branch of the river into an almost straight watercourse thirty-five miles in length.

The grant of land in New Guinea to a British syndicate is causing adverse comment in official circles. Technical difficulties have arisen. The success of missionary enterprise is certain to lead to the opening up of the country, but measures should be adopted to prevent the introduction of strong drink.

India.—Riots have occurred in one of the suburbs of Calcutta in connection with measures for the suppression of the plague.

Austria-Hungary.—Plans of the Government for the increase of the navy of the dual monarchy are being received with hostile criticism in the Hungarian Delegation.—The budget committee of the Austrian Delegation in the Hungarian Diet voted thirty million florins (£2,500,000) for military purposes.

Spain.—Senor Sagasta has practically succeeded in forming a new Cabinet of Liberal notables with a strong war policy, and himself as Premier.—The Australian Premiers, having been invited to express their opinion as to the future of the Philippines, are in favour of the islands being possessed by a Power friendly to Great Britain.

The Transvaal.—The reply to Mr. Chamberlain's despatch of last October states that the Transvaal Government cannot recognise any suzerainty, and re-affirms the right of the Transvaal to arbitration.—Mr. Fischer, of the Orange Free State, who was selected by the Pretoria Government to succeed Dr. Leyds as Transvaal State Secretary, has declined the appointment.

America.—Destructive tornadoes are reported from Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, attended with loss of life.—The Alabama, which is to be the most powerful battleship in the world when completed, has been launched at Philadelphia.—The British Ambassador to Washington and the Canadian Minister of Marine are to meet the State Department officials next week for the arrangement of a Convention that shall end all matters of past controversy between Great Britain and the States.

France.—Admiral Dupont, in a letter to the Gaulois, compares the French and British navies in view of a possible war. He says the French navy is between a third and a half that of Great Britain, although ship for ship there is an approximate equality.—At the second Zola trial at Versailles, counsel raised an objection that the second summons of the second court-martial is no more valid than the first emanating from the Minister of War. This objection is now being considered.

Italy.—The national crisis is over. Marquis di Rudini persuades his colleagues that nothing calls for the immediate resignation of the Ministry. As a consequence of the disturbances a series of reactionary measures are to be submitted to Parliament involving the independence of the Ministry of the vote of the Chamber.—The Socialist-Republican party in the Italian Parliament deny that the recent rising was organised. It is described as an explosion of popular discontent.—Three hundred prisoners arrested in connection with the recent riots at Milan have been released.

The Far East.—Prince Henry of Prussia has had interviews with the Emperor and Empress of China at the Summer Palace at Peking, being admitted on terms of equality never previously accorded in China.—A contract has been signed between Sheng Tastai and representatives of a British Syndicate for a loan for railway constructions at Nanking, Shanghai, Hang-chau, and Ningpo.—A private letter from China says: "It is not only possible, but probable, that before the day comes to give effect to some of the promises made to us, there will be no responsible Government to carry them out. Everywhere the conditions are ripe for rebellion; the country is honeycombed with secret societies with anti-dynastic objects."

The War.—In consequence of the strict censorship of news in both countries it is almost impossible to obtain trustworthy news. The Spanish fleet under Admiral Cervera has evidently reached Santiago, and caused much elation in Madrid, giving rise at the same time to considerable uneasiness in New York. The new Spanish Ministry declare that war will be carried on à outrance. At Washington it is deemed inexpedient to attempt a descent on Cuba until Admiral Cervera's squadron is dealt with. Vessels with food cargoes are reported to be continually arriving at Cuba. It is doubtful, however, whether food can be "abundant." Friction is also said to have arisen between Cuban insurgents and the American authorities.—Contradictory rumours have appeared concerning the departure of the Spanish fleet from Santiago. But absolutely nothing is known of its movements. Secrecy is preserved as to the whereabouts of the American squadrons.

Africa.—A punitive expedition of the Niger Company's forces has put down a revolt in the hinterland of Onisha, on the left bank of the Niger.—The insurgents in Sierra Leone are concentrating at Markover, whither reinforcements have been sent under Captain Moore. — The Mendi insurgents attacked Kivella three times, but were repulsed.—Miss Muller, an American missionary, has had a terrible experience in Sierra Leone. She was at her mission station in the Sherboro' district with only her black attendants when the rising took place, and it was only by the help of a pinnace from a British war vessel, which landed a crew, that she was rescued from certain death.—The Emperor Menelik showed great curiosity recently in watching a surgical operation when on a visit to the hospital organised in his capital by the Russian Red Cross Society.—A French punitive expedition has captured the stronghold of Babemba, King of Sikasso, in West Africa. The king was killed.—A detachment of the garrison of Kassala has met and defeated a band of fugitive Dervishes on the Atbara, to the north-west of Kassala.—Gradually Africa is opening to missionary enterprise. In about fifteen months it is expected that telegraph communication will be extended as far as Abercorn, at the south end of Lake Tanganyika.

Iceland.—A Norwegian paper reports that this island is divided into 140 parishes, with 1600 church members, not reckoning the capital city of Reykjavik. The population has been faithful to the Lutheran Confession since its general acceptance in the island in 1551. From time to time Roman Catholicism has attempted to secure a firm footing, but the Romish community counts very few adherents besides the priests and some nuns of recent arrival. Apparently the Lutherans know enough of Roman Catholicism to let it well alone. The Church of the island has its own theological seminary, founded in 1847, and during the past generation its places of worship have been made more comfortable, and its other institutions have greatly improved.

Medical Women in India.

AN important work is being carried on in India in connection with the training of Christian women born in India for Medical Mission work among the millions of Hindu and Mahommedan women and children in that land.

A medical school for this purpose has been established four years, in which Christian young women can go through the whole medical course, and then be examined by the Lahore University, as in the case of ordinary medical students. The immediate need of this school is for three fully qualified ladies, who are able to teach medicine and surgery, and the various subjects in connection with a medical curriculum. Earnest Christians are required, who will endeavour to train the young women under their care in spiritual things, that they may not be leaving the school as simply medically-qualified practitioners, but also as missionaries who will take the Gospel of God's grace to all their patients.

The work is inter-denominational, and therefore the workers must be happy in working together with people of different evangelical religious views. Full particulars will be obtained from Miss M. Beom, the secretary, 120, St. James-road, Croydon.

Personalia.

Rev. T. B. Kilpatrick, of Aberdeen, has agreed to deliver a course of lectures to theological students at Manitoba College, Winnipeg, in August.

Mr. George Waring Stebbins, son of Mr. G. C. Stebbins, so well known to friends of evangelistic work in this country, is to be married, on June 1, to Miss Caroline Tichenor Worth, of New York.

Dr. Hastings, of Kinneff, the well-known editor of The Expository Times, has accepted the pastorate of a Free Church in Dundee, where he will have large scope for his preaching and teaching gifts.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Pershore, to May 25; Leicester, May 26; Nottingham, May 27-31. Mr. Tyler, Preston Bagot and neighbourhood, to May 24; Beansdale, May 25; Hatton, May 26; Sharnbrook, near Bedford, May 27-June 6: Kingswood, and neighbourhood, June 11-14. Mr. Callender, Cambridge, to May 27; Oxford, May 28-June 1; Acton, June 10. Mr. E. Hughes, Lewisham, May 27. Mr. Hewlett, with caravan, Ifield, to May 23; Three Bridges, May 28-June 12; Crawley, June-13-27. Mr. Cutting, with caravan, Kersey, near Hadleigh, from May 6. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Misterton, near Crewkerne, Somerset. Mr. Spiers, McCheyne Memorial Church, Dundee, to June 3. Mr. J. H. Greene, Southill, Biggleswade, from May 24.

Whitsuntide Conference on Village Children's Work at Three Bridges, Monday, May 30. All day.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun.	May 29	Ez. xxxvii. 1-14	Th.	June 2	Psa. xxxiv. 1-22
M.	„ 30	„ xxxvii. 15-28	F.	„ 3	1 Tim. i. 1-17
Tu.	„ 31	Psa. xxxii. 1-11	Sat.	„ 4	„ ii. 1-15
W.	June 1	„ xxxiii. 1-22

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS. — A.R.N. C.M.B. M.M. H.G.C.B. W.H.D. G.H. G.W.W. W.N. J.W.G. R.Z. W.H.W. J.J. S.H. R.C. M.E.H. T.E.B. F.D.H. G.W.B. T.W.C. E.T.B. F.W. L.C. F.B.N. E.C. H.T. R.C.A. H.G.C. W.N. C.F.J. E.H.B. R.T. A.M.S. M.C.F. C.P.F. J.B. F.S.H. M.S.S. W.H.C. W.N. W.S. L.R.A. J.M. R.J.A. A.S. H.T.N.U. D.J.T. G.H. M.B. Mrs. R. E.K. J.B.B. J.M. E.K. W.L.R. W.T.S. H.T. A.W. P.N. H.W. B.W.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C.; E. A. Ogburn, 63, Albion-hill, Brighton; J. Bridger, 7, Adam-street, Strand; Mrs. Goldston, 28, King's-street, James-street, Walthamstow; B. Newson, 5, Great Glamis-road, Shadwell, E.; A. M. Scantlebury, 27, New Plassey-street, Penarth, near Cardiff, S. Wales; W. R. Johnson, Templetown, Consett; M. Webb, 2, Dantzic-villas, Grange-road, Ramsgate; Henry Till, The Mission, Briggate, Leeds; Gospel Tent, care of Mr. Caddy, 7, Pleasant-view, Ebbw Vale; Miss Harding, Haldon View, Exmouth; David J. Taylor, 28, Westgate, Peterborough (Illustrated and small books); F. W. Hewett, 2, Violet Cottages, Beechwood-road, Caterham Valley.

THE LAMBETH WALK MISSION, S.E., appeals for Gospel booklets, cards, and tracts for "distribution amongst the thousands who congregate every Sunday for the purpose of buying or selling. We average 1000 every Lord's Day, and our stock is nearly exhausted, and the open-air season has just commenced."—Address, E. J. Pakeman, 128, Kennington Park-road, S.E.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be CAREFULLY READ before being given away.

Daily Prayer Union.—The annual meeting was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, on May 20. Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P., who took the chair, characterised the society as one of the most important of the nineteenth century, calling attention as it did to the person and work of God the Holy Ghost. The report was read by the secretary, Rev. H. L. Harkness. The meeting was also addressed by Revs. J. Worthington Atkin, G. H. Händler, Philip Norton (missioner), J. Gosset Tanner, and Arthur Woods.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

THE new vicar of North Finchley is Rev. J. T. Lang.

Canon Tugwell, of Stapleford Abbots, is seriously ill.

Rev. James McArthur has been appointed Bishop of Bombay.

A capital Missionary Loan Exhibition has been held at Rochester.

Rev. W. H. Hewett, of Eastbourne, has been appointed to St. Paul's, Stratford.

The Bishop of Exeter's recent Charge contained a vigorous passage on the evangelisation of heathen and Mohammedan lands.

Bishop Sandford, formerly Bishop of Tasmania, is about to resign the charge of Boldon, near Sunderland, to become assistant Bishop of Durham.

A letter from Archdeacon Walker, dated Mengo, February 22, shows that the condition of Uganda up to that date continued one of much anxiety.

Evangelicals in Liverpool have suffered a great loss in the death of Mr. Shadrach Breeze. He was an active member of the Evangelical Alliance, and a practical philanthropist.

Princess Christian opened last week Eton House, Hackney Wick. The institution, which will be conducted on similar lines to the Oxford House in Bethnal Green, is intended for the use of the clergy and Old Etonians working in the parish.

Reporting on 8000 churches, a new Church Guide compares their ceremonial with that observed ten years ago. For a daily eucharist the numbers were then 200, as compared with 613 now recorded; for vestments 599, as against 2026; for incense 89, as against 331; for altar lights 1136, as against 4334; for Eastward Position 2690, as against 7044; while half the churches described used the mixed chalice.

Mr. John Kensit intends visiting the Northern Convocation at its next sitting (June 8), as he did the Canterbury Convocation. In the event of his petitioning the Upper House his petition will be entrusted either to the Bishop of Liverpool or the Bishop of Sodor and Man. There is no doubt that the feeling of the Bishops in the Northern provinces is more strongly Protestant than that prevailing amongst the prelates of the South. The Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Chester are practically the only "High Church" members of the Upper House of Convocation.

The Duke of Westminster will open the new Morning Post Church Army Embankment Home in Westminster on July 8. In this Home the waifs and outcasts who haunt the Thames Embankment and its vicinity at night—too poor to pay for a bed in even the commonest "dosshouse"—hungry and hopeless, yet helpable—will be succoured, and the chance of a fresh start in life given to each. Archdeacon Gibson dedicated at Nacton last Tuesday the "Norwich No. 3" Diocesan Church Army Mission and Colporportage Van, which has been presented to the Society for work in the Suffolk archdeaconry, by Captain Pretyman, M.P., and Canon Pretyman, as a thankoffering for the recovery of the former from his recent severe accident.

Congregational.

Services have been commenced in the Town Hall, Welling.

Rev. C. Evan Evans has accepted an invitation to Harringay, N.

The new chapel at Mill Hill will be opened by Principal Fairbairn on June 22.

Rev. George Snashall, of Victoria Park, has accepted a call to Guilden Morden.

Rev. J. H. Bainton has sailed for Vancouver, British Columbia. He was formerly pastor of the church at Ilkeston.

The anniversary of the Skelmersdale Hall Mission, Liverpool, has shown valuable results in a most neglected neighbourhood.

The whole work at Zion Chapel, Bristol, is reported in a live and vigorous condition. The Sunday-school has 510 scholars, with 150 in a mission school.

An interesting missionary farewell has been held in Markham Square Church in connection with the departure of three ministers for British Columbia, Jamaica, and Port Elizabeth.

Rev. G. H. Giddins, secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society, has started to visit the Evangelical churches in Bohemia, and to attend the annual assembly at Prague.

Mr. R. Griffith, who has been appointed by the L.M.S. to Madagascar, goes to the Protestant Mission, Paris, to prepare himself, an almost necessary step, under present circumstances, in Madagascar.

Rev. D. P. Jones, a Welsh missionary in Central Africa, has mastered the language of the tribe amongst whom he has been living on the southern shore of Lake Tanganyika, reduced it to writing, and translated into it the Gospels and other portions of the New Testament. He is now home on furlough.

Baptist.

Rev. G. E. Ansden has resigned at Zion, Smarden.

Rev. J. C. Carlile has been welcomed at Folkestone.

Rev. W. Osborne, of Chatham, has accepted the pastorate at Whitstable-on-Sea.

Enthusiastic services have been held at St. Andrew's, Cambridge, in connection with the recognition of Rev. C. Joseph, late of Portsmouth.

Rev. C. Ingram, of Wimbledon, has undergone an operation for an internal malady at the Homœopathic Hospital, Great Ormond-street, and is progressing favourably.

A memorial volume of the late Rev. W. A. Wicks, of Birmingham, consisting of sermons to children and other addresses, with a memoir, is contemplated for the benefit of the widow and orphans.

The recognition services of Rev. E. H. Brown, late of Twickenham, as pastor of the church at Wells, Somerset, was held on Wed. and Thurs., May 18 and 19. Large congregations gathered on both evenings.

Rev. H. N. Patrick, a missionary for several years in Morocco, who has been compelled to retire from his work on account of repeated attacks of fever, will return to England at the close of the present month. His address will be Brackenhurst, Redhill, Surrey.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Ernest Jones has been welcomed at Park-road, Barmouth.

Rev. M. J. Mills has been welcomed to the pastorate at Ryddings, Swansea.

Revs. Robert Taylor and George Elder have taken part in special services at St. Mark's, Greenwich.

At the annual meeting of the Bournemouth Church there was a large attendance, and the proceedings were characterised by the utmost enthusiasm.

Rev. Philemon Moore has resigned the chair of Hebrew and Biblical Literature at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, with a view to resume pastoral work.

Rev. Pengwern Jones, on his arrival in Liverpool, after an absence of twelve years in the mission field in Sylhet, India, was welcomed at a public meeting held in Fitzclarence-street Chapel.

Methodist.

The debt of £1280 on the Jubilee Chapel, Scarborough, has been liquidated.

The work at Wesley Hall Mission, Redland, Bristol, is reported as full of encouragement.

A mission hitherto carried on in an out-of-the-way place in Wellington (Somerset) is about to put up a new chapel.

A remarkable revival has been going on at Middlesbrough during the last few months, and scores have joined the Church.

New chapels are being erected at Hucknall Torkard, Hither Green, Parkhills, Peterborough, Letheringsett, St. Nicholas (Leicester), Hythe, Barnack, Bingley, and Elmswell.

The membership of the British Wesleyan Methodist Church, as appears from the official returns made to the Synods, now stands at 442,253, an increase of 3299 on last year; 44,160 new members have been received during the year, so that the "leakage" works out at 11,216 members.

A largely-attended meeting has been held at South Cliff Chapel, Scarborough, to celebrate the extinction of the debt on the building. The chapel was erected at a cost of £3073, and in 1889 the debt was £3350, while last September it had been brought down to £1750. Mr. Edward Simpson who gave £1000 to the fund, presided.

The Methodist Free Churches have lost their Connexional father, Rev. George Robinson, who was in his ninety-third year. He began his ministerial career in 1837, and for nearly fifty years rendered excellent services to the churches. He was probably the oldest life-abstainer in England, and to the end of his days took the deepest interest in temperance reform.

Salvation Army.

Another Chinese corps has been established at Pacific Grove, California.

The latest social advance in the United States is the taking of a large building in Boston for a working men's hotel. There will be accommodation for 125 men.

Two new halls have been opened in Paris during the last fortnight, one at the "Bastille" and the other in the "Piccadilly" of Paris, next door to the notorious "Moulin Rouge."

The Newfoundland Government has expressed its appreciation of the social work of the Salvation Army by voting a grant of 150 dols. a year towards the maintenance of the home in St John's.

In view of the fact that a number of American Salvationists have been ordered to the front, and that applications have been made from the various camps for meetings to be held, Commander Booth-Tucker, of the United States, has decided to despatch special officers for the purpose. Detachments have already been sent to Peekshill and Hempstead, Tampa and Key West.

In connection with the Indian Social Scheme, an experiment has been made in the direction of village banks. The result of the first year's working of that established at Samarkha, Gujarat, are most satisfactory. The purpose of these institutions is to lend small sums of money to the natives at a reasonable rate of interest, thus saving them from the ruinous extortions of the ordinary money-lender.

Fallen Asleep.

At Harrogate, on 14th inst, Rev. JOHN WOODHOUSE, aged seventy, who laboured many years in Liverpool and Newcastle, and was an earnest preacher of the Gospel as well as a staunchley evangelical clergyman.—At Fletching, on 13th inst., Rev. W. F. ATTENBOROUGH, aged seventy-one, vicar of the parish for thirty years.—At Northampton, aged seventy-two, Mr. JOHN BLACKWELL, for many years one of the leading workers at College-street Chapel.—At Inverary, Rev. ROBERT ROSE, minister of the Free Church for forty-three years.—At Lochcarron, N.B., Rev. DONALD FORBES, a useful Free Church minister.—At Cheshunt, Herts, Mr. F. PRYCE KEEPELL, aged seventy-three, a well-known leader in church work.—At Birkdale, Rev. H. W. J. SIDNELL, aged forty-eight, a valued Methodist minister.—At Sheffield, Mr. JOHN COLE, aged eighty-three, an active leader in Christian and philanthropic work.—At Bala, Miss M. E. IWAN JONES, daughter of the Principal of the college.—At West Croydon, Mr. J. CHAPMAN, aged 68, an active helper at Thornton Heath Pond Mission.—At Preston, aged 86, Mr. F. GARDNER, for fifty years a helper in the Lord's work.—At Mold Green, Huddersfield, Rev. W. HOTCHKISS, aged 81, for nearly half a century a faithful and useful pastor and missionary.—At Folkestone, Mrs. TURNER, wife of Rev. Alfred Turner, of Ashford.—At Shankhouse, Northumberland, Mr. R. DONEY, a Christian worker and enthusiastic teetotaler.—At Tupton, Mr. H. COWLEY, postmaster and local preacher.—At Belfast, Mr. DANIEL ROBINSON, a faithful and earnest worker in the Methodist church.—At Brussels, Canada, Rev. JOHN KERR, Methodist minister of Sligo, Ireland, in his seventy-second year.—At Ballinamallard, Mr. SAML. CROZIER, a zealous Sunday-school teacher.—At Dorchester, Rev. J. T. WADDY, suddenly, on Friday night, while helping at a Wesleyan entertainment. He was brother of Mr. S. Waddy, Q.C.

Clothes for Emigrants.—The late spring and the cold winds have made ladies slow in casting off their winter clothing. I hope, therefore, that I am in time once more to induce them, through your kind instrumentality, to remember our travellers to the colonies. As the work of the British Women's Emigration Association develops, we have an increased number of "nominated" passages. Those who are in a flourishing condition in the new country can obtain a nearly free passage for their relations. Many of these would be unable to go were it not for our outfitting department. At the present moment I have not in my stores a single stuff dress, and should be very glad of warm jackets and cloaks for Canada, as well as for any women's clothes, old or new. A report of our work will be sent to every kind donor.—ADELAIDE ROSS, 18, Upper Westbourne-terrace.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT,
BOUVERIE HOUSE,
SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols. "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 " "	4s. " "
14 " "	6s. " "
24 " "	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"BY sin came death." It is said that Mr. Gladstone's desire for a simple funeral was because he thought that the humiliation of death, death caused by sin, should not be obscured.

There is a fitness of things to be observed at a funeral which is far removed from the old-fashioned way of heaping up signs of woe, and burying Christian hope under crape and feathers; and also as far removed from the new-fashioned way of turning a funeral into a flower show. Both had the sin of needless expense, which burdened the poor, and did no one any good. Simplicity in style of living is good for body and soul, and simplicity in the manner in which we are committed to the grave is becoming. A great example such as the nation has just looked upon will, we trust, have a purifying effect upon funeral customs among both rich and poor. May it also serve to deepen the consciousness of the evil of sin.

When a nation has enjoyed the labours and example of a great and good man, and he is removed, it is natural to say, "Who will fill his place? He has no successor." He has no successor in the sense of another man, exactly resembling him, stepping into his place. Such successors are not wanted; they would delay the world's progress; they would reduce us too much to one type, and would stultify the growth of natures differing from them. It is enough that each generation should be served according to its needs. Following Whitefield and Wesley came, after a long interval, Spurgeon. Three years after Pitt and Fox died, Mr. Gladstone was born. We also require middling men for a generation. Humanity could not live under an unbroken succession of geniuses. Besides which, there are always latent captains and masters ready to come to the front in an emergency. The permanent need of humanity is men of God who will use the Word of God with unfailing fidelity and love, and these a nation will never fail to produce if the children are trained in the love and fear of God.

The Christian Endeavour movement is growing apace. Numbers of ministers seem to have found in it the "missing link" for retaining Sunday-school elder scholars. There are great possibilities in it. Trained wisely in Christian service, the members of this great organisation may become invaluable as co-workers with their ministers. At the Convention held last year at Liverpool some 15,000 were present. Immense number assembled at Glasgow between Saturday and Tuesday last. A great deal of the power of the Church has been lost because it seemed impossible to bring the young life emerging from the elder classes in Sunday-schools into sympathetic connection with the church. This is now largely done. From the Whit-week Convention (which we are reporting in this and next issue) it may be expected that members will carry back to their several churches and homes an increased spiritual fervour, so that more cementing and solidifying work may be accomplished than ever before.

Mr. Kensit's methods of calling attention to the progress of Romanism in the English Church are assuredly bringing forth fruit. The "Memorandum on Public Worship," published in The Times, and signed by many clergymen of weight in the counsels of High Churchmen, cannot be waved aside. It expresses the willingness of the signatories to be "subject to authority," admitting that to be "a first principle of Catholicism." It also declares that authority must manifest itself through the Bishops jointly and severally. Here then is the opportunity that the prelates should at once seize upon; and take measures that will strike at the root of those practices which multitudes of earnest Christian people so seriously deplore. As The Times says :—

> We may infer that the Bishops, if they will take courage to assert themselves and put their foot down upon such practices, will have behind them the moral support, not only of Evangelical and Broad Churchmen, but of that even more active and numerically powerful section of the Church which is represented by the signatures to this memorandum.

It is of the highest importance for the peace, and even for the safety, of the Establishment itself, that the ritual, and vestments, and priestly assumptions of many of the clergy that savour so strongly of the Romish Apostasy should be declared, on "authority," to be out of place in the Church of the Reformation. We think some reform is sure to spring from this recent Protestant protest.

There are many signs of the growth of fraternal sympathies between Great Britain and America. It may be largely explained by the attitude of the London Press in relation to the Spanish-American War. However it is accounted for, the kindly feeling certainly prevails. When the next Arbitration Bill is before Congress it will have a much better prospect of becoming law than the last. The Daily Chronicle says: "A striking demonstration took place at Tampa, Florida, in honour of the Queen's birthday. The general commanding the district presided at a banquet, and all allusions to the Anglo-American alliance were heartily applauded. At noon a national salute was fired, and all the shipping in the harbour was dressed."..."Mr. Day, the Secretary of State, sent a telegram to the committee of the arrangements, stating that the Government regarded the celebration with friendly interest, and suggesting that a salute by the military authorities in honour of Queen Victoria's birthday would be appropriate." But it is the bond of union with Christ by faith that will most completely cement the two nations together.

The Government of Italy is getting to close grips with the Roman Church over the late riots. The Pope and his myrmidons are beginning to see that they cannot hatch treason with impunity. The arrest of the editor of a Roman Catholic paper, who is said to be in great favour with the Pope, is a sign that the plot against the Government is to be sifted to the bottom, and when it is, we shall probably see that Rome has again been true to her record as a troubler of the nations. It never contents her to do only her religious work; she reverses the words of the Master—"My kingdom is not of this world."

When Protestant teachers quote some ancient Romish authority as an illustration of the mischievous teaching of the Romish Church, their quotation may be discounted on the ground of its being ancient, but if they can show that it is still approved, then their case is good. A case in point is Liguori, who is approved by the Pope but rejected by Cardinal Newman. The Pope is the authoritative guide, and if he endorses the ancient teacher, then he is responsible for what that teacher says, and the immoral views of that teacher may be used against Romanism to-day.

The following summary of objections against Roman Catholicism from the pen of Mr. Gladstone will be read with interest just now :—

> It is hostile to mental freedom at large, incompatible with the thought and movement of modern civilisation, makes undue pretensions as regards the State, and against conjugal and parental rights; is jealous of the free circulation of the Holy Scriptures; tends to sap the love of veracity in the individual mind; alienates the educated mind in all the countries where it is professed, and saps the morality and strength of the States where it is paramount.

A more conclusive condemnation against any church or system of religion it would be difficult to conceive. And yet it is demonstrably true, as history everywhere shows.

A ministerial correspondent in Scotland, who is in a position to be well informed, writes to us mourning the prevalent declension in religious life and interest throughout many parts of the country. The inroads of worldliness into the church, the trivialities that too often mark the discussions in the Church Courts, the undue value put on monetary success, the defection of young people from church attendance and church membership, the increasing rage for athletics in various forms, lax observance of the Sabbath—these are the main points in the writer's indictment. As to possible remedies for this state of things, he says :—

> There is no hope of a remedy being found and applied until the facts are fairly faced. If the church courts were to hold private conferences, and laymen, as well as ministers, invited to speak out frankly, a step would be taken in the right direction. Heart-searching should be the order of the day, leading up to humiliation before God and earnest prayer. Such conferences will, however, lead to nothing unless they be entered upon under the solemn conviction that things have reached a perilous pass. Light-headed talk will only aggravate the evil, but the interchange of views on the part of Christian men, bent on seeing a God-sent revival, will be the beginning of better days for Scottish Christianity.

At one of the recent May meetings a speaker threw out a hint which ministers would do well to carry out in their next winter session. It is the revival of the old catechism classes, for the purpose of drilling the young in the knowledge of Scriptural truth and doctrine necessary to enable them to take an intelligent stand against the prevalent sacerdotalism. There is a considerable leakage among young men and women from the Evangelical bodies to the Ritualistic section of the Church of England. They have no better reason for their desertion of the church and tradition of their fathers than the "attractiveness" of the services. The one way to obviate this tendency is to indoctrinate them thoroughly with the meaning of these idolatrous ceremonies, and the peril which they constitute in the way of "pure religion and undefiled." If this were more frequently done there would be fewer cases of thoughtless lapsing among the young into sacerdotalism.

It is fashionable nowadays to affirm that what a man believes is of little importance compared with how he believes it. As a protest against the futility of holding a great creed in a frivolous or hypocritical manner this position is at least comprehensible, but as a statement of fact it is shallow and mischievous. The contents of a man's faith are really of the utmost moment, as well as the spirit in which they are held. It was the great Christian doctrines that "turned the world upside down" in the first century, as well as the enthusiasm of the early believers. We are transformed in the end by the quality of our religion. If our spiritual conceptions are low and unworthy, they will lower the whole tone of our life; if they are lofty and true, they will at last lift us to their own high level. In order to be great souls, we must have a great creed.

At a conference held at the City Temple on preaching, the following notable sentence was spoken:—

> We are here as Christians—and it is not for me to impress it upon you; you are fitter, I have no doubt, to impress it upon me—it is the preaching of Christ our Lord which is the secret, and substance, and centre, and heart of all preaching, not merely of facts about Him, and notions about Him, but of his person, his work, his character, his simple yet unfathomable sayings—here lies the secret of the art of preaching.

The pronouncement is true; it is supported by the authority of the Apostles, and by the experience both of those who have succeeded and those who have failed in the ministry. It was once incidentally supported by a distinguished Unitarian, who admitted that in Unitarianism there is no centre; and with what result we see. The weight of the words cannot be added to, but their interest is increased by saying that they were spoken twenty-one years ago by the great man whom England buried last Saturday.

If ministers and students for the ministry are not always good men, it is not for want of being plainly spoken to. Besides the criticism of the Press and of social life, of which they perhaps get an undue share, they come in for a deal from leading and successful men of their own order. Thus, Dr. Whyte, of Edinburgh, as the new Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, has used his position to speak plainly to his brethren; but, like a doctor's prescription, his words, if acted upon, will be of no small use. He held out hope of usefulness to all who will give themselves earnestly and thoroughly to their work, even to those who may be far on in life, and who may have only a barren past to look back upon.

> Can a man be born when he is old? And can a minister begin again in middle life; and even in old age? Yes, surely; yes, most certainly he can.... And I would like to know why a minister at fifty, at sixty, and even at seventy if it must be so, may not still be putting off the remaining bad habits of his life and ministry.

The putting off of bad habits, habits that are detrimental to work and usefulness, is absolutely necessary, but more than this is the putting on of graces and habits that shall make him "a vessel meet for the Master's use."

By latest accounts things are not so satisfactory in Madagascar as was recently reported. M. Elisée Escande, of the Paris Missionary Society, writes that in the Betsileo district only twelve of the forty-four churches confiscated by the Jesuits had been restored to Protestant use. An esteemed correspondent remarks, and we agree with him, that it must be very agreeable to the emissaries of Loyola that the impression should get abroad that all is pretty right in Madagascar.

Those of us who live in the quietness and security of our English towns and villages find it difficult to realise that in the chief town (Kano) in the hinterland of West Africa, we might see 500 slaves on sale in the market every day. The slave population of the town is estimated at 50,000. Similar conditions obtain in every other town in the same region. Slaves and cowrie shells are the only currency! The value of a slave varies from one hundred thousand to three hundred thousand shells, or from £3 to £9 sterling. A new currency and better means of communication are said to be necessary to extinguish the horrid traffic; but we fancy that in addition a new conscience, created by the Holy Spirit through the Word of truth, is required.

It is a remarkable thing that not a few dealers in intoxicating drinks are opposed to repressive measures, on the ground, it is alleged, that they would increase drinking! Sunday closing would increase private drinking, and prohibition would act like unlimited free trade; nay, free trade in drink would cause moderate, regulated, reasonable drinking; and prohibition would be provocative of indulgence. This argument is now freely used in New Zealand, for example, but as a correspondent writing from there says:—

> If prohibition leads to increased drinking, why are all those who are interested in the liquor trade opposed to it? It is not usual for any business men to object to an increase in their own particular trade. That they are bitterly opposed to it is well known here and in the colonies; so bitterly in Hawera that the proprietor of the Egmont Hotel refused to provide lodgings to a pronounced Prohibitionist who applied for it.

It is just as well to guide ourselves, in part at least, by the opinions of interested and well-informed parties. And this testimony proves that liberty to sell drink means more drinking.

Those who thoughtlessly display feathers in their hats, obtained at the cost of cruelty to living creatures, would do well to follow the example of the Princess of Wales in her endeavour to discountenance the practice. Her attention being drawn to an article dealing with the agonies inflicted on the egret in order to obtain "osprey" feathers, she has publicly authorised the writer to say that she disapproves of the custom strongly. It is understood that the Princess is always careful to inquire when purchasing bonnets what are the feathers used upon them, and never knowingly wears feathers or plumes that it has involved cruelty to obtain. If she were followed in this by all tender-hearted women, one of the most debasing customs would speedily be shamed out of existence. Beauty enhanced by the needless sufferings of the brute creation is surely doubly "vain."

Science has brought few more interesting facts to light of late years than the large place many humble creatures fill in the economy of nature. Of this a fresh illustration was furnished recently. A sea-wall in Essex broke down last November, and the sea flooded some 50,000 acres, the salt in the water killing all the earth-worms in the soil, who, by their burrowings, had hitherto kept it well drained. Since then the land is useless, and will be so till re-populated with these useful but despised creatures, to which we owe the fructifying character of all the soil in the country. Some of our best blessings are not appreciated till we lose them, because of their very constancy and faithfulness. It is a melancholy fact that calamity is often necessary to draw out gratitude. Then we realise how goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life, though we had never noticed or acknowledged it.

We do not think that those who have joined in the formation of the "Moral Instruction League" are likely to attain any useful purpose. It aims at the introduction into our Board Schools of moral instruction untinctured with any reference to religious sanctions. The programme that includes the cultivation of "the sense of responsibility, sympathy with all sentient beings, intellectual honesty, the spirit of liberty, courage, self-respect, and the other highest qualities of manhood," is a noble one, but to exclude all superhuman sanctions and motives from the minds of children would be to make them grow up nothing better than high-minded Pagans. As well blot out the sky from the eye, as shut out all religious motives from the moral sense. A more mistaken and disastrous educational policy it would be difficult to conceive.

Steps.

A BIBLE STUDY.

1. A truthful acknowledgment (Jer. x. 23).
   "Man cannot direct his steps."
   He is blind (Rev. iii. 17).
   He is ignorant (Heb. v. 2).
   He is foolish (Ps. lxxii. 22).
2. The enlarged steps (2 Sam. xxii. 37).
   The believer will have protection for his steps (Eph. vi. 15).
   He will pray much about his steps (Ps. xvii. 5).
   He will experience constant holding up (Ps. xciv. 18).
3. The ordering of the steps (Ps. cxix. 133).
   In a narrow pathway. The word.
   Very sure (Ps. xix. 7).
   Very true (Ps. cxix. 162).
   Very pure (Ps. cxix. 140).
4. A gracious promise about our steps (Pro. iv. 12).
   Run to do his will (Heb. xii. 1).
   Walk obediently (Josh. xxii. 5).
   Stand firmly (Eph. vi. 14).
5. Precious promise about steps (Jude xxiv. R.V.).
   Let the heart be fixed (Ps. lvii. 7).
   Let the hands be full (Ex. xxviii. 41 margin).
   The eye single (Luke xi. 34).

Herbert R. Francis.

The Convention on the spiritual life which, for some years past, has been held at Gloucester, will this year be held at Cheltenham, from June 6 to 10.

Rev. Ralph Gillam, of Medford, Mass., is in London for a short period. He brings letters from well-known workers in America, including one from Mr. Moody, who says: "My friend has had several years of active work, and has helped me more than once in my meetings." While in London Mr. Gillam will be glad of opportunities to serve the churches. Communications to him may be addressed to Gower House Hotel, Gower-street, W.C.

Musicians' Prayer Union.—This Union has recently been formed in the hope that it may be the means of raising the tone of the musical profession. Since its formation last Easter many professional men and women have joined its ranks, and the organisers have great hopes of its usefulness to the profession. Amongst those who have already joined are many doctors of music and prominent musicians in London and the provinces. Particulars as to membership may be obtained of the hon. sec., Mr. Livesey Carrott, 37, Cambridge-gardens, W

"Out of Season."

2 Tim. iv. 2.

MANY professed followers of Him "who went about doing good," are, it is to be feared, not "instant" in "preaching the Word" at all. Some there are who are instant "in season," but only in season. The preacher whose estimate of ministerial duty is to deliver his two or three sermons per week; the Sunday-school teacher whose work is done when the welcome bell to conclude the lesson relieves him of an uncongenial task; the busy paterfamilias who hastens over the routine of family worship to get to the counting-house or the newspaper as speedily as possible—have ideas of certain sacred duties which are to be performed, but to introduce sacred subjects at any other than prescribed times would be quite out of place with them, and must not be thought of for a moment.

Yet is there another class of really zealous Christians who are quite ready and willing to avail themselves of all opportunities to perform a deed or to speak a word for their heavenly Master. But to seek to witness for Christ except when such opportunities present themselves, they would consider inappropriate, indecorous, and calculated, in their minds, to do more harm than good.

Withal, how very "out of season" are many ordinary conversations which may yet lead up to most important results! There is a small party assembled at afternoon-tea. They have been discussing the weather, the fashions, the politics of the day, the Spanish-American war—quite a variety of subjects, having no connection with each other. There is a lull in the breezy talk, when someone abruptly remarks: "By the way, I met a friend of mine to-day who had been an invalid for quite a number of years, and I was surprised to see how well he looked!" The gentleman in question is a stranger to those present, and the cold "Indeed!" with which the information is greeted does not evince much interest. "Yes," continues the speaker, "and if any of you know of persons suffering from such-and-such a complaint I should certainly recommend them to try this remedy, which has made quite a new man of Mr. So-and-So! I never saw such a change. Why, it is quite a resurrection; my friend was so ill for such a length of time, and his case, in fact, considered quite hopeless." To the majority of those present the subject is not enticing, but there happens to be one there, perhaps, who has a dear relative suffering from that very disease; and however "out of season" the incident may be to others, if it eventuates in putting this invalid in the way of similar recovery, then to one hearer at least the subject is very far from being uninteresting, or the information conveyed from being "out of season." Others might even go so far as to vote the speaker a bore, but not so the one to whom this piece of news brings a ray of hope where all was darkness before.

One never knows what is passing through the minds of those with whom one is brought in contact; or how, beneath a gay and perhaps giddy manner, there may lie concealed a bleeding heart, which longs for one word of comfort or help, aye! which looks for and expects it from the professed follower of Christ present. The writer once felt severely rebuked; when he had spoken to two young men who were first cousins, about their salvation (but separately, neither being aware that the other had also been approached), each of them made the same remark, "I am surprised that you never spoke on religion to me before." They were both of them apparently worldly and living for pleasure, and somehow when in their company the sacred subject always appeared "out of season"! How mistaken this supposition turned out to be.

Does not the Christian worker's unwillingness to introduce spiritual topics into ordinary conversation sometimes arise from a forgetfulness of one of the primary laws of mental philosophy—namely, that a thought may be injected into the mind which, although considered inappropriate and without utility at that particular time, is taken hold of, stored up by the power of memory, and may be reproduced at any future time by the same faculty? The company are discussing the prospects of Derby-day, and they are all so interested and excited over the subject that a word of solemn warning or spiritual admonition would fall unheeded upon their ears! Are we so sure of that? Does our own experience bear out the theory that our only those ideas which have been suggested under appropriate circumstances? On the contrary, can we not recall many instances in which the very irrelevance of a remark was the one thing that caused it to impress itself upon the mind, and remain when the accompanying circumstances or conversation had faded from the memory?

MEMORY RETAINS AND REPRODUCES

"Out of season!" Considering the tremendous interests at stake, one might be led to ask, Can the preaching of the Word ever be out of season? As well, it would seem, ask, "Is the eating of food or the breathing of the air ever out of season?" as to think that speaking to sinners of Christ, their life and sustenance, can be at any time unseasonable. Nay, rather, can it ever be out of season to tell the consumptive that a fell disease has him in its grasp, to warn the seaside wanderer of the quicksands upon the beach, to holloa even to the happiest pleasure-party that their boat is nearing the fatal rapids?

It would be interesting to compare the experiences of various Christians as to what means led them directly to Christ, whether "out of season" or "in season" efforts on the part of others, or if apparently inadequate influences had not produced wonderful results in many cases; and if the columns of THE CHRISTIAN were opened to a symposium on the subject from well-known Christian workers, doubtless its readers would be astonished at what at least some of them would have to tell of the effect of unseasonable efforts in moulding their life and work.

J. C. TROTTER.

West Marylebone Mission.—The fifteenth annual meetings were held at Dauntless Hall, Lisson-grove, N.W., on Tuesday week. At the afternoon meeting for praise and prayer Mr. J. G. McVicker gave a most helpful address. Mr. A. Garstin presided in the evening, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. James Sprunt, J. H. Burridge, and C. H. Hickman.

The C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union for London were invited to the Bible Society's House on May 23, and had a splendid evening. About one hundred members availed themselves of the Society's invitation, and after inspecting the warehouse and taking tea, settled down to a meeting in the library. Canon Girdlestone was the principal speaker, and gave some most interesting information about many of the Bibles on the shelves in the room, and also of the difficulties which exist in translating the Scriptures into some languages. Dr. Wright and Rev. J. Sharp also spoke, and Rev. H. B. Macartney offered prayer. Mr. H. R. Arbuthnot, Chairman of the Union, was present, and Mr. G. A. King, President of the Helpers' Association of the Bible Society, occupied the chair.

Buried in the Country.—5.

HELPING THOSE IN THE CITY.

THE thought of individual responsibility was one which I tried hard to impress upon the minds of those in the village who came at all under our influence. "When a man finds God, the first thing he does is to look round for his neighbour." To comfort others with the comfort wherewith we ourselves have been comforted by God is natural in every case of real conversion.

So many of the women at the mothers' meeting felt, and so, I knew, some of the senior scholars in our Sunday classes felt. "But what can we in the country do to help others?" one or two asked. "I wish we lived in a town," and so forth. This was the way a few earnest spirits talked, and, without intending it, I found that I had spread the discontent by the stories I told now and then of the sad sights in crowded town life. All such tales touched the simple-hearted souls who gathered round us, and forced me to consider what we could devise to make them feel their bond of sisterhood with those of less favoured lot.

The result of my consideration was to invite anyone and everyone who liked to come to meet me one evening to talk over what help we could possibly give to the distant dwellers in the great heart of London. Quite a number of men and women, lads and lasses, put in an appearance at this informal talk—they were getting used to us by this time, and not so shy at expressing their opinions, and I was much encouraged and cheered, also rather amused, by some of the suggestions that were made. Finally these crystallised themselves into two, which at any rate were practicable, and eventually were carried out with great success. First we settled to have a regular flower mission, and to send flowers and texts all through the spring and summer to a certain very poor and miserable district that I knew well in South London. The deaconess who worked there would, I was sure, be only too thankful to receive these gifts and to distribute them.

ALL THE YOUNGER FOLKS

of our little village community were to undertake the working of this mission; some of them would go into the fields and woods and lanes round, and get the flowers and grasses; a few others promised to write out texts on cardboard slips in their very best "copperplate"; and then all flowers and texts were to be taken to an invalid girl, who lived in the village and was unable to walk, for her to arrange.

The postage, I should say, was paid for by one member, who was unable to be a working partner in the firm. The latter also provided the cardboard boxes in which the flowers travelled. We found the best means of keeping them fresh was to put between layers of flowers some damp paper—the sort known as "cap paper" answering best. In this way they travelled without injury. The gathering of the flowers took place every Thursday evening, and they were tied up and packed off to London the first thing on Friday morning. This tiny flower mission of very humble character gave intense pleasure, I know, to those who worked it, and made them feel a bit in touch with town work.

The other suggestion belonged to the elder people, and was a noble one on their part, as none of them were specially well-to-do. Country labour is not overpaid, and many in the village had large families and many mouths to feed. Every family took a little collecting-box and put in week after week all through the year a penny or so.

With the money thus collected we were able to help our London friend in a very real way. She old us if in her district she had any specially sad or distressing case of illness or trouble; and if she had, she was to send down that case to us for a week or two weeks' rest and change of air. The money we had collected paid all or part of the fare, and also paid the person's board and lodging. We lodged our visitor with an elderly widow in the village, paying her six shillings a week for all expenses. It was not much to give, but as the guest always lived with the widow, and shared her humble fare, not much extra expense was incurred; and besides, our friend liked to feel she was doing what she could to help in the scheme, and was proud to have a hand therein.

So these simple village folk tried to carry out in their small way the thought with which I began this paper; and thereby in helping others their own spiritual life was quickened to an intensar vitality.

RUS.

The Churches and Evangelistic Missions.*

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

6.—The place of Evangelistic services is in the full strong aggressive life of the Church.

THE most important consideration, therefore, is that our churches should be filled with the knowledge of the Divine will, and responsive thereto in all its details. There must be no toleration of evil in any form within our borders. The discipline of the church must be maintained. To this end all false sentiment must be set aside, and no person allowed to remain within the fellowship whose life is known to be inconsistent. The toleration of evil for financial advantage, or out of respect to certain friends of the wrongdoer, is injurious to the church's life, and therefore destructive of the fitness of the church for any aggressive work. There must also be a separation of the church from all methods of work which lower the standard of personal piety. To raise money or attract a crowd by means which in themselves are questionable is to belie our own principles by attempting to do evil that good may come.

Everywhere there is a growing desire for Divine visitation, and the ingathering of the indifferent crowds, and from all quarters the cry is ascending to the throne of God, "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake, as in the days of old, the generations of ancient times," and now, as in the days of the prophet, Heaven's answer to that prayer is, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem." We are breathing the prayer that our Master taught us, "Thy Kingdom come," with intense earnestness. It is for us to discover new meaning in the words of Jesus, uttered in answer to the question of the Pharisees as to when the Kingdom of God should come: "The Kingdom of God is within you." When we recognise and in life respond to that truth, then the Kingdom will come through us to others. A church in right position before God must necessarily become interested in the condition of those around, and to such a church "set times" will come for definite aggressive work.

Such "set times" are the only times when Evangelistic services should be held in our Churches.

There is a sense in which the whole work of such a church will be evangelistic, and continuously men and women will be brought to decision for Christ; but ever and anon the fields will whiten to harvest (for the preparation of the multitude is the work of the Holy Spirit, who at Pentecost was poured upon all flesh, quite as much as is the preparation of the church), and the whole fellowship will recognise the opportunity which God is bringing to it, and will give itself to prayer and earnest waiting upon Him. Then arrangement will begin. The help of an evangelist in whom the pastor has confidence, and with whom he can have perfect fellowship, will be sought, the doors will be opened, and a ready people will act in the power of the Divine life, and the thoughtless will be impressed, the seeker will find, and upon all will fall the showers of blessing from God.

CONCLUSION.

I have sought to impress upon your attention one thought that is to me a veritable burden, as I think of this great subject of reaching the masses through the God-appointed channel of the church. It is the thought that where the church is fulfilling the intention of Christ as to her own personal life, she will of necessity fulfil his intention as to her service, and that in no other way can she do this.

It may be said that if this ideal be carried out we shall have very few special missions. If that be so it is a deplorable fact, but the fewer the better, so long as it abides a fact. Our whole conception of church life and service is spiritual. We have nothing to offer men less than the choicest gifts of God, and we can never communicate more than we possess. If we are to give freely because we receive freely, inferentially it is true that the limit of our giving is that of our receiving.

Every Church should be compelled, by the energy and compassion of its own realisation of the life of Christ, to hold at intervals evangelistic services for the gathering in of the outsiders. If we are not doing so, it is time we called a halt for self-examination, and the setting in order of our own affairs.

I do not forget that we are specially interested this morning in the claims of our Church Aid Society, and I venture to think that no subject is of greater importance in connection with its work than this of missions.

The village churches have been, and still are, the strongholds of spiritual life, the very hothouses of intelligent and forceful aggressive Christianity. To them there come the set times of visitation, and too often their difficulty is in the lack of men and means. In the case of the larger churches, when the movement of the Spirit is towards harvest, they are able to respond. Let them remember that their opportunities are larger than the boundaries of their districts.

From the villages they have derived much of their best strength, and to such villages they are debtors in this as in other matters. It should be, that whenever a village church is ready for special services, the means should immediately be at the disposal of that church, and the man also, in the person of the pastor of some larger church, or in that of an evangelist set apart for the purpose ready and willing to go and share in the harvesting of that precious fruitage which has come through patient sowing and prayerful waiting.

*An address to the Congregational Union.

Mr. Gladstone's Funeral.

THE unparalleled interest shown by the public in the ceremonial obsequies of the deceased statesman is a wonderful token of the almost universal esteem in which he was held, and awakens many reflections as to the reasons of this demonstration. The following extract from a contributor to The Daily Chronicle of Friday may suggest an answer, and also forms a remarkable pronouncement from a secular newspaper. Writing of the vast throng that viewed the coffin, as it lay in Westminster Hall previous to burial, the writer says:—

"But the dominating characteristic of the whole crowd is religion. This is a picture of Christian England. A Christian nation mourns a great Christian: a giant among them, who understood them, who succoured, who brought them a man's sympathy, whose life exhibits to them a magnificent illustration of glorious faith—their faith. The Christian lady—and the words, if one pause to consider them, bring up a very distinctive type of woman; the Christian gentleman; the Christian youth (like the youth Gladstone)—these, considered as separate types by themselves, are much more in evidence in this crowd than the political student or the ordinary worshipper of greatness. Yes, this mass of patriots, filing silently by, without a suspicion of pose, to pay to the dead their last tribute of affectionate respect as man and woman, is first and last an assemblage of Christians bidding the final earthly farewell to a brother—a brother greater than they, but a brother.

"'And this Christianity?' might the reflective onlooker murmur—'this Christianity?' No miracle—as Emerson might have answered such a questioner—it rests on no miracle—'except on the miracle of being the broadest and most humane doctrine.'

"One can read no strain of sorrow in this feeling crowd. Its mind is now philosophically touched with sadness, it is patient, it is reverent and awed in the presence of death—it is, in a word, English. Looking upon the curling and winding stream of men and women, and looking upon the whole expanse of this square—at the majestic church, where a powerful nation's mighty dead are reposing; at the broad noble pile of buildings where that nation's destinies are guided; and then concentrating our lowered gaze once more upon the door where the steady, impressive current of humanity, ever disappearing from the view, is passing into the presence of the mortal remains of one who was a great captain and guide of those destinies—as we stand here, the voice is not one of sorrow, but of sweet hope, which whispers, 'Now more than ever seems it rich to die.'"

One who was present at the funeral writes:—"It is not easy to add to the long and varied reports which have appeared in the daily press, but the main thought of the whole service is expressed in the heading, in heavy type, which appeared across the page of one of the London evening papers, 'O grave, where is thy victory?' A more triumphant funeral I think I never witnessed. The secret was doubtless that all, or almost all, of those present realised that the service was not in this case a formal one.

"The singing of the 90th Psalm was followed by the reading of 1 Corinthians xv., so filled with glorious hope, and read by Dean Bradley with reverent feeling, as though he realised the truth of every word. Then was sung, by the whole vast congregation, Mr. Gladstone's favourite hymn 'Rock of Ages, cleft for me,' to the old-fashioned tune. The coffin was now carried to the open grave, whilst another of Mr. Gladstone's favourite hymns, 'Praise to the Holiest in the height,' was sung. A pathetic figure in the short procession to the grave was that of Mrs. Gladstone, leaning heavily on the arms of her two sons, Herbert and Henry. A seat was provided for her at the foot of the grave, whilst Dean Bradley continued the burial service at the head, with the Prince of Wales on his right hand, and the Archbishop of Canterbury on his left. It was impressive to see the bowed and aged form of one of Mr. Gladstone's personal friends, as he came forward to let fall into the grave the customary handfuls of earth as the words 'Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust,' were slowly and reverently read by the Dean. Then followed an exultant anthem, in which the words occurred again and again, 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours.' The Archbishop of Canterbury read the beautiful 'collect' filled with promises of eternal life in our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Then the Abbey was once more filled with melody as the vast audience sang a third favourite hymn of Mr. Gladstone's—'O God, our Help in ages past.' After the 'Benediction' by the Archbishop, Mrs. Gladstone was once more supported to the edge of the grave for a last look, her children and grandchildren around her. The Prince of Wales came forward, and in a few quiet words of sympathy endeavoured to comfort the surviving widow, kissing her hand as he did so. He was followed by the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Balfour, and others. The procession once more formed, and filed out of the Abbey, and one of the most remarkable events of the nineteenth century was at an end."

THE RECEPTION AT THE ABBEY.

Once more, once more, imperishable shrine,
Thou aged treasure-house of dust divine,
Fling wide thy gates!—Death brings thee of his best.
Give now thy best in turn—most glorious rest!
Welcome him to thine heart as to a throne,
The world's—not Britain's—last best bravest son.
Oh, shrine him there—that soul majestic, free—
In thy great heart of silence tenderly!
His voice rang through the world these sixty years,
But now a silence speaks, yea, speaks in tears,
Deeper than all life's music. 'Tis averred
Death makes his voice so loud that all have heard;
His very foes bend listening—earth's last shore
Hears trembling that clear voice unheard before.
Receive him now—be thou his last fond home,
Guard his pure fame through all the years to come!
Rare compact he of proud historic clay,
And orient fire snatched from the break of day.
His mind immense, his spirit stature high,
He touched at once all earth and utmost sky.
Indomitable manhood kept him young,
The chivalry of nations fired his tongue.
He loved as if no man had loved before,
Not kith and kin alone, he nobly bore
To alien lands unshepherded, oppressed,
Freedom's white banner of victorious rest.
Earth long shall boast his peerless stretch of wing
That seemed to compass every living thing—
And yet a child, a suppliant child, was he Bowed low in dust before the Deity!

C. A. Fox.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

The China Inland Mission.

SOME may have feared that the perplexed and perturbed state of affairs in China might raise fresh difficulties for the missionaries, and retard the progress of the Gospel. Those, however, who come fresh from the field have no such fears, rather their testimony is "all these things have happened for the furtherance of the Gospel." Indeed a strong feeling seems to prevail that China's day has come, that her mighty millions are turning an ear towards the Gospel—not so much from a desire after spiritual things as from the new perception that the despised foreigners have power, and the hope that the message they bring will convey that power and prosperity. But whatever the motive, the result is a widespread willingness to listen.

A spirit of thankfulness to God for these fresh openings characterised the annual meetings of the China Inland Mission, held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Wednesday last.

At the afternoon meeting Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS presided, and, gave a few hearty opening words. The Secretary of the Mission, Mr. W. B. Sloan, read extracts from a letter written by Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR to "The friends assembling at the annual meetings":—

"We have now been in Shanghai three months, and have already met over two hundred of our number. I have not been as strong or able to work as I could have wished; it has, however, been a great pleasure to see so many, and to have been able to take part in the council meetings of January and the present month. You will have heard that, in conjunction with Mr. Orr-Ewing and some of our Kiang-si missionaries, arrangements have been made to prepare for a forward movement in the province of Kiang-si; and that we are asking God for twenty men to begin with, who will devote at least five years to the itinerant evangelistic work of carrying the Gospel, as far as possible, "to every creature" in the unworked parts of the province. We shall need more than this number by-and-bye, and also a number of ladies for the women. And this is only one of fifteen provinces in which we are working!

"Let us thank God for the increased number of persons baptized. Last year (1896) the number of baptisms was 1262, and this was the largest number hitherto recorded; this year the number is 1325. Some of these were first-fruits of newer work. We have to thank Him also for an increase in the number of workers:

SEVENTY NEW MISSIONARIES

and associates joined us during the year. During the present year we have had a further accession of twenty-nine new missionaries, bringing the total from 744 on January 1 up to 773 on April 11. The number of native workers and of mission stations has undergone a corresponding increase; the total of paid and unpaid helpers at the close of 1896 was 507, but at the end of last year 605; while the number of stations and out-stations has increased from 277 to 318."

The Secretary's statement showed the total income for last year was £45,213 9s. 5d., or £2209 0s. 10d better than the preceding twelve months. The year has had its special trials and anxieties, but it has also been peculiarly a year of prayer, and that prayer is already being answered in many gracious ways—and not least in the revived lives of many of the native believers, and their fresh energy for evangelistic effort among their fellows.

Rev. W. COOPER, who has been in charge in Shanghai, said that immense as the difficulties have been, God's hand has been wonderfully made known. In 1887, when he was last at these meetings, the Mission had fifty-two stations. Now it has 151 stations with resident missionaries, and the opening of a fresh station often means months of hard work and patient endurance. Similarly the out-stations occupied by native preachers have remarkably increased. Again eleven years ago there were 235 missionaries, now there are 773. The number of the native communicants eleven years ago in connection with the C.I.M. was 1655, now it is 7147. An interesting review followed of work in the various provinces, some, of course, being much more encouraging than others. Some of the facts were certainly very striking, showing how wonderfully China, in nearly all directions, is opening to the Gospel. Last year was one of great persecution in many parts, and some of the most devoted native pastors feared the work would be broken up—yet at the end of the year the progress in these very districts was larger than ever before. In Hu-nan, Yun-nan, and Kwei-chau the work is but in its infancy. The present desire is that the unreached districts shall be thoroughly itinerated, and, if possible, new stations opened. Special efforts are being made to reach the isolated aboriginal tribes. On the whole, the outlook in China is decidedly promising. Doors are opening in all directions. A spirit of learning is being manifested.

Miss KÖLKENBECK spoke about a new district being opened north of Pao-ning, in Sz-chuen, telling how the call seemed to come from the people themselves. For example, one heathen who had been asking for a teacher, when told that no one could be sent at present, exclaimed, "What; no one! We shall all die without the light. We shall all go to hell, and in hell we shall curse you for refusing to send us a Jesus-teacher." She was led to go to the district, for which a special prayer band had been formed at Blackburn. No fruit appeared at first (although the people listened gladly) till a poor man, who had received a Bible from Mr. W. H. Murray, of the National Bible Society of Scotland, was led to confess Christ and testify for the Lord, with the result that his family were converted, that he had to suffer bitter persecution, and that a real work has been begun. For this and similar fresh openings in many parts prayer was earnestly asked. In illustration of the endurance of some of these humble native believers, our sister told us of a leper—saved, filled with the Spirit, and a power for good—who but a month or two ago was seized by violent men, carried off, and

ACTUALLY BURIED ALIVE.

But the more it is persecuted, the more does the Word spread abroad.

Rev. GEORGE HUNTER told of eight and a-half years' work in China, testifying that the Lord had been with him, and he had never once regretted giving up his pastoral charge in Scotland for the sake of China. He had experience in various parts of the field, but the present burden on his mind is Hu-nan, which has been up to this year the closed province of China. It is the richest and strongest, the leading province of the empire. Ten or twelve years ago endeavours were made to enter the province by Mr. Dorward and others. Still the door seemed fast shut, while prayer had been going up earnestly and continually; and now the answer has begun to come. For two years the speaker has been labouring in the province, and had suffered no hurt. The flood-tide of vile literature against Christians had been stopped, and, if anything, the officials seem anxious to of Hu-nan. Testimony from all hands shows that the intense hostility is passing away, and the people want to know what the foreigner has got which can help them; and, strangely enough, almost all missions in China are turning their eyes to this province. On the South the American Presbyterians are entering; in another direction the L.M.S. are pushing in; while the International Christian Alliance has entered from the North by the Great Lake. The C.I.M., getting in from Shi-sheo, is pushing forward, while a house has been rented at Chang-teh-fu. Then the Cumberland Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), having resolved to open missions in China, have chosen Hu-nan; while a Chinese Mission Band has also got a footing in the province. Thus on all hands attempts are being made to penetrate Hu-nan's isolation. Some reference followed to the various native workers, and in especial an L.M.S. evangelist whom the speaker described as a perfect apostle. The openings in this sealed province are large; let earnest prayer be made that the Spirit of God may send the Gospel home to many hearts.

BREAK UP THE EXCLUSIVENESS

Rev. H. E. Fox felt that as a great architectural work cannot be properly judged by separate details, but by a comprehensive view of the whole perspective, so in seeking to know something of God's work in the world we have to view the whole. What, then, is God's purpose now? To gather out a people to Himself, as settled long centuries ago in the conference at Jerusalem. Our business, therefore, is to evangelise the world from end to end, so that He may come again; for we are assured: "After this will I return." Hence we thank God for the spirit inspiring the resolve among some of our younger brethren and sisters—"the evangelisation of the world in this generation." Remember that a praying Church and a preaching Church is a Church endued with power. Let us then cry to God for the spread of his Gospel, for his coming and kingdom. When our souls are possessed by this grand thought we shall have no time for quarrelling with one another about petty differences. Many doors are opening. The world cries aloud for the Gospel. God's providence is preparing the way for his truth. Shall we not in simple faith and implicit obedience press forward on this great work of our Lord, so that He may come whose right it is to reign?

Another crowded meeting was held in the evening, when Mr. Theodore Howard presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. W. D. Rudland, Mrs. Talbot, Mr. Joshua Vale, Mr. E. J. Cooper, and Rev. H. B. Macartney (formerly of Melbourne).

The Y.M.C.A.

ALL the elements of a real success were present in the annual meeting of the Central Y.M.C.A. of London in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening last week. There was a great audience; the venerable and esteemed president, Sir George Williams, was in his accustomed chair; the secretarial report was quite couleur de rose; and there were three fine speeches from men of mark, besides stirring music from a male choir.

Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL'S abstract of report was of necessity much on the same lines as in former years. The familiar departments of work—the spiritual, the educational, the social, and the physical—were set in review; showing that the Association seeks to cater for the whole man and to meet the manifold needs of young men away from home. Prominence was, of course, given to the spiritual aspects of the work; that is of primal importance and forms really the one great argument for the Association's existence. The secretary reported quite a number of special efforts made during the past year to win young men for Christ and to lead them into paths of personal service for Him. It had been sought to reach soldiers, waiters, and other distinct classes, and a mission to boys led to most encouraging results. The warm mention of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Saturday afternoon at Aldersgate-street, brought out some of the heartiest applause of the evening. Time was, and that not so long ago, when the secretary on these anniversary occasions always had to report a financial deficit. This year the two ends of outgoing and incoming met, but a balance of 14s. 6d. in hand at the close was scarcely a justification for any slackness in public support. £700 was appealed for, to give things a good start for another year, and the greater part of this amount was given or promised.

The PRESIDENT'S statement was brief, but it made up in its qualities and warmth and enthusiasm what it lacked in quantity. According to his wont, Sir George widened the scope of his remarks so as to embrace London with its seventy Associations, and the wide world with more than 6500 Association centres, and a membership of nearly half-a-million. The chairman made pleasing reference to the fact that the past year was the Diamond Jubilee year of the Queen, and in view of the circumstance that the day of meeting was Her Majesty's birthday some verses of the National Anthem were loyally sung, and a telegram of congratulation was despatched in the name of the assembly to Balmoral.

The first speaker was the new Headmaster of the Leys School, Rev. W. T. BARBER, who at once gained the ear of his audience as he discoursed pithily and practically on the elements of Christian manliness as being fostered by the work and teaching of the Y.M.C.A. His setting forth of the glory of God as a supreme aim and motive in human life, as opposed to the lower pursuits of pleasure or commercial success, was most impressive.

Bishop BOYD-CARPENTER, of Ripon, also led the meeting up to lofty ideals, which culminated in the thought that the only true goal in all our Christian thinking and working is the life of Jesus Christ Himself. The Bishop was severe on those inexperienced young people who querulously complain that life is not worth living. He commended the wide scope of the Association's programme in embracing things not essentially spiritual but highly useful in training the God-given faculties of mind and body.

Last of all came Rev. F. B. Meyer, who found a fitting text for his practical piece of talk in a quaint saying of his own grandson. The other day the little chap was having a bath, and the process, for some reason, did not quite meet his full approval. When remonstrated with, his reply was: "Don't you see, I cannot do two things at once; I am having my bath, and I cannot be good at the same time." On this very homely incident Mr. Meyer built up a powerful exhortation to young men to have regard to being as well as to doing. They were to regard all the experiences of life, even the most unwelcome, as factors in the formation of character, which is of infinitely greater importance than the amassing of wealth or the acquisition of fame. He pleaded also for a symmetrical life, with a proper development of all its aspects and relations. The great recipe offered to this end was the power of the indwelling Christ.

Another meeting was held the following day at the Mansion House, with the Lord Mayor presiding, and addresses by Archdeacon Sinclair and Rev. J. G. Train.

Friends' Yearly Meeting.

LONDON Yearly Meeting has this year been one of unusual interest. From the other side of the Atlantic, John Frederic Hansen, James Reed Jones, and Charles W. Goddard and wife were present, bringing with them certificates of piety from their respective yearly meetings, and our own honoured member and minister, Harriet Green, after two years of incessant toil in America, largely in the Western States, was able to give a most interesting report. She will probably return in the autumn for another two years' service among our kinsmen on the great American continent.

Two of our American brethren were liberated and encouraged to visit friends and others in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, as way shall open therein; and as John F. Hansen is a native of Norway, the work will be easier for him.

Not only was America well represented, but France also, in the person of Madame Dalencourt, one of our most useful members, whose work lies in Paris and suburbs. William Weatherall, of Canada, was cordially welcomed in his native land, and his eloquent speech gave great satisfaction.

This year the perfect equality of men and women Friends found expression not only in a number of united meetings, but in the appointment of both sexes on the "Meeting for Sufferings," or representative meeting of the Society, and all the great questions affecting the Church's welfare were considered in joint sessions.

One of the peculiarities of Friends' arrangements is the possibility of a "concern" on some weighty subject taking possession of the meeting, and in a sense becoming a burning question. This year three such concerns arose, and were solemnly considered and dealt with.

The first was that of temperance, and the outcome was the appointment of a committee to visit Friends in London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, and not only try to influence the young, but labour to increase the zeal of all in the promotion of a cause as deeply needed as ever in our drink-cursed land. The next was the condition and needs of widely-scattered members over the Australasian continent. Much desire was expressed for rightly called and qualified Friends to visit them in the love of the Gospel, and strengthen them in the faith and hope of Jesus Christ, amid the rampant spirit of worldliness surrounding them. The third concern was on Peace, especially in view of the war in which our American kinsmen are engaged; an appeal and encouragement to Friends in the United States and "all lovers of Peace" was the result.

The foreign missionary meeting on the Monday evening was an inspiring occasion. Missionaries on furlough from China, Madagascar, and India were present, and R. Wardlaw Thompson, of the London Missionary Society, took a very able part in the gathering. The foreign enterprise of a Church is a fair index of its life. In this connection we may state that Joseph Gundry Alexander was heartily liberated and encouraged to visit, in the love of the Gospel, in France, Belgium, French-speaking Switzerland, and among the Vaudois Valleys. To the meeting on Ministry and Oversight is relegated this important function; and earnest was the expressed desire for blessing on our friend and his work. The Home Mission meeting, and the Friends' Temperance Union annual meeting, were held on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and were remarkable for the eloquence and earnestness, the hope and the inspiration, that stirred so many hearts; probably, at least 1000 persons were present each evening. Seldom, indeed, have three such gatherings been consecutively held.

The growth of the Society last year was only about equal to the growth of the population, and was far from satisfactory. Yet the Missionary Helpers' Union, the Adult School Movement, the extension of missionary work both at home and abroad, and the increasing desire for the spread of the Kingdom of Christ, are hopeful auguries. The Prayer League hopes to hold a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life at an early date.

The interests, spiritual and philanthropic, social, moral, and religious, that cluster around the Yearly Meeting—that of so many younger and older Friends—constitute it a unique assembly; and certainly, if we take into account the devotional morning gatherings, the frequent opportunities for prayer crowded into the daily exercises, the prevalence of the spirit of brotherhood and condescending love, it would be difficult to doubt the splendid possibilities that lie before London Yearly Meetings of Friends. Democratic, or rather, theocratic, as is the constitution of the Society, like all other human institutions, it has to be constantly on the guard against settling down into a "formal informality," and the friction of mind with mind, and heart with heart, undoubtedly does much to keep the membership on the one rock and foundation, Jesus Christ Himself. One specially interesting sight at one of the great joint meetings was the earnest and noble appeal by Joseph Albert Pease and John Edward Ellis, both Members of Parliament, on behalf of the enslaved peoples of Zanzibar and Pemba, and many hearts were grateful for the fact that Friends' missionaries are prosecuting an industrial mission among them, nobly and unselfishly representing the hereditary hatred of slavery of many generations of Friends.

FOCUS THE HOPES AND ASPIRATIONS

The yearly meeting of 1898 will undoubtedly rank among the most favoured of recent annual gatherings.

Wm. Hobson.

Evangelisation of the Sikhs.

THE first annual meeting of the Khalsa Prayer Union was held recently in the Lower Exeter Hall. This union was founded by a converted Sikh, with the object of banding together friends for prayer and work on behalf of the evangelisation of his countrymen, and already, as the report showed, over 700 members have been enrolled.

In the unavoidable absence of Col. Robert Williams, M.P., president of the Union, the chair was taken by Col. John Adam Ferguson, of the Royal Military College, Camberley. The report was read by the general hon. secretary, Baba M. Singh Sodhi, and was a wonderful testimony to the blessing of God upon the union, which has twenty-eight branches. An appeal is now being made for sufficient money to support two, or if possible three, native workers amongst the Sikhs this year, so that the Union may have its own representatives in the field; £60 is needed for this purpose, and already over £20 has been contributed.

The Chairman explained, by reference to the Indian Mutiny and the recent war on the North-west frontier, the great debt of gratitude which the English nation owes to the Sikhs, and appealed to Christian people to repay that debt by providing them with the best of all gifts, even the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The central hon. secretary, Miss Garbutt, followed with a narrative of her own experience in India, the great difficulties which converts have to encounter, and the noble way in which they stand up for Christ amidst persecution. She especially appealed for English lady missionaries to go out and work amongst the Sikh women. Another speaker was Mr. W. Coldstream, of the Indian Civil Service, who spent over thirty years amongst the Sikhs. He gave a detailed account of the Sikh nation, from a religious and historical point of view, and emphasised the fact that they were not idolaters but monotheists.

Communications respecting the Khalsa Prayer Union should be addressed to Miss Garbutt, 34, Marlborough-hill, N.W., who will be pleased to forward particulars of the Union.

Christian Evidence Society.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society was held on Wednesday, last week, at St. Martin's Town Hall. The report, presented by Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, stated that the number of open-air lectures in connection with the Society's work had risen from 235 in 1896 to 392 in 1897. An improved financial position was reported, due partly to the special liberality of a few friends and a legacy of £500. Spiritualism was said to be rapidly increasing, especially in the north of England, and needed to be reckoned with; and satisfaction was expressed that three successive presidents of the Royal Society, namely, Sir G. G. Stokes, Lord Kelvin, and Lord Lister, were supporters of the Society.

The Bishop of Stepney, who presided, remarked that the two kinds of work which were most needed to-day, Christian evidence and rescue operations, were the least supported. If people could hear what went on in Victoria-park on Sunday, when secular lectures were applauded by boys and often quite unopposed, they would be immediately convinced of the need of this society. If trained men were not sent, the work of opposing secularism fell to zealous men whose lack of knowledge led to lamentable results. He had known several secularist lecturers themselves come over to the Christian faith when properly treated. Christian controversy must be conducted in a Christian spirit, with all courtesy, with full knowledge, and with freedom of discussion. The society was said to be inadequately supported because it comprised both Nonconformists and Churchmen. If any people called that an objection they ought to be ashamed of themselves. For nine years his staunchest supporters in Victoria-park had been Nonconformists, without a word or breath of want of confidence between them. They were all united in holding the great Christian truths of the Incarnation, the Atonement, and the Trinity.

A forcible address was also delivered by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson.

Women's Missionary Work.

ON Thursday afternoon the Bishop of London presided over the annual meeting of the Women's Missionary Association for the Promotion of Female Education among the Heathen, held at Sion College. Mrs. Temple is the president of the Association.

The report showed that there had been an increase in the annual income of £1034, the receipts amounting to £7709. After payment of expenses there was a balance of £2630 in hand. The work of the mission in all the Indian, South African, and Madagascar Settlements had been well maintained.

The Chairman thought that in the foreign mission fields women's work would have the effect of making successful the efforts put forward by male missionaries. A Frenchman holding a very responsible position visited him recently in order to inform him what had been accomplished by women missionaries in Madagascar. The people there were considered a very unpromising people. His informant, however, paid an eloquent testimony to the work of the English missionaries, and went so far as to say that their withdrawal in his opinion would be serious to the prospects of civilisation.

Gordon Boys' Home.

THE annual meeting of this institution was held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Thursday, General Sir G. W. A. Higginson presiding. The report stated that there were 237 boys in the Home on December 31 last. The ordinary income amounted to £6,539, and the expenditure to £6,614. The Chairman alluded to the fact that the Home was founded in memory of Gordon, the "Soldier-Saint," who fell at Khartoum thirteen years ago. It had only been of recent date that his work had been blessed with the success which they believed it deserved, and they could look with satisfaction to the fact that Gordon's memory had been duly perpetuated by the establishment of the Gordon Boys' Home. He hoped that the result of present interest would be redoubled efforts to maintain that national memorial, the Gordon Boys' Home, and that the success of that institution would be the means of founding many others of a similar character. At least 80 per cent. of the boys who left the Home had joined the army and proved to be good soldiers. Nine "old boys" of the Home were at the present time serving with the army in Egypt, and they would probably find themselves before long on the threshold of the palace where Gordon fell. General J. J. McLeod Innes, Colonel the Hon. Robert Boyle, and Lord Belhaven and Stenton also spoke.

Homeless and Destitute Children.

A GRAND demonstration was held on Thursday afternoon, at Exeter Hall, in connection with the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, the Earl of Jersey presiding. The boys from the training ships Arethusa and Chichester, and the bands from Fortescue House and other homes, lent much interest to the proceedings.

Mr. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, reported that during the year 363 children had been admitted, while of 373 who had left, 190 had gone into the Navy and merchant service. The ordinary school work had been very successful, earning £732 of the Government grant. The year's income had been £19,315, and the expenditure £18,742, but a large debt remained, and an urgent appeal was now made for its liquidation.

The Chairman, after paying an eloquent tribute to the memory of Mr. Gladstone, spoke of the great service the society had rendered to the country in taking so many thousands of destitute children off the streets and training them to become useful members of society. The children, he said, came not merely from London, but from twenty-two English counties, and from several foreign countries.

Bishop Ingham followed, speaking warmly of the industrial training imparted in these schools, and giving a pleasing account of his own observations in some of the Homes.

Rev. John E. Wakerley gave a rousing address, telling from his own experience the state of things from which many boys and girls have been rescued, and giving, by way of contrast, some instances of what boys had become. He could think of no nobler or grander work than that of rescuing waifs and strays from London streets, and giving them a chance in life.

Mr. H. G. Copeland followed with a twenty minutes' talk on the work and its incidents, illustrated by limelight views. The proceedings were varied by displays of musical drill and the singing of many songs and choruses by the Children's Choir.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institutions held their annual meeting on Tuesday week in the Lower Exeter Hall. An abstract of the report, read by Mr. W. J. Taylor, began with a review of the present position of reformatory and rescue work, and specially the endeavours to prevent the young from falling. The reports of the six Homes show many indications of God's blessing on an arduous but Christlike mission.

The work during the past year has been of a most encouraging nature. One matron speaks thankfully of the earnest, hearty manner in which the religious services of the Home are conducted, and the beneficial results which have followed, to the reality of which the changed lives of many young women bear testimony. Another tells of the great encouragement she has met with in seeing the fruits of the labours of years gone by. 155 new cases have been admitted during the year, while 246 have been disposed of satisfactorily.

Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., felt that the keynote of this report was loving pity for those who, having been betrayed, had fallen. We seek to help, but it is with the definite desire to cure, to say, "Go, and sin no more." Prebendary Webb-Peploe maintained that there is sore need for largely increased help for works of this kind. Generous supporters pass away, and difficulty is felt to get others sufficiently interested to take the place of the dead, and become regular annual subscribers. In a thrilling passage the speaker showed something of what friendlessness means for a young girl in this vast city.

The Archdeacon of London followed with an earnest argument for the responsibility of every follower of Christ to support efforts for the salvation of the lost, and the sweeping back of the temptations to impurity which disgrace our streets.

Rev. Sydenham L. Dixon bore hearty testimony to the admirable way in which the work is being carried on. Mr. Stephen Bourne also spoke on the evils of the streets.

Protestant Church Union.

THE annual meeting of this Union was held on Thursday at St. Martin's Town Hall, under the presidency of Prebendary Webb-Peploe. The annual report, in referring to the memorial forwarded by the society to the archbishops on their reply to the Pope, said the committee cordially welcomed the clear and emphatic statements of the archbishops so far as they went, but were constrained to deplore their silence on several very important points raised by the reply to the Papal Bull. The Benefices Bill, although containing some provisions which were open to exception, was an immense improvement upon its predecessor, and should be a useful measure in putting a check upon abuse of patronage.

The chairman announced that Lord Middleton was no longer able to act as president, and the position had been offered to and accepted by Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P., who said that the work of the society was becoming more and more necessary every year. Now that the crisis in the Church was more evident every day, he hoped that people who held Protestant views would recognise that something required to be done. They had to stem the tide of Romanism which was setting in with such force, for their object was to protest against the Roman ideas which were being introduced into the Church by the Sacerdotal party. In the Upper House of Convocation the Archbishop of Canterbury had referred to interruptions to the work of dealing with the matter, by which he meant the action of Mr. Kensit. Mr. Kensit had given voice and form to that indignation which had been burning in the breasts of honest Churchmen for some years past. So far from his action being an interruption, he thought Mr. Kensit had raised sleeping Churchmen on all sides to the lawlessness that existed in so many churches.

On the motion of Rev. E. A. Stuart, seconded by Mr. C. MacArthur, M.P., it was resolved:—"That this meeting cordially welcomes the recent utterances in Convocation of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury and other of the Bishops regarding the causes which have led to the scandals in St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate, and elsewhere, and earnestly hopes that effectual steps will now be taken for the removal of the evils in question. The meeting desires further respectfully to assure the Bishops of its loyal support in any effective measures they may take to put an end to the present disorders, and to ensure a faithful obedience to the order and teaching of the Church of England, as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer and her other authoritative standards of doctrine."

The Christian Community.

AT the meeting of this Society held last week, at Exeter Hall, Sir George Williams presided, and there was a good attendance. The 126th annual report, as presented by Mr. James Atkinson, the secretary, showed a good year's work. Emphatic testimony was given to the willingness of the people generally to hear the Word of Truth. "In former times opposition was frequent, and almost violent, but now it is rare to meet with the least resentment, even from the lowest and most degraded, in the open air, common lodging-houses, or anywhere else." The upper part of the Memorial Hall at Bethnal Green is devoted to the somewhat extensive work of the Free Library, to which a lending section has just been added.

The evangelistic services have been carried on on Sundays and week-nights; the Bible-classes and prayer-meetings have been well sustained. Seven mission halls and 450 voluntary helpers devote their service to the mission, the halls standing in the poorest districts, where no other similar agencies exist. Many conversions were reported, especially from Canning Town, among seafaring classes. Under the sanction of several Boards of Guardians, about twenty infirmaries, workhouses, and casual wards have been visited, and this service, which is done chiefly on Sundays, is carried on by about 200 persons. The visitation of the common lodging-houses is also for the most part done on Sunday night, when a service is conducted in each kitchen by a select company, some of them ladies. The open-air evangelistic services have been carried on at twenty stations, and, in addition, courts and alleys are visited for the purpose of giving Gospel addresses.

What is called the benevolent work is carried on as usual. At the Mission Hall in Spitalfields a free breakfast is given to 200 men, women, and children, many of the men being in a starving condition, while a proportion of the women are in the plight of those who have been forsaken by their husbands. The Night Refuge for homeless men seems to have its full complement of lodgers every night, special cases being dealt with by being sent back to their friends, or by being assisted to obtain clothes or work. A Holiday Home for Children is maintained at High Beech. An admirable work is also carried on among fallen women, but this is the more difficult on account of the want of a home in which to train the rescued for a life of virtue and usefulness. At the meeting addresses were given by Sir G. Williams and Revs. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield, J. G. Train, J. F. Shearer, and John Bond.

The Bible League.

THIS Society held its sixth annual meeting at the Mildmay Park Conference Hall on Tuesday evening last week, the chairman being Mr. W. H. Seagram. Rev. John Tuckwell read the report, which showed the aim, progress, and present position of the League; and the treasurer, Colonel Boyse Smith, gave particulars of the society's income and expenditure.

Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, in an eloquent speech, contended that God had been pleased to make known his wisdom, not merely in Nature and in the development of the human intellect, but also by Revelation in the Bible. Though men were preeminently wiser now than their ancestors, they still yearned for the Divine, and it was natural to suppose that God would satisfy the craving for Him which He had implanted in men's souls. Nothing but the Bible has ever been found to meet these aspirations and fully satisfy them. Frivolous objections to the accuracy of the Bible were frequently made, but evidence was constantly forthcoming to prove its historical accuracy. The revelation which God had made to man must necessarily be Divine in every part of it, otherwise it would not be as it is, an infallible guide to man.

Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, in an able address, directed attention to some of the utterances of the Higher Critics, and showed that there was no ground for alarm so far as God's Word was concerned. The League was not only to resist attack, but also to help and sustain faltering and bewildered brethren. A lecture on "Babylon and Bible Story," by Rev. J. Tuckwell, concluded the proceedings.

Dr. R. A. Watson, Butterburn United Presbyterian Church, Dundee, has intimated his intention to resign his charge, which he has occupied for nineteen years. Dr. Watson is an accomplished and scholarly preacher and writer, and his wife has gained considerable literary reputation under the nom de plume of "Deas Cromarty."

Ladies' Irish Association.—This Association, founded in 1821, to evangelise lonely districts in Ireland, to assist poor schools, and to relieve distress, is hoping that God will grant new blessing in its new offices, 24, Clare-street, Dublin. Letters are received from clergymen in remote and poverty-stricken places, pleading for aid in the maintenance of their schools. Unless these can be kept open, the Protestant children must go to convents or Roman Catholic teachers for instruction. Once closed, a school is re-opened with great difficulty, whereas trifling assistance may maintain it during a period of financial pressure, and enable it to do a blessed work among children, whose minds are so susceptible to influence, whether for good or evil.

The Church Army.—Dear Sir,—Many thanks for your sympathetic notice of our work among the outcast and destitute. As to supervising the men after they leave our Labour Homes, while we are far from being content with our work in this particular direction, we have at the same time no less than ten Lodging Homes in full working order in different parts of London and the provinces for men who have passed through our Labour Homes, and have been started afresh in life. In these Lodging Homes the personal influence of the "father" and "mother," and the example constantly set by them of living "godly, righteous, and sober lives," have produced very encouraging results; and we are waiting only for the necessary funds to enable us to open a Lodging Home in connection with every one of our Labour Homes. We hope we may be enabled to start not less than twenty this year. 100 guineas will start a Home.—Yours faithfully,

Colin F. Campbell, Hon. Sec.

C.A. Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, W.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 5.

"That He might be just, and the Justifier."—Rom. iii. 26.

This verse is often quoted as though the word yet must be inserted to bring out its meaning. "Just and yet the Justifier." The marvel of a just God justifying sinful men is thus strongly accentuated. Of course this is a true thought and marvellous. But it is not the precise idea of the Apostle, when he says that the just God is the Justifier of those that have faith in Jesus. He means that the very justice of God has come on our side, and his love may have its unhindered way, not only consistently with his justice, but because of it.

This is the heart of the Gospel. Jesus has stood as our representative. He has borne our sin, its curse and penalty; has met the claims of a broken law, and satisfied the demands of infinite righteousness. To have done this in our name and on our behalf not only makes us free from any penalty which might otherwise have accrued, but gives us a claim—the claim of the righteous—on all those blessings which the righteous government of God has to bestow.

Directly we are one with Jesus by a living faith, we stand possessed of all that He has done and is. And the justice of God insists that we should be treated as heirs and joint-heirs; just as, when a criminal has completed his sentence, the very law which once condemned him takes his side, stands beside him, and insists on his reinstatement in the rights and privileges of a loyal citizen. We are saved not only by the grace, but by the justice of God.

MONDAY, June 6.

"He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief."—Rom. iv. 20.

It was a marvellous promise that this childless pair should have a child, and become progenitors of a great nation, so that the stars of the heavenly vault and the sand-grains on the ocean-shore should not be more numerous. And it was enough to stagger any man to be told of it. But Abraham staggered not. How was this?

It did not arise from ignoring the difficulties that obstructed its realisation. He might have done so. Whenever the thought of the mighty natural obstacles arose he might have ignored them. But this, according to the R.V. rendering of the previous verse, was not Abraham's policy. He quietly and deliberately considered the enormous difficulties that lay in the path of the Divine purpose, and in spite of them he staggered not.

But his unstaggering faith arose from his great thoughts of Him who had promised. He kept saying to himself, He is able, He is able. He knew that God would not have said what He could not perform. He knew that the God of nature was Lord of the nature He had made. He knew that no word of the Almighty could be destitute of power. He fed his faith by cherishing lofty and profound thoughts of God's infinite resources. There rang in his heart the assurance, I am El Shaddai.

For every look at the difficulties in your way take ten looks at the almightiness of God. From what has to be done, turn to what has been done, and give glory to God.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness."

TUESDAY, June 7.

"We have now received the reconciliation." "They which receive abundance of grace ... shall reign in life."—Rom. v. 11, 17 (marg.).

All God's dealings with us are on the same principle. Whether it be justification or sanctification, whether reconciliation or reigning in life be under consideration, the same mighty principles underlie and control the Divine actions and our relation to Him. We receive reconciliation as a gift at the beginning of our Christian life, and we have to receive all else to the end. For ever and for ever we have just to wait till He fill us, as the flower-cups that are now filled with sunshine and now with dew or rain.

You have already received the reconciliation. Unable to earn it by your own endeavours, you were at last content to receive it as a free gift placed into your open hand; now you have to maintain the same position with respect to all the spiritual gifts that you need for the maintenance of a godly life, and to enable you to reign. It is not enough to live—you must reign in life; and in order to do this you must hourly receive from Jesus whatever is necessary to make you reign.

You cannot reign in life unless you learn the deep lesson of abiding in the grace of the one Man, Jesus Christ, and of receiving out of his fulness grace upon grace.

WEDNESDAY, June 8.

"Present yourselves unto God."—Rom. vi. 13.

We must choose. On the one hand stands sin, filling the market-place with its appeals, and bidding for us; on the other hand, God in the person of his Son. For it is well known that to whomsoever we yield ourselves to obey, his servants we shall be. Sin wants us, not only to work its fell results by us, but to curse and ruin us; whilst God wants to bless us with eternal life.

We may not be able to forecast or to arrange many things in our lives, which are difficult and perplexing, and at first it is not wise to discuss our attitude or action with respect to them. The first and most momentous question which presses for immediate solution is, whether we are prepared to present our members—brain, voice, hand, heart—to God, that through them He may fulfil the good purpose of his will. The supreme question is, are we willing for this, are we prepared that God should have his way in us, and through us? If we are, we give God the key of our will, asking Him to take possession and use our members as weapons in his great war against evil.

This is the way that we are delivered from sin. Merely to resist and refuse it, is not enough; we shall not get perfect freedom so. But if we turn to God with a full purpose of heart, and give Him possession, we shall be delivered from the dominion of evil, and all else will come right by itself.

THURSDAY, June 9.

"O wretched man that I am!"—Rom. vii. 24.

This chapter is very full of the personal pronoun. Me and I are the pivot around which its argument revolves. The efforts which the soul makes, not so much to justify as to sanctify itself, to realise its ideal, to walk worthy of the Lord, are well pleasing.

One who sat with me in my study said to me the other day, sadly and earnestly:—

"Oh, that the man would arise in me,
And make me the man I fain would be!"

This aspiration is germane to all souls in whom God has kindled the fire of a consecrated purpose. But it is destined to endless disappointment until they can be induced to open to the Divine man—to the man Christ Jesus, to Him who liveth for evermore in the power of an indissoluble life.

The key to the plaintive moan of this chapter consists in this. It is the result of the endeavour to live a holy life, apart from the power of the indwelling Saviour and independently of the grace of the Holy Spirit. All such efforts are sure to end in wretchedness. But there is a blessedness even here. For it is only when we have come to the very end of all our strivings and resolvings, and have abandoned ourselves to the Saviour, that He should do in us and for us what we cannot do for ourselves, that we are led to cry, "I thank God through Jesus Christ my Lord."

FRIDAY, June 10.

"The whole creation groaneth." "We ourselves groan." "The Spirit Himself maketh intercession with groanings."—Rom. viii. 22, 23, 26.

There is a threefold groaning here.

Creation groans.—The sufferings of the dumb animals, under the brutal tyranny of man, in hard service, in the torture chambers of vivisectionists, to yield pleasure, to give food, or to provide dress, must fill the ear of Heaven with groans. Goethe said that Nature seemed to him to be like a captive maiden crying aloud for release.

The saints groan.—We wait for our adoption, for the manifestation of our sonship, for the redemption of our bodies from the last remnants of the fall; and as we wait, we sigh with the pressure of the present, and with eager desire for the blessed advent of the Lord.

The Spirit groans.—The pressure of sin and sorrow is heavy for Him to bear, and He sighs bitterly as Jesus did when He stood face to face with the grave of his dead friend.

But these groans portend life, not death. They are the pangs of birth, not the throes of death. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth." Out of the agony of the present the new heavens and earth are being born.

SATURDAY, June 11.

"Jacob I loved, and Esau I hated."—Rom. ix. 13.

The Apostle is dealing here, not with individuals as such, but with peoples and nations. For instance, Isaac stands for the entire Jewish race—Abraham's seed (7). He is dealing with the question, why it was that God chose Israel and rejected Edom, chose Jacob and rejected Esau; and he shows that the ultimate decision of their destinies lay in the purpose of God, according to election. The one was elect to be a channel of immense blessing to the world, whilst the other was rejected.

But we must always associate the divine foreknowledge with the Divine choice. "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate." We must regard them, not as individual personalities merely, but as the founders of nations. For God's purpose in this, Jacob, the methodical and far-seeing, was more suited than Esau, the free-lance, the rover, the unsystematic. This does not solve the entire mystery, perhaps; but only casts it a degree or two further back. Still, it ought to be considered. Like a candle, it casts a slender ray on to the black abyss. But is it not certain that God's choice did alight on him who was most suited to serve the Divine purposes, and whose character did aspire from the first after the unseen and Divine?

It may be that God is wanting to execute his purpose through you. Take heed. See to it that for one morsel of meat you do not sell your birthright.

F. B. M.

Christian Endeavourers in Glasgow.

THE BRITISH C.E. CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

ARRIVING in Glasgow on Saturday evening I went right to St. Andrew's Hall, finding it crowded to the door by an enthusiastic gathering of earnest young people, attesting the hold the Endeavour Movement has taken in Scotland. Four years ago Endeavourers in North Britain were few; now they are a mighty host. This, however, is the British Convention, not merely the Scottish; and while the "dear Doric" predominated, Ireland, Wales, and all parts of England were largely represented by delegates. For example, in the temperance hotel where I am staying, there is a party of about eighteen from Liverpool, and in the same way many other cities North and South have sent contingents.

Saturday was mainly devoted to welcome meetings of various kinds. At a "Junior Rally" in the afternoon Revs. James Muir and Carey Bonner and Miss Alice T. Stroyan, of Liverpool, took part. A reception of delegates followed, while later on was held the welcome meeting above referred to. Lord Overtoun, who was to have presided, being absent in London attending Mr. Gladstone's funeral, Rev. C. Robson took his place. In opening, he said that they met as representatives of thousands banded together in an earnest desire after a life of consecration and service to the Redeemer who died for them; and for which

> Our vows, our prayers we now present
> Before thy throne of grace:
> God of our fathers be the God
> Of their succeeding race.

The President of the Glasgow Union, Rev. E. Last, followed with words of cordial welcome.

Rev. George Gladstone spoke on behalf of the churches of Glasgow, while Bailies Sinclair and McCutcheon, speaking for the Provost of Glasgow, expressed the civic welcome. Miss E. M. Weatherley then spoke for England, Rev. R. Williams for Wales, Rev. James Wylie for Ireland, Mr. James Paterson for Scotland, and Alderman F. F. Belsey for the British Council. Mrs. Clark charmed all her young hearers with a bright little speech.

Rev. F. E. CLARK, D.D., said that he was glad to be again among the successors of the Covenanters in the land of the Covenant. As president of the World's C.E. Union, he felt he must bring the loving greetings of Endeavourers in Japan, China, India, Australia, the Sandwich Isles, South Africa, and many Continental lands. What a wonderful company they were to appear, as he had seen them, in curious garb, and with strange speech. One and all, if he interpreted their spirit aright, were animated by the overmastering thought—What can we do, what are we doing, for Christ and his covenant? In his own beloved land Endeavour was all alive. He rejoiced that the two great English-speaking countries were now linked in the closest bonds; long might it so continue. Dr. Clark closed with a reference to coming British conventions—Belfast in 1899 and London in 1900.

Another meeting was going on at the same time in Hengler's Circus, which was also crowded. Rev. John Pollock presided and gave an address, followed by Rev. J. D. Lamont, President of the Irish National Union.

The principal speaker of the evening was Rev. J. TOLFREE PARR, President of the London C.E. Union, who, in the course of an earnest address, made strong appeals against intemperance, gambling, and betting, and on behalf of fairness in commercial life, purity in the workshop, the abolition of Her Majesty's buckhounds, pigeon shooting, and rabbit coursing. In appealing for higher ideals in political and municipal life, he stated that they might not all believe in State religion, but they did believe in a religious state. They might pray till doomsday for God's Kingdom to come, but it never would come until they used the instruments God had provided, and one of his instruments was the vote. They should vote for the men who represented the highest interests of the community.

SUNDAY'S SERMONS.

THE CULTIVATION OF FAMILY LIFE.

A fine congregation filled St. Andrew's Hall by 9 o'clock on Sunday morning, when Rev. J. H. JOWETT, of Carr's-lane, Birmingham, preached the convention sermon. Taking for his theme Rev.

REV. J. H. JOWETT.

vii. 9, 10, "Lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands, and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb," he said that these words are commonly and rightly interpreted of the grand reunion yet to be consummated. They are taken as providing satisfaction for the aching inquisitiveness after the mysteries of the unseen glory, as affording glimpses of the home life of the REV. F. E. CLARK, D.D.

Father's house. But while this is true they are not to be confined to the unseen and the future. They have their present lessons; for the life that makes perfect bliss in glory is also the blessedness of life here below. Thus the revelation of the unseen becomes a revelation of what might be in some measure here and now. In these verses we have the family motive of the great gathering, whom no man can number. This multitude of all tribes and nations is sealed together in a loving brotherhood. One grand aim of the Christian Endeavour Movement is to bring believers of every sect, colour, and name together in true hearty unity.

Now, what is the spiritual solvent by which all racial and ecclesiastical diversities shall be transmuted into love and oneness? The answer appears in the common characteristics of the mighty throng. Certain distinguishing features are common to all. They are clothed in white robes; they have palms in their hands; and they all sing one song of worship and praise. In these common characteristics will be found the secret of their family life and unity, and therein we see the ideal, the type, the example of Christian life on earth.

The first essential of the family life and fellowship which a Christian Endeavourer seeks to cultivate, is white robes. This is fundamental. Without it brotherhood is a phantom. What are robes? The figure is very common in Scripture, and to a large extent stands for the sense in which we use the word "habit"—originally a robe or dress. But there is a double metaphor—the robes are white, the familiar symbol of purity and holiness. Hence to have white robes is to have

PURE, CLEAN, HOLY HABITS.

You must have clean hearts before you can have united hearts. Let every Endeavourer become a witness to this truth. But how are white robes to be obtained? There is only one way: "They washed their robes"—not in their own blood, but "in the blood of the Lamb." This is not the modern Gospel taught in many pulpits: but it is the Gospel of the Word of God. You cannot bleed yourselves into purity or wash yourselves by the sweat of your own toil. The cleansing ministry is outside ourselves, in the sacrificial energies of another. Thus white robes are conditional on a divine Saviour, an atonement made for the sinner. As we have it in the old hymn:—

> What can wash away my sins?
> Nothing but the blood of Jesus.

But now another symbol: they bear palms. This is a favourite emblem of sovereignty and conquest. These are conquerors. And the special conquest appropriate to the unity of this brotherhood is that of self. The conquest of self is essential to true brotherhood. Till self be suppressed there is no perfect family life. Selfishness mars family life in our own homes. It has no place in the family of God. The greatest of all possessions is self-possession, the greatest of all conquests self-conquest. Imagine a Christian Endeavourer, whose gaze is only fixed upon himself—he would cease to be an Endeavourer in any true sense, and could never really love his brother. As soon as ever a man has washed his robes in the blood of the Lamb

HE WANTS THE PALM OF SELF-CONQUEST.

One thing more they have, a common song of praise, and it is "Salvation to our God and to the Lamb." Nowhere does our united life manifest itself more fully than in our praise. Look at our hymns. The choicest of them come from the most diverse sources. (Here the speaker enumerated favourite hymns by Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends Brethren, Moravians, and even Roman Catholics and Unitarians.) All come from a common faith in a common Father, in the name of a common Redeemer. In this unity of praise we have a germ of the fuller unity yet to be manifested. Let the Christian Endeavour Societies sing much, pray more, leave controversy alone, seek the white robes of purity and consecration through the atoning blood, win the palms of self-conquest and suppression, and pour forth their souls in hearty praise; so shall the Christian Endeavour movement become in the hand of God a mighty lever for the fuller manifestation here and now of the common family life which characterises the redeemed multitude around the throne of God on high.

One of the Convention sermons was preached in the National Halls by Rev. E. R. Barrett, Liverpool, chairman of the British C. E. Council. Text: "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" (Acts xix. 2, R.V.).

In the evening leading Endeavourers co-operated in open-air and evangelistic services in many parts of the city and on the famous Glasgow Green. In the ancient cathedral a Delegates' service was held. The founder of Christian Endeavour, Rev. Dr. F. E. Clark, preached from the incident in the second book of Kings in which Elisha, while surrounded by the Syrian hosts, prayed that the eyes of the young man who was with him should be opened that he might see the hosts of the Lord. He described the narrative as one of the most picturesque in the Bible, and it was equally applicable to this generation. This commercial nineteenth century was too intensely modern and practical. Its inventions and discoveries seemed to move God into the background. They needed the gift of vision, for from the smoky town they could see the New Jerusalem if their eyes were but opened. Why should it be thought incredible that there should be the hosts of God around and about them even in that ancient Cathedral? If their eyes were opened they would see the resources of God and the weakness of the enemy. Their eyes could only be opened by prayer. The prayer of faith would still open the eyes of the blind.

MONDAY'S MEETINGS.

Choosing on Monday morning the Hengler's Circus gathering as likely to be fairly representative of the various meetings of the forenoon, I found a large audience assembled for earnest prayer for blessing on the Convention itself, and on the whole movement. The Endeavourers lost no time, one after another springing up in all parts of the building to call upon God.

Rev. E. Tolfree Parr, who presided in place of Mr. Edward Cadbury, of Birmingham, gave some details of the progress of Christian Endeavour among the Friends, and of a recent mission at Highbury, Birmingham, Mr. Cadbury's place, when about 200 professed conversion. In an animated talk. Mr. Parr maintained that Christian Endeavour was revivifying the spirit of prayer and living Christianity in the churches. Its ideal is not to "sit and sing away to everlasting" laziness; but to devote itself to intense, real, personal effort in the power of the Holy Spirit to win men to Christ, to advance his kingdom, and manifest his grace among men around. The subject of was next introduced by Rev. John Gray, B.D., who developed his theme on three lines: first, Christian Endeavour invites the youth of to-day to consider the problem of personal influence; second, Christian Endeavour points out the only source of the highest possible personal influence; third, Christian Endeavour is a channel to conserve and direct personal influence. "No man liveth to himself," and the Endeavour movement exists to emphasise that great fact. Men may care little for the effect of their influence if only they enjoy themselves, but if not for good their influence is potent for evil. Now, opposed to this, each Endeavourer who is faithful to his promise stands pledged to seek to make his life to its last moment a living witness for Christ—this is the chief end of his existence. Then Christian Endeavour sets forth Christ as the only source of influence. It inspires our boys and girls with the resolve to dare and do all that they may be true to Him. Influence! It is the manifestation of power from on high. It may be unconscious, but it is persistent and potent. Of this the speaker gave three examples—John Bunyan, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the great Christian statesman, Mr. Gladstone, who has just been called away, whose life has been one long sermon on personal influence.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR AND PERSONAL INFLUENCE

ENDEAVOUR AND BIBLE STUDY.

Rev. J. H. Jowett followed with a thoughtful address on Christian Endeavour and Bible Study. He reminded his hearers that Endeavour might be forced into too prominent a place—it is not the root, but the fruit, and its foundations must be laid broad and deep on the Word of God. He would have young Christians notice that Endeavour in the Epistle to the Romans begins at chapter xii., after the mysteries of the Gospel of God have been revealed, and so elsewhere. As a deeply interested Endeavourer he would urge that once we lose our reverence and love for the Word of God we sap the vitality of our endeavour. To be strong we must grow in knowledge. Don't neglect God's revelation of truth. Don't begin the study of Romans at chapter xii., but at chapter i. Bible study begin with seeking illumination in the great mysteries of God.

Moreover, Bible study is not only for illumination but also for fortification. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Evil deeds spring from evil thoughts. How are we to get rid of these? Happily one thought can crowd out another. The devil suggests a thought; let us get filled with the Word, with Scriptural thoughts, and the vile thought will be crowded out. The late George Müller told the speaker in his own vestry, "For sixty-five years I have ready five chapters of the Bible daily"—this was one secret of his life. There is strength in familiarity with the Book.

Once more, study for inspiration—there is no inspiration like that we draw from the Word. Five or six years ago he (Mr. Jowett) had a young Jew come to him groping after light. Eventually he was baptized—and as it happened was in the meeting that morning. Now he noticed specially the familiarity of that Hebrew with his ancient Scriptures, so he would have Endeavourers who would be strong be much in company with the Book, with the deep things in it, and with the grand old worthies in it.

Three ten minutes' addresses followed on "Christian Endeavour and Church Obligation." The first on "Church Attendance," by a fiery Welshman, Rev. Richard Williams, of Ruabon; the second, on "Church Membership," by a Devon Endeavourer, Mr. Alfred W. Tuckwell; and the third, on "Church Work," by an enthusiastic Methodist, Rev. H. B. Workman, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. These vigorous talks bristled with homely common sense exhortation as to practical genuine support of the actual work of the local church, however small, with which they are connected. The moral was—Don't wait for big things, do the next thing; be content with the little; it is the little things faithfully done that really tell. I could not help reflecting as I listened, that so long as such sound, sensible teaching on practical matters, and such loyalty to Christ characterise the movement, Christian Endeavour is likely to be a real power in the land for Christ and his Church.

An Open Parliament followed, when a number of half-minute addresses were given, showing how the principles urged by the foregoing speakers were being carried out in the local Christian Endeavour societies and churches.

The Public Conscience.

It is an encouraging fact that every preacher and every paper which defies the world and tells the truth has really within the breast of each one of his readers or listeners a stout ally. A note responsive has been touched, a note which will refuse to be silenced, which, according to the individual, will ring more or less loudly above the multitudinous voices within us. And this note s the one clear note of Conscience.

For many private or public reasons the listener may suppress its very existence. He may even be a violent opposer of the truth expressed, and of its brave champion. He will in that case probably be extremely angry about what he has just heard. He will be able to call to mind a number of arguments to support his position. But this ally of God, of truth, and of right echoes again and again the brave utterance of the speaker, or the equally brave article in the paper, and refuses to condemn it, though standing alone in that man's inner self.

Conscience must speak. It lives in man as the voice of God. It is the channel whereby we can discern the voice of God. Before the judgment day it has set up a tribunal, and it intends to be heard. Though every bodily power, great personal interests, apparent public duty show cause why the man should oppose the truth, conscience calmly and without argument refuses to abandon the right and persists in upholding it.

The public conscience is made up of the individual consciences, but it is more difficult to touch, to move, and to awaken. Still if the Press or the Pulpit will but clearly and consistently point to a wrong, to a moral, or to a spiritual lie, it has a loyal supporter in every man's bosom; and more than that, they will soon have the moral support of a majority in the nation.

As a nation we are slow to change, and slow to move. But once let plain honest speaking point out an unmistakable moral wrong, and the answer of the nation will not be wanting. Consciences have been trifled with, and their delicate sensitiveness blunted. But in most men they are alike in an ability to discern right from wrong, to know a lie from the truth, to decide between God and the devil. A plain appeal will not be in vain. Let it be made, and repeated.

We need men who will obey their conscience, and we need consciences ruled by the Word of God. It is worth while appealing to the public conscience upon particular moral wrongs, not only to redress and suppress these, but to raise and make increasingly sensitive the public conscience.

Herbert Dudley Lampen.

Consolation.

O, Jesus, Lord! when anxious doubts
Would bid our comfort flee;
'Tis sweet that we may tell them all
In confidence to Thee!

That we may speak, and never fear
To hear an answer rough;
That close though we approach to Thee,
We need not dread rebuff.

O, tender and undying love!
Of human heart Divine,
To fathom thy amazing depths,
Man never yet found line.

The ruffled spirit Thou canst soothe,—
For storm, give hush of calm;
Thou hast rich grace for every need—
For every sorrow—balm.

And so we seek thy face, and check
The tear that fain would start,
To lay before thy blessèd feet
The burden of our heart!

And as we kneel, the load grows light—
The shadows flee away!—
And lo! on life's horizon's brim
The dawn of perfect day!

Elizabeth Surr.

San Diego, California, May 1.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A Missionary Demonstration.

I THOUGHT that my talk this month with my many young friends who love to read THE CHRISTIAN should be, as far as I could make it, special. Instead of telling you something more about child-life in heathen lands now, I must describe to you a great demonstration of young people which I had the pleasure of attending at Exeter Hall on a particular Saturday afternoon in May. Yes; it was one of the "May Meetings."

There is no need that I should satisfy your curiosity as to the name of the society in connection with which the demonstration was held—is there? Because in mission work in foreign countries the missionaries do not preach any particular society. That is not what they received a commission from Christ to do. They were to go everywhere preaching the ONE Gospel of God's unchanging love for man as he is by nature. So that the missionary's aim is not to make a convert to any particular church or society, but to win men to Christ. Ah, and boys and girls, certainly!

You see now, I am sure, why there is no necessity for me to give you the name of the society which arranged the children's demonstration. Remember especially, this, however. It was a large gathering of young people all anxious—all willing to do their very best to help forward the missionary cause. They intended to see all that was to be seen, and to hear as much as they could about the progress of Christ's kingdom in far-off lands. And indeed there was much, both to see and hear.

The building was crowded in every part. Banners and mottoes and portraits of missionaries were hanging everywhere—in front of the organ, the balconies, and the gallery. The banners were of various colours and sizes, and gave a very pretty aspect to the hall. The portraits of some of the missionaries you would no doubt have recognised: Moffatt or Livingstone, Griffith John or Chalmers. Others would have been unknown to you. But whether you recognised them or not, they were men who had the spirit of heroes in them. To live was for them to live for Christ. To one or other of them Africa, or India, or China, or Madagascar, was dearer than his native land. It was love for the people in their heathenism, their cruelties, their wickedness, that first induced the missionary to leave home and kindred to tell these lost nations the supreme truth that God loves them with the whole force and pathos of His infinite nature.

Then I must not forget the curious dresses in which some of the missionaries and their wives were clad. Sitting on the platform as I did, wherever I looked I could see the rich and curious native costumes worn by vigorous or veteran missionaries. It gave the demonstration a unique and powerful influence. And now and again, as the meeting proceeded, groups of these variously-robed missionaries sang, in the language of the country where they had toiled, native hymns set to some English melody.

You can see how these native dresses and those native hymns interested the crowd of young people that thronged every available nook and corner of the large building.

"But was there no speaking, no address?" you may well ask. Of course, no missionary meeting can fulfil its purpose without several addresses. And therefore we had them. One was about India, another about New Guinea. Each speaker spoke for not more than ten minutes, but each gave his own experience, telling in a bright, happy manner many a story of what had actually happened to himself. Chief of all the speakers on this occasion was a foreign secretary from a well-known society, who had just returned from a visit to numerous foreign mission stations, having travelled thousands of miles in order to see the work himself and cheer the workers. He, as you will suppose, received a great ovation. Never have I been present at a more enthusiastic gathering whether composed of young or older people.

If some of you had been there (perhaps a youthful reader will say, "YES, I WAS!") I think you could not have left the demonstration without resolving: "God helping me, I will be a missionary when I am old enough." If so, you would have gone home, after the meeting closed, with a quiet, strong purpose in your heart to give your whole life to the service of Jesus Christ. More than likely you offered the prayer to God before the evening prayer-hour arrived, "Here am I, Lord, send me!"

May many of THE CHRISTIAN girls and boys be true missionaries throughout the whole of their lives, whether they visit foreign lands or remain at home!

I Can and I Can't.

TWO more little words that little people are very fond of using. What is the meaning of I can't? It just means that I am able. Sometimes you say, "Yes, I will do it," but when you try you are not able. Here you can see the great difference between God's "I wills" and yours; whenever God says "I will" He is always able to do it.

A little girl was learning to write, the copy was before her, and she said, "Oh, yes, I can do that," but after a while she looked up with tearful face, saying, "Mother, I can't, the pen won't go right." So mother leaned over and took her hand in her's and guided the little hand to make the letters, and all was well and beautifully done. This little story will help you to understand Paul's words, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthoneth me" (Phil. iv. 13). I knew a young Christian girl who wanted to take a text for her life-motto, and she chose this text of Paul's. Oh, how it helped her over all her difficulties whenever a duty came and she felt "I can't do that," the life-motto came to her help, and she claimed the promised strength from Jesus, and it was done. She soon learned never to say "I can't" to anything which Jesus wanted her to do. There are some words of our Lord which I want you to remember with that other text, "Without ME, or apart from ME, ye can do nothing" (John xv. 5). Nothing without Jesus, everything with Jesus.

"I can't be good; I've tried. But I can if Jesus strengthens me." "I can't bear this pain; but I can if Jesus bears it with me."

One day, when our Lord was on earth, a poor leper came running after Him, and kneeling down he said, "I know Thou canst cure me if only Thou wilt," and Jesus said, "Indeed, I am willing always to do all I am able to do," and the man was healed immediately. Poor man, how anxious he had been for fear Jesus should not be willing. We know, not only that Jesus can, but that He will. One Sunday morning Jesus went into God's house, and, looking round, He saw a man with a withered hand, and He said to him, "Stretch out your hand." The man knew he could not do it, but because Jesus told him to do it he tried, and found the strength had come.

Our Lord always gives the power to obey when He has commanded.

Now, will you think a little about God's "I cans"? So many texts in the Bible tell us what God is able to do. Do you remember the three youths who were cast into the furnace of fire because they would not worship the golden image? They said to the king, "Our God is able and He will" (Dan. iii. 17).

Then there was Daniel too (see Dan vi. 16).

Here are four wonderful promises from God which He can and will do for you if you will trust Him:—

He is able to strengthen you against temptation (Heb. iii. 18).

He is able to save to the uttermost (Heb. vii. 25).

He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all you can ask or think (Eph. iii. 20).

He is able to keep you from falling and to present you to his Father without one blemish (Jude 24).

Dear young friends, the Saviour says to you NOW, "Believe ye that I am able to do all this?" (Matt. ix. 28). Will you not say to Him, "Yes, Lord?" I can't, but God can. I can, because God can.

Keswick. E. J. BANKS.

A Child's Hymn.

CAN Jesus use me for his work,
A little child like me,
For I should love to tell the news
How Jesus died for me?

Yes, He can use a little child,
And little hearts does call,
To daily tell by lip and life
How Jesus died for all.

Will Jesus use me if I pray
For those of other lands,
For heathen in their cheerless homes,
Fast held in Satan's bands?

Yes, for He loves your earnest prayer
For souls He died to win;
And you may send his message there,
That Jesus saves from sin.

E. V. K.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 123.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Douglas Adams, J. H. Archer, Wm. Astor.

B—Edith M.,* and Gertrude* Badham, Hilda Bassett, Henriett Bardot, Charlotte and Isabel Bailey, Janet and Elizabeth* Black Conyers* and Allen Baker, Teresa and Lilian Blackie, John and Elsie Benger, John K. Bonnett, Florence K. Bellerby, A. Bridges, Mabel Birney, Ralph Bourns, Eva and Robert Brown, Ernest and Herbert Bond, Albert Botting, J. Bott, Charles Brown, Ashley H. Bowen, Harry Butler, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Gladys and Beryl* Calvert, Mary and Willie C[illegible] Clarke, Mabel Clay, Louie M. Craven*, Walter, J[illegible] Carter, M. Jean Clarke, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, A[illegible] Colin and James Campbell, Henry J. Cheney*, Bessie Cheal, Cheal, Louise Chevrier, Edith and Dora Corrie, Dorothy Cooper, Coste, Ruth Coupe, Arthur G. Cox, E. Church, Ethel, Susie A., [illegible] Walter Cumbers.

D—Pelognia Daws*, Harold Davis, Marie Denizot Mordaunt, Philip, and Wm. Doll, Gordon S. Duncan*, Marjory* and Dorothy* Dyke.

E—Sarah Evans, Muriel Edwards*, Muriel Ecroyd, Eva Edmundson*.

F—Janet Fawkes*, Jeanne Faucon, Kate, Mabel, Maggie*, Bessie*, and Eva* Fletcher, Marian* and James Freegard, Hyacinth B. Fitz-Simons, Ernest and Reginald Findlay, Aileen E. Figgis, Louise Filhol, Agnes, Janetta*, and Flossie* Fullarton.

G—Ivan Garrod, Maurice Greenleaf, Daisy* and Mary E.* Greenacre, Minnie Giddings, A. and F. Gibbs, Edith Grieve, Dorothy Grove.

H—Edith Harris, Florence Harbad, Rex Hatchett*, Winifred and Edith* Harvey, Annie Hazledine, Ella Hake, Emily and Edith Hearn, Ada Heap, Georgette Hoffman, Florence, Stanley, and Francie Hoyte, Alice M. Hogben, Margaret D. Hogg, Violet A. Holford, Lucie Houdain, Eva and Ethel Hutchings, Evelyn M. Humphrys, Lila K. Hughes, Tom, May, Harcourt, and Helen M. Hunter, Mona Hunter.

J—Nellie Jelfs*. Lizzie Johnstone, Agnes Jones, Henry B. Johnston.

K—W., Isa*, T., Alex, and Agnes Kay, G. Norman King, H. Lilian Knight, A. C. King, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Ethel Larwill, Nessie and Henry Laing, Wm. C. A. Law, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Grahame and Murray Lloyd, Nellie Lovegrove.

M—Kathleen J. McClure, Florence Mackenzie, Barbara* and Jack* Maconchy, Abraham, Bella, Maggie, and Thos Mack, Dugald and K. G. MacGilp, Margaret J. Macphee, Enid, Gladys*, and Beryl Mathe, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Edith Marnham, Lillie Mallory*, Avie Mallory, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Harry and Bruce Malsher, Hilda Medill*, Francis and Alice Milne, Mary C. Mills, Bessie and Charlotte Millar, Owen Morice, Mabel L. Morris, Eva Monti*, Ethel Morgan, Gwendoline Moir*, Jack Munro, Dora Muir.

N—Ernest Nash, Herbert G. Newton, Cissy and Peter* Nicholson.

O—Eva and Maude Oakes, Sydney and Katie Oliver.

P—Maggie, Ada, Willie, Jessie, and Winnie Palmer, Dorothy Patten* J. Ernest Pearce, Myrtle Perry, Frederick J. Pearman, Edwin Peters, Daisy, May, and Vera Petrides, Clarice M. Peach, Walter C. Perryman, Laura D. Percy, Mary and W. M. Penny, Evelyn P. Pechey, Susabel Pim, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Ernest Poynder, Lillian, Margaret, and Jessie* Pook, Cyril Pomeroy.

Q—Minnie and Edith Quick.

R—Edward and Herbert Rainey, Nora Read, Sydney and Olive Robertson, A. M. and Cyril Roberts, Mildred Robinson*, Ethel M. Rogers, Elmina, Jessie, and Isabel Roe, Charles Rudge.

S—Bob and Dollie Salt, C. D., D. D., and T. M. Stanier, Betty Swanston, Gwendoline, Llewellyn, Wilfred, Mervyn, Gladys, and Eric Shaw, Margery Smart, Bessie Scantlebury, McLeod Staight, Stuart Scragg, Elsie and — Slark, Rosetta*, Muriel, and Ivy Sherwin, Marie E. Sleigh*, Lillian Skeats, Ida Schwengeler, Agnes M. Sterry*, Nellie Serv, Florrie Smith, Mary C. D. Spiganovicz*, Kate Smith*, E. Short*, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Winnie Taylor, Nannie and Louie Tibbits, John W. Thomson*, Harry Thomson, Alice M. and Frank Thompson, Willie, Nettie*, and Kate* Thomson, James T. Tuff, Neville C. Tufnell.

U—Bessie C. Unsworth.

V—Elsie Vigars.

W—Geo. Waldegrave, Stewart Watson, Edith J. Wheeler, F. Wilson, Ada Willmer, Pringle Wilson*, Ida and Grace Wright, Edith and Ruby Wilkins, Arthur, H. A., and Colin Wright.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received:—No. 115.—Cuckoo and Maria H. Lister (S. Africa). No. 116.—Alice Henderson (Jamaica). NO. 120.—Dora E. Wallace (Canada).

Prize Competition.—Division III., First Certificate, Alice Henderson (Jamaica); Division II., Second Certificate, Launcelot M. Knight (Texas).

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (124).

Berea. Acts xvii. 11.
Isaac. Gen. xxiv. 63.
Bethlehem. Matt. ii. 1.
Lois. 2 Tim. i. 5.
Esau. Gen. xxvii. 34.
Simeon. Luke ii. 29.
Eli. 1 Sam. i. 13.
Ananias. Acts v. 3.
Rhoda. Acts xii. 13.
Chuza. Luke viii. 3.
Haman. Esther vii. 10.
Elijah. 1 Kings. xvii. 6.
Rachel. Gen. xxix. 28.

BIBLE SEARCHER.

Owing to the Whitsuntide Holiday there will be no "first" list of No. 124, but a complete list will be published next week.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 125).

(2 Sam vii. to xi. 15.)

(a) By whom and to whom were the following spoken. (b) State the circumstances in a few words. (c) Give chapter and verse in each case.

1. He shall build an house for my name.
2. Thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant.
3. I will surely show thee kindness for . . . . thy father's sake.
4. The Lord do that which seemeth him good.
5. Oh, that I were made judge in the land.
6. Make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly.
7. Say unto Absalom, I will be thy servant.

[Children under ten do any three questions, under thirteen any five.]

UNCLE TOM.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun. June 5, 1 Tim.	iv. 1-16		Th. June 9, 2 Tim.	ii. 14-26
M. „ 6 „	vi. 1-21		F. „ 10 „	iii. 1-17
Tu. „ 7, 2 Tim.	i. 1-18		Sat. „ 11 „	iv. 1-8
W. June 8 „	ii. 1-13

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Spiers, McCheyne Memorial Church, Dundee, to June 3; Newport, Fife, June 5 18. Mr. Tyler, Sharnbrook, to June 6; Kingswood, and neighbourhood, June 11-12; Wroxall, June 13. Mr. Callender, Acton, June 10. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with caravan, Three Bridges, to June 12; Crawley, June 13-27. Mr. Cutting, with caravan, Kersey, near Hadleigh, from May 6. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Misterton, near Crewkerne. Mr. E. Wright, Wymondham, near Oakham, to June 4. Mr. J. H. Greene, Biggleswade, from May 24. Mr. E. Hughes, Salisbury, June 6-10; Waterloo-road, June 19; Hawkstone Hall, June 21. Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Chingford, June 3; St. Simon's, West Kensington, June 8.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Mission in India.

By Bishop J. M. THOBURN.

IN these days, when so many Christians are interested in the great missionary work in India, China, and elsewhere, it is greatly to be desired that practical statements of fact concerning the possibilities of work in these fields should from time to time be put before the public, for the double purpose of encouraging those interested in the general work, and of indicating to others how they can best promote it.

As one of many illustrations which might be given, I have thought it would be well to mention a little mission field in Upper India, south of Delhi, and divided into two sections by the river Jumna. Mr. T. Lewis Ingram, with his excellent wife, became personally connected with this field, to which Mr. Ingram sustains a relation something like that of an English landlord, and at the same time in some of its features reminding one of the authority possessed by an Indian rajah. Some years ago, while attending a series of religious meetings held in the city of Lucknow, Mr. and Mrs. Ingram were led to a practical realisation both of their privileges and responsibilities as Christians, and entered upon a new spiritual life with a deep experience in the things of God, and an active consecration to God's service.

Feeling the responsibility which rested upon them personally toward the natives living on their estate, they first carefully studied the possibilities of the case, and then asked to have one or two helpers sent to them from the American Methodist Mission, which was operating in the adjacent districts. A young and devoted native preacher was placed at their disposal, but from the first these servants of God pledged themselves to be at charges with the mission, and have defrayed all the expenses that have been incurred in the work.

The field which was thus to be occupied by this mission was not large in extent, but it embraced no less than fifty villages, with a total population of about 15,000 souls. Among all these thousands there was not one Christian, and, as always happens in such cases, some time elapsed before the timid and ignorant villagers could be made to understand what the new work established among them really meant. At last, however, the native preacher in charge reported what was called a "break," no less than thirty-five persons having applied for baptism. These all belonged to one of the low castes, but their application received as much consideration as if they had all been Brahmins. Nothing was done in haste, and Mr. Ingram went in person to see the candidates, and satisfy himself both as to their clear understanding of what they were doing and as to their sincerity. They were received in due course by baptism, and everything for a time went well.

A severe trial, however, was in store for them. Small-pox, of a very severe type, broke out in their midst, and their former teacher, a man who was half devotee and half priest, came among them and preached with great earnestness against the new religion. He pointed out that the anger of the gods had brought the scourge of small-pox into their midst. He assured them that other troubles were in store, and that their children would die, and misfortune attend them for years to come. The poor, weak creatures were greatly distressed, and with the fact that the small-pox was in their midst, they were induced to yield, and give up their profession of the Christian religion. It looked indeed as if the promising opening had suddenly vanished, and that much harm and no good had been accomplished by what was considered the premature baptism of insincere persons.

[490]

An extraordinary deliverance, however, awaited these devout workers. Not one person died from the small-pox, and to the surprise of everyone, the priest who had created all the mischief suddenly became a subject of deep conviction. At first his statements could hardly be credited, but before long all parties, friends and foes alike, were convinced that he was eager to find peace for a troubled conscience and light for his darkened mind. He was soon after converted to the faith which he had done so much to destroy, and in a very short time all the converts who had recanted came back again and were re-admitted to the Christian fold. From this point the work went steadily forward. Six years have elapsed since its beginning, and as far as can be seen this good work has become so deeply rooted in the community that no one longer fears that it can again meet with even a partial overthrow. As the work has extended among the people, new workers have been added, and the present state of the mission is as follows:—

The total number of Christian converts, including children, is 300. Thirty others who had become Christians elsewhere are also associated with the little community. A spirit of inquiry is abroad, and it is confidantly expected that the work of conversion will go steadily forward. Sixteen small Christian village schools are maintained; also a dispensary and a native doctor. No less than eight Christian preachers and pastor-teachers are maintained, all of whom are steadily working among the people. We have thus a most interesting and fairly successful mission in a remote district, exerting a good influence among 15,000 Hindus and Mohammedans, to say nothing of the extension of this influence to other villages in the vicinity.

The most interesting feature of this mission is found in the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Ingram engage personally in the work. Both of them have a fluent use of the Hindustani language, and are thoroughly acquainted with the habits, tastes, prejudices, and fears of the villagers. Both of them are accustomed to speak and pray in the meetings, and for several months in the year are constantly among their people. The entire expense of the work, which amounts to £20 a month, or £240 a year, is defrayed by Mr. Ingram. The converts give according to their means towards the extension of the work, but as they are all extremely poor, this, while showing their sincerity, does not add very much to the resources of the mission.

I have been moved to place these facts before the public for a double reason. First, that Europeans permanently or otherwise domiciled in India, and occupying positions where they have direct access to the people, might be encouraged to go and do likewise. For many years I have been fully persuaded that an immense amount of good might be accomplished by voluntary mission work performed by this class of people. The case of Mr. and Mrs. Ingram is a striking one, but happily it is by no means a solitary one. In many parts of India a good many people may be found who, according to their opportunities and ability, are doing likewise; but very much more might be done if all Christians in that great empire could be more conscious of their personal responsibility.

In the next place, Christians in England and America can see what might be accomplished by persons assuming the support of a specific work. The sum of £20 a month would support a mission like the one described above, but half of that sum would support a mission, not, indeed, upon quite so large a scale, and yet of very respectable proportions. Anyone giving the sum of £100 a year could maintain a vigorous work in a section of country containing from fifty to a hundred villages, the number, of course, varying according to the population. With this amount of money a staff of at least five or six preachers might be maintained, and provision made for simple little schools for the children of converts, for Sunday-schools, and for the various operations which are carried forward among our converts. One good man living in America has for several years supported a staff of ten pastor-teachers, and has found this privilege a source of constant joy to his heart. I should be very glad indeed to correspond with anyone wishing to take up this kind of work, and if desired could give further information concerning the best means of finding a suitable field, and providing for the wants of such a mission. Letters addressed to the care of The Christian at any time will be promptly forwarded to me.

The State of Armenia.

SIR,—Nothing new can be said about Armenia, and yet I would crave a small space in your columns out of sheer pity for the misery there. No nation, however capable and industrious, can recover unaided, even in the space of years, when many of its leading teachers, its most able merchants, its skilled artificers, and stalwart sons of the soil have been ruthlessly slain. Small wonder, therefore, that Armenia still needs our help.

Yet there are rays of hope, for an Armenian missionary, just returned from the field, told us but the other day that at Marsovan the distress was almost over. The destitute orphans have been housed and will be saved if only the remittances come in regularly, while the £250 invested in industrial relief has been realised two or three times over.

But the area of Armenia is large, and means of transit difficult, and from another part of the field came this report in the same day. Speaking of the Palu district, for which we have lately made a special appeal, the writer says, "When your letter of March 25 came, Mr. —— was on his way to Palu. We sent a special messenger to him, and he made excellent arrangements for the distribution of relief. He found the children of that region, many of them poorly clad, so weak from lack of food as to be almost incapable of moving about. Their faces were pinched and wan, and their bodies emaciated." He writes later:—"Our own missionary, who has just returned to the field, is daily seeing refugees from Malatia, Harpoot, Erzroum, Bitlis, Marash, Urfa, etc. The misery is beyond words. The poverty of the people has nearly broken my heart. Many are ill, if not dying, simply because they have no food, and have become ill through want and exposure." May we not rely on generous hearts to enable us to meet these piteous appeals?—Yours faithfully,

E. Cantlow,
Hon. Orphan Sec., Friends of Armenia.
47, Victoria-street, S.W.

Mission to the Barotsis.

ON many occasions we have called attention to the French Protestant Mission to the Barotsi people in the regions of the Upper Zambesi river, Central Africa. We recently told the story of the origin of the Mission, with the noble part taken therein by Pastor Coillard. That the country in which our French friends are labouring is under British rule is one reason why English people should take an interest in the work.

We rejoice to learn that Scotch friends have raised a considerable sum in aid of the Mission. One gentleman is giving £500 to equip and maintain a medical missionary in Barotsiland, as soon as one can be found. A London Auxiliary Council has been formed, and in a circular they say:—

"Pioneered by Rev. François Coillard and his wife and a few native Christians from Basutoland, in the years 1878-9, the Mission has had a prolonged period of bereavements, difficulties, disappointments, and sicknesses, mingled with gleams of hope, obstacles surmounted, and, in recent years, victories of faith in the winning of some precious souls from heathenism to Christ. The whole region is now under British protectorate (as is also Basutoland, from which the Mission emanated); this consideration, as well as the increased pressure upon the resources of the Protestant churches in France and Switzerland in maintaining the great work now lying before them in Madagascar and other mission fields, has led friends in Scotland and England to offer our brethren across the channel such help as we may be enabled to render, in sympathy and prayer, in contributions of money, and likewise, we trust, in men and women who may be moved by the Spirit of God to offer themselves, as fellow-workers in Basutoland, with the noble band who have gone forth to shine for Jesus Christ our Lord in dark Africa."

The council includes such well-known names as Messrs. A. A. Head, J. E. Mathieson, and H. Maxwell Wright; also Dr. Maxwell and Miss C. W. Mackintosh. The last-named, who translated Pastor Coillard's remarkable book, "On the Threshold of Central Africa," acts as hon. secretary and treasurer, and communications may be addresed to her at 4, Wetherby-gardens, S.W.

Sailors' Rest Aid Society.

DURING the past few weeks Mr. Stephen Burrows has been giving addresses on work among sailors in the Mediterranean ports, and particularly on the operations of the above-named society. Since its formation 9000 pledges have been taken by the Sailors' Rest Aid Society in the Mediterranean.

The various consuls in Naples testify to the great benefit the seamen have reaped from the work—in fact, British sailors have now rarely to be sent to prison. There were no Homes for merchant seamen at the Italian ports until, in the year 1884, some shipmasters and others induced the British consul to call a meeting, at which it was resolved to establish a Rest, Mr. Burrows being asked to undertake the charge in association with a committee of English ladies, Madame Tell Meuricoffre, sister of Mrs. Josephine Butler, being president. In connection therewith a society was formed at home to support the work in the Mediterranean.

Naples forms a convenient centre of usefulness owing to the coming and going of the many Christian workers and others from all lands. At Naples a Home was opened at the time of cholera for sailors from the Cholera Hospital. This has since been used by thousands, including men with broken limbs, who are attended by an English doctor and nursed by English ladies. Many have in this quiet retreat been led to the Saviour. Strong efforts are also made for the promotion of temperance, and in opposition to immorality. Many destitute British sailors and others are relieved at the Rest and sent on their way. The direct Christian work consists in holding services at the Rest and on board ships in port. Many thousands of books and papers are distributed annually, as also 3500 copies of the Holy Scriptures, which God has blessed to many, from cabin boys to captains.

Tours have also been taken to other ports, such as Palermo, Messina, Trieste, Catania, and the Piræus; leading to the opening of Sailors' Rests, but, save at Catania, these are now under local management. There is also a station at Salerno, while the port of Torre Annunziato, in the Bay of Naples, is worked by the colporteurs and missionary at Naples. A local committee has been formed with a view to managing the proposed sailing mission ship St. Paul, no house being available ashore. Some thousands of seamen frequent the port annually. Mr. John Cory, the president of the Society, offers £50 of the entire sum of £450 to be found within three months.

For the extension of the movement and the present Rests funds are urgently needed.

Communications may be addressed to Rev. D. M. Cameron, 515, Wandsworth-road, London, S.W., or Mr. Stephen Burrows, 7, Vico 2nd del Piliero, Naples.

Mission to Lepers.

THE annual report of this society reveals a year of much blessing in the work in India. Although the famine of 1897 drove large numbers of lepers to the asylums, none were turned away, and the committee gladly acknowledge that funds were forthcoming to meet the increased need. But every homeless outcast admitted to the institutions becomes a lifelong charge on the resources of the society; and if pressing calls to undertake new work are to be responded to, an enhanced income becomes imperative.

At Raipur (C.P.) the local government are urging the Mission to take over suitable buildings and land, with 195 lepers and untainted children, but the committee dare not assume so serious a responsibility without special provision for the purpose. Other urgent needs are £200 for a hospital near Swatow, women's wards at Alleppey, Travancore (a C.M.S. station), and at Poladpore (Bombay Presidency), as well as £50 to erect a small hospital at Lo-Ngwong, Fu-Kien. The support of two native catechists, costing £20 each per annum, is also urgently needed.

JOHN JACKSON,
Hon. Sec. for London and District.

186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Advance in Central Africa.

SOME welcome news of progress in the Livingstonia region appears in a recent issue of the Scotsman, as supplied by its London correspondent. He says:—

"I have intelligence from the heart of Central Africa up to the middle of March. All along the eastern slope of the watershed between the sources of the Congo River and those of the northern affluents of the Zambesi, the Scottish missionaries of the Livingstonia enterprise, now twenty-two years at work, and the Scoto-Dutch agents of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa, have produced remarkable results, as testified by the statistics of the year 1897. In the schools 13,569 youths of both sexes, but chiefly boys, were in eager attendance, only a few as yet paying fees, but all purchasing their own school-books, printed on the spot, and the Nyanja New Testament as translated by Dr. Robert Laws, printed in Edinburgh. Of these 11,423 were taught by the Scottish and 2146 by the Dutch missionaries allied with them, of whom Mr. A. C. Murray is the head. The former had gathered into five churches, at the five central stations to the west of Lake Nyasa, 1114 adult members and some three thousand adherents or candidates for membership. At Bandawe, on the Lake Shore, these lately savage people are themselves building a brick church to seat fifteen hundred of their number; the iron roof is on its way out from Glasgow.

"This is the largest medical mission in all Africa. Last year there were five graduates of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen Universities with two trained nurses, who treated 9943 medical cases and performed 13,909 surgical operations, many of them major, the patients numbering some 10,600 men, 6000 women, and 6200 children. It is difficult to realise that such a work is going on day by day in a region unknown five years ago, save as the horrible hunting-ground of the Mohammedan slave-raider. The joint Scoto-Dutch Mission is industrial as well as medical, educational, and preaching. The cleverest lads are trained by Dr. Laws in telegraphy and sent on to the Government office at Zomba, until the line now being extended by Major Forbes and the Trans-Continental Telegraph Company reaches the Livingstonia Institution and Lake Tanganyika. In rotation the senior boys and teachers are instructed in carpentry, while all the other thousands at school have industrial work for three hours a day in companies. To reinforce the medical staff, Dr. Robert Scott, M.B., C.M., of Glasgow University, has been appointed, and will sail from London on June 4."

A Mission to Japan.

MR. AND MRS. GEO. C. NEEDHAM, who are favourably known to many of our readers, have been invited to Japan, for the purposes specified below. We trust they will be adequately supported by friends in England as well as in America, who are interested in the progress of spiritual religion in those Eastern lands, which are politically so much before the world at present. Communications may be made to our care. Mr. Needham thus outlines his purpose:—

1. To conduct Bible conferences with missionaries, teachers, and their families. Many will come from Korea, Formosa, China, and Inland Japan. At these gatherings we hope to present such helpful and elevating themes as our Lord's second coming, the Holy Spirit, the integrity of the Bible, the deepening of spiritual life, etc.

2. To hold evangelistic meetings among the English-speaking people in the larger cities where thousands reside.

3. To preach the Gospel to the young men in the higher schools.

4. To visit native churches and help the converts, as also to tell "the old, old story" to the heathen. Competent godly interpreters will aid us in this work.

We represent neither sect nor party, the missionaries giving us welcome as the servants of Christ. We greatly covet the fellowship of all who love our Lord, and accept such gifts as they may be led to invest in this service for the glory of our risen Redeemer. We have no other resources than the willing offerings of fellow-believers. We sail (D.V.) June 20 from Vancouver to Yokohama.

Hope for North Africa.

By DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

I WRITE from Djemâa Sahridj, among the mountains of Kabylia. Yesterday a little mission hall was opened here by a service in French in the morning, attended chiefly by the missionaries, several of whom had come from the town of Algiers to be present; and by a meeting for Kabyle women in the afternoon, and one for Kabyle men in the evening. The hall, which is exceedingly suitable for its object, was three parts full of women in the afternoon, and quite crowded with men in the evening. Their tall figures, dark faces, and white bournous made a striking picture, and the attention with which they listened to the Gospel addresses was most marked. Now and then one or another gave utterance to expressions of assent; nothing was visible of the bitter opposition and prejudice so commonly met with among Mohammedans, and on the front forms of the crowded hall some converts were seated, three of whom are to be baptized to-morrow on confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus. It was strange and sweet to hear the voices of a congregation of Mohammedans singing hymn after hymn in praise of Sidna Aisa—the Lord Jesus; and very blessed to have the opportunity of speaking to them, by interpretation, on the things which belong to their peace.

This morning I was reading in Isa. xix., and the words there, "Blessed be Egypt my people," impressed me as having a bearing on the question of the future of the Mohammedans of North Africa and of other lands. The Egyptians are, and have long been, Mohammedans. This, then, must be a promise of the national conversion of the Mohammedans of Egypt, and surely there is every reason to believe that the mercy here promised to Egyptian Mohammedans will be shared by the Mohammedans of Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, Morocco, and other Mohammedan countries. The words, "Blessed be Egypt my people," shine as a star of hope for the long-deluded followers of the false prophet of Arabia. Let us pray and work for the conversion of Mohammedans, with faith, love and hope. God is "the God of hope," and his mercy flows in ever-widening circles.

From what I have seen in this country, it is more than ever evident to me that the North Africa Mission is doing a real, blessed work for Christ in this difficult and too long neglected field, and that its devoted missionaries deserve our warmest sympathies.

Djemâa Sahridj, Kabylia, Algiers, April 21.

South American Missionary Society.

DEAR SIR,—We have begun our new work in the north-west part of the city of Buenos Aires, in connection with our forward evangelistic movement. The bulk of the work is, of course, in Spanish. Our work has been most encouraging from the very beginning. Eleven Sundays have passed since we began Spanish services. We have had some new people at every service, while those who came on the first Sunday continue to attend regularly.

Our temporary mission hall, which will only hold about 130 persons, is already too small; our Spanish Sunday-school is fast growing. Real interest has been awakened throughout the neighbourhood. We have a colporteur and a Bible-woman at work every day. Very shortly we hope to open an Evangelical Day School for boys, and later one for girls also. A splendid site of land has been secured; on this we hope soon to erect mission hall and day school buildings.

I am constantly visiting in the native homes, and am almost without exception well received, as also are the Bible workers. An honest spirit of inquiry is spreading in these homes. I am busy translating, compiling, and adapting a quantity of Gospel literature to be published in tract and pamphlet form, for free distribution; the generous gifts of a lady friend in England will enable us to publish many thousands of tracts and pamphlets in Spanish without drawing on the funds of the Society. A native Christian literature is a terrible need in South America. These little tracts and booklets will be, I believe, messages of life to many. We hope to open a new centre in another part of the city a little later on.—Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM C. MORRIS.

Home Missions.

The Gospel on Epsom Downs.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

SURELY it is an infallible proof of the natural depravity of the human heart that it perverts and turns into occasion of abuse things that are good and praiseworthy in themselves. There is no nobler or more faithful servant of man than the horse; how is it that horsiness and rascality have come to be so closely associated? Why should athletics, so excellent in their way, be made the vehicle for gambling and other demoralising devices? The inherent selfishness and greed of the natural man explain it all.

The motley collection of humanity at Epsom Downs on a Derby Day has often been described, but needs to be seen before it can be realised. Those who ought to know say that the great races are losing their popularity among the more cultured class, and are mainly attended by the publican and the betting fraternity. Yet there seemed no indication of waning attendance at Epsom on Wednesday last week; the crowd was said to be a record one for size. Certainly betting went on fast and furious; the slopes on both sides of the course were lined with well-nigh endless rows of bookmakers, all of whom seemed to be doing a flourishing business in handling the stakes of the gambling public. This year the professional betting men must have pocketed heavy gains on the principal race, for the popular horse was nowhere in the struggle. We have not the faintest sympathy with those who lose money in this way; still the results are disastrous in many directions, and too often people will not learn even by dire experience.

Our chief purpose, however, in this sketch is to tell something of the zealous labours of those who visit Epsom in order to preach the Gospel to the crowds, and to wean them, if possible, from such evil courses. The time for opposition, or even for open ridicule, appears to have gone by. Cynical smiles may be seen here and there on dissipated faces; but on the whole the preachers get a quiet and respectful, not to say an attentive, hearing. That is, so far, to the good. One cannot say that the evangelists draw such big circles of listeners and onlookers as certain clever-tongued tipsters and boxers, yet there are many elements of encouragement. To one who has the requisite zeal and tact there are many occasions for quiet personal button-holding and brotherly admonition. One case that came under the observation of the writer on Wednesday was very interesting in its details, and probably typical of others. A fresh-looking young man, of good upbringing, but "the black sheep of the family," and now in the liquor trade, had exchanged some remarks with a Christian police-sergeant. He afterwards conversed earnestly for a long time with a friend who sought to persuade him into better paths; the result is known to God and the man himself.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION

(the pioneers in this work, strengthened, as usual, by a strong band of musical brethren from the City Mission) was well represented on the course in the interval before the racing began. The singing and playing were excellent, and attracted large, if shifting, audiences. The short addresses and testimonies were packed full of the plain Gospel truth. Literature was freely given away. So the good seed of the Kingdom was flung out with a generous hand on the great sweltering tide of humanity that overflowed the course. The work to a great extent is necessarily that of the sower. Amid the Babel voices of the throng—the noise of the merry-go-rounds on the hill, the shrill cries of provision vendors, and the strident shouts of the bookmakers as they enticed the unwary to hazard their shillings or sovereigns on the prowess of some likely horse—it was sweet to hear the jubilant hymn of praise, with instrumental accompaniment, and red-hot, loving Gospel appeal to part with those shadowy pleasures of sin, and grasp the substance of life's reality through a living trust in Jesus Christ to save and to keep.

The efforts of the Open-Air Mission really commenced on the Sunday before the Derby, when several missioners accompanied Miss Alexander to the Downs, where were encamped the gipsies, who congregate in great numbers on these occasions. Their poor little tents lay dotted about over the Downs, with here and there a caravan. Among these the workers stood, and the short services held were attended by large numbers.

They were again visited on Thursday evening, and several similar services were held, but the scene presented on this last occasion beggars description. English heathenism at its height is the only fitting summary of such a spectacle; fighting, both among men and women, was proceeding at several points on the course and Downs, and large crowds of half-drunken gipsies and others were egging on the combatants.

Altogether nearly sixty men of God laboured at these races day by day, under the auspices of the Open-Air Mission. One evening, in the town, as the multitude left the course, a stand was taken in force close to the South-Western Railway Station, where warning words were uttered in the hearing of all, and the Gospel invitation given. Many stopped to listen, and in some hearts God's spirit was evidently at work. Later in the evening two stands were taken in the centre of the town, and the usual assemblages gathered to hear.

THE RACECOURSE MISSION

mustered in their strength, and also did splendid service. Mr. Nix was on the ground, the life and soul of all; though Mr. Heatley was in charge and chiefly directed the details of the services on the Course. Music, bright and catching, was well to the front here also, and never failed to hold the ears and arrest the attention of the passers-by. The testimonies and brief exhortations of this band were exceptionally lively, and pointed with a Methodist fervour that is always effective. It may be said, however, in passing, that of all the utterances one heard during the day, for native born eloquence and persuasive power, nothing exceeded the prelections of a young tipster who seemed hardly out of his teens. He literally foamed at the mouth through intensity of speech. If all preachers and evangelists were to take a leaf out of the book of this youthful sportsman, in the line of thorough familiarity with his theme, in the accents of conviction and utter abandonment of zeal in pressing his views home on his congregation, what palmy days we should have in church and chapel and mission-hall!

The Gospel tent, of the Racecourse Mission, in the hollow between the course and the hill, was at night the sleeping place of the evangelists, and during the day was the scene of many an interesting function. Deafened with the clamour of the multitude you enter the tent and find a score of men on their knees beseeching Heaven for a blessing on the work; the periods when the races are being run (and when you hear the hoofs of the horses thundering on the turf as they sweep past towards the winning-post) are usually thus devoted to prayer. At another time you see a group of workers kneeling in a corner. In the middle of them is some stray visitor who has become the subject of soul concern, and who is being borne, as it were by violence, towards the happy moment of decision. There were several interesting cases of this sort during Derby Day. Much could be written about the doings in the tent if space allowed.

A MINSTRELS' MEETING.

One unique gathering within these canvas walls after the day's racing was over must be alluded to. It was made up mainly of strolling minstrels, who had been plying their vocation on the Downs all day, mostly among the carriage folk. It may be remembered that five years ago on these same Downs a well-known banjo player and composer of minstrel songs, Bob Johnson by name, was soundly converted, having had a careless and dissipated career, during many worse than wasted years. These five years past, as he remarked, he has been taking his revenge on the devil, and firing at him with the guns of minstrelsy primed with Gospel powder and shot. His gifts of popular composition enable him to do this with great effect.

Through the kindness of Mr. Hodson, a fast friend of the Racecourse Mission, Bob Johnson was permitted on Derby Day to invite all the strolling players and singers to a sumptuous tea in the tent at the close of the day. They responded in large numbers and a most heterogeneous company they were. Some had blackened faces, some were got up in most fantastic and elaborate fashion, while others were evidently much "down at the heel." Three or four were women. All had some musical instrument—banjo, fiddle, bones, organette, etc., etc. To hear so much "talent" in one combined improvisation was a singular experience. Bob Johnson would permit no "secular" songs, but there were plenty of good Gospel or temperance words rendered to popular airs. The choruses were heartily joined in with the voice as well as with the stringed and other instruments. The writer of these lines has had some strange and stirring experiences, but never has he been more deeply moved than at hearing these wandering waifs of sporting and pleasure-seeking society join most tunefully and seriously in a sweetly harmonious refrain which declares that

> The way is so delightful
> In the service of the Lord.

It was worth going a long way to hear and to see. The minstrels were prayed with and spoken to on the highest themes, and whatever might be the immediate outcome they certainly enjoyed their visit to the tent so much that this réunion of singers and players is bound to become a fixture as every Epsom meeting comes round.

Prettily got-up cards, with Gospel mottoes, and other suitable literature were distributed all over the ground by the workers from the tent at such intervals as could not be utilised for formal meetings. Addresses were given from the tent-door, and in many different ways the claims of God and of holiness were brought to the notice of the motley throng.

Work for the Police.

THE generous hospitality which the Duke of Westminster extends to every good work is well known, and on a recent Tuesday afternoon, Grosvenor House was kindly placed at the disposal of the Christian Police Association, on behalf of the London Police Institute. A most happy and successful gathering it proved to be. In the unavoidable absence of his Grace, the chair was taken by Mr. C. E. TRITTON, M.P., and on the platform could be recognised many well known friends of the force. The children of the Provincial Police Orphanage were present and sang very sweetly; several people noticed how well trained their young voices were. After Miss GURNEY had read the report and pleaded for the work which lies so near her heart, the chairman spoke warmly of "Our Police," and commended the work of the Institute as a means of bringing men to Christ. His Grace the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, who had very kindly come to the meeting, then spoke. With much feeling his Grace pointed out the great responsibility and value of the services of the police, and then spoke at length upon the special temptations to which they were liable. Then he earnestly commended their spiritual interests to the prayers and sympathy of the audience, and begged them to help those ladies and others who, being so well accustomed to the needs and circumstances of the police, can and do so efficiently help and bless the Force.

The theme was also taken up by Dr. ANDERSON, the well-known Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, who assured us that the morale of the men was improving every year. Nothing but working on definite Christian lines would, in his opinion, do them permanent service.

A few members of the Force gave their testimony, and related incidents of the deepest interest. One officer, in order to show how many of the Force were Christians, told how a comrade of his had, in the early hours of the morning, spoken of the Saviour of sinners to a poor fallen woman in the street. "Three other policemen have already spoken to me about Jesus Christ this morning," was her suggestive reply.

The collection was a good one. His Grace the Duke had already given £100, and Mr. J. Cory promised £100 if three others would do the same. The influence of such a gathering will be fruitful of good results in the providence of God.

The Hon. Col. Bridgman and Mr. A. C. P. Coote also spoke.

Convention in Dublin.—Very helpful meetings for the deepening of spiritual life on "Keswick" lines were held May 23 to 27 in Dublin. Mr. Robert Wilson presided, and the speakers included Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, Rev. J. J. Luce, Mr. W. J. Govan (Glasgow), Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, and others. The attendance was fairly good, and tokens that blessing had been received were manifest at the Friday morning praise meeting.

A Rotherhithe Men's Own.

THE "Men's Own" connected with Rotherhithe Free Church is doubtless the most successful effort of its kind in Southwark. To secure in one year 1152 members of an institution specially devoted to men, and to maintain the interest of those members in religious services, is indeed a remarkable accomplishment. And this has been done in Rotherhithe Town Hall on Sunday afternoons, as witnessed by the annual gathering which was held on Thursday, 12th ult., at Rotherhithe Free Church. This building, the largest in Rotherhithe, was not big enough to contain those interested in the event, for, whilst every seat was occupied in the edifice, numbers were obliged to stand in the outer Jubilee Hall and strain eyes and ears to obtain an inkling of the interesting proceedings within. The chair was taken by Mr. T. A. Denny.

The report stated that "We shall never be able to fathom the good which has been accomplished, but in the great day of account, when all things are made known, many of our members will be able to look back to the time when they decided to live for Christ, having been led to Him through the instrumentality of the Men's Own." The society was inaugurated on the first Sunday in May, 1897, when 123 men joined. The year closed with a roll of 983 members, which increased at the time of the meeting to the grand total of 1152. During the year there had been distributed 1700 books to the members, thus helping them to secure a library for themselves. The Public-house Brigade had done excellent work, having brought into their midst a large number of men from the public-houses.

Mr. Thomas Richardson followed with a rousing speech.

The Chairman, who was received with what Mr. Richardson termed a Rotherhithe Free Church welcome, spoke heartily. In allusion to Mr. Richardson, he said that gentleman was evidently the right man in the right place. Madame Ryall followed with "Tell me the old, old story," sung in her own impressive style, the chorus of which was vigorously sustained by the vast audience, who fully appreciated the singing of Southwark's favourite Gospel soloist. Addresses followed by Messrs. W. H. Seagram, George Nokes, A. Pomeroy, L.C.C., and R. C. Stuart.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

INSTITUTED in 1822, this organisation steadily maintains its useful work of giving Ireland the light of God's Word through domiciliary visitation and simple exposition. Among the mass of testimony which bears witness to God's blessing in the numerous districts served by the "readers," strong commendations have been indited or spoken by the Irish Primate, also by the Archbishop of Dublin and his revered predecessor, the late Lord Plunket.

A clergyman in the South of Ireland writes: "Several parishes in this diocese have lately been amalgamated, and more will have to be when they they are vacated by the clergy. This means fewer ministers of the Gospel to work among our poor, scattered, and discouraged brethren, and should call for an increased number of your quiet, earnest, 'one-Book' men to go amongst them, speaking the words of life. If our bishops, clergy, and people would see the efficient 'Pastoral Aid Society, that they have ready to their hands in the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, the last two words in its title would become a reality."

The important department of itinerant mission work, which has proved a valuable addition to the more regular labours of the Scripture readers, was continued during last year. People of all denominations were found willing to listen to Bible truth, interesting conversations were held, and young people were eager to possess the Testaments and Christian literature which are freely distributed. People of all classes are thinking and acting for themselves, the Romish priests complaining about this spirit of independence.

By the good hand of God abundant openings exist for the Society's operations; indeed, its opportunities are more numerous than its income enables it to use. This fact is in evidence, to some extent, by the figures of the last balance-sheet, which show a sum of nearly one hundred pounds due to the treasurer (and secretary), Capt. James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Babes in the Wood.

THE Forest Cottage Homes, founded by Mrs. E. H. Kerwin, have, during the past year, given 184 sickly children a healthful holiday. Says the new report: "All through the year our home has been open, and we have always had eight children enjoying the good food, fresh air, and all the ever-changing beauties of our forest and Wanstead-park. No matter what time of the year they come, there is always something to enjoy, and much to learn, by those who have never before left the close, hot, dirty streets of London. I cannot tell you of every child who has spent a happy time at our home, but one or two typical cases will suffice. All are very poor, and each has a history of its own that would touch any heart.

"Early in the past year, when the May blossom was thick on our trees and hedges, and filling the air with its delicious fragrance, there came to us three children from one family; poor, thin, and half starved, they left behind them a home full of sickness and poverty. The father had just died, leaving a wife and eight children, and only one of them able to work. Two of the children were in a fever hospital, a third was lying at home in a very weak condition, having just undergone a painful operation. Surely this was burden enough for the poor mother to bear, yet she was shortly expecting another addition to her already overcrowded home. We kept three girls for a month, and, while we strengthened their bodies, filled their sad lives with a few weeks of innocent gladness.

"Several of the elder girls have come to us from time to time, having now grown old enough to begin life for themselves. At the earnest request of their parents the matron has found them situations, and we have clothed and provided them with a suitable outfit, which is lent to them until they can provide such things for themselves. These girls are watched and visited, and when they have a holiday are welcomed at the home, where they can tell out their little trials and be sympathised with, and encouraged in all that is right."

Help is much needed for this little home. Address Mrs. E. H. Kerwin, "Inchcolm," Wallwood-road, Leytonstone, Essex.

Nature's Invitation.

O come from the haunts of care,
From the midst of life's surging sea,
To the shady copse where the violets blow,
And the daisy, spangled lea.

Away from the scenes of pomp,
Unto Nature's shrine so fair,
Where ceaseless music and incense rise
On the sweet, life-giving air.

From alley, and court, and street,
Unto forest, and lane, and moor,
O come where the frolicsome wavelets dance,
Like nymphs on the silvery shore.

Away from the busy strife,
To the woodland's sylvan dells,
Where tender zephyrs like fairies play.
Midst frond leaves and azure bells.

Away from the dwellings of men,
Unto beauty and wealth untold,
Where buttercup meadows in radiance shine
Like glory-lakes of gold.

Where streamlets gush from their mossy beds,
And sparkling cascades leap,
'Midst the nooks and crannies of mountain paths,
'Mid fissures and clefts so steep.

O ye of the languid step,
With the grief or pain-dimmed eye,
From the whirl and rush of life,
Unto Nature's bosom fly.

O lean on her gentle breast,
Repose 'neath her healing wing,
Learning sweet lessons of love and trust
From her great Creator King.

Harriet Julia Evans.

Work in China.—Mr. W. D. Rudland, of the China Inland Mission, writes:—In the account in The Christian of what I said at the Home of Industry workers' meeting, some mistakes got in. It is not twelve but twenty-eight years since I went to Tai-chow. Then there were two native Christians, now there are over eighteen hundred, not as stated 5000. The number of stations and outstations is thirty-one, not two hundred.

Hermann Warszawiak.

IN a note of warning, in our issue of Feb. 3, we mentioned that Mr. Henry Varley, with only an ex parte knowledge of the case, had been writing letters intended to vindicate Mr. Warszawiak. In view of Mr. Varley's sturdy championship of Mr. Warszawiak's cause in America, some Christian people in England hesitated to act in the light of discreditable disclosures as they developed on this side. At length Mr. Varley is convinced that he was the victim of a flagrant deception, and in a letter (dated London, Ontario, May 3) to Dr. Schauffler, who was one of the first to expose Mr. Warszawiak, he says:—

"I was influenced by the wily glosses with which I now see Warszawiak invested his statements, especially those that had reference to yourself. I never heard of anyone who can more cleverly distort and misrepresent statements and persons. Seeing that the Presbytery will deal with his appeal, I need not further allude to that phase of this painful case.

"I cannot, however, remain silent after the intelligence just received from England. The case of the lady from whom H. Warszawiak succeeded in obtaining nearly 30,000 dollars (£6000) in 1894, and which is likely to be the subject of judicial investigation, leaves no room to doubt that Warszawiak cannot be regarded as worthy of confidence. Believing the statements made to me in October last by H. W., that both he and his wife had been unjustly treated, and that the Jewish mission work in his hands had been grossly misrepresented, I wrote strongly in his defence. It was not for his character only, but much more for the work in his care among the Jews in New York that I did so.

"I have now to confess that I was deceived, and led to write that which reflected unjustly upon yourself, Mr. Jesup, and Mr. Anthony Comstock. I, therefore, withdraw that which was written, and express my deep regret, my sincere apologies, that I was induced to defend one whose conduct I now see has merited severe censure. Interested in our Jewish brethren in New York, I fear this unhappy case will set back the work there seriously. It is some cause for thankfulness that the Lord has overruled my mistake, and that the conclusive facts which have come to light will aid in showing that Hermann Warszawiak is unworthy the confidence of Christians interested in Jewish missions, in New York and elsewhere."

Christianity and Human Progress.*

THE able author of this book, Professor Mackenzie, need offer no apology for the enthusiasm with which he writes, for as the son of missionary parents who have spent forty years in the South African field, and who are still at their post, he has had ample opportunity both to see missionary work and to study all its problems in the light of personal observation. The general subject of missions is discussed in a philosophical spirit, and from many points of view. The "universalism" of Christianity, the work of the missionary as a pioneer, as a translator, as an educator, and "as a saviour;" his self-sacrifice, and "the value of martyrdom;" his promotion of civilisation, and his relation to non-Christian religions; these and kindred topics furnish the ground-work of a well-written and thoughtful missionary volume.

Not the least interesting of the many errors which are corrected in this book is the very frequent assertion that Christianity cannot arrest the downward trend of "dying nations." By citing the cases of Patagonian converts, of certain American Indians, and of converts in India, Professor Mackenzie shows that there is a healing power in Christianity which can save men and nations, provided no neutralising agencies are employed to counteract its influence.

It is an encouraging sign of the times to see men like Professor Mackenzie coming forward to advocate the cause of Christian missions, and at the same time to defend it against criticisms which have never been more specious, or less just, than at the present day. His book should have the wide circulation to which its merits entitle it. Aside from its merits from a missionary point of view, it discusses many questions of more general interest. The author has evidently kept well abreast of the times, and understands the tendencies both of thought and feeling in the remarkable era in which he lives.

* Christianity and the Progress of Man, as Illustrated in Modern Missions. By Professor W. Douglas Mackenzie, M.A., of the Chicago Theological Seminary. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. 3s. 6d.)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Dear Sir,—I was surprised to see inserted in your last week's issue a paragraph concerning Lady Henry Somerset which most of your readers, I should imagine, would regard as wholly unworthy of a "Christian" paper.

If you can find no word of appreciation for a magnanimous acknowledgment of error which this noble-hearted woman has made so frankly to her fellow-workers and to the public, and which has called forth the warmest sympathy and admiration even from those not associated with her in work, surely you might have refrained from accusing her of that of which she is entirely innocent. Had her ladyship originated and put in force the present cantonment regulations of the army in India your stricture upon her conduct, and its supposed consequences, could scarcely have been more severe. Her object has been, throughout, precisely that of all other brave women who have fought for purity and right, namely, to put down vice in all its forms, and to lift up man and woman alike to the highest ideal of a holy and consecrated life of body and soul.

Lady Henry adopted methods, it is true, which did not commend themselves to the wise judgment of those who had seen much toilsome service in this special department of work, and many were perplexed and grieved at the steps she saw fit to take.

But the Government pursued its way, heedless alike of her suggestions, or of the remonstrances of those who protested, as of old, against anything that should appear to allow the possibility of "State Regulation" being in any case admissible.

Lady Henry Somerset cannot, then, in any sense, be held responsible for what is going forward in India at the present time, and, as her efforts accomplished nothing, it cannot be said that there is anything of her doing—whether right or wrong—to be undone.

What about the women in high places who petitioned for a renewal of the C.D. Acts? One never hears a breath about their responsibility.

The recent election of Lady Henry Somerset by an overwhelming majority to the office of president of the N.B.W.T.A. is sufficient assurance of the fact that many thousands of Christian women love and trust her with unwavering devotion, as did her loyal friend Frances Willard, who, with a tender patience worthy of her greatness, quietly persisted that "the Lady Isabel would see differently." Her faith was rewarded, and to-day a great Association rejoices to adhere loyally to a leader who has so frankly acknowledged an error, and so unconditionally given herself to the cause of humanity for Christ's sake. Her solemn words to her "comrades" in Christ's service a few weeks since will be cherished in the hearts of those who heard them. Had you been present possibly you would have been moved to write of this great and true-hearted woman such words as the Christian World employs to convey its impressions of the occasion:—

> It is impossible in a brief report to give any adequate idea of the spiritual force and power of this memorable address. No woman ever gave a more ample apology for an error, or showed more charity to her opponents than Lady Henry did on this occasion. One felt that she had learned great lessons and fought great battles in "the year that has been to me one of sorrow and sickness," and had grown to a nobler stature because of them. Her plea for a fuller charity, and her desire to obliterate herself by not standing for re-election if, by so doing, she could save the society one whole-hearted worker, were almost pathetic in their intensity. And when she uttered as her last word, "Peace be unto you," and dropped upon her knees and finished in a prayer, the moment became solemn in its spirituality. One remembered nothing like it since the old Wesleyan "Covenant" services. Men and women alike shed tears freely, and it was a relief to be able to relieve the tension of feeling by singing that well-known hymn, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord."

Yours truly, Lucy Taylor.

"Bannockburn," Sidcup,

[We have inserted the above, as probably representing the views of many beside the writer. We have regarded this question from the first not as involving "methods" but principles. The retractation of Lady Henry Somerset acknowledged a mistaken method, but not a false principle, and, therefore, did not, in our judgment, go far enough. For the apology, so far as it did go, we admire Lady Henry's honesty. We have always sympathised with her in her efforts to do good, and not less in the trying position in which latterly she stood. We are prepared in the future, as in the past, to show every courteous consideration to her and to the organisation which has again elected her as its president. But we cannot withdraw the expression of our sympathy also for the faithful women, who, with Mrs. Butler at their head, have never swerved from the Divine principles on which they began their crusade against a crying sin, and with the cause which has so severely suffered from the action to which we have referred.—Ed.]

HEALTH IN AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest what has been said in regard to health on the West Coast of Africa; also the recommendation of all-wool underwear, by one who speaks from experience in the Straits Settlements. I am now closing nineteen years of almost continuous hard work in Liberia, six degrees from the equator. During all these years I have not been confined to my bed one day, and have been three times to the United States, spending four months each time.

The death-rate here among missionaries has been appalling, and, it seems to me, unnecessary. As to clothing, I wear no flannel, not from any objection to it, only from the discomfort of it. I have no rules for dress or diet. Two things I am careful to observe:—(1) I do not go out in the morning until the earth and air are dry. If I am obliged to go out before the sun is hot, I return with a sort of wilted feeling, and in a few minutes I become drowsy. If I can get a few minutes' sleep I am all right for the day; if not I put in a dull day. No pain, no distress, no fever—simply dull. (2) I keep my feet dry. I can walk over wet ground and it does not affect me; but even when the earth is dry and warm, if I stand a few minutes it affects me. I lose a night's sleep, and as I am a poor sleeper I am chary about losing it.

Persons coming to Africa should have sound health, good lung-power—that is, good breathing power or capacity; as the air is light of oxygen, as the rapid growth of vegetation consumes so much. An enthusiasm for the work, a joy in it, with no longing, lingering look homewards, is a necessity here. As to medicines, I find nothing better for the liver than podophyllin. I give it, but have only taken it three times. Then, when one feels tired without sufficient work to have produced it, take quinine, not in large doses, but, say, four or five grains. If one feels disposed to take larger doses, then do so; medicines, to produce the same effect in the tropics as in the homeland, have to be taken in larger doses.

Faith in God, and a strong persuasion that He has called you to the work; faith in the final results of the Gospel preached to the heathen, and "My God shall supply all your need"—these must not be wanting. Mary A. Sharp.

Monrovia, Liberia, Africa.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE visit to Oxford of Mr. J. R. Mott has been marked by wonderful power. For six nights he spoke with great ability on missions generally and on the various aspects of Christian life and work, and a deep impression has been made on all who heard him. About 120 men assembled each night. He addressed a meeting of lady students, presided over by Dr. Fairbairn, and also the members of the Junior Clergy Missionary Union, connected with the S.P.G., at a breakfast provided by the Principal of Wycliffe. On Sunday evening he spoke to some 400 or 500 men in the hall of Balliol, presided over by the master, Dr. Caird. His subject was the temptations common to students. He described the student as "the most tempted of men."

Only twenty-six men to fill sixty vacancies was the burden of the message at the Missionary Union this week. Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the C.M.S., was the speaker. Following the stirring messages of Mr. Mott, there should surely be a response to this appeal. Mr. Fox's address was an application of all we had heard during the week.

Oxford has been much moved by the death of Mr. Gladstone. The ties which bound him to the University are many. "My most earnest prayers are hers to the uttermost and the last" was his dying message to his Alma Mater. During the present century Christ Church has given no less than seven Prime Ministers to England. His firm faith in God and earnestness as a Christian student afford an example for every member of the University who desires success in the true sense of that word.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

June 12.

"Jesus Crucified."—Matt. xxvii. 35—50.

Golden Text: "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures."—1 Cor. xv. 3.

The Way of Sorrow.

LAST Lesson: Christ in courtyard; crowned with thorns; mocked by the soldiers. Now the procession is formed—soldiers, crowd, Jesus bearing his cross, weeping friends (Luke xxiii. 27). They pass along the Via Dolorosa (the way of sorrow) to the Damascus gate. It was only three-quarters of a mile, but what a long journey to bear the cross!

Lesson.—All followers of Christ have their cross and their ways of sorrow. We must "take up our cross and follow Him."

Calvary (35).

A small hillock, about sixty feet high, outside the city wall, whose top resembled the shape of a skull. Jesus was nailed to the cross while it lay on the ground, then the burdened tree was raised into a perpendicular position. The torture of this process is unspeakable. Jesus suffered in body, but what must have been the sufferings of the mind! "He bore our sins."

Classifying Christ (38).

"Between two thieves." This was to show what class he belonged to in their estimation. The world has ever since been trying to find a class for Christ. Prophets, teachers, good men—He belonged to these, but He surpassed them all.

Yet Christ was at home with sinners, because He blessed and purified them.

The Superscription (37).

In Latin, Greek, and Hebrew—that all might read. Symbolic of the fact that his Kingship should be proclaimed in all tongues. Every year the superscription of the Gospel is written in some new language. One day his Kingship shall be acknowledged (Rev. xi. 15).

The Mocking Multitude (39, 40).

We can hardly imagine fully the scorn and contumely of this brutal mob. We feel that no treatment could be too cruel for such scoffers. Yet Jesus prayed, "Father, forgive them." "Thou that destroyest"—a perversion of Christ's statement, which was about to be fulfilled. "If Thou be." His patience and forgiveness while on the Cross, suffering for the sake of others, proved Him to be the Son of God. If He had come down from the Cross, as He had the power to do—that would have been human, not Godlike.

The Taunt of the Priests (42, 43).

"He saved others." These words were true, but not in the sense they meant. He could not save others and save Himself. The cross was the only way of salvation; if He had turned back, thus saving Himself, the world could not be saved.

Seven Cries from the Cross (46).

1st.—"Father, forgive them" (Luke xxiii. 34).

2nd.—"To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 39).

3rd.—Giving Mary into John's charge (John xix. 25).

4th.—"Eli, Eli, lama Sabachthani" (v. 46).

5th.—"I thirst" (John xix.).

6th.—"It is finished" (John xix. 30).

7th.—"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke xxiii. 46).

The Death of Jesus (48-50).

Christ had been on the cross about five hours when the pain of body and agony of mind wrenched from Him the cry in ver. 46. The comforting presence of the Father seemed withdrawn. "He trod the wine-press alone." Who was that one who filled the sponge with vinegar (a common form of wine)? He is blessed indeed. "I was thirsty and ye gave Me drink." Blessed are they who minister unto Him to-day. "He yielded up the ghost" (or, spirit).

The Message from the Cross.

God's love for man. This is the word it speaks to us. We shall miss all if we see only the agony and blood. Thousands saw that and mocked on Calvary. It is the love that subdues. Love is the supreme sacrifice. A token that God will save all who are repentant. "He that spared not his own Son shall He not also with Him freely give us all things?"

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Home.

Wide-spread distress prevails amongst steel workers at Merthyr Tydfil.

An association is being formed to befriend boys who are discharged from Poor Law institutions year by year and are absolutely friendless.

As the London County Council refuse to contribute toward the cost, the City Corporation have abandoned the scheme for improving the area of the Cripplegate Fire.

All the Chief Constables in the country have received instructions from the Secretary of State that a scheme should be formulated for calling out the reserve forces if required in case of necessity.

Sir Howard Vincent has given notice that he intends to call the attention of Parliament to the great decrease in the area under wheat in Great Britain, and the national danger arising therefrom.

The Southampton magistrates refused lately to grant any licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors at the Chapel Fair, one of the oldest fairs in Hampshire, at which the drinking booths were almost the principal features.

There can hardly be a wiser, more humane, or more economical expenditure of money than that made by the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society. It deserves much larger support.—The ordinary school work last year of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children earned £732 of the Government Grant. This speaks volumes for the efficiency of the teaching staff.

The scheme for the increase of salaries of male assistant teachers under the School Board will involve an ultimate increase of expenditure estimated at £26,135 per annum. It is receiving strong opposition from the Metropolitan Board Teachers' Association.—Mrs. F. M. D. Berry, M.D., B.S., has been appointed a medical officer of the London School Board, and entrusted with the examination of female applicants for teacherships.

A sale of silk embroideries and other fancy needlework done by members of Mrs. Dalison's Guild of Impoverished Irish Gentlewomen has been opened at the Mansion House by the Duchess of Abercorn. Most of the work is very beautiful and artistic.—Lady Esther Smith has placed 3, Grosvenor-place at the disposal of the friends of Princess May's Sailors' Home, Millwall, for a morning function in June in aid of the Endowment Fund.—A function has been held at Wimborne House, Piccadilly, by Lady Wimborne to encourage and develop Welsh textile industries. This, it is hoped, will prevent the migration of the villagers to the large towns.

THE COAL TROUBLES.—A combined movement for an advance in wages is threatened in all the chief coalfields of Great Britain. The Durham coal owners have agreed to an increase of 2½ per cent. in the miners wages on the basis of the rates, and a temporary advance of 2½, with a view of meeting present exceptional circumstances, on the basis of "the rates for six pays." The South Wales miners' delegates have decided that the provisional committee should negotiate with the employers.—15,000 people at Dowlais assembled to protest against the ejection from his house of a collier on strike who could not pay his rent. The windows of the landlord's house were smashed, also the windows of the post-office and others. The police charged the crowd with their batons.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS: Ten guineas from Her Majesty to the Westminster General Dispensary.—The Spanish Sick and Wounded Fund has reached over £270.—£100 from the Duke of Wellington to the Spanish Sick and Wounded Fund.—£100 from the Grocers' Company to Middlesex Hospital.

IRELAND.

A successful missionary conference has been held at Dundalk, at which representatives from various missionary societies were present.

The annual meeting of the Irish Baptist Union has been held in Belfast, and the annual meeting of the Congregational Union has been held in Derry. At each encouraging reports of the work throughout the country were submitted.

An All-Ireland Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations has been held in Londonderry, and has been attended by delegates and friends from various parts of Ireland. Papers were read or addresses delivered by various brethren.

The General Assembly's Colportage Association is doing a good work. The report is a very encouraging one, and states that whilst the ignorance of many Roman Catholics is most distressing, the spirit of independent inquiry is asserting itself in various quarters.

The Belfast Women's Temperance Association and Christian Workers' Union, formed in 1874, may from its seniority be termed the mother branch of the Irishwomen's Temperance Union, has seventy distinct branches scattered wherever ten praying women can be grouped together in the four provinces, held its annual meetings on Thursday and Friday last. There were two enthusiastic meetings, one for temperance on Thursday evening, the second a garden party at the Victoria Homes for Destitute Girls, under the management of a committee of temperance ladies. There are 128 girls nurtured at these Homes, part certified, part voluntary.

Foreign.

Last week there were 112 cases of bubonic plague at Hong Kong and 107 deaths.

1200 Russian troops are to be sent in detachments to relieve the Russian force at present in Crete.

British delegates have been appointed to attend the conference about to be held in Brussels relating to the sugar bounties.

The Imperial Bank of Persia, which is a British concern, has obtained control of the Bushire Customs as a guarantee for a loan to the Shah.

The Russian Government has asked the Porte to allow 30,000 Armenian refugees, who fled into Russia at the time of the disturbances two years ago, to return to their homes.

Mr. Chamberlain has been urged to withhold his consent to the New Guinea concession, because the colonies which contribute the subsidy were not consulted, and desire to consider the matter.

The eight new torpedo boats to be added to the German Navy in June are constructed of nickel steel. The furnaces can be fired by coal or tar, and each boat carries thirty tons of coal and seven tons of tar.

The very enthusiastic celebration of the Queen's birthday in the United States is regarded as evidence of the thoroughly good understanding now established between the two countries.—The Irishmen of Chicago denounce an Anglo-American alliance as degrading to the United States.

INDIA.—The Afridi deputations, composed of malcontent Zakka-Khels, have been turned back by the Governor of Jalalabad, apparently by the Ameer's orders.

CANADA.—It is estimated that since January 25,000 persons have crossed the passes for Klondike.—The Canadian Government still hope to bring the Pacific cable negotiations to a successful issue.

TURKEY.—The amount of the taxes illegally levied by the Quay Company on British merchandise will be deducted from the Cyprus tribute, and refunded to the merchants affected.—Sir Nicholas O'Conor succeeds Sir Philip Currie at the British Embassy in Constantinople.—The Porte and the Russian Chargé d'Affaires have practically agreed on terms of settlement of war indemnity due to Russia.—The Sultan has commissioned a German engineer to proceed to Palestine and repair and construct roads, bridges, and landing piers in view of the German Emperor's journey.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.—The growing estrangement between Austria and Hungary is daily becoming more evident. Antagonism to the common affairs of the monarchy causes no little disquietude.—The Austrian Parliamentary Delegation in Budapest has adopted the Foreign Office estimates after a two-days' debate in which the Czech leaders assailed the Triple Alliance as worthless. The German representatives defended it.—The rigorous policy of the Government in dealing with the discontents in the German province of Styria is tending to give the domestic crisis once more an acute form.

THE FAR EAST.—The British Consul at Chefoo is proceeding to Wei-hai-Wei, where three war ships have arrived, to arrange its transfer to Great Britain.—A mob has burnt the American Mission at Tung Chau. It is believed that the missionaries have escaped. — Disturbances at Wen-Chau, directed against native officials, have resulted in the destruction of the Yamêns.—Wei-hai-Wei has been handed over to China by Japan.—It has been officially stated that the Russian announcement that passports would be required for non-Russians at Ta-lien-wan and Port Arthur was based on a misunderstanding.

ITALY.—The Council of Ministers have arrived at a complete accord regarding the proposals to be made to Parliament as to the legislative reforms necessitated by the recent disorders.—Neither in Venice nor in the province of Venetia has there been any disturbance of public order.—There is reason for supposing that the extreme Clericals are in some measure responsible for the recent disturbances in Italy.—Differences between the Foreign Minister and the Minister of Justice as to the programme of the Government led the whole Cabinet to resign office. Marquis di Rudini is commissioned to form another administration.

THE TRANSVAAL.—The text of the Transvaal Government's reply to Mr. Chamberlain's last despatch has been published. It cannot recognise British suzerainty, but is prepared to abide by the stipulations of the Convention of 1884.—Mr. Esselin, the probable new Secretary, has made a violent speech declaring Mr. Chamberlain's suzerainity claim to be a public scandal, and has appealed to all citizens to defend the independence of the Republic. He characterises as utterly false Sir A. Milner's statement that the prevalent unrest is due to the want of progress by the Transvaal.—The Volksraad has renewed the resolution for three years to grant a subsidy to Uitlander schools, provided that South African history is taught and a specified standard in Dutch is maintained.

CHINA AND FOREIGN TRADE.—Mr. Archibald Colquhoun urges the construction of railways through Burma; and states that as the waterways in China are insufficient for purposes of trade. England should make sure of the Yang-tsze Valley as a means of steam communication.—The Russian Government has bought up all the land in Ta-lien-wan upon which businesses can be established. This tends to the complete restriction of foreign trade.—Experts have pronounced the Chinese coal and iron deposits to be the richest in the world.—An Anglo-Italian syndicate has secured from the Chinese Government the largest industrial concession ever granted in the empire.—Mr. W. F. Wenyon, of Hong Kong, regards that island as the great centre of our Far Eastern trade; and if the waterways of Southern China are opened up, the enormous mineral wealth and natural resources of the country will be developed.

AFRICA.—The monthly output of coal in Natal has increased from 12,000 tons in 1893 to 30,000 at the present time.—The bodies of the American missionaries killed at Rotifunk (W. Africa) have been found and buried.—A British expedition, which proposes to traverse Africa from south to north, left England last week.—The Cape Government are in favour of constructing the South African land lines for the all-British cable from England to Australia.—The French post at Kishi, in the Lagos hinterland, has been occupied by a British force, the French having been driven out by the native population.—A party of six missionaries have just arrived at Liverpool from Sierra Leone. They bear testimony to the murder of American missionaries at Rotifunk. Some of the ladies have had awful experiences, but have manifested splendid courage.—Colonel Woodgate, with his relief force, has reached Kwalu, and found the garrison safe.—The chiefs in the Karene districts of Sierra Leone are anxious for peace.

The Prayer-Meeting.

THE May Meetings in Paris included one of great interest in which pastors of the various churches assembled to discuss questions of Christian doctrine and practical method. Among other papers read was one by M. Matthieu Lelièvre, on the Prayer-Meeting, which was replete with profitable suggestions. Christian worship, said the speaker, is the contact of God and man; there God speaks to man by his Word, and man speaks to God by Prayer. Whether private or public, worship must always have these two elements in combination. Worship is not a monologue but a dialogue. The general predominance of teaching over prayer is one of the weak points of Protestant worship. When M. Lelièvre went on to say, "We must teach our churches to pray, we must give them the prayer-meeting," he was emphasising a need which is specially pressing in the Protestant communions of the Continent, and none the less was he giving utterance to a duty that should weigh heavily upon the pastors of many a church in privileged Britain.

Proceeding, the speaker quoted as the foundation charter of the prayer-meeting the words of Christ in Matt. xviii. 19: "If two of you shall agree...it shall be done. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." It was by a prayer-meeting that the early Church began to live with its own life; and the Holy Spirit, when bestowed upon the first disciples, found them on their knees. Common prayer remained one of the essential elements of primitive worship; but the Church was induced to give up, in the interest of an ever-usurping clergy, the right for its members to raise their voice in public prayer. But this was not without resistance. The Reformers, in purifying public worship of the superfluities and superstitions of the Roman Church, restored to the first place the Word of God and Prayer; although sometimes it was only in a feeble measure that they associated the ordinary believer and the minister in common prayer. The prayer-meeting is born of the necessity of combining believers in common worship; and it is found wherever there are living Christians.

Obituary.

MRS. HART.

A liberal supporter of good works, this lady recently fell asleep at her residence, 25, Oxford-square, W. Missionaries from all parts of the world found hospitality in her home; and among those present at the funeral was a native convert from the Zambesi, representing the deeply interesting mission with which the name of François Coillard is associated.

REV. W. COOMBS, AYLESBURY.

The passing away of this earnest servant of Christ will remind many of the long and devoted services rendered in past years. Born in 1829 at or near Northwich, Cheshire, William Coombs spent his early days among the Wesleyans, and at a private school was led to think of eternal things. His decision for Christ was soon known, and he was urged to begin to use his evident gifts. At various cottage meetings, in his round jacket and boyish face, he carried the Gospel, for he was only just over fourteen years of age. When he came to London to pursue his business, he was led to join a Bible-class, then held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Sometime afterwards he began his life work in the City, at an old hall in Bishopsgate. The success which followed led to the formation of a church, started in the Victoria Bank House, Threadneedle-street, and William Coombs was elected pastor. After five years' labour there (all the while attending the Pastors' College), owing to railway extension, the buildings were demolished, and in 1870 he was called to the pastorate at Streatham. In 1874 he removed to King's Stanley, where he laboured until 1881, when, receiving the call to the church at Princes Risborough, he accepted it, and most arduously and successfully taught the Word of God there for fourteen years. In 1895 repeated attacks of angina pectoris led to his retirement. He was a man who knew what sorrow meant, and yet it was a joy to see him, and realise how fully he rested in the God of Grace.

The Evangelistic Field.

A FORTNIGHT'S evangelistic mission has been held in the Methnew Church, at Carlow, by Rev. JNO. GOOD, and a similar mission has been held in the Gospel Hall, Loughbrickland, by Miss Shannon, of the Central Mission, Belfast.

The Wesleyan Church, Harwood-street, Blackburn, has been granted a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Last autumn there was an ingathering of senior scholars and others; over 100 additions were then made to the church. A special mission has been held by Rev. J. H. HECTOR, of the Methodist Episcopal (Zion) Church, and Rev. W. D. WATSON, the minister in charge. Great spiritual power rested upon the efforts, and nightly large numbers sought salvation. The mission will long be remembered with gratitude by people here.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

MRS. BARYERTZ, June, Clitheroe.
Mr. W. R. LANE, Brighton, June 5.
Mr. J. NEECH, Shawford, to June 5.
Mr. W. MONRO COLLINGS, Swaythling, June 5.
Rev. W. H. AITKEN, Milborne Port, to June 13.
Mr. E. P. TELFORD, Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
MR. CHARLES INGLIS, at the Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, during June.
Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, Wigan, June 5-9; Bristol, June 12-27.
SERGEANT PULLINGER, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS. — L.E.G. E.C. I.T.H. R.C. C.M.B. H.M.M.H. J.E. M.W.B. N.B.H. E.S. Dr. Mc D. S.E.M. P.M. E.W.M. W.G. H.C.D. J.A.J. J.D. J.F.W. J.B.S. J.M. G.A.A. C.F.C. A.D.'O. E.T. Mrs. J. E.K. J.S. H.R. L.T. B.B. J.D. E.A.C. W.J. H.E.B. W.D.R. C.F. W.H. H.T.N.U. Miss B. J.K. Mrs. B. A.H.H. J.P. A.M. L.P.N. E.L.V. L.J.P. B.P. G.W.L.B. M.J.J. D.E.W. C.W. M.G. C.M.B. J.M.R.T. E.P. J.J.S. J.A.N. A.C. F.C.M. E.H.S.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Miss M. Owen, 8, Brynmair, Towyn-on-Sea, North Wales; M. Wilson, 20, Hanover-road, Brookhill Park, Plumstead; S. Baldwin, 18, Wyvis-street, St. Leonard's-road, South Bromley; W. Ilott, 30, Dacre-street, Lee, S.E.; C. Hibbs, 7, Vulcan-terrace, Brockley, S.E.; Miss A. Adams, 210, Glyn-road, Clapton-park, N.E.; Jennie Bustin, Glyn-road Mission, Clapton-park, N.E.; R. Dow, 27, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool; W. Brown, Quartermaster-Sergeant, 1st West Riding Regiment, Floriana, Malta; Jane Vickers, 5, Clarence-street, St. Peter's-street, Islington.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be CAREFULLY READ before being given away.

[296]

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Melanesia has left personalty worth £24,000.

Rev. Dr. Barlow has been installed at St. Paul's Cathedral in succession to the late Bishop of Bedford.

The living of All Saints', South Acton, has been accepted by Rev. W. P. Hindley, vicar of St. Clement's, Fulham.

An Anglican conference of Anglican chaplains in Northern and Central Germany has been opened in Berlin.

The benefice of St. John's, Hoxton, has been conferred by the Archdeacon of London on Rev. Eric Farrar, of Coventry.

A new church is to be built and endowed at Waterloo at the sole cost of Mr. Douglas Horsfall. The amount will reach £20,000.

Rev. F. S. Webster, rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, has accepted the Crown living of All Souls, Langham-place, London.

Rev. T. Hartwell Jones, rector of Nutfield, Surrey, is to be the new principal of St. David's, Lampeter, in succession to the late Principal Gent.

Steps are being taken to raise a memorial to commemorate the life and work of the late Canon Woodward, for forty-seven years vicar of Folkestone.

Rev. John Barton announced on Thursday to the General Committee of the Church Pastoral Aid Society his approaching resignation of the office of secretary to the society.

The Southport Evangelical Conference was held last week. The two special subjects were: "The Teaching of the Church of England as to the Sacrificial Character of the Lord's Supper," and "Methods of Meeting Modern Scepticism."

The Archbishop of Canterbury has been calling attention to the needs of the Welsh Church, arising from the increase of population, the bi-lingual difficulty, and other causes. His Grace thinks the people are being won back to the Establishment.

A memorandum of public worship has been published, signed by certain High Churchmen, in view of recent developments of worship in the Church of England. It declares that practices abolished at the Reformation cannot be rightly introduced, except under the sanction of authority.

The Manchester Protestant Thousand has passed a resolution on lawlessness in the Church of England, denouncing the offering of Christ in sacrifice at the hands of the priest, confession, Mariolatory, invocation and intercession of saints, the adoration of the cross, and the use of incense and holy water.

The C.M.S. has suffered another loss. On Thursday the news reached Salisbury-square that Rev. Henry Carless, of the Persian Mission, was dead. No details are to hand; probably they will not be obtainable until letters arrive. Mr. Carless, who was one of the many Ridley Hall men in the C.M.S. field, joined the Mission ten years ago.

At the request of the authorities, Captain Spencer, one of the Staff Missioners of the Church Army, has just conducted a special mission in Borstal Convict Prison, Rochester. Services were held in the prison chapel, and a number of the convicts had, at their own request, private interviews with the missioner. These interviews take place without the presence of a warder.

The Record says that the Bishop of Hereford's charge will compel attention. Dr. Percival surveys the condition of his diocese with a closeness of scrutiny which is in agreeable contrast to the studied compliments often associated with these performances. The Bishop speaks with decision in defence of the Reformation, and denounces with some asperity the Churchmen who slight it. Dr. Percival hopes "that the Church at large may never cease to hold on to her Reformation gifts or to honour the Reformers who won them."

Congregational.

Rev. E. E. Wilkins has entered on his new charge at Torrington.

New chapels are being built at Peel Causeway, Sunderland, Poulton-le-Fylde.

The autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union will be held in Halifax in October.

Rev. J. Wesley Houchin, son of the late pastor, has been recognised as minister at Stambourne.

The 104th anniversary of Peppard Chapel was celebrated on Monday, when Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, of Bristol, preached morning and evening.

Dr. Mackennal's church at Downs, Bowden, has celebrated his completion of forty years ministry. Dr. A. Maclaren took part in the proceedings.

Recognition services in connection with the settlement of Rev. J. Plowright, of Hannan, Essex, as pastor at Windhill, near Bradford, were held last week.

The progress towards recovery which Rev. Dr. Berry is making cannot be regarded as altogether satisfactory. He is now staying in the neighbourhood of Wolverhampton, where he is taking absolute rest. It is hoped that a long period of abstention from public service will eventually restore him to his normal strength.

The responses made to the appeal of the London Missionary Society for £3100 to enable them to send two missionaries to Hunan, and to support them for five years, now amount to £2241 2s. The fund was started by two anonymous gifts of £500, and has been helped by contributions of various amounts, including a promise from a lady of £132 per annum for five years towards the support of a medical missionary.

Baptist.

Rev. W. H. Buller has been recognised at Hillsley.

Rev. W. H. Rose has been recognised at Carmel, Woolwich.

Rev. A. E. Owen Jones, of Whitchurch, has accepted the pastorate at Rye-hill, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Rev. T. Perry has been compelled by failing health to resign the pastorate at Stepney, King's Lynn.

Mr. C. S. Rose, of the Pastors' College, has accepted the pastorate at Coggeshall; Mr. T. Knight that of Chatteris; and Mr. Charles H. Clapp that of Horsham.

The fourth anniversary of Pastor Wheeler's work at Gresham Chapel has been held with much encouragement.

"The Christian Enterprise," the annual sermon preached for the Baptist Missionary Society by Rev. W. J. Henderson, has been published by A. H. Stockwell and Co.

Methodist.

The New Connexion Conference will be held at Nottingham, June 11-20.

The Primitive Methodist Jubilee Thanksgiving Fund has received £36,000. It is expected that the fund will be closed at the next conference.

The church formerly used by Rev. Aubrey Price in Brixton has been secured by the Primitive Methodists. This is felt to be quite a providential opening.

Sir Frederick Howard has generously purchased a mission-car, at a cost of £200, for the exclusive use of the Bedford and Northampton district. In many Synods strong testimony is borne to the good work done by these cars in villages and small towns.

Revs. F. Pickering and W. Chapman, letters from the Zambesi Mission state, are in good health. The native evangelists are rendering good service. A new mission is to be opened at Moomba's kraal. Rev. A. Baldwin, now in England, will return to the mission in a few months.

At the anniversary of the London Chapel and School Extension Fund, held last week, some remarkable statistics were given showing the progress of Primitive Methodism in London. Sixty years ago they had not a single chapel in the metropolis, to-day they have 150; then they had no members, now they have 9000 in church fellowship. The progress has been most remarkable during the last twenty-five years. In that period upwards of 100 chapels have been built.

The necessary two-thirds majority has been secured at the Wesleyan Conference of Victoria and Tasmania for union. The amendment postponing the matter until 1905 secured 57 votes, as against 172, whereupon the minority temporarily withdrew, and the resolution for union was carried unanimously. On returning the dissentients expressed their willingness loyally to abide by the decision of the majority. Subsequently the four denominations met as one and fixed the day of union.

Presbyterian.

At Forest Hill a meeting has been held to celebrate the extinction of the debt on the church.

Rev. W. Keir, of Mount Pleasant, co. Durham, is about to be called to Bellingham, Newcastle.

It is said that there is some idea of inviting Dr. John Watson to the new church in Finchley-road.

Rev. A. Connell preached anniversary sermons for Rev. Dr. Ross at Newcastle on Sunday week, Dr. Ross occupying the pulpit at Regent-square.

Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross, whose health is now, we are glad to hear, thoroughly re-established, resumed his work at Westbourne-grove on Sunday.

The induction of Rev. J. M. Fergusson took place at Southend on Wednesday week, conducted by Revs. Dr. Thain Davidson and G. H. C. Macgregor. A public meeting in the evening was presided over by Sir George Bruce.

Fallen Asleep.

At East Allington, Mounts, South Devon, on 21st ult., Rev. H. R. FORTESCUE, rector of the parish for fifty-four years.—At Duffield, Derby, on 23rd ult., Rev. F. W. MOORE, for forty years vicar of the parish.—At 42, Sussex-gardens, Hyde Park, on 21st ult., Mr. F. MEADOWS WHITE, Q.C., lately Judge of Clerkenwell County Court, aged sixty-eight, an earnest helper of church work.—At Boundary-road, South Hampstead, Lady BRUCE, wife of Sir George B. Bruce, aged seventy-three, until some few months back an active worker in connection with St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church.—At Chagford, aged forty-seven, Rev. T. GRILL VANSTONE, who laboured for some years in China.—At Aylesbury, Rev. W. COOMBS, aged sixty-nine, for fourteen years Baptist pastor at Princes Risborough, and one of Mr. Spurgeon's earliest students.—At Clapham, Rev. PETER COATES, on 21st ult., for many years a successful Methodist minister.—At Coventry, Mr. JAMES CLEVERLEY, for fifty-two years an earnest worker at Well-street.—At Bolton, Mr. JAMES BROMILY, for many years a leader in Christian work.—At Taunton, Mr. W. H. VENTON, through a railway accident, a faithful preacher of the Gospel.—In Manchester, Rev. MILES DICKENSON, on 22nd ult., a useful minister among the Primitive Methodists.—At Ashwater, Mr. JOHN DOCKETT, a valued leader in Sunday-school and other work.—At Hexham, Miss MARY KIRSOPP, aged ninety, a follower of Christ for seventy years.—At Ledbury, Mrs. POTTS, wife of the Wesleyan minister.—At Burton-Latimer, Miss FANNY WATTERING, aged ninety-one.—At Needham Market, Rev. JAMES DEARING, Baptist minister at Crowfield for twenty-eight years.—At Mountpottinger, Belfast, Mr. HENRY BROWN, a devoted Presbyterian elder and an earnest temperance and Christian worker, aged sixty-one years.—At Rathmullen, co. Donegal, Rev. N. G. BATT, rector of Killygarvan.—At Cashel, Rev. J. T. COFFEY, formerly rector of Mogorban.

Dr. Newman Hall on Sunday week entered his eighty-third year. On the same day the venerable doctor preached to crowded congregations at Stratford Congregational Church.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—"Thanksgiving day" in connection with these Homes was held on Wednesday week. The inmates of the various Homes, together with a goodly number of past inmates, assembled at Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, when the rector (Rev. E. Grose Hodge) preached. It was a bright picture to observe the hundreds of young women trooping into the church. In the afternoon, at Lincoln House, 12, York-place, Baker-street, a hearty meeting of the friends and supporters of the Homes was held, Rev. Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot presiding. Mr. John Shrimpton, the founder, in a short address, gave some interesting particulars concerning the Homes, and Rev. Thomas Turner, Rev. E. G. Gange, Col. MacGregor, C.B., and Col. Douglas Jones took part. In the evening the inmates, with the former inmates, were invited to a homely "musical evening" at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the Editor should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2¼ dols.	„ „
	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
24 „ „	6s.	„ „
4 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THERE is said to be widespread and acute misery among the poor of our towns owing to the rise in the price of bread. "A missioner," by which is, no doubt, meant a city missionary, informed a newspaper representative that not only is bread dear, but that rents are going up at the same time.

The fact is that this is a South London locality in which houses for the poor are notoriously scarce, and owners are, of course, taking advantage of a short supply to raise the price of rooms, just as the short supply of wheat is raising the price of bread. It is business. But between the baker and the landlord the poor people are having the life squeezed out of them.

While we are suffering from the war, the plague in India is continuing its ravages, and we now hear from Calcutta similar news to what we have had from Poona and Bombay.

Distressing intelligence is just to hand of the fate of American missionaries in Sierra Leone. The disturbed state of the district for some time has rendered the position of the heralds of the Cross imminent with the peril of death. Most treacherous is the disposition of the native race. Indeed, it is alleged that at one point in the recent sickening butcheries a chief's son, who for fifteen years had been in training under this very mission, was the foremost leader in the murders, and took an active part in all the atrocities which were committed.

Before they could reach a place of safety, the maddened natives burst upon them (the missionaries, several of whom were protecting one of their number —a lady—who was dangerously ill), and then ensued a scene, the details of which it is impossible to describe. Suffice it to say that all were hacked to death in the most horrible manner, and to the unfortunate women it was given to undergo, before falling beneath the knives of their cowardly assassins, a fate from which death must have come as a welcome release...Many of the missionaries fell upon their knees in prayer, but not to the fiends surrounding them.

For these faithful and true pioneers of the Gospel we have to mourn in heartfelt grief, praying at the same time that the bereaved relatives and friends in the home-land may know the grace of God's richest comfortings in their severe trial.

While much uncertainty exists as to what is going on at the seat of war, and equal uncertainty is felt as to what the Governments of Spain and of Europe may do to terminate hostilities, there is no reason to doubt that the United States will henceforth stand in a different relation to the rest of the world from that which they have occupied, and will play a different part. The day of isolation is past. Their appearance in the Far East may be a pledge for the liberty of the Gospel there; while in Europe the rulers of the nations may come to see that there are more important safeguards than armies and navies. They may compel tyrants to relax the bands of oppression, not by fighting them, but by showing the strength that is born of freedom, which is the child of the Gospel. On the other hand, this war may stimulate the desire to possess a strong army and navy. But anyhow, a new order of things has been initiated. The nations have stumbled into it, as the late Professor Seeley said Britain stumbled into the possession of her empire.

There are some incidents that ennoble even war. For instance, the bravery of the American sailors who took their lives in their hands in attempting to sink the Merrimac across the harbour of Santiago, and the chivalry of the Spanish admiral who spared Hobson and his companions from certain death, and sent a message to the enemy, under a flag of truce, that the prisoners would be honourably treated. This recognition of heroic self-forgetfulness on the part of a foe will do a great deal to make both sides respect each other, will soften the rigours and cruelties of war, and open the way, as nothing else could have done, to an honourable peace. There are other signs that the Spanish are heartily tired of the conflict, and there is room for hope that in a few weeks it will be all over. The sinking of the Merrimac, if it closes the harbour, will open the floodgates of human sympathy—results both favourable to peace.

According to The Times correspondent at Vienna, the alleged European concert is not only at an end, but has never really existed in any true sense. He thinks it regrettable that the public should ever have been given to understand from so many exalted quarters that there actually did exist harmony among those upon whom the peace of the Continent depends. In this country the natural expression of the people's convictions, and their desire to help the oppressed, were certainly largely checked by those in authority on the plea that such a union had existed during the Armenian troubles. A heavy responsibility rests on those who have so persistently circulated this idea. The misconception has had a disastrous effect on all humanitarian movements during the last four years. Truly, there is small trust to be placed in diplomacy.

The trouble in Italy is taking the form of a duel between the temporal and spiritual powers. The clerical party are doing their best covertly to increase discontent against the Government, in the hope that this will help to reinstate the temporal authority of the Pope. There is little doubt, indeed, that the recent disturbances have been largely the fruit of priestly agitations to this end. We have here a fresh instance of the unhappy state of a priest-ridden people. Wherever the hierarchy is dominant, progress seems doomed to a standstill. The one hope of this unhappy land is not the increase but the breaking of the Pope's power. In the spread of education and evangelical truth is the only chance of the people to assert themselves, both against rampant militarism and spiritual superstition.

Some very interesting subjects for reflection are afforded by a letter from a correspondent in Rome in the Standard of Monday. The Pope, it would appear, has personally addressed an appeal to the Emperors of Austria and—wonder of wonders—Protestant Germany, to afford him their good offices with the Government of Italy to secure for his followers a "due share" in the administration of the country. It would take a Jesuit jurisconsult to explain how men who are pledged to the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope in Italy, can take a "due share" in the very government which has supplanted that power. But it is just that sort of man that Rome manufactures—politicians who can appear to divide their allegiance, citizens "facing both ways." The Pope, we are further informed, is not alien to the idea of an agreement, but he must not be asked to concede the impossible. All Italy will gain if his just demands are complied with. The Pope once in possession of his full liberty and independence, the unity of Italy will be consolidated, and an era of peace and prosperity inaugurated.

But England knows, and Italy knows, the sort of gain to be derived from granting the demands of Rome. The pages of history show it. The condition of the Papal countries is more eloquent than words. It means, "Make Italy another Spain!"

A change has come to the poor persecuted Spirit Wrestlers of the Caucasus, a people very similar to the Society of Friends; permission has been given for their emigration at their own expense. It is computed that out of 4000 ruined and exiled from their homes about 1000 have died from privation, and it is said by a gentleman who is greatly interested in them that "there is not the slightest doubt that the survivors are eventually destined to the same lingering death, unless those who realise the full import of this Christian movement, and sympathise with the sufferers, rescue them speedily." There is nothing more terrible than being unable to succour the suffering or endangered when you know their condition; but when there is a possibility of aiding them it is indeed guilty to let them suffer and die. Surely the philanthropy and enterprise of these times are equal to the task of transplanting this colony of Christians to some other land. Mr. V. Tchertkoff, Purleigh, Essex, will answer inquiries.

The hopes held out last week of a speedy settlement of the South Wales coal dispute have received a severe check through the unpreparedness of the men's leaders to discuss the draft of the terms offered by the masters. The conference has thus, so far, led to nothing, and the wide-spread suffering incurred goes on with increased intensity. It is a great calamity to both sides that this should have happened, for it tends to accentuate the alienation of feeling, and delay the final settlement indefinitely. One of the industrial problems of the future will be to educate the leaders of popular movements to a knowledge of their duty. Ignorant, unwise, and short-sighted leadership has had disastrous effects in several recent disputes. Until this evil is remedied, working-men will have the worst of every conflict, and will do vast injury to the trade of the country and to social welfare generally.

The Queen calls sympathetic attention to the appeal made by the secretary of the Y.W.C.A. to persons residing within easy distance of London, and who are interested in the welfare of working-women, to invite parties to spend a Saturday afternoon or a Bank-holiday in their gardens or on their estates. It adds, however, that under no circumstances should any attempt be made to combine "proselytism or instruction" with these pleasant outings. What our contemporary means by "proselytism" it does not explain, but to shut out intending hosts from using such an opportunity to combine instruction or religious appeal with friendly hospitality would certainly be a mistake. An "outing" would be none the less enjoyable because it included an earnest address on spiritual matters. These occasions, when rightly used, are of incalculable service in reminding the young and thoughtless of the higher interests of the soul. The fear of "proselytism" should not stand in the way of an evident spiritual duty.

In one of the districts of London—and of such there are many—a poor, sordid, dull, miserable-looking place, you see much that distresses you—drink, dirt, gambling in the roadway; every house, or nearly so, is overcrowded. The condition of the lads is thus described by one who is familiar with their manner of life :—

> Gambling is the besetting sin of these lads; every penny they can spare is laid out on horses or fooled away at cards. If the cash is all gone, money can be borrowed at the rate of about 5,000 per cent.—i.e., if you borrow sixpence you must pay sixpence a week loan interest until the loan is repaid. Some lads are hopelessly in debt to others, and the young usurers turn over their capital with marvellous rapidity, only to lose it all to some clever scamp.

And yet such lads can undoubtedly be won for the highest service; for we know a Sunday school of nearly 500 children in just such a district as this, seven-eighths of whose teachers have been scholars in the school, and began in the infant class.

The editor of Coal and Iron needs enlightenment on the gambling question. In reply to the protest of a correspondent belonging to the coal trade against the disgraceful "Coal Exchange Derby Sweepstakes," recently exposed in the newspapers, the editor contends that there is a great difference between an "annual sweepstakes" on the one hand and "gambling and habitual betting" on the other. The difference in reality is only that between the beginning and the result of a great and disastrous vice. Those who encourage, even once a year, an indulgence in it are putting their seal on the whole system. The short-sightedness of those who can speak of gambling as a "national curse," and then justify an annual "sweepstakes" under the patronage of a public institution, as in this case, is amazing. It is this blindness to the plain issues of life that accounts for a great proportion of the wrecked lives of thousands who are gradually lured to their doom.

The close and vital connection there is between spiritual religion and social well-being is always receiving demonstration. The latest illustration comes from the Co-operative Congress, where the complaint was raised that the gambling of this age, its absorption in games, and its frivolity are turning working men even from their own material welfare. We have often pointed out how religion and public and social life suffer from these things, but it would appear that even the love of money, and of buying things in the cheapest way, is subject to them. When this is the case we may begin to grapple with gambling in an honest attempt to suppress it, and we may even try to control the fever for sports; but there seems no sign of abatement at present.

The Bishop of London, addressing the Congress said, that the movement they represent is turning "the hands," as working people have been called, into men and women. We wish it were doing so more rapidly and more surely. Never, until employers regard human beings as human, and treat them as such, shall we see an end of social strife; and never, till the employed see more in a day's work than a day's wage—see duty and privilege in it, shall we get causes of strife removed. A man may do as much as his master in the way of making himself only "a hand." The money nexus alone has a degrading influence on both the classes whom it joins—and divides in joining.

Many indications point to the conclusion that the agitation against illegal Ritualistic practices in the Church of England is about to take wider and deeper root. The Bishop of Hereford (see page 13), while affirming that the English Church is "neither wholly Protestant nor wholly Catholic," urges his flock to prize the Reformation gifts of the open Bible and the Prayer Book, which has exercised such influence on the national life, to which now some High Churchmen are "distinctly disloyal," and goes on to say :—

> Unless I entirely misunderstand the temper of the English laity, they will not tolerate any general attempt to impose afresh upon English life the burden of sacerdotal pretensions and theories which our fathers refused any longer to bear.

It must be confessed that the laity has been very slow to realise the real bearing of recent events, and have suffered priestly pretensions to go great lengths before awaking to the fact. Now that the hour for protesting has come, it is to be hoped that they will do so effectually.

We had hoped, from the language of the Bishop of London in Convocation, when the question of the prevalence of Romish practices in the Establishment was under discussion, that he intended to pioneer the cause of Church reform in the Metropolis. Friends of Protestantism were, however, grievously disappointed at the prominent part he recently took in a highly Ritualistic service at St. Augustine's Church, Kilburn, when he appeared in his magnificent mitre (its golden front being studded with no fewer than thirteen precious stones), and a gorgeous cope, the upper part of which sparkled with brilliants. The entire service was utterly alien to the Protestant English Church as established by law.

"Our little systems have their day; they have their day and cease to be." So we are reminded by books that appear for the purpose of tracing the origin of religion and the ideas that religion enshrines. The problem which many scientific men have set themselves is to try and account for religion without revelation, for the existence of the idea of God apart from the admission that there is a God. As The Daily News recalls :—

> Early in this century such writers found the origin of religion in solar myths; and huge volumes, now deep in dust on the shelves of old libraries, showed the world how the sun not only looked, as Milton says, from his sole dominion, "like the God of this new world," but actually was the source of all its gods, and the fount and origin of all its worship. But the sun myth has died out, and none now so poor as do it reverence. We go back in the present day to lowlier origins. To explain the great prophetic souls of history, we grope among the hideous rites, the bloody sacrifices, the cruel superstitions of the lowest savages. "The white lily of a blameless life," which is the top and crown of human endeavour, has its root, we are told, in this ugly soil, and its explanation there.

But while some so-called scientists are busy trying to prove that the idea of God is traceable to the idea of the ghost, others are showing that it came from no such source. Meanwhile the marvellous moral and religious phenomena in the Church of Christ, things living and present, are here to be accounted for.

The Church Times has some suggestions worthy of notice in an able article on the "Reform of Stage Morality." Without pledging ourselves to agreement with its opinions of the function of the drama, we heartily endorse its plea for earnest co-operation with those in the profession who desire to raise the tone of its morals, and for personal visitation on the part of clergymen to individual members of it, especially in country towns visited by travelling companies. In order to do this, friendly terms must be made with the keepers of lodging-houses frequented by actors, who can open the door to cordial relations with their customers, and give information of cases of sickness and misfortune. In this and other obvious ways much good might be done among a class who, by the conditions of their calling, can have few religious friends, and must be in corresponding need of spiritual guidance and help.

The Plague in India.

THE news that Calcutta is greatly disturbed on account of the plague is not alarming, but disappointing and suggestive. Reliable authority informs us that deaths by the plague are not numerous, but the native population in their ignorance and extreme superstitiousness and distrust, imagine the number of cases to be many times as numerous as they are, and ascribe all deaths to the plague. They believe that the Government will forcibly inoculate them, which they imagine will endanger the lives of many, and the caste of others, and that the segregation of all plague-stricken or tainted persons hides some dark and sinister scheme against the lives or liberties of the people. The native population is, therefore, in a state of wild alarm, and many thousands of them have fled from the city.

A curious and pathetic feature of this panic is that it arises not so much, if indeed at all, from the plague itself as from the humane and earnest endeavour of the Government to check its ravages, if they cannot extinguish it. If the people of any purely Indian city or province were visited by famine, plague, or any great natural calamity, they would lie down and die with a fatalistic passivity and quietude such as Europeans can hardly understand; yet in cases like this, where English humanity, civilisation, and justice have been active and obvious for many years, there are panic and distrust.

The explanation is this: The people generally are very ignorant, wildly imaginative, suspicious, and distrustful of everyone. This is the outcome of centuries of oppression and wrong. We suffer from it. Many stories might be told of the absurd rumours circulated and believed over wide districts at various times. The Mutiny, indeed, was more owing to false reports of the designs of Government than to any other cause. We in England cannot understand, what has happened again and again in the East—a whole race or tribe seized with some wild impulse, so as to be utterly regardless of truth or reason. Therein lies one of our greatest dangers in India. Hence the importance of urgently applying the remedies of good government, education, and Christianity.

A Preacher's Motive.

By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D.*

IS not the glory of God in the salvation of your hearers your main motive and chiefest end in setting out to be a minister? If we kept ourselves entirely true to that motive in our preaching, neither would the praises of men puff us up, nor would their blame embitter us and break us down. My sons in the service of our Lord Jesus Christ, begin from the very beginning of your ministry, and before it is begun, to have your hearts clean and pure within you on the matter of your motives in your preaching. Preach our Lord; preach Jesus Christ—and Him crucified. And preach every single sermon of yours for the salvation of your hearers. Flee, like very poison—as it is—every other thought, every other motive and breath of a motive in your preaching. Preach your absolutely very best every returning Sabbath day. But no Sabbath day make good preaching your motive or your end. Preach your absolutely best, because the Lord of the day is your Lord and Master, and because He is the best master, and the best text, and the best praise, and the best reward for preaching. So enthrone and so exalt Jesus Christ in your heart that you will treat yourself on the spot, as a traitor to Him, every momentary delight you are at any time tempted to take in any man's praise of your preaching, as well as any resentment or depression at any other man's blame.

Preach better, and ever better, every new Sabbath morning, because there is simply no limit to the unsearchable riches of Christ; the absolute unsearchable riches of grace, and truth, and sweetness and beauty that are in Jesus Christ. The rhetorical heat and the adulatory elation of the pulpit deceive and intoxicate many a young preacher's heart. He takes it for what it is not. He is only a beginner; and he does not yet know the sin that so easily besets him. He does not yet know the secret plague of his own heart. Not till many years have passed by, and many disappointments and disenchantments have come, and, especially, not till he sits still, and sees other men doing his work far better than he ever did it; not till he has passed through that last furnace and supreme scrutiny of a minister's motives, will he know and be sure whether it was God's glory or his own that was his secret strength all the time of his bounding heart and his youthful eagerness for the Sabbath and for the pulpit.

If I were young again like you, I would do differently. I would not lecture so much on Euroclydon, and on the times when the Gospels were writ, as I used to do, and as William Law complains that so many of the young ministers of his day did. But I would labour like Richard Baxter, and with all my might, at things necessary; and as a dying man to dying men. I would preach on the great texts, as Matthew Arnold somewhere counsels all preachers to do. I would preach on Richard Baxter's sin and misery, and on Pascal's profound inquietude, and on his angelic greed of happiness; on imputed and on infused righteousness; on evangelical holiness and everlasting life; on secret and unceasing prayer, and on the text "Lord, teach us to pray"; on humility, on patience, on meekness, on inoffensiveness, on forgiveness of injuries, and on doing to others, in everything, as we would have them to do to us; and on love to God and our neighbour as ourselves. For my part, nowadays, I care less and less for any other preaching than that, be it ever so scholarly, and eloquent, and true. And it is for that reason that I never weary of the great Puritans, and of those preachers and writers who have in them the Puritan element of an intense inwardness and reality.

And, happily, we get that element in more schools of preaching and writing than one;

BUT, ABOVE ALL, IN THE PURITANS.

They were by far the ablest and the most scriptural preachers of spiritual experience, and of a holy heart and a holy life, that the Church of Christ has ever seen. They were in this the true successors of the Apostles. The great Puritans had all the books that ever were written, and they made a right noble use of them. But, above all their books they had themselves. Do not be ashamed to have Owen on "Indwelling Sin," and on "Temptation," and on "The Person and Glory of Christ," on your foremost shelves. And Howe on "The Living Temple," and on "Delighting in God." And Goodwin's matchless "Ephesians"; his "Holy Ghost"; and his "Select Cases." And no man need blush, surely, to be caught with Jonathan Edwards in his hands. If you have a head for his "Will," which I much doubt, good and well. But I would far rather you had a heart for his "Affections." I know all you have to say about their style. Though, if you will let me speak out what I sometimes think, it takes some countenance, and no little ignorance, in any raw lad to talk contemptuously about the style of John Howe. Yes, and I will say what I know, and you do not know, about many a magnificent and enthralling page of Thomas Goodwin; as well as many an absolutely seraphic page of Jonathan Edwards...

Take the splendid substance of those great theologians and great preachers; digest and assimilate that splendid substance into your own souls; and then give it out in the English of Newman, or Robertson, or Spurgeon, and the best people in Scotland will soon find you out and will bring down blessings on your heads. Take your text and your doctrines out of Holy Scripture, and then heat and salt and season your sermons out of your own souls, and your enchanted people will go home blessing your names and saying that they who forsake such preaching forsake the truest salvation and the truest joy of their own souls.

DEMANDS ON THE MODERN PULPIT.

At the same time, what a lifetime of incessant intellectual labour our pulpit work must be! There is no escaping that. To preach with life-long freshness; with interest, both to ourselves and to our people; with instructiveness and impressiveness to all kinds of people, rightly dividing to them all the word of truth, and that every returning Sabbath-day for thirty, forty, fifty years—why, the greatest orators in the land would all break down under the tremendous task. Our greatest orators speak only now and then. They take good care to speak only when men's minds are already full of the subject, and when men's hearts are on fire with political passion. As one of the most passionate of them once said, they but give back to their audience in flood from the platform what they first receive from their audience in vapour. But you have to rise up in the pulpit every Sabbath morning to pour floods upon the dry ground. You are expected to preach your very best every Sabbath day, though the earth is as iron around you, and the heavens as brass above you.

But then, what a theme is yours! What a whole universe of themes! Yes, you have actually the whole universe. For you have God, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost. You have man, unfallen, fallen, and redeemed. You have sin, sinfulness, and sin exceeding sinful. You have the law, grace, and truth. The understanding, the heart, the will, the imagination, the conscience, the whole body and soul of man. You have duty, character, opportunity, responsibility. You have fatherhood, motherhood, childhood, youth, manhood, old age. Death, judgment, the right hand, the left hand, the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched. The new heavens and the new earth, the sea of glass, the river of the water of life, and the throne of God and the Lamb. If we ministers were to hold our peace about all these things the very stones would immediately cry out.

Standing here I cannot but cry out, Are you ready for these things? Show me your books. Show me your pen and ink. Show me your interleaved and annotated Bibles. Name to me some of the great masters you know through and through. Tell me in special your habits of secret prayer and of self-denial, and of taking up your cross, as God is your witness. Oh, gentlemen, if you only knew the wages of a well-furnished pulpit you would work for it. The Scottish people, of all people on the face of the earth, demand of us every Sabbath the very best preaching, and that in every pulpit. They hunger for it. What a summons to all our ministers, and what a reward also to many of them for another week of work and prayer. Four hours, six hours, at the very least, every day that God gives you as students and young ministers to prepare your very best for your people; and then four hours out among them and their children. When you do that with sufficient prayer, and with sufficient love, and with sufficient humility, God will give you Scotland for your wages. Then, but not till then. No, never till then. For the salvation of the hearer is the true motive and the true reward of the true student and the true preacher and pastor.

* From the closing address as Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland Assembly.

Behold, Proud Man!

Is this the grand result
Of all these peaceful years—
Is this the boastful fruit
The tree of knowledge bears—
Increasing light thus fostering war,
And setting all the world ajar?

Sure something is amiss—
Some spirit lurks unseen,
That thus the pillar breaks
On which 'twas thought to lean.
That light—when needed most—should fail,
And knowledge used but to assail!

Alas! the human will
Imperious still remains,
And, unsubdued by grace,
In unthought darkness reigns;
Mere human light and human skill
Can ne'er subdue man's haughty will.

Shall night, then, last for aye,
And ruin hold the rein?
Is peace for ever gone?
Must joy still constant wane?
Ah, no! behold faith's written scroll—
"The Prince of Peace—He maketh whole."

Millennial glories dawn!
The prayers of saints prevail;
And He who will, shall come,
And hush creation's wail.
'Tis by that blessed One alone
Death's deadly car can be o'erthrown.

Albert Midlane.

Smoking among Boys.—Impressed by the growth of this habit among quite young lads, Mrs. George Jenkins, Monmouth-road, Abergavenny, has begun an Anti-smoking League, which she finds is benefitting the Sunday-schools there. Any friends wishing to begin a similar effort in their own neighbourhood may have as many cards of membership as they require, post free, on application.

Employment of Epileptics.—The rapid development of the colony established by the National Society for Employment of Epileptics at Chalfont St. Peters has led to the existence of a wide-spread impression that the Society is in a state of extreme prosperity, and this erroneous impression has been found most prejudicial to the movement. It is estimated that there are in this country about five thousand persons in urgent need of such provisions as the Chalfont colony affords. When the additional Homes, now being built there, are completed and opened, the number of "colonists" actually provided for will be somewhat less than two hundred. The furnishing of Homes and other capital expenditure have thrown so severe a strain upon the general funds of the Society that these are now quite exhausted, and works essential to the safety of the colony cannot be carried out. The secretary, Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 12, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., will thankfully receive help.

"Revival Christianity."

THE leading article in last week's issue of our contemporary, The British Weekly, is devoted to a review of the memoir of the late Principal Brown, of Aberdeen. In the course of the article there occur the following observations, which we reproduce with hearty commendation:—

"Principal Brown was certainly one of the most brilliant men we have ever known. He had many amiable and noble qualities—qualities of courage, of cheerfulness, of resilience, which appear more rare, more estimable, as experience of life increases. But what impressed us at first in him, and all through, was that he had a true zeal for souls. From the beginning to the end he was never so happy, never so much at home, as at a revival meeting. You saw the true man then as he joined in some passionate hymn of redemption, with the tears running down his cheeks, or listened tremulously, eagerly, and 'with such believing eyes' to an evangelist preaching on 'that most blessed thief who stole the Kingdom of heaven,' or on the cry of the Spirit and the Bride.

"His conception of Christianity was that of a revival Christianity, and this conception dominated his life. It is worth thinking a moment of what this implies. It means in the first place that Dr. Brown found his true rest and home in the central truths of Christianity—the truths of regeneration and redemption. There is a Christianity much in favour now. It contains what Vinet called a portion and emanation of the truth, and consequently some of the promise of the life that now is, but which does not save or renew. There is an element in Christianity which can be made intelligible and congenial to the unrenewed nature. Much indeed has been recognised by the unrenewed nature, and even yielded to; that is, there are maxims of Christianity which have created a new civilisation. There is an honest admiration for the character of Christ on the part of many who do not own Him as Redeemer. It is possible that this kind of Christianity, this Christianity of secondary ideas and applications, may go on prosperously from year to year like a well-managed business. It may even go so far that the world may become Christian in a certain sense, but Dr. Brown would have held that such a victory was no real triumph of Christ. He would have fallen back on his revival hymns.

He suffered the just for the unjust,
That the unjust might not die.
For these things were done in the green tree
That they might not be done in the dry.

Oh! think of the love and the pardon,
And ask, "Why should I die?"
For these things were done in the green tree
That they might not be done in the dry.

"No, the fundamental truths of Christianity and the live faith of the Church can never be made clear and lovable to any but the spiritual man. To the natural man the mystery of redemption will always be more or less unintelligible, and more or less odious. And the Church can only live in the world by successive individual transferences from the natural to the spiritual kingdom. In other words, the Church is always dying, always being raised again.

"That is why we speak of revival Christianity. For it is by revivals of religion that the Church of God makes its most visible advance. When all things seem becalmed, when no breath stirs the air, when the sea is like lead, and the sky is low and grey, when all worship seems to have ended but the worship of matter, then it is that the Spirit of God is poured upon the Church, then it is that the Christianity of the apostles and martyrs, not that of the philosophers and Liberals, keeps rising, as Vinet says, from the catacombs of oblivion, and appears young and fresh in the midst of the obsolete things of yesterday and the day before. If Christianity be as she is, eternally a stranger to the world, she is not in any sense established there. The world is increased by every being born into it, but the Church has no natural increase, only a supernatural. The Church lives by capture, by booty, by winning over from the world the citizens that make her number. Nor is it too much to say with a great thinker that she can hardly be said to live at all. Her life is a perpetual resurrection, and she is for ever issuing from the tomb. This was Dr. Brown's view of Christianity, and it was this that made him delight in revivals. He saw Christ with his own eyes, leading captivity captive. He knew that this was not the work of nature, but the work of grace, and in consequence in an age when faith in the supernatural supports itself by a struggle, his never wavered, we believe, for a single instant. It is only by grasping this view of the Church as fighting and struggling and suffering for every inch of ground that we can learn how much we depend on God, and how surely God is to be trusted. . . Dr. Brown was not afraid to die, and, what is better, he was not afraid to live. He was too near the source of hope and quickening to be dismayed, and sometimes he would speak as of those who sit in the heavenly places with Christ Jesus, who look down on the conflict as though it was already passed, and behold the fallen Satan."

Buried in the Country.—6.

BESIDES the occasional excitements of lectures on poultry-keeping, bees, flower-shows, visits from temperance lecturers, a cycling mission band that appeared one day, etc., all of which kept us from the deep slumber so kindly predicted by our friends, there was one other class which we tried and found popular and most useful, that was an ambulance and nursing class for the women of the place.

It came about by what we so often call accident. I was on the point of leaving the house one day when a child tore up the drive with a scared face. "Please, do come to mother; she's cut her arm and it's bleeding awful, and we can't stop it." Hastily putting together some linen, I went with the little one to her mother's cottage, where the latter, surrounded by two or three neighbours, was trying to staunch the blood, which was spurting from a wound in the arm. No one seemed to know what to do, and though I heard, as I entered, the horrid suggestion of putting some tobacco to the place, evidently there was some doubt as to its safety. The woman herself looked frightened, and was getting faint from loss of blood; the doctor was nowhere to be found; he had a large district to cover, and was probably miles away, and if I had not turned up at the moment I hardly know how they would have managed. Somehow in cutting bread Mrs. —— had let the knife slip, and it had made a DEEP GASH IN THE BRACHIAL ARTERY.

Having myself gone through three or four courses in "first aid" and nursing, I felt sure I could deal with the case in question, and it did not take more than a minute to extemporise a tourniquet with the handkerchief I had brought, place it over the artery, and stop the immediate danger.

The sight of those good women standing round their sister, so anxious to render her help and yet ignorant how to do it, brought home to me forcibly the need for some instruction to these villagers in the elements of physiology, and how to give "first aid" in case of accident or sickness. Added to this, we had no district nurse, and so it was doubly necessary that the women themselves should be taught a few points of nursing. I thought first of applying to our doctor and inducing him to undertake a class on the subject, but after five minutes' talk with him both the doctor and I felt that plan would not do as well as another. "You don't want a medical man," he said; "you want a woman to teach them who will talk very simply down to their level, and not use technical words. The simpler the better," he added; "and she ought to keep to the elements; not go beyond her depth. I'll come and examine the class, if you like, and see they've had proper instruction," were his parting words as he hurried away. And so he did, and was as good as his word.

When the class was started and I had found for it a lady as teacher who had studied hygiene, and had obtained the St. John Ambulance medallion, the doctor gave up an evening, after the first course of five lectures had been given, and examined the women on what they had been taught. This plan of a lady to teach I consider is quite the best; she can talk to the women (we only admitted girls over fifteen) in a homely, plain way, and they readily ask her questions, and then at the close of the course there should be a field night when prizes are given to those whom the medical man adjudges as deserving of them by their good answers.

We had two sets of lessons during that first winter, and both were very popular. In the first the lecturer roughly followed the lines of the St. John's Ambulance "first aid" course. We drew some rough diagrams, procured a few examples of bones, and a number of triangular and roller bandages, and at each lesson spent the last quarter-of-hour in practising bandaging with the pupils. They also brought us written answers to three questions which were printed and given round at each lecture, and with the questions on each set of papers there was printed one useful item of information for example. One paper ran thus:—

Questions. Lecture III. Broken Bones.

(1) What "first aid" would you give in the case of—a broken thigh,

b broken collar-bone,
c broken rib?

(2) How would you make a stretcher?

(3) Describe the bones in the arm and trunk.

And underneath brief directions as to how to treat a person in a faint, and one whose clothes had caught fire.

The second set of lectures following on these dealt with the elements of nursing, and were, perhaps, even more useful than the others. How to ventilate a room, make a poultice, make beef-tea, change sheets, etc., were explained and illustrated by demonstration as far as possible, and certainly we were well rewarded for the small amount of trouble in arranging the class by the interest and attention shown by these poor "buried" country folk.

When a year had passed circumstances necessitated our leaving N——, and we both did so with genuine regret, nor did we feel that it had been a year of mental stagnation, either for the villagers or for us. Surely Emerson speaks truly when he says, "Every man's task is his life-preserver." The conviction that his work is dear to God, and cannot be spared, defends him. Rus.

Scottish Assembly Echoes.

EVERYONE in the Free Church Assembly has been delighted with the revelation of Dr. Whyte's powers of intellect, his wide reading, and his splendid originality. His opening address we have already referred to, and an extract appears elsewhere from his closing address. He gave lazy ministers a good drubbing; pleaded for more regular visitation and better preaching, and has no sympathy with the cry "Too busy to visit." His addresses have been practical and powerful, and are bound to do a vast deal of good.

As to the reports of work, it is evident that the ministers of both Established and Free Churches as a whole are true to the Gospel, and are earnestly seeking to do what they can to reach the people, not only in the large centres of population, but in the rural districts. Dr. Smith, in the Free Assembly, said it is not enough to confine oneself to preaching and teaching; the people need those who will live among them and be their guides. Dr. Macleod, of the Established Church, urged the importance of earnest evangelical preaching. A very considerable decline of scholars was reported in the Free Church Sunday schools, which calls for attention and consideration. In the Highlands the work was never more encouraging.

Turning from the home field, the work among the Jews has much to encourage effort and prayer for Israel. In both assemblies the Foreign Mission night is a great time. To be present is an inspiration. The reports were good, and the addresses first-rate. The work is advancing in spite of obstacles. The cry is—more men and more money.

Lancing-on-Sea.—It is only a few weeks since we gladly wrote for your readers a few details about our home for the aged and dying at Lancing-on-Sea, but we have already proved our title by having the privilege of cheering the last moments in the "Home going" of our first aged sister in Christ from our quiet village rest. Her last words were "My Jesus has done all things well." It is truly a ministry we felt thankful to be permitted to have shared, and we feel sure kind readers who have contributed to the needs of this little home for the dying, will also feel encouraged that their ministry is not in vain. W. Chorley.

6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

American Notes.

THE Christian and Missionary Alliance, originated and superintended by Dr. Simpson, has thrown out its branches as far as the Pacific coast. It is not intended to form a new denomination, but to unite in Christian association and missionary work members of all denominations. It preaches "the fourfold Gospel—Conversion, Sanctification, Divine Healing and the Second Coming of our Lord." Some of the most devout and earnest Christians adopt this formula, and the natural result is that they have a tendency to draw together into one fellowship.

I cannot say that the fourfold formula commends itself to me. At once more concise and more comprehensive is that of Luke in describing the Pentecostal preaching: "With great power gave the Apostles witness of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus"; which he abbreviates in recording the same Gospel ministered by Paul at Athens—"Jesus and the Resurrection."

"Divine healing" is in many, perhaps in most, of these meetings the most prominent of the four subjects specified, though there seems a tendency in some cases, especially at the headquarters at New York, to pay increased attention to foreign missions, leaving the use of medicine or otherwise to individual conviction. As I have before mentioned, the amounts poured in to the Alliance are much in excess of those contributed to other societies in proportion to their size, and these amounts are given not by constraint, but willingly.

Mr. Stephen Merritt, the managing director of the largest company of undertakers in New York, who is also a director of the Christian Alliance, accompanied us to Nyack, twenty-eight miles from New York, on the west bank of the Hudson, where Dr. Simpson has removed his residence and built a large training institute for missionaries, and a house for those in need of healing, called Berachah, both delightfully situated on the heights above the Hudson. Every week sick persons are anointed and prayed for, and in many, not all, cases are healed.

Although it is too true, as a minister in the West said to me, that the churches have largely forgotten their proper aim and purpose, and, therefore, have degenerated into wrong methods, yet there are very many devoted and consecrated Christians beyond the Atlantic coast. Perhaps their light shines all the brighter for the surrounding dimness. There is a tendency to swing off and form new meetings. Birds of a feather will flock together, and, whether it be in large or small communities, there appears to be no valid objection to this, if they are preserved from pharisaism on the one hand and intolerance on the other; and if a large-hearted, generous, and unsectarian spirit is preserved.

At Kansas City we had a brief interview with Mr. Fisher, the superintendent of the Gospel Union, connected with which are some courageous missionaries pioneering in Morocco.

We arrived at Chicago on a bleak and rainy morning, which strongly contrasted with the balmy climate of Southern California, and affected us accordingly, so that we were obliged to hurry away without seeing several friends whom we desired to visit. Chicago is the busiest city on the American continent. There is much worldliness, much wickedness, but also much energetic and devoted Christian work.

There is here a remarkable personage—a Scotchman, Dr. Dowie—who came from Australia a few years ago. He seems to have a gift of healing, and in Leaves of Healing, a weekly paper published by himself, he narrates some extraordinary cases, authenticated by witnesses. One, of cancer in the mouth, was illustrated by photographs taken at different stages, and finally with the face of the young woman in a normal and healthy condition. The gift of healing, however, is not accompanied by a meek and quiet spirit. Dr. Dowie seems to have a special animosity toward Dr. Simpson, who, however, takes no notice of his attacks.

A new hall with double galleries has been opened during the past year, accommodating about 2000 persons. It has an immense baptistery, in which about 1800 have been baptized within the year. The doctor preaches trine (or as he calls it, triune) baptism, dipping the person three times—in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. He makes much of this, and one gentleman, who had been an official member of the first Baptist church, was one of the seventeen thus trinally baptized and received into the Zion Church on the night we were there. The sisters were all gathered into the baptistery together, and Dr. Dowie briefly addressed and then baptized them. The men were similarly addressed and baptized, except that they were bidden to kneel, and their heads were pushed forward and immersed three times. Anything less characterised by reverence or solemnity I never saw in the performance of a Christian ordinance. Dr. Dowie has also a large hotel, called Zion, where persons seeking healing, and others, are received, and which appears to be a well-paying concern.

We stayed at the Bible Institute. Rev. R. A. Torrey is its director, as well as the pastor of the Chicago Avenue Church adjoining. This has a large membership, and a Sunday school of about 2000 children. All branches of the work are exceedingly well organised, and Mr. Torrey's hands are full of good work excellently conducted. He and Mrs. Torrey had just passed through a great sorrow in the death of a beloved daughter; this event had a manifest effect on the subject and tone of the discourses which we heard during our too brief sojourn.

Mr. Moody's Colportage is not the least remarkable of his many great undertakings. I have already referred to it more than once. But that over two millions of evangelistic books should have been sold in two or three years, to persons, few of whom would ever have heard of them had they not been carried to their doors, is a phenomenon worthy of repeated mention, in the hope that a similar method may be extended to other parts of this dark and needy world.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Coming to the Sea.

COMING to the sea,
With the thunder of its waves,
A death-dirge over graves,
A lullaby of love,
A song of worlds above—
O, the music of the sea!

Coming to the sea,
With cliff and cavern grand,
Its shells and silver sand,
Its bosom stretching on Till it meets the setting sun—
O, the beauty of the sea!

Coming to the sea,
What solemn thoughts arise
Of the earth and upper skies,
Of Time's receding shore,
Of Eternity before,
Divided by a sea!

. . . .

Coming to the sea—
Life's dread and final deep!
Where loving watchers weep
And strive and pray in vain
To allay the mortal pain;
"There is sorrow on the sea."

Coming to the sea—
Our earthly joys have fled,
Our youthful friends are dead;
Our hair grows white with spray,
Our ears with shell-notes play:
Omens from the sea.

Coming to the sea,
What guide shall take my hand,
And lead to heaven's strand
Through the silences that reign
On death's terrific main?
One who trod the sea.

Coming to the sea—
Jesus can still the strife,
Change death itself to life,
The weak into the strong,
Our moaning into song;
There is singing on the sea.

Coming to the sea:
The boundless love of God,
The worth of Jesus' blood,
While endless ages sweep
Eternity's great deep,
Shall with glory light the sea.

Donegal. J. K.

Undoing the Reformation.

A BISHOP'S PROTEST.

IN his visitation at Hereford Cathedral Bishop Percival made some very notable references to present-day movements in his own branch of the Christian Church. Towards the close of the address he dealt at considerable length with the "sacerdotal claims which are being pressed upon our Church at the present time in certain quarters with much boldness and vehemence of assertion." He said they should weed out of their ritual all that undoubtedly symbolised or fostered erroneous doctrine, or tended to adulterate their worship with sensationalism, or drew worshippers into dangerous proximity to Roman superstitions. It became their duty to check the craving which seemed to admit of no finality in the accompaniments of Divine service, and was constantly driving men and women, especially in the luxurious classes, to introduce now one new ceremony and now another. These novelties were the more to be deprecated because they were almost always imitations of some Roman practice, and also tended to weaken the moral fibre, which needed every possible tonic and support in a luxurious and sensational society. He felt sorry when he saw the growth of such habits as picking out this or that part of a Church service, this or that article of the Creed, and attaching to it some new genuflexion or prostration; and he deprecated the inculcation of the habit (natural enough in a believer in Transubstantiation) of demonstratively bowing to the communion table, which those who did this always called the altar, disregarding the language of the Prayer-book and encouraging false doctrine. The encouragement of habitual confession to a priest was very dangerous to healthy spiritual life, to morality, and to family union and happiness.

Having spoken also of "the tendency towards materialistic views of the Eucharist," the Bishop concluded with a protest against current depreciation of the Reformation. In many High Church circles it had of late become far too much the fashion to depreciate and decry the Reformation movement. Many of those who did this seemed to be unaware that they were thus decrying one of the greatest influences in modern history, and the one to which they owed many of the best elements in their own life. "A spirit has arisen within the ranks of the High Church party which is distinctly disloyal to the Prayer-book. This disloyalty is shown in all such things as the teaching of habitual or obligatory confession, the sacerdotal claims of the priesthood, the teaching of the duty of fasting communion, the reservation of the elements, the doctrine of the mass, the introduction of Roman services; and seeing that those who teach these things would claim that they are the natural development of the earlier High Church teaching which they have left behind them, it would seem to be specially incumbent upon loyal members of the High Church party to use all their influence to stop and eradicate this disloyal spirit which is leading their extreme wing back towards Romanism, minus the regulating authority of the Pope.

"If that spirit is to prevail among us, not only will some of the best work of the Reformation be undone, but the last state of our Church will be worse than the first. Moreover, in abolishing the celibacy of the clergy, the Reformers vindicated the principles of faith and freedom against the false principle of asceticism which had produced such disastrous results. By doing this they brought men back to the principles of the Gospel and of a pure and natural life, reconciling nature and duty, and making woman the companion and helpmeet of the clergyman as of the layman. Thus they were "the founders of countless sweet and peaceful homes," and for this alone they deserve undying honour and grateful recognition. As Englishmen, we must always listen with some impatience to those who vilify the movement that secured us in freedom of conscience, thought, and speech, that liberty of prophesying which has been, and will be, the ever precious seed of progressive enlightenment, and of reconciliation between religious faith and expanding knowledge. And, unless I entirely misunderstand the temper of the English laity, whether they call themselves Protestant, Anglican Catholics, or prefer to be designated Catholic Anglican Protestants, they will not tolerate any general attempt to impose afresh upon English life the burden of sacerdotal pretensions and theories, which our forefathers refused any longer to bear."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 12.

"If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Rom. x. 9.

SALVATION here is evidently to be taken in its most extended meaning. It stands even more for the deliverance of the soul from the love and dominion of sin than for the removal of its justly incurred penalty. That we should be pure in heart, holy in thought, consecrated in life, with all the range of our nature controlled by his indwelling Spirit—such is the Divine intention with respect to us, as suggested by this deep, great word Salvation. But there are two conditions, on our compliance with which this saving power is realised.

We must confess Jesus as Lord.—Throughout Scripture there is a close connection between Christ's Royalty and his Saviourship. "Behold thy King cometh to thee...having salvation;" "Him hath God set forth to be a Prince and a Saviour." "Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of God most high...made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually." We shall never know Christ as a Saviour from inbred sin until we have definitely and absolutely enthroned Him in our hearts. A physician is not content with healing outbreaks of disease and fever when they occur, but claims leave to examine all the arrangements of the house, so as to deal with the sources of the mischief.

We must also stedfastly believe in the Resurrection. The Risen Lord, sitting at the right hand of God, in all the vigour of an indissoluble life: still working in the world, and energising the hearts of his own: entering to indwell, to fill, to unite with his own eternal life, such is the vision constantly offered to our faith. Let us look away to Him with a persistent, unwavering gaze, until sin ceases to attract us, and Satan finds a stronger than himself in possession.

MONDAY, June 13.

"Of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things."—Rom. xi. 36.

This is a verse of monosyllables. A child just learning to read could easily spell them out. But who shall exhaust their meaning?

Of Him.—The entire scheme of redemption; the marvellous history of the chosen people, with which this chapter is occupied; the universe of matter, throughout the universe—all are included in the all things, that have emanated out of God. No one has been his counsellor, or given aught to Him. From all created things, which are as the stream, let us climb to Him, who is their fountain, source, and origin, and in Him let us learn to fill our own souls to the very brim.

Through Him.—Through Jesus Christ, the Mediator, God has poured the entire grace and wealth of his nature to bless and help us. There is no good thing that does not come to us through the mediation of the Second Person of the Holy Trinity. Through Him He made the worlds. Through Him we have received the reconciliation. Through Him, also, all grace is made to abound towards us. Never forget to magnify the Lord Jesus as the source of all your supply.

To Him.—Creation, Providence, Redemption, are all tending back to God. The tide is setting in towards the throne. A revenue of glory shall yet accrue from all that has happened within the parenthesis of time. Every whit in the great temple shall one day say Glory. "Through Him, then, let us offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of lips that make confession to his name."

TUESDAY, June 14.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. xii. 1.

To present carries us back to chapter vi. We might almost say that the intervening chapters, after the manner of the Apostle, are one prolonged digression or parenthesis, and that he classes all the great things with which He has been treating as among the mercies of God, and arguments, therefore for our entire consecration. Every disclosure of God's grace towards us, in choosing, redeeming, and ultimately glorifying us, is an argument for our entire surrender to his will and power.

We are called on to present our bodies as instruments of righteousness, because all true regimen of the inner life immediately affects the body in all its members; and, conversely, the consecration of the body reacts upon and affects the temper of the soul. It would be well for you to take Miss Havergal's hymn, with its enumeration of the various parts of the body, and offer and present yourself, to be from this day and forward, wholly for God. Only believe that He is more anxious for this than words can tell, because He loves you so, and that He accepts immediately what you offer.

Lord, here's a hand!
Oh, take this hand, and lead me at thy side,
For I would never ask another guide;
I lift it, Lord, withdrawn from other hands,
For Thee to grasp and lead in thy commands,
Lord, take this hand!

Such consecration must be living; that is, it must enter into all your life, and it is holy, well-pleasing to God, and reasonable. And when it is made, and the soul is duly transfigured in its exercise, we begin to prove that God's will, which once we dreaded, is also good, well-pleasing, and perfect.

WEDNESDAY, June 15.

"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof."—Rom. xiii. 14.

This verse is ever memorable from its association with the life of Augustine, who says: "Thus was I sick and tormented in mind, bitterly accusing myself, and rolling and turning about in my chair, till it might be wholly broken.

"At length, rushing into the garden, groaning in spirit, all my bones were crying out, soul-sick was I and grievously tormented. I said to myself, 'Be it done now, be it done now.' And a voice said, 'Why standest thou in thyself, and so standest not? Cast thyself upon Him. Fear not, He will not withdraw Himself to let thee fail. He will receive, and will heal thee. Stop thine ears against those unclean members of thine, which are upon the earth, that they may be mortified.'

"Then arose a mighty tempest, bringing a heavy downpour of tears. I cast myself under a certain fig-tree, and gave rein to my tears, and the floods of mine eyes brake forth. Why not now? Why not this hour make an end of my uncleanness? And, lo! from the neighbouring house I heard a voice as of a boy or girl, I know not which, singing and oft repeating, 'Take and read, take and read!' Checking the torrent of my tears, I arose, interpreting it to be a Divine command to open the Book and read the first chapter I could find. I seized, I opened, and in silence read the passage on which mine eyes fell: 'Not in rioting,' etc. No further would I read; nor was there need, for instantly all my heart was flooded with a light of peace."

THURSDAY, June 16.

"He that herein serveth Christ is well-pleasing to God, and approved of men."—Rom. xiv. 18. (R.V.)

Dean Howson renders this verse thus: "He who lives in these things as Christ's bondsman is well-pleasing to God, and cannot be condemned by men." There are two rules, therefore, to be observed by us when we consider our behaviour in that great borderland which lies between the dark and light, the clearly wrong and clearly right. We are all conscious of habits and tastes, of inclinations towards certain forms of amusement and recreation, of methods of life, which do not contravene any distinct law of God, but are certainly open to question. It is such things that fall within the scope of these two principles.

First, we must always remember that we are Christ's bondservants. Let us look then, every day and hour, and as to the mental habit, every moment, upon Jesus Christ as our Master. Saintly George Herbert chose that to be, as it were, his best-beloved aspect of his Saviour: "My Master, Jesus." "An oriental fragrancy, my Master." And as each fresh question arises in our life, let us think what He would desire, always reckoning that the least suggestion of his preference is law.

Second, we must always bear in mind the spiritual life of others.—We are to put no stumbling-block, or occasion for falling, in another's way. It is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor to do any other thing, whereby our brother is made to stumble. Let us each of us please his neighbour for good ends, to build him up. For Christ pleased not Himself. Whatever sets an evil example, or exerts a baleful influence on others, must be surrendered.

FRIDAY, June 17.

"I will not dare to speak of any things save those which Christ wrought through me... by word and deed."—Rom. xv. 18. (R.V.)

All things that have not sprung from the in-dwelling and in-working power of Christ are of little value in the sight of God. They lack the one principle or germ of life. Our Lord said, Separate from Me, ye can do nothing; and probably, therefore, whatever we do out of living union with Him amounts to nothing.

These words are a window into the Apostle's inner life. He was ever looking to the Lord to work through him, in the power of the Holy Ghost. He had nothing, therefore, to boast of, as he reviewed his labours; the impulse in which they originated, and the success with which they were crowned, were alike attributable to the Son of God who had been revealed and formed within.

Let us so yield ourselves to Him that the great Master may fulfil through us also all the good pleasure of his will. "I cannot," one may say, "give that tract, speak to that fellow-traveller, witness for Christ on that ship or in that shop, stand up in that pulpit and preach." No, perhaps not. And it were good for you ever to feel as you do now. But you can let Christ do these things through you. Then there will be an end of pride. As soon might Milton's pen be proud of writing "Paradise Lost"! Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith?

SATURDAY, June 18.

"Quartus the brother."—Rom. xvi. 23. (R.V.)

That is all we know about him. The others whose names are written here are more or less famous. Tertius wrote the Epistle; Caius was evidently a man of influence; Erastus was the treasurer of the city, and so on. But Quartus was just a humble, simple Christian, who had no handle to his name, save his brotherliness and his desire to assure his Roman brethren, whom probably he had never seen, of his love to them. "So he begs a little corner in Paul's letter, and gets it; and there, in his little niche, like some statue of a forgotten saint scarce seen amidst the glories of a great cathedral, 'Quartus the brother' stands to all time."

What a lesson in humility! Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not. Be content to live and die unknown, except for the love that breathes through thy life, not to those of thine own circle merely, but for those across the sea, with whom thou wouldst fain strike hands. Thy one joy that thou hast been born into the family of God. Thy creed, that all regenerate souls, of every name and sect, are members of the same family, children of the same Father, and therefore one in ties of peculiar tenderness and strength.

What a revelation this slight reference is to the new binding forces of the Gospel. At the Advent the world was split by great gulfs of national hatred, fierce enmities of race, language, and religion, wide separations far profounder than anything that we know. And then the Gospel came, which began to gather men of every race into one family, in Jesus Christ, the Divine Elder-brother; and from this, uniting influences of brotherhood have begun to permeate the world.

F. B. M.

Home Missions.

Whit-Monday at Mildmay.

Of all the "red letter days" in the year, Whit-Monday is perhaps the reddest in the opinion of the guests who on that day gather at Mildmay from the various districts in London in which the Mildmay deaconesses work. For the past twenty-two years this gathering has taken place. The number of guests has to be limited to 1200; the tickets are sold weeks beforehand to those who apply first, and the demand is always far in excess of the supply.

At 1.30 the gates of the Mildmay Compound are thrown open, and streams of people pour in from Bethnal Green, Bermondsey, Bow, Clerkenwell, Hoxton, Lambeth, Islington, Pentonville, New Kent-road, Victoria Park, and Whitechapel, each mission distinguished by a rosette or card of a different colour, and all bent on finding their own particular deaconesses, who are equally on the look-out for them. While some wander about in family parties, or sit in groups under the tree listening to the band from St. Peter's, Islington, others are shown round the cottage hospital in detachments. Many betake themselves to what they consider the best part of all, viz., the prayer and testimony meeting in No. 6. Very simple but very touching were some of the testimonies given this year, especially in those cases where both husband and wife had been converted lately.

At 4.30 the guests are summoned to tea, to which all sit down together, some in tents, and some in the large rooms below the Conference Hall. When this is over the general public are admitted, friends of the ticket holders arrive, and at 7 p.m. there is a large gathering in the Conference Hall. This year the choirs of some of the missions sang (which they did exceedingly well), and the happy day was brought to a close with Mr. Badenoch's interesting and helpful address, illustrated by candles and lanterns, which was much appreciated. One man who, much against his will, had been induced by his wife to come into the hall "just for a little while," declined to go when she suggested that they should leave at 8.30, and said he "could have sat there all night!" We earnestly trust that the "Light of the world" may have shined into the hearts of some who until then had been sitting "in darkness and the shadow of death."

R.S.U. Work among Cripples.

Some twenty little ones, members of the R.S.U. Cripples' Choir, charmed the friends attending the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, by singing, on Thursday last, a number of their sweet songs—thus paving the way for a statement by Mr. John Kirk of the work among afflicted and helpless cripples. When some years ago the Ragged School Union was led to take up work on behalf of home cripples, no one knew to what it would grow. There are now between five and six thousand crippled children being visited, taught, aided in many ways, and comforted by the sweet story of Jesus.

Miss Coles followed on similar lines, illustrating the usefulness of the pleasant outings, the Holiday Homes, the Cripples' Parlour, and the other developments of the R.S.U. work. An earnest plea was made for dolls, toys, picture-books, and the like, for wee dull bairns barely able to move, and with scarce a gleam of pleasure in their lives.

Mr. J. F. Shorey spoke of the pathos of these little afflicted lives, and the delight of serving Christ by seeking to bring a ray of sunshine into dull, sad hearts. He had known personally most of the little singers whose voices had been heard, and he knew well the change which had been wrought in them. An account followed of a few days spent in the Cripples' Home at Margate, of its beneficial and toning effects, of the weeping of the boys whose time was up at having to leave, and of the rapturous delight of the girls who arrived, and who could not sleep that night "for thinking of this beautiful place we've come to."

Sir George Williams, who presided, and Messrs. R. C. Morgan and M. H. Hodder also took part in this interesting meeting.

The Houses of Rest.

Friday last was the anniversary of Miss Charlotte Mason's admirable Houses of Rest for Christian workers. At Finchley-road, N.W., and at Eastbourne, many labourers, wearied in service for the Master, are privileged to enjoy Christian fellowship; and to look forward to further happy service in the future.

Mr. John Cory, J.P., who presided over the gathering, said it was refreshing and inspiring to read Miss Mason's report. They could not but praise God for having spared her so long to continue her Christ-like labours.

Miss Mason herself was the next speaker. There had been no diminution, she said, in the numbers received into the Homes (943 during the past year), and there was no complaint as to the falling off of the kind help she had always received from those interested in the work. Miss Mason mentioned that she would be glad, on receiving the needful funds, to start a Home for aged ministers.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said the whole church was under a debt of obligation to Miss Mason. Christians of every name, irrespective of denomination, share the benefit of the Homes of Rest. He hoped she would be spared to continue her labours of love for many years to come. Dr. Monro Gibson urged the importance of faith in our Christian work. He referred to the great faith which had marked the lives of two public men who had lately passed to their reward—George Müller and Mr. Gladstone.

Miss Weston, looking back over a quarter of a century of work, said she was sure Miss Mason would recognise how wonderfully God had led her. She was glad to find that Miss Mason had no intention of giving up. She had at any rate twenty years' service in her yet if God should spare her.

Pastor Fuller Gooch delivered the closing address. Miss Mason is anxious that the permanent annual income of the institution should reach £3000.

Bank Holiday at Kilburn Hall.

One of the largest Conferences of recent years in connection with the Evangelistic Mission was held at Kilburn Hall on Whit Monday, when helpful addresses were given by Pastors Fuller Gooch and G. Campbell Morgan.

In the afternoon Pastor Gooch spoke from Rev. xix. 6-8, "Clean and white; or grace triumphant in righteousness." Rev. G. Campbell Morgan called attention to Titus ii. 11-14. Note what this grace of God does for us now. It teaches us to live (1) soberly, as to the world within; (2) righteously, as to the world around; (3) godly, as to the world above. How many are living the new life, regarding God as an "absentee landlord," or as one who lives off the premises. We should be as truly God-possessed as the man of Gadara was devil-possessed.

The evening addresses were given with much power, the first speaker being Pastor Fuller Gooch, who referred briefly to 2 Cor. vi. 16. Mrs. Fenn, from Spain, graphically told the story of the network of hindrances by Jesuits to the work of the Gospel in Spain, but also observed the sad fact that though Spain as a nation was striving to throw off the Romish yoke, England by its present tendencies was courting it. Mr. Campbell Morgan dwelt in detail upon the passage referred to by Mr. Gooch, coupling therewith Amos iii. 3 and Gen. v. 21-24.

Earnest prayer by Mr. Leonard Weaver concluded the meeting.

Homes of Hope.

We have received the annual report of the Homes of Hope, containing a very interesting account of the work of the Homes during another year. It says much for the earnestness and enterprise of Christians of our own day that millions for the fallen, as well as efforts for the aid of young women and girls who have temporarily gone aside from the path of virtue, are so patiently and successfully conducted.

The Homes of Hope are divided into several distinct branches, though all regulated under one head; and consist of a Home for young women who have fallen for the first time under peculiarly painful and untoward circumstances, and who are also about to become mothers; a Preventive Home for young girls rescued from positions of moral peril; and a Reformatory Home for the more abandoned and penitent young women, who need much careful and prayerful training ere they are again sent out into the world to earn their own living.

Particularly sad and painful are some of the cases related. Take the following, which tells of a young woman, deaf and also half-witted. It appears she was living at her home, assisting her mother in domestic duties, and she relieved the monotony of her life by going out for a walk occasionally with a young man, the son of a neighbour. The young man very cruelly took advantage of her simple condition. Soon the mother discovered the real state of affairs, and very shortly after the disastrous effects of his conduct became apparent. The mother, full of grief for this shocking disgrace, applied at once to the Homes of Hope, where the unfortunate young girl was received and kept until she was brought to a right state of mind.

The report abounds in much sad but interesting particulars, and will well repay perusal, showing as it does the numerous and various ways in which young girls were rescued from lives of sin and crime, and kept under good religious influences until they are fitted once more to go out into the world to get their own living in a virtuous and industrious manner. The applications for admission are pressing, and the committee are urgently asking for more funds to enable them to continue their good work.

The Gospel in the Bath.

An enterprising Jewish Rabbi has opened for his people a Russo-Turkish Vapour Bath establishment. The baths are excellently arranged, and situated at Nos. 86 and 88, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, in the very heart of the densely populated Jewish quarter. This being the district allotted to me by the London City Mission, I am taking advantage of the institution by paying a weekly visit, not only for the benefit of my health, but also for the excellent opportunity thus afforded of meeting with Jews of the better class.

It is my privilege on these occasions to point out from Moses and the Prophets, which I quote in Hebrew and Yiddish, that the Messiah has already come in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. In the hot room I frequently, when speaking with one or two near me, get a little group around me, and soon we are engaged in warm discussion on Messianic prophecies. I am glad to say that I meet with the greatest kindness by all, including the proprietor, and I am permitted to circulate portions of Scripture of the Old Testament in Yiddish, also other publications that I have translated. These are invariably well received. I have made here already many friends, and my visits are looked forward to. Other Christian workers may wish to follow me in this endeavour. Wednesdays are set apart for ladies, and if any Christian lady would take advantage of such an excellent opportunity of meeting with a number of better-class Jewesses, she will be amply rewarded.

Marcus S. Bergmann.

Helping Village Chapels.—A party from Abbey-road Baptist Chapel, including Rev. H. E. Stone, some of his deacons, members, and friends, went down one day recently to Cheddington. At an afternoon service in Wingrave Chapel Rev. H. E. Stone preached from Luke xxii.; his words were most strengthening and encouraging. A tea-meeting, in which all the villagers joined, was followed by an evening meeting, at which a larger congregation assembled. Stirring and plain Gospel addresses were given by various friends.

Endeavourers in Glasgow.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

THE BRITISH C. E. CONVENTION.

THE open Parliament, with which I concluded my report last week, proved specially interesting, from the proof it afforded of the wide area represented—from sunny Devon to the Shetland Isles—the delegates from Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Ireland being specially numerous.

BRITISH COUNCIL ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the C. E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland was held on the afternoon of Monday, in St. Andrew's Hall, Rev. J. B. Morgan, of Chester, in the chair. Mr. Charles Waters was elected as president and duly installed. Rev. W. Knight Chaplin read a report of the British Council on the year's endeavour. This was, he said, the seventeenth anniversary of the birth of the world's Endeavour. These had been seventeen eventful years; they had been, indeed, epoch-making years. There were more than 53,000 societies of Christian Endeavour in churches, ships, prisons, workshops, post offices, hospitals, orphanages, almshouses, reformatory schools, barracks, forts, and, recently, in telephone offices. The British Endeavour was still advancing with most encouraging rapidity, and the Council had had another fruitful year. The World's Convention was to be held in London in 1900, in a large building, probably the Crystal Palace. The Council suggested that to defray the expenses there should be raised at least £2500, and hoped every member of the Union would respond to the appeal. There had been 927 new societies registered during the year. It was estimated that the membership was 215,000.

Rev. J. B. Morgan, the retiring president, delivered an address to his comrades on the relation of the C.E.S. to the Church. During the years that he had taken an interest in the movement he had seen the work of the C.E.S. in nearly all parts of the land, and he had found that where properly worked it was recognised as one of the most effective helpers of the churches. Doubtless, mistakes had been made, and misunderstandings had arisen, but no human institution could be perfect. The genius of the movement is close relation to the church, the pastor, the officers. We exist to strengthen the hands and aid the work of the churches.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL.

In the evening this great hall was again crowded. Alderman F. F. Belsey, who presided, began by referring to two great forces of nature—the centripetal and the centrifugal. So Endeavourers want to be the recipients of mighty power, and the channels through which that power may flow forth. From these two forces he drew important lessons for his eager young hearers as to the best directions in which to utilise their energies and zeal.

Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., spoke on holding that every Christian ought to be a good citizen; that every Christian Endeavourer ought to be the best of all citizens; and their citizenship should be applied Christianity. People say, We do not want politics in religion—true, but we do want religion in politics. We have to lift politics out of the arena of party strife. There will be no slums, no destitute and starving, no oppression, and no public-houses in heaven; and while these exist on earth those who serve Christ and love their country must use the power in their hand for righteousness and mercy. That, in its essence, is Christian citizenship. Public life needs the elevating force of the Christian Endeavourer.

"CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP,"

ENDEAVOUR AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Rev. John Smith, in an enthusiastic address, presented the claims of foreign missions on Endeavourers. I have come, he said, to this meeting with the prayer that "instead of the fathers" God would "take the children." I notice first that you raise this missionary question at a very auspicious time. You come into the heart of the great missionary problem in the great hour of crisis and opportunity. God has been breaking down the barriers and opening the whole world to his Gospel. Whatever missions have achieved, it cannot be denied that they have not risen to the height of their opportunities. What is the meaning of the wars and rumours of wars that have so suddenly emerged on the horizon of Europe? To the ear of faith they sound as a warning that opportunities will not last for ever.

If the Gospel has done so much for our own land, what about India and China and all the rest of them? Recently I have been visiting Bible lands. It has been a great privilege to walk with reverent feet where the grand old worthies lived and moved. Where old Abraham, millenniums ago, saw the Gospel day when "in his seed all families of the earth should be blessed." To tread the paths our Lord and Master trod, to gaze on the spot where He offered Himself a sacrifice for sin and established his kingdom. To stand on Mars' hill and see Paul carrying forward that kingdom. And amid these scenes I have asked afresh—what are we doing to carry forward the banner of the cross? Fellow Endeavourers, what are you going to do?

Some here may have the burden of missions on them, but they ask, What are we to do? I reply: first, study the question; second, work with existing agencies; third, bring a more decided note into your personal consecration.

Study—missionary literature? Yes, that in its turn; but first and foremost the Bible. Learn the principles of God's purposes for man. See his love for the world; his command to his servants to go into all lands; the provision He has made for all men. Learn that the evangelization of the world is God's work, not ours. His honour, faithfulness, and promises are pledged to that consummation. He Himself is the grand worker. See this world-wide crusade, and notice the proofs that Christianity is intended to be a universal faith—that it is adapted to all men. Notice the demonstration of the discovered needs of men; that brings the heart to see, as never before, the fact that Christ is the one light of the world.

Dr. John Smith, Edinburgh.

Then give yourself, your all. The strength of Christian Endeavour is the strength of its adherence to this Bible principle—if Christ deserves anything, He deserves all. If you are to be used, you must be at his disposal wholly, to do what He would have you do, to go where He would have you go. I have an idea that in the consecration meetings of Christian Endeavour we have the grand recruiting-ground for the twentieth century missions. In giving yourselves to the great missionary cause you will receive a fresh baptism on the whole movement.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin delivered an address on "Advance Endeavour," which was practically a verbal summary of the report read in the afternoon.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., had brought his sermon with him—an old cobbler's hammer (produced and displayed) which belonged to and was used by William Carey in his cobbler days. This hammer tells of many things, but first of consecration in little things, the consecration of everyday life to Christ. Carey's intense yearning over the heathen led him out to India, where he founded a great college at Serampore, translated the Bible into forty different languages and dialects of India, and became the greatest Sanscrit scholar of his day, the most eminent linguist of his time. Where did he get his inspiration? By stealing away to a ruined old pagoda on the banks of the Ganges, and pouring out his soul before God for India. There, once or twice, he had Judson, Marshman, Henry Martyn, and Ward, the pioneers and founders of foreign missions. What a prayer meeting that must have been! Surely this hammer teaches us consecration in little things, and personal acquaintance with Christ, if we are to achieve anything for Him?

OTHER MEETINGS.

Hengler's Circus was also crowded at the same hour. Rev. C. Stedeford, of Exeter, who presided, said that though they dealt with the evils of to-day by all the powers of eloquence, of learning, or of skill, but did not bring to these questions a pure heart and a clean reputation, an earnest and zealous spirit, all their powers would only fail. If they could bring to public efforts such a conscience as should be void of offence, approaching them with a pure mind and a sincere and holy purpose, then through strength and power their purity would make itself felt, and their darkness would have to give way to the light.

Rev. James Stalker, D.D., said: I suppose nearly all the churches of Great Britain are represented here, and I venture to say there is not one of them which has not memories that inspire to imitation; examples of self-sacrifice and Christian effort. The congregations in which we have been brought up have all had figures which we can not look upon without feeling constrained to live, not for ourselves but for Him who died for us. Now one of the principal services of Christian Endeavour Societies is going to be this, that it will take these feelings at the proper time and perpetuate them by directing them into practical channels. Now what can we do for the city, the country, or the church we belong to? I should think it is easiest to answer that in regard to the church. All the churches are engaged in Christ's work, and they have broken up the work into such small pieces that everyone can get a little, and no one needs to be standing all the day idle. It seems to me this is one of the very best features of the Church of Christ, that it provides spheres for all, whether they be great or small, and the work done for the church is truly patriotic service.

When you look away from the church it is perhaps not quite so easy to see what we can do for our country or for the place we live in directly. We may love our country and our town ardently, and yet feel that it is not possible to do anything in particular for them. Yet this possibility has in the present century been brought much nearer to everyone. By a series of changes, the election of Members of Parliament has been extended to wider and wider circles of the people until now everyone has a voice in the making of the laws. In the cities and villages this placing of power in the hands of the people has also been passing through a series of changes, and now we all have a voice in many elections, such as Town Councils, School Boards, and so on. Not only so, but seats in all these bodies are now open to be contested for by all the inhabitants.

Now this is a power which can be used for Christ. Some may look upon such things as too secular and as not spiritual enough. But I think the younger generation of Christians are all learning to know that these are instruments which may be used for good and Christian ends, and that they are not at liberty to neglect them. The power of Parliaments is an enormous power. They can decree changes and use the whole force of the country to carry them out. For instance, this very day, in Glasgow, there are thousands of children attending school who would be vagabonding in the streets if it were not for the powers of the School Board. Our Town Councils have the power of pulling down blocks that are the haunts of vice and crime, and there are built in their place buildings that will help to promote the character of the people. Now what we need to do is to send men into Parliament and into these local parliaments who will live and work for the public good

I believe that in the main it is not desirable that the Christian Endeavour should mix itself up with politics—either Imperial or local. Christian Endeavour in regard to these things is very much in the position of a minister. It has to nurture in the members patriotic sentiment, and then trust to themselves to act in the right way.

Miss E. S. WAKEFIELD, of Southport, spoke of the Christian Endeavour and the Foreign Mission problem. She regretted that with a drink bill of 140 millions we only presented one and a half millions as a thank-offering and a token of our desire to do our Lord's will by saving the people who sat in darkness.

Rev. Dr. F. E. CLARK said they were to make the year 1898 one of "the quiet hour." It was to be a year of personal consecration and devotion to their Master pre-eminently; it was to be a year in which they would stand as they had never stood before. They were to look to God, and remember that they were in his presence. They were to make it a year when they would be loyal to the Church to which they belonged. They should, too, attend in larger numbers the church weekly prayer meetings.

Mrs. CLARK said that it was very pleasant to come to that convention to hear these inspiring words.

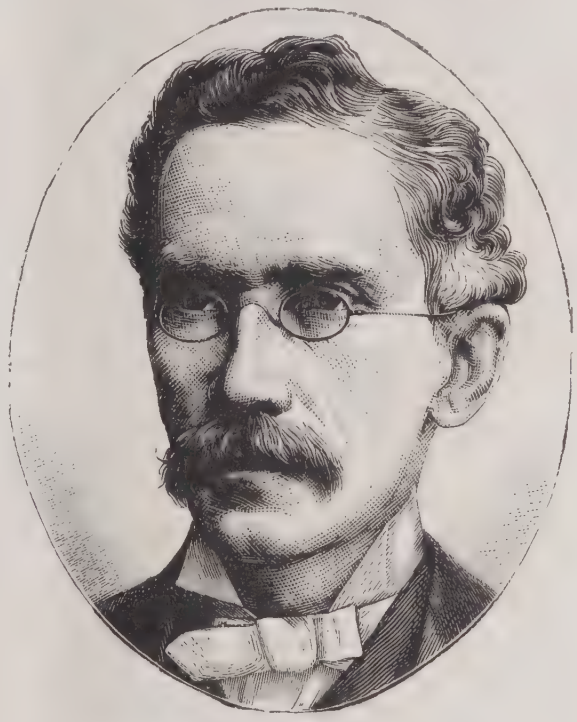
Rev. E. R. BARRETT, of Liverpool, gave an address on "Advance Endeavour." What were the Christian Endeavour members? The question was answered that day by a waiter in a Glasgow hotel in which 200 delegates of the Christian Endeavour were staying. The waiter said to the surprised servants, "Oh, these people are just converted Christians." Yes; they were fired by a passionate love for Christ and an ardent zeal to holiness.

A similar meeting was held in the City Hall, when Rev. E. Abbott presided, and addresses were given by Dr. Clark, Revs. G. S. Hornby, D. Davies, and J. R. Fleming, and Mrs. Clark.

TUESDAY'S MEETINGS.

ENDEAVOURERS AND HOME MISSIONS.

Hengler's Circus and St. Andrew's Hall were both crowded on Tuesday morning. At the Circus meeting Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, presided. The first speaker was



Rev. ROBERT HOWIE, who was thankful for these great gatherings, and for the fact that the home mission problem is being faced. As a minister of Christ, I am placed where the need is greatest. Is there need in Bible Scotland? Need! There are hosts of the churchless everywhere. After citing various censuses of church attendance, Mr. Howie maintained that there were evidently 415,000 people in Glasgow who have no church connection. Hence the need is great, terribly great. What is to be done? Remember, we need a living membership, to have a vital, aggressive Christianity. It is not merely attendance; the grand thing is to bring men and women to Christ.

Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY said that as a fully convinced Endeavourer he felt the home mission problem was one of the most serious of the time. Everywhere people are drifting—what are we doing to save them? Born in a revival, the Christian Endeavour movement is filled with the evangelistic revival spirit, and for his own part he had no better helpers in his mission work than the Endeavourers. He held that the Christian Endeavour Society is a soul-saving, church-building, God-glorifying organization, and he thanked God for it, with its red-hot Christianity. It may be a quiet work, but God can and will use the feeblest if only he be willing to be used—and who can tell the results to the glory of God to the ends of the earth?

An open parliament followed on this home mission problem, led by Mr. R. W. Davies, president of the Cleveland and South Durham Union, who maintained that C.E. stood for the practical and real. The churches are said to be half empty; how shall we fill them? The people are becoming indifferent; how shall they be saved? Well, it comes to this, that those who know Christ must witness to Him; and that Endeavourers must be workers. A whole series of one minute addresses followed on particular efforts made by the local C.E.S. in this mission direction, and certainly a pleasing variety of plans were mentioned, some very suggestive, though detailed too briefly and generally to be easily given in type. For example, one had a large public-house opposite its church; crowds of loungers gathering on Sundays waiting for the doors to open. The Endeavourers have started work among these loungers, and several have been brought in. So many special plans and ingenious contrivances for reaching the heedless and careless were mentioned.

Four ten-minute addresses followed; the first by Mr. G. K. HIBBERT, on "Systematic Giving," emphasised the scripturalness, profitableness, and beneficial effects of giving on a regular system. There is, of course, the danger that the scaffolding may take the place of the building; that the plan may become more important than the gift. If the spirit of glad giving be not there, the system will avail nothing. All we have is God's; we have nothing not received from Him; then we have no right to what we "fondly call our own." It is his—let it be gladly, regularly, exactly rendered to Him.

Rev. HENRY SMITH (M.N.C., Hanley) spoke next of the quiet hour, or the importance of setting apart some regular time for quietly waiting upon God. There can be little true consecration without real communion with God. The danger of to-day is lest we hear the word "Go" and miss the word "tarry"—that way lies impotency, disaster, defeat. The great rivers of the world rise in the seclusion of the moss and moor and mountain: it is a parable of the Christian life. Spiritual fulness comes from the silent moments of communion.

DR. JAMES STALKER, GLASGOW.
From Photograph by Mr. R. G. Rettie, Kirkcaldy.

Mrs. F. CLEMENTS, of Louth, held that the family was an ordinance of God as well as the Church. Hence, Christian Endeavour having as its motto "For Christ and his Church," must also be "For Christ and the Family." The work and blessing of nations depend on family life. Good laws will not reform us if they begin not at home. The land of family religion is the land that has done most to send forth the Gospel to all lands. True Christianity begins at the centre; the home is the true centre, and Endeavourers begin there. It may be harder to speak at home than to teach in a ragged school. Why is this? Probably because our home conduct will sometimes nullify our Christian teaching. If so, it is time our home religion were revised. With all our activities in these days we are in danger of forgetting home effort. Home is the head of the river; let us see that the stream is turned in the right direction.

Rev. JOHN POLLOCK spoke of Intermediate and other societies, referring to the Floating Societies for sailors, the Institutional Societies (as in asylums, orphanages). The Intermediate society is for those who feel themselves too old to be called juniors, though scarcely old enough for the ordinary C.E.S. He believed that a very important field lies before such societies among growing up boys and girls.

Mrs. CLARK spoke next on "Mothers' Endeavour Societies," a later development which has proved very useful in the States; giving the mothers an opportunity of getting into contact with Endeavourers and teachers who are trying to help their children.

THE AFTERNOON MEETINGS.

The afternoon was devoted to the annual meeting of the Scottish National C.E. Union, held in St. Andrew's Hall. Thereafter a whole series of "Denominational Rallies" were held in various churches, the delegates being expected to attend their own denominational gathering and being addressed by their own minister. Thus in St. Matthew's Church, Rev. James E. Houston presided over the Church of Scotland rally; while in Free St. Matthew's, Lord Overtoun presided over the young Free Kirkers. The United Presbyterians met in Berkeley-street U.P. Church, Rev. C. Robson presiding; the English Presbyterians in Free St. Peter's, Rev. Dr. Carter in the chair. The Baptists foregathered in Adelaide-place Church, Rev. J. B. Morgan presiding, and the Congregationalists in Trinity Church. The various Methodists went to St. John's, Rev. E. Abbott in the chair; while the Primitive Methodists had a gathering of their own in Waterloo-street Church, led by Rev. J. Tolfree Parr.

EVENING MEETINGS.

No fewer than six meetings were arranged for the closing evening—in St. Andrew's Hall, Queen's Rooms, Waterloo Rooms, Hengler's Circus, the City Hall, and the Tent Hall. This multiplicity notwithstanding, the principal meeting in the St. Andrew's Hall was crowded to the door. This means 4500 people; and it was supposed that not one half of the people who came furnished with tickets gained admission—a fact which shows the intense and widespread interest awakened in the Conference. Well might the chairman, Rev. J. B. MORGAN, declare that the Convention had touched high water mark in regard to enthusiasm, attendance, and intensity of spirit. The outcome, he believed, would be a deeper sense of the great calling resting upon the believer to be a witness for Christ. A witness must know what he affirms. We must know not from books, but from personal acquaintance. We must look into the face of Jesus, feel the touch of Jesus, hear the voice of Jesus—thus we know, and when we know we must tell. We cannot help it. Men see we have something they have not, and they ask, "Who is this? Can He help me?" "Yes," we say, "He can, He will, He is waiting for you." This personal knowledge gives force and strength to the testimony.

Rev. J. H. ATKINSON, of Liverpool, followed with an address on "The Holy Spirit and Christian Service," beginning by recalling the convention of the tribes of Israel convoked by Joshua at Shechem. The aged leader set before them the great choice, "Whom ye will serve," and the response was, "The Lord our God we will serve." The convention closed, the people separated, but they went from services to service. Many make a mistake here—thinking that if they go to conventions and sing hymns they are rendering service. They may be, but they may be only pleasing themselves. So these great and solemn meetings must be merely preparatory for the real personal service at home.

The Convention closed with a consecration service, conducted by Dr. Clark, who forbade all cheering, and called his hearers to self-surrender, personal devotion, consecration to Christ; all these had been urged at the Convention already—now it remained to carry them out. And all the more that the vast audience had come, not for themselves simply, but as representatives of others, to receive and carry it home with them to their fellow members. Moreover, in these days of superficiality, let them be very sincere—alone with God. Let it be God and themselves. Let no one be lost in the great throng, let them each seek to receive for themselves, direct from God Himself. Nor would he have a consecration meeting regarded as the apex of a mountain; rather it is a tableland on which we may dwell all the time. The consecration service is characteristic of Christian Endeavour—it is the secret of power and might. The leader asked all to unite in the Bible prayer, "Open Thou my lips and my mouth, and I shall show forth thy praise."

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Movement in China.

GOD'S work in this land seems to have taken a long step forward, perhaps in answer to the many prayers called forth by the political unrest in the Far East lately. From many districts we hear of large audiences and many inquirers, and on all hands there seems to be a better attitude on the part of officials and people, a greater readiness to listen and learn. At our own station of Sin-ch'ang we have much to be thankful for. Never before have we had such large audiences, Sunday after Sunday; never before have we had so many hopeful inquirers; and the week-night prayer-meetings are now always attended by forty or fifty, whereas a year or two ago ten or fifteen were reckoned a good number.

One unique feature here is that so many men connected with the Yamen (the mandarin's official residence) have become inquirers, not those who come with the mandarin, and retire with him when his term of office expires, but natives of the city, the permanent heads of different departments. We cannot find any ulterior motive for their coming, and believe that the Spirit of God has touched them. They are all neighbours, and have heard the Gospel many times. How long they will be able to retain their offices and live Christian lives remains to be seen. It is well known in the city that they come, and known to the mandarin, too, and already some of them have refused to take part in idolatrous worship connected with the Yamen.

We recently baptized five persons. Three were father, mother, and son. It is another encouraging feature of the work here that several families are coming. A few weeks ago we examined several candidates for baptism, and there are ten accepted, who, if they make a good profession until the autumn, will then be baptized. One of these is a B.A., the first Sin-ch'ang literary man to confess Christ. Besides these there are about a dozen other hopeful inquirers.

The school work under the care of our fellow-worker, Miss S. E. Jones, also gives great encouragement. The schools have only been opened about a year, but the children have made great progress both in Bible and general knowledge, and day by day they are learning that the "fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Two months ago some Buddhist priests offered to sell their idol temple to us for a chapel, as well as some land that still remained attached to it; by far the greatest part of the land has already been sold. The offer was brought to me with the information that if we did not purchase it the Roman Catholics would, and after we had written out the papers two perverts of last year said that if we had given 1000 dollars they would give 1500. I consulted with the church members, and told them that I had no money to use, and they undertook the financial responsibility on condition that I would undertake the purchase. The papers were written out and signed. I carefully inquired and found out that it was the property of the priests, and not public property, and I also appealed to the mandarin, and though he endeavoured to prevent our getting it, even to putting a priest in prison, yet he could not say the priests had no right to sell. The gentry were also vexed that it should come to the despised "Jesus religion."

God has prospered us so far, and though not yet quite settled it seems in a fair way to be so. I visited the temple, and as I gazed upon the idols longed and prayed earnestly that that place, which had hitherto been used for the worship of idols and for other vile deeds, might soon be consecrated to the worship of the true God. The price is 1000 dols., or just £100. One Christian has already advanced 400 dols., obtained on the security of his own fields, and others have promised other sums. They cannot give this money, for none of them are rich enough, but have advanced it, expecting to be able to repay themselves by realising the property that is attached to the temple, bearing any loss themselves. Should there be any gain, it is to be given for God's work, and the temple is to become a chapel. We have an increasing body of Christians and inquirers in that district, and for a year or two have been praying that God would give us a place for them to worship in. It seems to us now that God has heard and answered. But what has been strongly laid upon my heart is a longing desire that God would move some friend or friends to send us the £100 necessary for the purchase of the whole, thus giving us for a chapel one of the devil's strongholds. The proceeds from the land would support a native pastor or evangelist in perpetuity, as well as helping on the work in other ways. If it should be laid upon anyone's heart to help, they can either communicate with me directly or send it for transmission to me through the mission.

JAMES A. HEAL.

Postal address: China Inland Mission, Ningpo, China.

Work in Central America.

THE work of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society was commenced exactly ten years ago. Baptist Christians in Jamaica, only sixty years from slavery, support not only their own ministers but have their Missionary Society. In 1887 they sent two of their devoted ministers to search out a mission field, and after drifting about for some time in a small schooner they put into the port on the Atlantic coast of Costa Rica, Central America. There, under a bread-fruit tree, they told out the story of God's love to that people for the first time. There was at that time no church, no Sabbath, recognised, and no religious work of any kind. A poor black Jamaican, on seeing these preachers, exclaimed, "Minister, do you come here? There is no God here!" And so it really seemed, for licentiousness, drunkenness, Sabbath-breaking, murder, were sins of broad daylight.

One of these devoted men, Rev. J. H. Sobey, for a year pleaded, without success, for a missionary; and, after prayer to God, and consultation with his wife, gave up friends, and a church of 500 members, to fulfil his pledge to these people to send a preacher. At first there were many discouragements, and fever soon laid Mr. Sobey low, so that for nine long weeks his wife stood by the work alone, and preached to the crowds who came to listen. The first place of worship was opened in Puerto Limon, seating nearly 500 people, in 1890. The place has now grown far too small, and we have either to build again, or enlarge the old structure.

My own call to this field was in the year 1893, after three years of training in the East London Institute. Our sphere extends over a hundred miles along the Atlantic coast of Costa Rica, and another hundred in the interior, travelling in canoe, on muck-train, pump-car, or mule-back, and often on foot. Other mission stations had to be formed, for Limon could only be the basis of our work. The first was our East Indian station. This was to a people who were heathen, worshipping snakes, etc. To-day, they have services in their own language, conducted by one of their own number. Along the Costa Rica Railway we have, during the last five years, formed six other stations, besides building a dwelling-house for the missionaries.

The spiritual side of the work is full of interest. In four years our membership has more than doubled, and we have now over 200 members. Leaders carry on the work at these places when the missionaries cannot be there. We have a systematic plan with twenty men on it, who go out from time to time unpaid, and preach the Gospel. Last year our members raised, outside of the general expenses, £157 towards the support of their own missionaries. The Bible (ten years ago an unknown book) has now been scattered all over Central America, and although often collected by the Romish priests and burned, it is slowly but surely doing its work. We have seen the drunkard reformed, fallen women restored, gamblers saved, society raised to a higher level, with better homes and clothing, whilst marriage has become sacred, and family life purified. There is abundant evidence that God is with us and blessing us.

Central America's great need is the Gospel. It has five Republics, with a population of about three and a half millions. These are all open to the Gospel, and the success already seen among these people shows that when the Gospel is put before them they receive it. The J.B.M.S. is anxious to commence work in a new sphere; the man is waiting to go; £20 per year have been promised towards his support; but on account of the low state of the funds, it is unable to go forward. For commencing this work £500 are needed at once. I shall be glad to address missionary meetings, or receive help towards the work. Communications may be addressed to me at Harley College, Bow, E.

JAMES HAYTER.

Itinerating in Spain.

IN the June issue of Gleanings from Spain Mr. George Holmes describes itinerating work in the district of Calatayud, where he and his wife are at present stationed. He writes:—

"The country at this time of the year looks in many parts very beautiful; corn, cotton, vegetables, the olive, and especially the vine, being extensively cultivated by the villagers, who seem an industrious, steady, and contented people. Paracuellos, like most of the villages in this part of Spain, consists of irregular blocks of houses built of mud and stones, very few having windows, and many in a state of ruin.

"Groups of women were taking the sun, i.e., sitting in the sun enjoying its warm rays; and making our way to one of these groups, we exchanged the usual salutations. One of our party, who has the language, was soon telling the story of redeeming love; others gathered round, and listened attentively the while. A Testament was then passed to one who could read, and she also read aloud to the others the wonderful words of life, afterwards gladly accepting the proffered Book. We were unaware until taking leave of this little party that another had been listening unobserved to our conversation from a window over our heads, viz., the parish priest; however, with a silent prayer for blessing on the Word, we passed our way.

"We had other opportunities of scattering the good seed, and then turned our steps homeward. We long for the time to come when no ban shall be placed upon the free distribution of God's Holy Word in this needy land. No one can foresee what will be the outcome of the present sad strife, but all who love Spain will surely pray that whatever else may happen, one result may be the opening of the country from end to end to the full and free proclamation of the Gospel of Christ, and then will the land have rest."

Ikwezi Lamaci Mission.

THE work in and around this part of Natal has been growing in extent and variety during the past year. Development and consolidation have been very marked. The visits of Mr. Gilkes, and, later on, of Miss Bilborough, have brought important results in view of future operations, the former in procuring land for centralising the work, and the latter in providing "means" for erecting the long-desired girls' boarding school. The properties are being put in trust, to be held for mission purposes by a board of trustees in the colony. A wave of spiritual blessing has passed over the work, and a larger number than ever before have decided for Christ. Work among women and girls shows increased numbers and deepening interest. The treasurer is Mr. E. A. Page, Y.M.C.A., Needless-alley, Birmingham.

The Lovedale Heathen.

LOVEDALE, that noble monument of missionary enterprise and loyalty to Christ's last and great command, affords a fine opportunity for humble yet real service in the great field of heathenism. Notwithstanding the long and faithful labours of esteemed servants of God in Kaffraria, heathen are still to be found everywhere, many of whom are in close proximity to the various missions planted here and there over the land. Darkened and hardened as they are in their own debased and sad condition, they are none the better disposed to receive the Gospel because of their contact with the vices and degrading examples of many whites.

At Lovedale, every Sabbath morning groups of Christian lads and lasses go out to preach the Gospel to the heathen at their own homes, for, like the disciples of our great Master and exemplar, we believe in going to those who need the Gospel, not in waiting till they come to us. Accordingly, on a recent Sabbath, we set out at 7.30 a.m. for Ezinqayi, a stronghold of heathenism, some six miles from Lovedale. Our destination included two villages, and as this is work that is carried on Sabbath after Sabbath, we would ask your readers to give it a place in their hearts and prayers, and to remember us in this district of dark Africa. Eight companies are engaged in this itinerary work of the Lovedale Missionary Institution.

Our first halting place was a small group of six huts, and we found one of the huts swept and ready for our meeting. Short addresses, with hymns and prayers, brought the service to a close. The people seemed pleased and grateful when we took our leave, and promised them another service soon.

About a mile away, on the brow of a small hill, stands another heathen village, where a solitary witness bears testimony to the power of Divine love in the midst of heavy odds. This is a very much larger village than the other, and we have seen the hut we meet in crammed with its dusky inhabitants. But on this occasion there was a beer-drink (dire curse of the land) somewhere near, and many were away at it. Three Sabbaths ago a woman of another village accepted the Word preached here at a small gathering. After a Bible lesson with the children present, we held a second service at this village, and several of us pressed home the acceptance of God's salvation. Hymns and prayers were numerous, all in the way of tender pleading with the unsaved and the lost.

D. A. Macdonald.

Notes from Tasmania.

AFTER an unusually hot and dry summer, autumn gave us about six weeks of lovely "ideal" Tasmanian weather; and now the fresh green appears under the delightful alternation of rain and sunshine.

The subject about which men are seeking to arouse the interest of the people is that of federation. To a "new chum" who has not made himself acquainted with Australasian affairs the separation of one colony from the others is a source of perplexity and surprise. This little colony's isolation from the mainland has doubtless hindered its true development. But a change is at hand. Notwithstanding the active opposition of a few, and the inertness and apathy of many, it is anticipated that each colony will be able to poll its requisite number of votes.

But we have worse evils than isolation against which to contend. The gambling spirit is rife, and unfortunately the Government, instead of seeking to suppress it, provides facilities for it. Tattersall's gambling agency, rejected from every other colony, has found a home here. Occasionally, our daily papers publish the name of a "fortunate" winner of a goodly sum of money. The spirit of gambling affects all classes of society. "Sweeps" are not unknown even among boys and girls. This is the evil by which the honest industry of the country is likely to be strangled. The churches have sounded their warning and made their protest; but it will need to be repeated in louder tones and with more unanimous voice before the colony gets clear of this disgrace.

Of the work of the churches in this city it is too early for me yet to speak. My acquaintance extends only to the Baptist Churches of the colony which were represented in the recent Baptist Union meetings. Only five churches have pastors of their own—the rest are worked by home missionaries.

New centres of population are springing up in mining districts, where it is hoped the Baptists will enter before long.

The missionary work of the Baptist Churches is represented by three missionaries in Serajgunje, a district in Eastern Bengal. The sum required for maintaining our present work is about £250 per year, and the largest annual income hitherto has been about £180. As a member of the Missionary Committee, I am endeavouring to introduce a Prayer Union, to be adopted by all the churches, by means of which we may "gather" what God has already given to his people for this work. The practice of daily praying and daily paying will secure all we need for sustaining and extending our work.

Geo. Wainwright.

Launceston, Tasmania.

Geneva Evangelical Society.

GENEVA is the door of access to the wondrous and sublime scenes of nature beyond it; it is also the portal from which issues forth, as in Calvin's time, its witnesses for Christ—those of the "Société Evangélique de Genève"—into the neighbouring country of Roman Catholic France. To the young men studying in the school which he founded in 1536 Calvin earnestly appealed: "Are there none here who will go and enlighten those whom the Pope has blinded?" Not a few responded to the call, and they went forth to almost certain martyrdom. Unhappily the established faculty deteriorated, and in 1831 such men as Gaussen, Vaucher, Merle d'Aubigne, Tronchin, Galland, and others, felt the need that the town (as Professor Barde has said) from which Calvin sent out martyrs to almost all the Reformed Churches of Europe "must be a centre for other teaching," and the brethren named were led to propose in the establishment of their school of theology "the glory of Jesus Christ, and of His word, rejecting all human doctrines."

Since that day what numbers of pastors and evangelists have issued from this school of theology of the "Société Evangélique de Genève"; and many are preparing to follow. A no less important work is that of sustaining a considerable number of Christian men as colporteurs, who not only sell their Bibles, Testaments, and Christian brochures, but frequently explain the Scriptures to inquiring souls. There are about seventy-two of these colporteurs, constantly visited by Mr. Dardier; a considerable amount of their support is derived from the National Bible Society of Scotland. It is interesting to know that Knox studied in Geneva under Theodore de Beza, and not a few of the leaders and early founders of the work were converted or revived by the Bible teaching of Robert Haldane. Hence the place in their hearts and the great interest taken by Scottish Christians in the society and its work, and the mutual intercourse so long maintained.

The opening of a school of theology in Geneva was hailed by Drs. Tholuck and Hengstenberg, who showed much sympathy and gave the founders valuable advice and help with regard to professors in aid. The meetings of the Society were first held in the then Rue des Chanoines; but in 1834 in the spacious building, the Oratoire, providentially put at their disposal, where they have since been held. The name of Rev. R. Burgess appears on the list of hon. members of the committee in the first report, and Miss Burgess represents his interest in the present day in evangelisation in France.

What was very encouraging to the friends of the Society in their earliest labours was the strong expression of interest from pastors and Christians of all denominations in their operations, especially a most loving address and the warmest expressions of sympathy in 1834 from 453 clergymen of the Church of England. In this day of declension from sound doctrine, are not we called upon likewise to express our cordial sympathy with those who are lifting up the banner of doctrinal truth, and have done so for so long? The annual meeting is to be held Thursday, June 23, a good opportunity for those travelling in Switzerland. Communications to be addressed to M. C. Rimond, L'Oratoire, Genève, Suisse.

George Pearse.

Poste Restante, Geneva.

Lebanon Medical Mission.

AT the Y.M.C.A., Kennington Park, Miss Baroody, of El Bourg, in the Lebanon, recently gave an address to a crowded audience illustrative of Bible customs in the East, relating in a bright and happy manner many of her own experiences in connection with the Medical Mission at El Bourg. Miss Baroody herself is a remarkable person. Connected with one of the best families in the Lebanon, she has yet consecrated her life to teaching the faith of Christ among her people.

In the course of her address she stated that some Mohammedan women at Hamath first urged her to acquire a knowledge of medicine, and thus to be able to attend them in their illnesses, as her brother, Dr. Baroody, was able to attend the men. After a while she determined to make the effort, and she came to London about six or seven years ago, looking to God to open up a way by which she could maintain herself, obtain the necessary medical qualification, and then return to her own land in the hope of devoting her life to work for Christ. After overcoming almost insuperable obstacles, she was able to pass through her medical studies, and in due time she returned to the Lebanon.

In conjunction with Mr. Lloyd, whom she had met at the School of Medicine, she began work at El Bourg. Great difficulties and severe persecution were soon experienced. But God stood by the workers, and the mission has now become thoroughly established. Not only do the poor women flock to the mission-house, on "medical days," from the country for miles round, but Miss Baroody has started a school, and employs a Christian teacher throughout the year, also visiting the villages round on stated days, carrying her medicines with her. The Bedawin are visited regularly, being called together by signal to a large inn or caravansari on the way to Sidon; where, too, the lady meets traders from all parts of the country, to whom she speaks of Christ, and gives them copies of the Word of God.

Miss Baroody stated that she had returned to England to obtain means to carry on her work. She takes no salary from the mission funds; if, however, the work fails for lack of means, the opportunity will inevitably be embraced by the Roman Catholics. Miss Baroody will gladly address meetings on the manners and customs of the East in churches or drawing-rooms, and will be pleased to answer any inquiries that may be addressed to her at Kent House, 91, Great Titchfield-street, W.

Blankenburg Conference.

THIS conference is arranged to take place again at the end of August in Thüringia, Germany. It is somewhat unique in character as an Evangelical Alliance Conference, drawing together members of the Church of God of various nationalities as well as of different denominations. The meetings of Evangelical Christians of several countries and their intercourse has hitherto proved most helpful and blessed.

At last year's Conference more than 300 persons assembled, and there was scarcely room to hold them in a hired hall, which now is no longer available. It is proposed, therefore, to erect a larger hall. Miss von Weling, the convener of the Conference, has already purchased the ground and laid the foundation for a hall which is to seat about 600 persons, the cost of which will be about 10,000 marks, equal to £500. Some generous givers have kindly contributed about 6700 marks, and Miss von Weling hopes that the remaining 3300 marks may also speedily be given, as she is anxious to have full payment made by the time the hall is finished and the Conference at the end of August be held.

This Conference has proved a centre of rich and deep blessing to very many. The intercommunion of German, Swedes, Swiss, and Russians with English Christians has proved most helpful and should be more encouraged. The various branches of Christian work carried on under Miss von Weling's superintendence are extending in all directions. Free-will offerings for completing the hall may be forwarded to Miss von Weling, Blankenburg in Thüringia, Germany.

Weston-super-Mare. (Dr.) F. W. Baedeker.

Hebron Medical Mission.

THE fifth year of work in this Mission has been a most hopeful and encouraging one. The people have never been so ready to flock to the dispensary, nor so urgent for attention in their own homes.

Formerly, the plan was to go the round of the villages, taking one a week, talking and reading as opportunity offered, visiting the sick and inviting them to come to the doctor. During the past year so many urgent appeals came to the doctor for special cases in different villages that workers went time after time to the same place, not as usual on free days, but riding off as soon as they could get through the clinique, and often returning after dark.

Children throng round the workers day after day, hearing and treasuring Gospel stories without a shade of the doubt which warps the understanding of their elders. Prayer should be made by all who love Christ's appearing, that the awful power of Satan in this our Lord's own land may be broken, so that when the Son of man cometh He may find faith among the people of the city still called by the name of faithful Abraham.

God's goodness and mercy have been abundantly experienced in the work of the dispensary. The needful money has been sent in, so that even with the extra expense of getting all supplies from Jerusalem there has been no lack. Jews to the number of 359 were treated up to June last; but intimidation by the Rabbis at Jerusalem had a bad effect in the latter part of the year. This good work is connected with the Mildmay Institutions, and communications about it should be addressed to Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

English in Odessa.

THERE is at Odessa a colony of over 300 British and American residents; at Hughesofka another of similar size; and from Kief to Tiflis, and from the Crimea to the Caucasus, smaller colonies are to be found of our fellow-countrymen scattered through twenty or more different towns, of which the extremes are about seven days' journey apart. The spiritual charge of the Protestants amongst these (of all denominations) is committed solely to a chaplain resident at Odessa, and he visits throughout this large area as much as attention to the work at Odessa permits. There is great need for the appointment of an assistant chaplain, and I earnestly desire that this need may ere long be met.

At present, however, there is a second pressing need—that is, of accommodation for the public services which have been sustained at Odessa for more than thirty years. The sad death of the late chaplain in June last, and a break in the chaplaincy, caused us to lose the church-room which throughout that period was the spiritual home of the community. Two attempts were made to raise funds for building a church, but the community were unable to subscribe sufficient, so that, even though a site was generously granted by the town authorities in 1894, it had to be relinquished. An apartment has been taken for a few months to serve until some more conveniently situated and central place might be found.

A most advantageous offer has now been made to us, by which, if we can raise £4000 at once, we may purchase a very admirably situated building with the freehold of the land, and with a very little alteration convert a Jewish friendly society's house into a church, with apartments for the chaplain, club rooms for clerks, etc. Besides English residents our work here cares for the great numbers of British seamen visiting the Port of Odessa, to the number of 13,000 or 14,000 annually. Communications may be addressed to the Chaplain and Churchwardens of the English Church, care of the British Consulate General, Odessa, or to H.B.M.'s Consul General, Colonel C. E. Stewart (who is at present in England), 51, Redcliffe-square, Kensington, S.W.

ARTHUR J. STEVENS,
Odessa. British Chaplain.

Missionary Breakfast. — On Whit-Monday morning, the 21st annual missionary breakfast was held in Powis Hall; many honoured missionaries and other servants of God were included in the one hundred and sixty persons who sat down. At the meeting Rev. David Baron told of his recent tour in Egypt and Palestine; Miss Ruth Rouse spoke of her visit to the American colleges in connection with the S.V.M.U.; Dr. Baedeker reported on his work in the prisons of Russia, Mr. T. W. Pigott of progress in North China, and Madame Lecoat of the needs of Brittany. The net proceeds for missions amounted to nearly £40.

S.A. Work in Belgium.

IN the midst of the spiritual darkness, dead Catholicism, infidelity and scepticism of this land, Mrs. Catherine Booth-Clibborn declares that she has found a unique opportunity for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. A pamphlet issued from 134, Warmoesstraat, Amsterdam, by "La Maréchale," contains a vivid word picture of the condition of things in "the black country."

A six weeks' Gospel campaign in Brussels was followed by meetings at Liège (the University city), and at Marchiennes, the centre of a great mining district; and in all these places lasting and blessed results have been seen, while public opinion has been converted from ridicule to respect.

Immorality and drink have made frightful strides in the country, one plague always bringing the other with it; and the drink traffic is declared to the only industry really flourishing in Belgium. It is, however, a hopeful sign for the sadly abused poor that "Army" work is deeply appreciated in those parts of the country where hard workers are housed; and it is touching to hear the testimonies of the miners to this effect. The social work, too, has helped and transformed many poor outcasts from society for whom none seemed to care. The appalling need for rescue work is very evident; and the Commissioner of Police in Brussels states that there are children of ten, eleven, and twelve years of age who are "in the life." Mrs. Booth-Clibborn earnestly appeals for means to open a Rescue Home near Brussels; and states that the work in Belgium is in such extreme poverty that, from the very first, it has been supported principally from outside funds.

Venice Boys' Industrial Home.

THE Boys' Industrial Home at Venice has for its object the care and training of orphan and destitute boys. It is more than eighteen years since Mrs. Hammond began her work by starting a small ragged school for about twelve boys. She soon felt that, in order to exert any lasting influence over the lads, it was needful to provide a home for them as a school. This was done first on a very small scale, but the work has gradually grown, and now the home has thirty inmates. In the morning they go to school, and in the afternoon they are taught trades, such as wood-carving, carpentering, blacksmithing, printing, etc., while those who have a head for studying are sent to the gymnasia and technical schools to get further instruction. Six of the old boys are now pastors, two of them in Italy, four in America. The chief aim of the work is to lead the lads to Christ, and so by these means to evangelise Italy. Two of the boys now in the home are preparing for the ministry.

For more than a year the work has been connected with the A. E. Church, which paid off the debt which was incurred, but which only pledged to give £200 a year for the expenses of the home. Of course this goes but a very little way; for the remainder the work has to depend on the help of Christian friends. Orders for the beautiful carved wood and Venetian beaten ironwork are thankfully received. Although Mrs. Hammond has, through failing health, been obliged to return to England, she still takes a hearty interest in the work. Donations may be sent to her at 14, Compton-road, Winchester; or direct to Miss Kool, The Boys' Industrial Home, 923, Cannaregio, Venice.

Our Sailors.—On Whit-Monday, at the headquarters of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, Ratcliff Highway, a meeting for sailors was held, at which various friends spoke. Many seemed impressed, and thirteen signed the temperance pledge.

Medical Missionary Association.—At the annual meeting at Exeter Hall on Friday, June 3, the chairman, Dr. George Saunders, emphasised the objects of the Association, the promotion of a higher spiritual and missionary tone amongst medical students and the helping forward of capable men to the foreign field being in the forefront. "None can understand as those who have seen it the awful amount of unrelieved suffering abroad," said Rev. Arnold Foster, and he added a plea for men of the highest type, professionally specialists all round. Surely some of the parents present would lay to heart the closing words of a young medical missionary designate, Mr. Preston Maxwell, "Put this work before your children, not as an alternative career, but as the highest; and that from early days, before the claims and temptations of college and hospital have thickened upon them."

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

June 19.

"THE RISEN LORD."—Matt. xxviii. 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore."—Rev. i. 18.

IN THE TOMB.

THE body of Jesus was in the tomb parts of Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, which, according to the Jewish reckoning, would be three days. By our method of counting about two days. No doubt about Christ's death. Soldiers pierced his side.

No doubt about his identity. It was a new grave, wherein no other body had been laid. Important, because it proves the actual death, without which could be no resurrection.

DIFFERING ACCOUNTS.

In the various accounts of the Resurrection the teacher should compare and point out that each writer gave the account as it appeared to him. They do not affect the trustworthiness of the record.

Illustration (a).—Four men describing each a side of Westminster Abbey. All different accounts, yet of the same building, because seen from a different point of view.

(b) Accounts of Battle of Waterloo, Duke of Wellington says it began at 10; General Alva at 11.30; Napoleon 12; Marshal Ney 1. Battle began at different times in different parts of field.

VISITORS AT THE SEPULCHRE.

The first to come was Mary Magdalene, out of whom Christ had cast seven demons (Luke viii. 2), and who therefore "loved much." Now the other women came with their spices to anoint the body. Startled to see the angels there. Returning with joyful fear they are met by Jesus.

Lesson.—All graves—of hopes, ambitions, dear ones, etc., if we approach them with godly fear, will contain some angel messenger, who will give us glad tidings; some blinded by sorrow or hardened by rebellion that they never see the angels.

CHRIST'S SECOND APPEARANCE (9, 10).

First to Mary Magdalene, as she stood weeping in the garden. She took Him to be the gardener (John xx. 11-18).

Second, here, to the other women.

"All hail."—All health; an Eastern form of salutation.

"Go tell," etc.—This was the fulfilment of his promise (Matt. xxvi. 32).

THE PRIESTS' CRAFT (11-15).

The priests did not wish the truth to be known—hence this lying subterfuge—"His disciples came by night and stole Him away while we slept." The folly of this statement in the light of the following:—

1. If they were asleep how did they know that the disciples stole Him?

2. The rolling away of the stone would have waked them.

3. The disciples had buried Jesus in Joseph's grave. Why then should they take his body away again? They expected no resurrection.

"We will secure you." Nobody can bear the responsibility of a lie but the one who tells it.

THE EIGHT APPEARANCES.

Third: To Peter (Luke xxiv. 34).

Fourth: Disciples on way to Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 13—32).

Fifth: Ten disciples (Thomas absent) (John xx. 19—25).

Sixth: Upper room at Jerusalen, Thomas present (John xx. 26—29).

Seventh: Shore of Sea of Galilee (John xxi. 1—22).

Our text gives the eighth appearance in fulfilment of his promise. About 500 present. So it would be strange if no doubter among them. These doubters, including Thomas, useful as witnesses to-day. They were not credulous people; they only believed after full investigation.

THE LAST MESSAGE.

"All power in heaven," i.e., authority over all spiritual forces.—Christ leads in the van of the army of his people to-day.

"Go ye, therefore," etc.—Because He had all authority. Because the earth belonged to Him. "Go and win it for its rightful owner."

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Christ and Childhood.

CHRIST'S MINISTRY TO THE CHILDREN.—HEALING THE YOUNG.

OUR Lord's miracle of restoring life and health to children is a beautiful proof of his divine and thoughtful love and care for the little ones. Two boys and two girls are among the happy number that are specially recorded in the Gospel.

The first is the cure of the nobleman's son who lived at Capernaum, and the account is given only by John iv. 46-54. When Jesus was come again to Cana, where He had wrought his first miracle, a certain nobleman or officer in the service of Herod Antipas came to Him in great trouble because his son was very ill of fever and seemed about to die. This anxious father had travelled over twenty miles to beg Jesus to come and heal the child, and, in answer to the man's earnest prayer, Jesus says, "Go, thy son liveth." Jesus does not say that the child is healed, but the man went back believing, and before he had ended the journey his servants had come out to meet him, and they said what Jesus had promised was true, "thy son liveth," and on inquiry the nobleman found the boy was instantaneously cured at the very hour when Jesus spake the words, "Thy son liveth."

Though Jesus had never seen the lad the word of power had made him whole, and we read that not only the father became a believer in Jesus, but the "whole house," and that probably included the boy. So the child grew up to love and trust the Friend, the Saviour he had not seen.

The case of the other boy Jesus cured is mentioned by Matt. xvii. 18, Mark ix. 25, Luke ix. 42. It was when Jesus came down from the Mount of Transfiguration, our Lord found that a man had asked the disciples to cure his son, who was possessed with a dumb and evil spirit, but they could not, so the father begged Jesus to have mercy on the boy. Then Jesus said, "Bring him hither to Me." That is the very best thing to do for all boys who have an evil spirit. As the child was coming he was seized with one of these fits, so that the father besought Christ, saying, "If Thou canst do anything have compassion on us." Jesus said, "If thou canst believe all things are possible." And the father said, "Lord, I believe. Help Thou mine unbelief." At once Jesus rebuked the devil, and the spirit came out of him, and he was as one dead. Then Jesus took him by the hand and lifted him up, and he arose, and the child was cured.

Here again the imperfect and little faith of the father was honoured, but in this case the poor, demoniac lad was healed in the near presence of Jesus, by Christ's word the evil possession departed from the boy, and by the touch of Jesus the exhausted nature was restored. In answer to earnest prayer the Saviour gave the blessing of a healed mind and body, and by his love and power wrought a work that could never be forgotten while life should last.

The raising of the daughter of Jairus is told by Matt. ix. 25, Mark v. 41, and Luke viii. 54. Here the father comes to Christ, and falling at his feet implores Jesus to come and heal his little daughter, twelve years old, at the point of death. On the way to the house there came a messenger to say all was over, the child had died, and there was no need to trouble the Master further. But Jesus said to the troubled father, "Fear not, only believe, and she shall be made whole." Our Lord goes to the house, enters the room where the child lay asleep in death, and putting all out except the three disciples and the father and mother, took the damsel by the hand and said, in her own language, "Little darling, arise," and with those dear familiar words, by which her own mother might have called her daily, she rose up and walked. Jesus asked that something should be given her to eat, for she was quite well and strong. A father's faith in the loving, living Saviour had called her back to life.

The story of Jesus healing the other little girl is told by Matt. xv. 28, Mark vii. 30. To do this service Jesus travelled more than sixty miles. He went from Capernaum to the coast of Tyre and Sidon, and there a Gentile woman besought Him that He would cast forth the devil out of her daughter. The disciples wished to send her away, but she only prayed, "Lord, help me." At first Jesus did not answer her; then He said that He was not sent but to the lost sheep of Israel, and He said, "Is it meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs?" But she said, "True, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table." Then Jesus said, "Oh, woman, great is thy faith," and added what He never said to anyone else, "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt." When she went back home she found her daughter was made whole.

A mother's prayer and faith, the Saviour's love and thought, had brought the blessing; the girl was healed without even the Saviour seeing her.

One wonders what became of these children, for whom Christ did so much. Surely, they could now forget what they owed to Him. Jairus's daughter and the lunatic boy saw them. The other two may never have seen Him; but we may think, with such faith shown by the woman, the daughter would grow up to know about Jesus, and would love the unseen Healer all the days of her life. The nobleman's son might have had the opportunity of hearing Jesus at Capernaum, especially as the household became believers.

The unseen Saviour is still the children's friend, and He can now heal, and bless, hear prayer, and cast out the spirit of evil from the hearts of boys and girls as He did of old. Many of the best blessings that come to children to-day are the results of fathers' and mothers' prayers for their little ones. A praying father once said to his little son, "I shall never leave you earthly riches, but you will always have, while life shall last, a wealth of blessing in prayer that can never fail."

The Bible Searcher.

No. 124.—Correct answers received from:—

A—Maggie I. Arres-Mather, Zeldah Albert, J. Alen, Bertha Arres-Mather, Charlie and Ella Ardley, J. H. Archer, Ernst, Ralph, and Dora Aldwinckle, Constance M. Atkinson, A. Ross Anton, Violet Ashworth*, Wm. Aston*, W. T. Aldous.

B—Geo. Brand, Edith R. Ballard*, Edith and J. Barker. Chappie and Aline Bazett, Lilian and Teresa Blackie, Herbert Braddon*, Janet and Elizabeth* Black, Conyers, Laura*, and Massy Baker, Charlotte and Mabel Bailey, Edith* and Gertrude Badham, Florence Blackman, Allen Baker, Henriette Bardot, Jasper and Leslie Bell, Frank and Leonard Bentall, Cyril and J. King Bennett, Mary Beck*, Edith E. Bensted*, Mabel Birney, E. Biddlecombe, Daisy, May*, and Gordon Bligh, Emily Bridgewater*, A. Bridges, Gertrude, Nellie, and Beatrice Brookfield, Ralph Bourne, Robert and Eva Browne, Ashley H. Bowker*, Leonard S. and Lindsay Browne, Gordon Bolton, Charles Brown, Ernest and Herbert Bond, John Bott, Gertrude M. Bush, Ernestine Buhl, Harry Butler

C—M. M. and Cicely M. Craven, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Rosaline Castein*, G., James W., and Colin* Campbell, Beryl* and Gladys* Calvert, Isabel* and Charles Caudlin, Maggie and Jessie* Carter, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, Alice E. Crang*, Mabel Clay, Lily Clarke*, Willie and Mary Charles, Walter Carter, Lois M. Craven*, Eleanor Chance, Beatrice M. Cashford, D. Rosalind and Jack Clarke, Bessie Cheale, Henry J. Cheney, Irene Coppard, Wm. S. Corrick, Ruth Coupe, Dorothy Cooper, Kathleen* and Brereton Code, Edith*, Annie, and Ida Cole, Dora and Edith Currie, Nina Coote, Edith Corrick, Arthur G. Cox*, Walter*, Ethel*, and Susie* Cumbers. H. S., T., and Nellie Curr, Emily Church.

D—Ralph and Dorothy* Daintree, Cecil Davis, Polognia Daws, Harold Davis*, J. Ernest Davey*, Marie E. Denizot, Vera Dickinson, Violet Dodsworth, Wm. and Mordaunt Doll, Violet, Kitty*, and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Kenneth Dunbar, Gordon S. Duncan.

E—Muriel Edwards*, Sarah Evans, Eva Edmundson*, Leonard Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Charles Faillettaz*, Jeanne Faucon, Arthur and Richard Farmer, Catherine Frew, Kate, Mabel, Maggie, and Eva* Fletcher, J. A. and Eric Field, Aileen* and F. A.* Figgis, Hyacinth B. FitzSimons*, Ethel Fielder*, Reginald, Ernest, and Willie A. Finday, Louise Filhol, Eva and F. Fullerton, Constance Furlong, Janetta, Maggie, Agnes, and Flossie* Fullarton.

G—David Gardiner*, Bertie and Clarice Gale, Ivan Garrod, Margaret and Edith Gray, Alfred, Mary E., and Daisy Greenacre, M. Greenleaf, Edith Grieve, Minnie Giddings, Mary Gover, Daisy Groves, Dorothy Grove, Emma Goodier, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Nellie Hatchett, Frances Harding, Dorothy E. Harris, Annie E. Hazledine, Edith Harris, Florence Harbord, Rose Hamilton, W. B.* and Edith* Harvey, Jack Harris*, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Emily and Edith Hearn, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Byres Hill, Phœbe Hickling, Dorothy Hinton, Violet A. Holford*, Marjorie Hogge, Alice M. Hogben*, Louie H. Hooper, Georgette Hoffman, Margaret D. Hogg*, Lucie Hourdain, Joshua and Dorothy Hughes-Games, Lila K. Hughes, Edith and Mena Hunter, Tom, May, Helen, and Harcourt Hunter, Evelyn M. Humphreys, Ethel* and Eva* Hutchings.

J—Betty Jacobs*, J. Sinclair Jackson, Nellie Jelfs, Florrie Jennings*, Norman and Kate Johns, H. B. Johnston*, Lizzie Johnstone, Agnes Jones*, Grace, Dudley, and Dora Joyce.

K—Max*, Eva*, and Stanley* Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, W., A. D., A., Thos., and Isa* Kay, Ethel, Mary, and Cara Kestin, Flossie Key, G. Norman King, Lillie Kinvig, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Arthur J. Lamb, E. Lawrence, Henry and Nessie Laing, Sidney, Henry*, Edward, and May Law, Ethel Larwill, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Alex. R. and Annie Lemon, Elsie Lister, Cecilia Lichtenstein, Blanche Lindup, Harry and Edith Lowe, Nellie Lovegrove, Connie Locke, Murray and Grahame Lloyd.

M—Gladys Mather, Enid Mather, Robert*, Winnie*, and Aubrey* Marriott, Avie Mallory, Valerie and Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Sydney and Miriam Marston, Lillie Mallory, Leslie Mallory, Jean Maxwell, Margie and Gracie Marston, J. H.* and Beryl* Mather, Edith Marnham, Dora Marples, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Mary Macwilliam, Florence Mackenzie*, Geo.* and Chas. Macdonald, Kathleen J. G. McClure, Thos., Abraham, Maggie, and Bella Mack, K.* and D.* MacGilp, Margaret J. Macphee, Ada B. Macnutt*, Barbara Maconchy*, John MacMurray, S. E. Mackintosh*, Reginald Measor*, Hilda M. Medill*, Francis Milne, May C. Mills, Alice W. Milne, Bessie and Charlotte* Millar, Owen L. Morice, Annie E. Moule*, Mabel Morris*, Eva Monti*, Evelyn*, Arthur*, and Gwendoline* Moir, Dora Muir.

N—Ernest* and Edith* Nash, Herbert G. Newton*, M. R. Newall, John*, Cissy*, and Peter* Nicholson, Valerie Noel*, Amy* and Maude Nottage.

O—Katie Oliver, F. A. Osmond, Eva and Maude Oakes, Lottie and Harriette Orr.

P—Nancie Parker, Dorothy Patten*, Haden Palmer*, Mary Papprill, Winnie Page*, Alice M. Palmer, Kathleen* and Ethel M.* Pasley, Herbert Parr, Jessie, Maggie*, Winnie, Willie, and Ada Palmer, Mary and W. M. Penny, J. E. Pearce*, Edwin Peters, Joanna Pearman, Myrtle Perry, Evelyn P. Pechey, Eva Petter*, W. Petter, Walter C. Perryman*, Isabel* and Gladys Phipps, Francis S. Phillips, Kathleen Pincott, Lillian and Margaret Pook, Rhoda Porter*, Ernest Poynder, Cyril Pomeroy, Mary E. Plumb*.

Q—Edith and Minnie Quick.

R—Nora Read, Gordon Remington, Phillis Riddle, Arthur and Cyril* Roberts, Kate Rosenbloom, Ethel M. Rogers, Olive and Sydney Robertson, Ernest Rose, Mildred Robinson*, Chas. S. Rudge*, Winifred de Rusett.

S—Eric, Llewellyn, Undine, Mervyn and Gwendoline Shaw, D. D., C. D.* and T. M. Stainer, Chas. W. Saunders, Stuart Scragg, Flora A. Shadbolt, W. Stangoe, Constance* and Hilda Schaeffer, Harold Sanders, Daisy Stanger, Bob and Dollie Salt, Elsie M. Stark, Bessie Scantlebury, Margery Smart, Agnes M. Sterry*, Maria E. Sleigh, Kathleen and Douglas* Shepherd, Ivy, Rosetta, and Muriel Sherwin, Ada M. Spencer, Frederick Seth*, Ida Schwengeler, Janet and Sydney Speed, Nellie Sery*, Reginald Skinner, Flora Simmons, Esther Simmons, Mary Spiganovicz*, Irene Simms, Kate Smith, Florrie Smith, E. Short, Betty Stocks*, Mildred, Gertrude, and Constance* Scott, Ethel* and Jessie* Snowball, Ronald Studd, Emily Stuart*, Herbert M. Stuart,* C. Bessie Symes, D. J. Symon.

T—Winnie and Arthur Taylor, Violet A.* and Olive* Tritton, Louie* and Nannie* Tibbits, Nettie*, Wm. D., and Kate* Thomson, John W. Thomson*, Harry Thompson, Herbert Toller, Frank and Alice M. Thompson, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Alice Trnelove, Jas. T. Tuff, Peverell, Laurence, Arthur, and Herbert W. Turnbull, Maude* and Editu Tyson, Gilbert* and Harold Tyson.

U—Queenie and Lily Upton.

V—Gertrude Vellacott, Hilda* and May* Vickers, Elsie Vigars, Kenneth J. Vining.

W—Greta Watson, R. Watson, Violet and Louisa Walker, Stewart Watson, May Watson, J., Wm., and Edith J. Wheeler, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Ada Willmer, Colin, H. and A.* Wright, Edith M. Williams, Maggie Wight, Pringle Wilson*, Edith and Ruby Wilkins, Edith M. Whiting, Frank Wilson*, Eva Winpenny*, Florrie K. White, Evelyn H. Wood.

Y—Annie Yeo*.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (125).

1. (a) By Nathan the prophet to David at God's command. (b) David wished to build God an house, but God told him through the prophet Nathan that the son who should succeed him should do so. (c) 2 Sam. vii. 13.

2. (a) By David to God. (b) David is thanking God for his promise to bless and establish his house and kingdom for ever. (c) 2 Sam. vii. 28.

3. (a) By David to Mephibosheth. (b) For Jonathan's sake David entertained Mephibosheth at his table, and restored to him all that belonged to Saul. (c) 2 Sam. ix. 7.

4. (a) By Joab to his brother Abishai. (b) When the Israelites were fighting against the Ammonites and Syrians. (c) 2 Sam. x. 12.

5. (a) By Absalom to the people who came to David for judgment. (b) Absalom wished the people to become more devoted to him than to David. (c) 2 Sam. xv. 4.

6. (a) Spoken by David to all his servants. (b) David said this when his son Absalom had raised up a rebellion against him. (c) 2 Sam. xv. 14.

7. (a) Spoken by David to Hushai the Archite. (b) During David's flight from Absalom Hushai met him at the top of the mount, and David told him to go to Jerusalem and pretend to be Absalom's servant, and so defeat the counsel of Ahithophel. (c) 2 Sam. xv. 34.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert, Jessie Alen, Ralph Aldwinckle, W. T. Aldous, A. Rose Anton, Violet Ashworth.

B—Edith Ballard, Herbert H. Braddon*, Nellie Bellerby, Edith Bensted*, Mabel Birney, Emily Bridgewater, Gertrude B. Brookfield, Lindsay* and Leonard* Browne, Gertrude M. Bush.

C—Eleanor Chance, Rosaline Castein, Isabel and Charles Caudlin, Edith*, Ida, Mabel, and Annie* Cole, Kathleen Code*, Irene Coppard.

D—Dorothy Daintree, Vera Dickinson, Nellie Dowsett, Kitty, Violet and Ivy Donaldson-Selby.

F—Chas. Faillettaz*, Eric Field, Lilian Fidler, Eva and Ethel Fielder, Lizzie Forrester, Constance Furlong.

G—Bertie and Clarice Gale, Mary Gover.

H—Frances Harding, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Joshua and Dorothy Hughes-Games.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Florrie Jennings*, Kate and Norman Johns, Agnes Jones.

K—Max, Stanley*, Eva* Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky.

L—May, Henry*, Edward, and Sidney Law, E. Lawrence, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.

M—Charles Macdonald, Gladys*, J. H., and Beryl Mather, Helen Morgan, Evelyn L. Moir, Eva Monti.*

N—John G., Cissy, and Peter* Nicholson.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Myrtle Perry, E. Primrose Pechey, Mary E. Plumb.

R—Kate Rosenbloom*, Ernest Ross.

S—Betty Swanston, Harold Sanders, Margery Smart, Constance Schaeffer, Daisy Stanger, Cicely C. Sherbrooke, Esther Simmons, Flora Simmons*, Reginald Skinner, Betty Stocks*, Ethel and Jessie Snowball, Ronald Studd, D. J. Symon.

V—May*, Edwin and Dorothy* Vickers, Kenneth Vining.

W—Noel, Cecile, and Phillis Wright, Edith M. Williams, Edie Whiting

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received from:—Nos. 112 and 113. Alice M. Hitchcock (Texas). No. 116. Launcelot M. Knight (Texas), Maria H. and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). No. 117. Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 118. Janet Garrett* (Kimberley), Launcelot M. Knight. No. 119. Henry and A. Baillie (Canada), Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale (Bombay), Dore E. Wallace (Canada). No. 120. Queenie and Llewellyn* Dale, H. and A. Baillie, Jean McN. Scott, Dora E. Wallace. No. 121. H. and A. Baillie, Jean McN. Scott, Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 126).

John vi. to viii.

1. What did Jesus say when He saw the multitudes coming to Him?
2. Who replied to Him?
3. (a) What remained over? (b) What did the people say, and what did they want to do?
4. What caused the people to say, "Rabbi, when camest Thou hither?"
5. What did Jesus say was the work of God?
6. Why did many of his disciples forsake Him?
7. What did Peter say?
8. Why was there a division among the people concerning Christ, and at what festival did it take place?

[Children under TEN the first three; under THIRTEEN 1, 2, 3, 5, 7.]

Personal.

MANY thanks for packets of flowers received for the Flower Mission. I have also received several photographs which have given me great pleasure.

A. AND A. D. KAY.—Please give your Christian names so as to avoid confusion.

ISABEL CAUDLIN.—You need not write the questions.

GRACE JOYCE.—I see you are all trying to write your papers more neatly; mind and persevere, and you will do still better.

LILY KINVIG.—Am glad you are joining the Searcher.

W. PETTER.—You would find it easier to write on lined paper.

CYRIL BENNETT.—Very glad to see your name again, and wish you could continue.

UNCLE TOM.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun.	June 12,	2 Tim.	iv. 9-22	Th.	June 16,	Phil.	v. 1-14
M.	„ 13,	Titus	i. 1-16	F.	„ 17	„	v. 15-25
Tu.	„ 14	„	ii. 1-15	Sat.	„ 18,	1 Kings	i. 15-31
W.	„ 15	„	iii. 1-15

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Spiers. Newport (Fife), postponed till November. Mr. Tyler, Kingswood, and neighbourhood, June 11-12; Wroxall, June 13. Mr. Callender, Acton, June 10; Streatham Hill, June 17; Beckenham, June 18. Mr. Phillips Welsh, Battersea, June 13. Mr. W. Hutchinson, Salisbury, to June 10; Reading, June 11, 12. Messrs. Hewlett and McClaine, with caravan, Crawley, to June 16; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Cretingham, until June 13. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Misterton, near Crewkerne. Mr. E. Hughes, Salisbury, June 10; Waterloo-road, June 19; Hawkstone Hall, June 21.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

PRAYING TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Sir,—May I draw attention to the increasing tendency in Prayer-meetings, conventions, and hymns, to use unscriptural language with regard to the Holy Spirit?

Nowhere in Scripture can I find any authority for addressing Him directly, for I read:

"In the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit."

"If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven give the Holy Spirit."

"I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter."

"The Comforter, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send."

"When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father."

"Peter and John prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost."

But now in our prayer-meetings how often do we hear:

"Come, Holy Spirit, into our hearts," etc.

"Holy Spirit, descend upon us now," etc.; and we sing—

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove, with all thy quick'ning powers."

"Come, Holy Spirit, come, let thy bright beams arise."

"Holy Spirit, faithful Guide, ever near the Christian's side"; and so on.

Besides, if I have "become a temple of God," and "the Spirit of God dwelleth in me," there seems a certain difficulty in directly addressing Him, especially if we "pray in the Spirit."—Yours faithfully,

Alex. H. Hutchinson, Maj.-Gen.

Owthorpe, Bournemouth.
May 29, 1898.

LAWLESSNESS IN THE CHURCH.

Sir,—The Bishops, while repudiating the action of Mr. Kensit, are at length feeling the necessity of doing something to save the Establishment from its own internal perils. They have been a good many years arriving at this decision, and even now they protest they have no power to help themselves.

During this period they have had plenty of power (which they have exercised) of curbing the truly catholic spirit of Evangelical clergymen by promptly prohibiting their officiating in Nonconformist places of worship or having any suchlike dealings with the Nonconformists. It is only when they are asked to exercise their undoubted powers against the Romanising clergy of the Church of England that they helplessly cry out they have no power.

To attempt to put down the present external abuses is only to endeavour to shake off the corrupt fruit from the tree which they have allowed to grow unimpeded for the last five-and-twenty years at least. To effect a radical change, they must go very much deeper, viz., to the seed which the Romanisers have been sowing amongst the young for the period I have mentioned, with the result that there is now a very large proportion of every Ritualistic congregation which not only "loves to have it so," but would resent any interference with, or alteration of, their services as now conducted. In other words, the mischief has been done, and it will take three or four generations at least to undo the mischief of one.

While the Romanising clergy have the opportunity of inculcating Popish doctrines (which they do to the full) by means of spiritually debauching the minds of the young who are sent to them for preparation for confirmation, so long will the mischief continue and increase. Nine out of ten confirmees of recent years will tell you they are taught that forgiveness of sins can only be obtained through their priest after confession, that the bread and wine on the so-called altar become literally flesh and blood after the prayer of consecration, and that the Bible must only be read as explained and approved by their priest.

This, together with many other similar Romish doctrines, is the natural fruit of confirmees being given (amongst other English translations of the Popish works) "Before the Altar," in which these and many other such-like doctrines are laid down as essential to salvation, and which, to my knowledge, has been given to confirmees by even clergymen who describe themselves as not Ritualistic! When the bishops are as much in earnest with regard to the Romanisers as they are with regard to really catholic-minded, Evangelical clergymen, and go to the root of the matter in the effectual oversight of the confirmees, then, and then only, will the evil cease, and in the course of time be eventually eradicated. Pending that, parents should withhold their children from confirmation.—Yours, etc.,

John M. R. Todd.

ROMANISM AND PROTESTANISM.

Dear Sir,—In connection with this subject I want to commend to the notice of your readers a very valuable little work, entitled, "Protestanism; its ultimate Principle," by Dr. Dale, published by the Congregational Union, at the Memorial Hall. I have just recently read it, and have had an intellectual as well as a spiritual treat. At a time like the present, when the forces of Ritualism and Romanism are presenting themselves in battle array against Protestantism, and threatening to menace the liberties of those who wish to worship God in Spirit and in truth, it is essential that all who belong to the Evangelical part of the Church should know what they are contending for, and what sort of weapons should be used in the warfare. On the first point, Dr. Dale says:—

"There is, perhaps, some reason to fear that in this country the great Protestant argument will suffer from being entangled with innumerable disputes which have only a legal or an historical interest. The nation generally cares very little for controversies about the true intention of the documents which define the theological compromise accepted by the English reformers three hundred years ago. Controversies about the colour and shape of priestly vestments and the position and genuflexions of the 'celebrant' in the Lord's Supper are equally destitute of all power to touch the deeper life and thought of the country. We must fight, not for the symbols of Protestantism, but for its realities. To permit the questions which are controverted between ourselves and those who are endeavouring to Romanise the Faith and worship of the nation to sink into the hands of lawyers and ecclesiastical antiquarians will be to deprive our cause of all its spiritual grandeur and power.

"The battle must be fought on broader and deeper issues. We must preach the Gospel, and must entreat Christ to reveal how near He is to every human soul, and to manifest in our times, as He has manifested in former times, the greatness of his mercy and his might. The true defence of the nation against the power of the Papacy does not lie with politicians, nor with ecclesiastical courts, nor with controversialists. We must constantly reiterate that it is at once the duty and the right of every man to listen for himself to the voice of God, and to appeal for himself to the infinite mercy which in the death of Christ atoned for the sins of mankind; and we must make it clear that in the whole of our controversy, both with Romanism and Ritualism, we are but vindicating this right and enforcing this duty."

These words were written several years ago, but they are even more applicable now than then. The tide of Romanism will not be stemmed, nor the honour of God upheld except by preaching the Gospel in all its purity and simplicity. There is a grave danger of forgetting to do this as it should be done if we become too much absorbed in the discussions as to whether a certain service is according to the Prayer Book, or a certain gown legal or not.

As to the weapons to be used in this controversy Dr. Dale says: "It is the duty of every man that recognises in Protestantism the expression of the very spirit of the Gospel to use all his resources to win for the right faith a real and enduring victory. But we must use in this conflict only those weapons which are appropriate to a spiritual struggle and a struggle for spiritual freedom."

I could wish for this little book a great sale at the present time, and hope the mention of it will induce many readers of "The Christian" to procure a copy.—Yours faithfully,

David E. Potts.

3, Arvon-road, Highbury, N., June 4.

Homes for the Aged Blind.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Crouch Hill, took place on Thursday last, Mr. J. Elliot Viney in the chair. Rev. W. H. Harwood preached in the afternoon.

The evening meeting was held in the Jubilee Hall. The report read by Rev. J. F. Osborne, the hon. secretary, showed that there are sixty-seven women and fifteen men at present in the institution. During the year eight died, whose united ages amounted to 637 years. The educational classes and religious services in the hall are well sustained; services are carried on occasionally for the blind, invited from all parts of London.

The great event of the year has been the opening of a holiday home at Southend, to accommodate twelve inmates. A freehold house has been purchased; with the furnishing, the cost has been £1815, and the whole has been paid.

Revs. F. E. Murphy, J. R. Wood, G. Hay Morgan, and Charles Brown gave addresses on behalf of the work.

Distress in South Wales.

In acknowledging donations sent for the relief of the starving poor in the counties of Glamorgan and Monmouth, Rev. John Pugh, Cardiff, Superintendent of the Welsh Forward Movement, writes:—

"The amount may not appear much to divide among over twenty-seven mission centres, but it has gladdened the heart of many a downcast brother, and cheered many a poor mother whose children are crying for bread. The distress has now become so intense in some parts that it may be well called destitution. Some of our devoted missionaries share all they get in the way of salaries, and some of them go without their due and endure hardships in common with their poor flock.

"The following statistics, returns of the Cardiff Chamber of Commerce, shows the effects of the coal strike during April: Export of coal from our southern ports April, 1897, 1,719,022 tons; April, 1898, 495,929 tons—a decrease for the month alone of 1,223,693 tons. In Cardiff foreign shipments show a percentage decrease of 72·3, and coastwise local shipments of 76·28; Newport in foreign coal shipments a percentage decrease of 83·3, and on coastwise of 77·69; Swansea's foreign coal exports show a percentage decrease of 33·2, and coastwise a 65 per cent. decrease. These figures speak for themselves!

"If the strike came to a close next week, and the men returned to work this month, its disastrous effects would be felt for months to come!

"George Gardens, Cardiff."

Dissenting Ministers.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant and Dissenting Ministers was recently held at the Sunday-school Union House, Old Bailey. The report shows that since the last annual meeting £995 have been distributed among seventy-seven aged and infirm ministers, a sum exceeding all previous annual distributions, and considerably in excess of the actual income for the year.

A Ladies' Club.—The attention of ladies needing a club in London is called to the Y.W.C.A. Club, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, established in this central position by the headquarters committee of Y.W.C.A. for any engaged in Y.W.C.A. literary, educational, artistic, and other work. Besides the public rooms, there are five bed-rooms for the use of members. The tariff has been arranged at a very moderate rate. The subscription is at present only one guinea annually, and a limited number of members will be admitted now without entrance-fee. Candidates are invited to write to the hon. sec. for application forms.

Co-operative Holidays.—We have received an illustrated programme of the holidays being arranged by the Co-operative Holidays Association. It conjures up visions of summer days spent in happy comradeship amid the splendours of Snowdon and Scawfell, Borrowdale, and Bettws-y-coed. Whitby and Keswick, Barmouth, Bangor, Hastings, and Conway are the centres where excursions are taken to places of interest around, conducted by enthusiasts in either the historical associations, the plant-life or geology of the district. From the standpoint of economy and rational enjoyment nothing more delightful could be conceived. The association is connected with the National Home Reading Union. The secretary, Mr. T. A. Leonard, Colne, Lancashire, will send further particulars on receipt of stamped addressed envelope.

OBITUARY.

MR. ABEL SMITH, M.P.

The member for East Herts died at his town residence, 35, Chesham-place, on Monday week. His death was quite unexpected, and has caused the deepest grief to a large number of friends and supporters. He was the eldest son of Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., banker, and was born on December 30, 1829. He entered Parliament in 1854. He was a devoted Evangelical Churchman, and took the deepest interest in the work of the C.M.S., the C.P.A.S., the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association, and other organizations, by all of whom he will be much missed.

DR. JOHN BARRITT MELSON.

This well-known scientist passed away last week at Lapworth, near Birmingham, in his eighty-seventh year. He was the son of a Wesleyan minister, and receiving his early training at the Woodhouse-grove College, took an earnest interest in Wesleyanism throughout his life. He graduated at Oxford, and was elected a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. Whilst Professor of Natural Philosophy and Hygiene at Queen's College he had as students the late Archbishop of Canterbury and Dr. Westcott, the present Bishop of Durham. He was one of the founders of the Evangelical Alliance. For thirty-five years Dr. Melson preached for the Wesleyans on an average 100 sermons a year. He was a renowned shorthand writer, and on one occasion challenged the late Sir Isaac Pitman to a trial of skill in shorthand writing, as a test of the relative merits of the different systems which the respective competitors wrote. Dr. Melson claimed the victory in the matter of rapidity.

MR. SAMUEL PLIMSOLL.

The "Sailors' Friend," as Mr. Plimsoll was known all over the world, died on Friday last at Folkestone, aged seventy-three. It is more than a quarter of a century ago since he first devoted his energies to the cause of the merchant seaman. To him was due the adoption of the load-line, to which, no doubt, hundreds of those "who go down to the sea in ships and do business in mighty waters" owe the saving of their lives. Until this seaman's advocate undertook the championship of the sailors' cause overloading in the merchant navy was notorious. It will be long before his name is forgotten as a Christian philanthropist. "He travelled all over England to do all he could for the sailors so dear to his heart; in 1896, he took up with almost equal energy American trusts." The Westminster Gazette quotes a correspondent who, referring to canal boatmen, says of Mr. Plimsoll: "It was my lot to know a good many villages on different parts of the London and Liverpool Canal, and I heard everywhere of Mr. Plimsoll's unselfish labours among the denizens of the canal boats, his anxiety to improve their quarters and their comforts, and above all to provide for their children going to school, a matter of no ordinary difficulty."

MR. STEPHEN BREEZE, LIVERPOOL.

This devoted servant of Christ passed away (as we have already mentioned) at his residence in Birkdale, lamented by hundreds who owe to him their spiritual life. At the memorial service in Wycliffe Hall, Mr. J. J. Spraggon and Rev. T. Lydiatt bore testimony to the life and work of the departed. The latter said he had known Mr. Breeze for twenty-two years, ever since he (the preacher) had commenced the work of evangelization in Liverpool, but although they had worked together a great deal, and he had often wondered how it was possible he could get through so much work, he did not know until quite recently that Mr. Breeze got up early in the morning in order to do it, and to give him time to conduct his Bible classes and meetings. His bright, cheery countenance, and the hearty shake of his manly hand was always an encouragement to them, for just as his faith was manifest in his work amongst men, so was his love for them, and he had had so many proofs and manifestations of it personally that it was stamped indelibly upon his heart, so that time could never efface it. In addition to the Bible classes which Mr. Breeze held in Southport, he had Bible classes in connection with the Aged Mariners' Homes at Egremont, and while on his sick bed had caused a letter to be writen to him (the preacher) stating how much he was thinking of the work he had undertaken amongst those men. They knew little in Southport of the great work he did in Liverpool. He was surprised himself at the enormous personal influence of the man. It penetrated all through Liverpool, even among classes who laid no claim to be active Christians. He was a man of very even temperament. His very presence amongst them at their board meetings, and at their Evangelical Alliance meetings, and as president of the Ragged School Union, was helpful and pacific.

He Giveth His Beloved Sleep.

WHEN the long day of toil is done,
And the last rays of setting sun
Are lost in shadows broad and deep,
He giveth his belovèd sleep.

To those who live, and toil, and mourn,
Who day by day their grief have borne,
Who almost learn to loathe the light,
Thou bringest a healing, blessèd night.

But yet the Day-star shall arise
For those sad hearts, those aching eyes.
And o'er their lonely pathway shine,
To give them light and life divine.

Go, tell them how that Jesus died,
How that He rose the glorified.
Tell them He loves them. Oh 'twill give
A brighter hope e'en thus to live.

That when long years of toil are done,
No clouds may dim their setting sun.
Eyes that have opened but to weep,
May close in sweet belovèd sleep,

And wake to know, O bliss supreme,
To know each joy no passing dream,
To know their night of sorrow past,
That God's bright day hath dawn'd at last.

M. A. P.

Personalia.

Mr. Cheyne Brady, Gospel tract writer, passed away peacefully in his eighty-first year at Les Anémones, Cannes, on June 3.

Rev. Dr. Berry's condition continues to give some anxiety to his friends, and he will need a longer and more complete rest than was anticipated.

Mr. Robert Scott sailed in the Campania on Saturday last with his second son. He will visit Northfield (Mr. Moody's home), and some of the chief cities, returning in a few weeks.

Mr. A. G. Burnett, of Kemnay, a well-known Christian landed proprietor in Aberdeenshire, has been the recipient of a congratulatory address from his tenants and other friends on the attainment of his jubileo as landlord.

Sir William Muir has (according to The Record) offered to the C.M.S. securities, valued at nearly £5000, with which to build a Home for Women at Allahabad in memory of the late Lady Muir. The Society has provisionally accepted the offer.

Mr. W. L. Wyllie, A.R.A., the well-known marine painter, who has done so much to make real and vivid the life and hardships of North Sea trawlers, has, with his wife, had a very narrow escape from drowning in the Medway, being capsized, thrown into the water, and picked up in an exhausted condition.

The Hon. Somers Somerset, son of Lady Henry Somerset, whilst riding with his wife on Thursday evening near Eastnor Castle, Herefordshire, was thrown from his horse, which he had just hired, and sustained serious injuries to the head. He was conveyed in an unconscious state to the Castle, his mother's residence.

Rev. A. A. Cooper, M.A., has been appointed by the British and Foreign Bible Society assistant to Rev. R. H. Weakley, who has charge of the Egyptian agency, which includes Syria, Palestine, Arabia, and Abyssinia. Mr. Cooper is a distinguished scholar of Aberdeen University and New College, Edinburgh. He spent three years and a-half in the Presbyterian Church Mission in Bengal.

Principal Caird has resigned the Principalship of Glasgow University, to take effect at the end of July. Owing to his greatly enfeebled condition, it was known several months ago that he would not be able to retain the position for any length of time. He is now in his seventy-ninth year, having been born in Greenock in 1820. He was elected to the chair of Divinity in 1862, and in 1873 became head of the University.

The Evangelistic Field.

REV. J. McNEILL IN LONDON.

THE two weeks' mission arranged for the Royal Albert Hall will begin on Monday afternoon next, at 3.30 p.m. The meetings will be held every week-day till June 25, afternoon and evening. There are all the indications of wide-spread interest and good attendances. Mr. McNeill is back in town, looking the picture of health, after his short spell of rest in Scotland.

An encouraging circumstance connected with the mission, as showing the amount of interest awakened in certain circles, may be mentioned. Quite a number of the "life-renters" of boxes in the hall, who have been asked to grant the freedom of their seats, have either written to say that they propose to use them themselves, or have stipulated that the boxes be reserved for them on certain days. Probably a larger proportion of these proprietary seats have been granted to the committee of the mission than on any previous occasion.

The committee still desire the help of gentlemen who can act as stewards, especially in the afternoons; any friends who can give their services for these two weeks are invited to communicate at once with Mr. J. H. Putteriil (hon. local secretary of the Albert Hall Mission), Exeter Hall, Strand. There is also opportunity for musical friends to render help in the praise. There will be a choir rehearsal in Kensington Town Hall on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, when the presence of any singers, ladies and gentlemen, who have not applied for tickets will be welcomed. The conductor will be Mr. Livesey Carrott, organist of St. Matthew's Church, Bayswater.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. A. J. WALDRON is taking the services at Edinburgh Castle this month. He started on Sunday last with splendid services, which were much blessed.

A special mission has been held in Cavan parish church by Canon ROBINSON, rector of Taney, Dundrum, co. Dublin. A similar mission has been held at Ballyfin, Queen's County, by Miss McLean, and others.

The extension of the mission of the Brothers WEAVER, at Somerville Church, Keppochhill, Glasgow, has proved very fruitful in results. On Wednesday week those who received blessing were present at a social gathering, at which Rev. Thomas Havre, Rev. John Pugh, and Rev. Wm. Ross were present.

An all too short, but successful evangelistic mission has been conducted by Rev. HUGH C. WALLACE, of Burnley, at the small village of Oare, near Pewsey, Wilts. The services were held in Mr. T. E. Bennett's barn, and the five week-night attendances numbered about 600. At the last service some indicated that the Gospel had brought a blessing to them.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mrs. BAEVERTZ, June, Clitheroe.
Mr. J. NEECH, Pirbright, during June.
Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, Bristol, June 12-27.
Rev. W. H. AITKEN, Milborne Port, to June 13.
Mr. E. P. TELFORD, Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
Mr. W. MONRO COLLINGS, at Holt, Norfolk, June 12-26.
SERGEANT PULLINGER, Broadhill, Burgess Hill, June 12.
GIPSY SMITH, Luton, June 11-20; Mansfield, June 25-July 4.
Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, during June.

Requests for Prayer.

For a series of missions by Mr. William Hill a different centres in and around Johannesburg.

For a little son, a great sufferer for months, that God's will may be accomplished in his deliverance.

For blessing on tracts by the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, now being circulated in North Ireland.

For an eight days' mission, in the Gospel Tent Mission, Barry Dock, by Mr. George Back, of the Open-Air Mission.

Famine in West Ireland.—Through the failure of the potato crop last harvest hundreds of honest families are now literally starving, without an ounce of food in their cheerless cabins. It is sad to behold old and young crying for bread they cannot get. The peasantry are principally living on boiled Indian meal; they cannot afford to get better food. The distress is becoming more acute day by day. Any help entrusted to me shall be judiciously distributed to the most needy cases.

JOHN O'JOYCE, J.P.
Mount Gable Hotel, Clonbur, co. Galway.

[615]

THE BOOK WORLD.

FRENCH PUBLICATIONS.

The publishing house of J. H. Jeheber, of Geneva, known as the "Librairie Evangélique," last year celebrated its centenary; and one of the excellent works issued on the occasion was La Famille, by Frank Thomas (3 frs.), a volume of good counsels and Christian appeals on domestic relations and duties.

A work of a different character, but having a peculiar interest, is A l'Ombre du Croissant (3 fr. 50 c.), by A. Hoffmann, in which the story of Turkish misrule and massacre in Armenia is delineated, especially as it relates to the experiences of Professor Thoumaïan, of Marsovan. Being brother-in-law of the exile, who is so widely known in England, Pastor Hoffmann has found no difficulty in the matter of gathering facts for his thrilling story.

Thirdly, we would mention a very attractive edition of the biography of Jenny Lind, by Dr. C. A. Wilkens (3 fr. 50 c.), translated from the German by Julia Jequier. It is the story of a noble life, directed by high principles and fruitful of good works.

M. Jeheber aims at disseminating good religious literature among French-speaking people, and continental residents may secure his list from 28, Rue du Marché, Geneva.

Mr. Mark Levy, in his booklet, As Englishman, Jew and Christian, unburdens his heart in verse—patriotic, religious, and sentimental. Israel's hope is the subject of some choice lines. (1s. Partridge & Co.)

The latest addition to the series of "Bible Class Primers" (6d. T. & T. Clark) is Elijah and Elisha, prophets of Israel, by Rev. Ronald G. Macintyre, B.D., Maxwelltown. The pages are the fruit of much study and thought.

The late Professor H. C. Banister's last work, The Harmonising of Melodics, is an extremely useful text-book for students and teachers, the chapters on pianoforte accompaniment being especially valuable (2s. Office of Music, 186, Wardour-street, W.).

Mr. W. T. Stead's new publication, Gladstone: a Character Sketch, is sure to meet a wide demand. It presents the substance of several articles that appeared in magazines and reviews during the lifetime of the lamented statesman. There are numerous portraits, and reproductions of interesting groups. (1s. "Review of Reviews" Office.)

A striking "In Memoriam" booklet, entitled What We Knew of Frances E. Willard, has been issued by the British Women's Temperance Association. It contains a two-fold "appreciation," from the pens of Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, and is inscribed on the title page "A Memorial Gift." (Offices of the B.W.T.A., 47, Victoria-street, S.W.)

The glowing style of the Bishop of Derry (Dr. Chadwick) renders him a popular preacher. Many will be glad to have a volume of his sermons, Pilate's Gift. (5s. Religious Tract Society.) Eloquent expositions of the verities of our faith, they set forth faithfully and earnestly the Captain of our salvation, in his atoning work and ever-living intercession.

The Journal of John Woolman. (2s. 6d. Andrew Melrose.) A neat and well-printed edition of American Quaker classic, with the sympathetic "Appreciation" from the pen of the poet Whittier. Apart from its historic value, it supplies a fine example of the Divine working in a human soul. This edition is issued as one of a series of "Books for the Heart."

Last week's issue of The Graphic consists of a double number devoted to all the incidents connected with the funeral of Mr. Gladstone, both at Hawarden and at the State ceremonies at Westminster. It is strikingly illustrated throughout by a staff of special artists, and will be found a magnificent memorial of the final chapters in the story of the great statesman's life. (1s.)

Our Prayer Book. By H. C. G. Moule, D.D. (Seeley & Co.) We could not wish for a more clear-thoughted, well-balanced expounder of "the history and contents of the book of Common Prayer" than Dr. Moule. Lovers and constant users of the time-honoured manual will have special interest in the perusal of this book, and even those who discard liturgical aids will find pleasure in the exposition.

England's Danger. By R. F. Horton, D.D. (1s. James Clarke & Co.) The six addresses on Romanism recently delivered by Dr. Horton are published in this collected form. It is a most timely and valuable little work. Those who wish to see England God-fearing, free, and prosperous should study this calm and powerful exposition of some of the degrading errors and blighting superstitions of the Romish system.

In Answer to Prayer (2s. 6d., Isbister & Co.), the articles and testimonies on this subject which recently appeared in one of the monthly magazines, are now published in separate form. The writers embrace the Bishop of Ripon, Dr. T. L. Cuyler, Rev. John Watson, Dr. Horton, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Mr. William Quarrier, etc., most of whom give striking personal experiences of answered prayer. The book will confirm the faith of the believer, though it may not meet the demands of the scientific sceptic.

At length the "Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges" includes the Evangelical Prophet, Professor Skinner having edited Isaiah: Chapters xl.-lxvi., with Introduction and Notes. We are sorry that Dr. Skinner should have gone so far in criticism, with its attendant negations and narrowness of view; but, in spite of practical defects arising from the modern tendency, this volume has unquestionable value as a body of expository matter, presented in a remarkably succinct form. (4s. Cambridge University Press Warehouse.)

Three useful little books recently issued by Mr. Allenson were entitled respectively "The Tool Basket," "The Seed Basket," and "Illustrations and Incidents," compiled by J. Ellis. Many Christian workers found these of service, and doubtless not a few have wished that the whole could be combined in one volume. This has now been done, and the title of the comprehensive volume is Outlines and Illustrations for Preachers and Teachers (2s. 6d.). Here is the scaffolding on which to build hundreds of addresses and talks, and we are confident that many a puzzled labourer will arise and build after consulting these suggestive pages.

The Queen's Printers' Variorum Aids to Bible Students have been issued in a greatly improved form. This edition of the "Aids" is in large type; it has also other excellent features, including a large number of illustrations—monumental, archæological, and topographical—selected and described by Rev. C. J. Ball and Dr. F. G. Kenyon. The work is a valuable handbook of Biblical antiquities, besides being all that its predecessors were as embodiments of information and general helps in Bible study. The "Aids" may be had bound up with Teachers' Bibles or separately; small sizes in the latter form cost from 1s. to 6s. 6d. each; and the "Variorum" edition in large type from 5s. to 12s. 6d., according to binding. (Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

An edition of the Scriptures which many will regard as specially convenient is The Calendar Bible, prepared by Messrs. Bagster & Sons, for the purpose of encouraging systematic daily reading. To this intent, the text has been so divided into portions for daily reading that the Old Testament may be read through once in two years, and the New Testament once every year. The divisions are indicated by indicating on the margin, opposite to the beginning of each portion, the day and month to which it is assigned. The books are not read according to their common order, but, for greater helpfulness in study, historical and didactic books are made to alternate, and Epistles are read between the different Gospels. Printed in "ruby" type, and enclosed in "Flexile" binding (5s. upwards), this is a handy and useful Bible.

"Printed in Japan" is a singular legend to find on the title page of a volume of 550 pages; yet this we find on opening a deeply interesting sacred anthology, entitled Hymns of Old England, compiled by Champneys Irwine, of Yokohama. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) The author has had special regard to Scriptural and poetical characteristics, and fitness for family and public use. He has included those hymns which have stood the test of time, as well as modern pieces of acknowledged excellence. In all such collections we miss some favourites, and every one has something to say on competing readings and emendations. Making all allowance, however, in respect of pieces given and omitted, on grounds of individual taste and judgment, and overlooking minor defects of arrangement, we gladly say a good word for this repository of spiritual poesy. Care has been taken to indicate authorship correctly, and welcome biographical notes are given at the end of the book.

In a booklet entitled ISRAEL: A WITNESS AND A BLESSING, Rev. F. S. Webster gives the substance of three sermons preached in St. Thomas's Church, Birmingham. The pages yield a simple outline of prophetic truth. (2d. Birmingham: C. Caswell; London: Partridge & Co.)

As a statement of the polity of an influential section of Protestant Christendom, many will read with interest PRESBYTERIANISM, an address introductory to an ordination of ruling elders, delivered in Corstorphine parish church, on Sabbath 17th April last, by Rev. James Dodds, D.D. (4d. W. Blackwood & Sons.)

A vigorous pamphlet on a modern fashion in thought is CRITICISMS ON DARWIN'S, WALLACE'S, AND HAECKEL'S EVOLUTION THEORIES. The title is long, but the book is brief, being confined to forty closely-reasoned pages, in which a reply is given to statements made by Archdeacon Wilson and Canon Gore at the Church Congress of 1896. (6d. F. Hodgson, 89, Farringdon-street.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Jas. Nisbet & Co.—THE PROBLEMS OF JOB. By Rev. G. N. GARLAND. (6s.)

From "Joyful News" Depôt, Rochdale.—JOHN THE BAPTIST AMONG THE METHODISTS. (1s.)

From Kegan Paul & Co.—TO MY MOTHER, and other Home Verses. By W. S. Lean. (3s. 6d. net.)

From S. W. Partridge & Co.—THROUGH THE CRUCIBLE, by J. H. Panting. (2s.) MISS ELIZABETH'S NIECE. By M. S. Haycraft. (2s.)

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—DANIEL AND THE REVELATION: The Chart of Prophecy and our Place in It. By Rev. Joseph Tanner, B.A. (7s. 6d.)

From Headley Brothers.—THE SILVER CITY AND OTHER ALLEGORIES. By Margaret E. Ashby. (1s. 6d.) A QUAKER OF THE OLDEN TIME. A Memoir of John Roberts. Illustrated. (6s.)

Mildmay Conference.

PROGRAMME OF ARRANGEMENTS.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21.

LARGE Hall, 11 a.m., The Foundations of True Prayer, Lord Polwarth (chairman); (1) The Revelation of God the Father, Dr. Monro Gibson; (2) The Mediation of God the Son, Rev. C. A. Fox. 3 p.m., Bible-reading, Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe.

Room No. 3, 3 p.m., Prayer Meeting—Subject: Native Christians in Foreign Lands, Mr. W. B. Sloan. Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Mildmay Mission to Jews, Gen. Sir W. Stirling and others; 4.15 p.m., Prayer Meeting for Israel, Rev. J. Wilkinson. Room No. 5, 3 p.m., International Christian Police Association, Mr. J. H. Tritton, Miss Gurney, and Policemen; 4.15 p.m., Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, Mr. A. A. Head and others. South Tent, 3 p.m., Railway Mission, Mr. T. A. Denny, Lady Hope, and others; 4.15 p.m., Medical Missions, Dr. J. L. Maxwell and others. Mulberry Tree, 3 p.m., Spurgeon's Orphanage, Dr. James Spurgeon and Rev. V. J. Charlesworth; 4.15 p.m., Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Mr. J. E. Mathieson and Dr. Barnardo.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., The Foundations of True Prayer, The Indwelling of God the Spirit, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. H. B. Macartney.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22.

Large Hall, 11 a.m., The Elements and Conditions of True Prayer. (1) Self-Surrender; Waiting on God, Adoration, Confession, Thanksgiving and Petition, Rev. George Wilson; (2) Faith, Obedience, Abiding, Purity, Importunity and Intelligence, Rev. C. G. Moore; 3 p.m., Bible Reading, Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Room No. 3, 3 p.m., Prayer Meeting—Subject: Evangelists in Our Own Lands, Mr. W. R. Lane. Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Missionary Meeting, Mr. James E. Mathieson, Bishop Thoburn (India), Rev. E. O. Williams (China), Mr. A. E. Ruskin (Africa). Room No. 5, 3 p.m., The Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, Rev. Sydenham L. Dixon and others; 4.15, Women's Protestant Union, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mrs. Arbuthnot, and others. South Tent, 3 p.m., Royal Sailors' Rests, Miss Weston; 4.15 p.m., Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society, Capt. H. T. May, C.B., R.N., Miss Weston, Col. Farquharson, R.M.L.I., Captain Lowry, R.N., Captain Startin, R.N.; 5.30 p.m., Prudential and London Banks Meeting, Mr. T. H. Wharrie, Rev. Marcus Rainsford. Mulberry Tree, 3 p.m., Y.M.C.A., Sir George Williams, Mons. Chas. Fermaud, and others. Universities' Camp for Public School Boys, Lieut.-Col. Seton Churchill; 4.15 p.m., Y.W.C.A., Hon. Emily Kinnaird and others.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., The Encouragement to True Prayer, Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt and Rev. John Wilkinson.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23.

Large Hall, 11 a.m., The Influence of True Prayer, (1) As seen in its power to deepen the Spiritual Life of the Individual and of the Church, Bishop Thoburn; (2) As seen in connection with power for Service, Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe; 3 p.m., the Lord's Supper, Rev. George Wilson.

Room No. 3, The Christian Union, Mr. Bevan Braithwaite, Dr. J. L. Maxwell, and others. Room No. 4, Bible Reading—The Influence of True Prayer, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas. Room No. 5, Work among our Soldiers, Lieut.-Colonel Seton Churchill, Countess Schimmelmann, Miss Perks, Colonel Philips, and Mr. John M'Call. Room No. 6, Parents' Prayer Meeting, Rev. D. B. Hankin. South Tent, Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, Lord Kinnaird, Miss Morley, and Rev. A. R. Cavalier. Mulberry Tree, The Peruvian Mission, Dr. Harry Guinness.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., The Influence of True Prayer, as seen in connection with the extension of the Church, Rev. E. A. Stuart and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

Items of Interest.

Home.

A statue, as a county memorial to Lord Tennyson, is to be erected on the best site obtainable in Lincoln.

An exhibition of Roman relics, recovered during last year's excavations at Silchester, near Reading, has been opened at Burlington House.

The Duke of Westminster has consented to act as chairman of a provisional committee to promote a national memorial to Mr. Gladstone.

The railway collision at Leyland Station has resulted in three deaths and fifty-six injured, some seriously. Some hundreds of Band of Hope children were in danger.

On Whit-Tuesday at Highgate Police Court there was not a charge of any kind, notwithstanding that on Whit-Monday thousands of people visited many resorts in the district.

Raffling for Bibles in church has taken place at St Ives in accordance with an ancient bequest. The Charity Commissioners have intervened to prevent its recurrence in future.

At the Gladstone memorial service on Sunday an immense assemblage gathered in Hyde Park. From six platforms ministers of the Established and Free Churches gave appropriate addresses. A message of sympathy was sent to Mrs. Gladstone.

The Baptist and Congregational Churches of Bedfordshire have unitedly adopted a scheme for raising a capital sum for building a manse in each village having a resident pastor. This scheme, when carried out, will materially assist the pastors of the village churches.

The Coal Trouble.—At the adjourned conference the employers refused the men's reiterated demand for an immediate advance of 10 per cent. and the appointment of a board of conciliation. A conference of all the collieries in South Wales and Monmouthshire has been arranged.

At the Anglo-American function, held at the Hotel Cecil, a very large and representative audience assembled. Lord Coleridge presided. The Bishop of Ripon, Lord Brassey, and Colonel Taylor also spoke. We welcome cordially the drawing together of the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples.

Labour Questions.—The Co-operative Congress has been opened at Peterborough, and was addressed by the Bishop of London, who discussed the importance of the co-operative movement in relation to the problems that arise out of the introduction of steam machinery and the electric telegraph.—The Free Labour Protection Association, of which Lord Wemyss is chairman of council, has for its object the association of the federations of employers and free labourers for consultative and practical purposes.—The second annual congress of the International Society for the Protection of Industrial Property has been held. It has for its object the international protection of patents, trade marks, designs, and other similar "property."

Charitable Contributions.—£1000 from "A Lady" for the Prince of Wales Hospital Fund.—£25 from the Grocers' Company to the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association.—At the anniversary function of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation £6107 were subscribed.—100gs. from the Prince of Wales to the Indian Heroes' Fund.

SCOTLAND.

There were earnest debates in the Free Assembly on temperance, the State regulation of vice, and Disestablishment.

Some shocking cases of juvenile drunkenness among newspaper boys and girls in Edinburgh have lately come to light.

Mr. Gibson, of Swatow, will deliver the Duff Evangelistic Lectures at the Free Church College, Edinburgh, next session.

The Scottish Navvy Mission is doing excellent work among the men engaged in constructing new railways and public works.

The Archbishop of Canterbury addressed several temperance meetings in Edinburgh during his visit to the Established Assembly.

The Evangelistic Committee of Glasgow have received the gift of £2000 for another fresh-air home for the slum children of the city.

By a majority of 486 to 41 the Free Church Assembly decided to ask Presbyteries throughout the country to consider the question of union with the U.P. Church, and report to next Assembly.

Professor Salmond, editor of The Critical Review, has been appointed successor to the late Dr. Brown in the principalship of the Free Church College, Aberdeen.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The vicar of St. Paul's, Blackpool, presided over a well-attended meeting of men, held in the Coffee Palace, on Thursday, May 26, when it was unanimously decided to form a Y.M.C.A. in Blackpool.

At the All Ireland Conference, held recently at Londonderry, a testimonial was presented to the travelling secretary, Mr. Robert McCann, amounting to over £86.

A numerously-attended meeting of members of the Stockton Association, to celebrate the 21st anniversary of the Y.M.C.A. building, was held on Friday evening, under the chairmanship of Mr. William Whitwell, J.P., President of the Association, when addresses were delivered by the chairman, Messrs. H. Crawford Smith, F. Robson, E. Laing, W. Lawrenson, F. Shorter, J. C. Moor, Revs. Andrew Ross, and M. Lowe.

The half-yearly meeting of the National Council, which is held alternately in London and the provinces, took place on Friday, the 3rd inst., in the new building of the Nottingham Y.M.C.A., "Morley House," Mansfield-road, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. The travelling secretaries presented epitomised reports of their work carried on during the past half-year, and the Council addressed itself mainly to the consideration of two important subjects, viz.: (1) The inner spiritual life of the Associations, and (2) the extension of work for young men in the Colonies and in foreign countries. The discussion of the first topic was introduced by Mr. Frederick Hunt, of Reading, and a series of recommendations was approved for submission to Associations throughout the Union, having in view the maintenance and development of the spiritual work and interests of the members. The report of the Foreign Committee was introduced by Mr. W. H. Seagram, and dealt with proposals for the sending out of additional workers to various parts of the foreign field, notably to Australia and Burmah. In the evening Sir George Williams held a social reception of young men, which was very largely attended. Addresses were given by Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool, and Mr. J. H. Putterill.

Foreign.

The Emperor and Empress of Russia have accepted a copy of the new report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

It is feared that the changed attitude of America regarding sugar, and the indisposition of France to abolish sugar bounties, render the result of the Brussels Conference very doubtful.

The Second Chamber of the Netherland States-General has passed the Ministerial Bill introducing obligatory personal military service, with exemption for ministers of all religious denominations.

In a short time the project of a group of philanthropists and deputies to establish a Belgian Sanatorium at Las Palmas will be realised. The King of the Belgians has given the scheme his patronage.

At the opening of the Chilian Congress the President, referring to the question with the Argentine Republic, said he expected the early settlement of the matter, which had absorbed the attention of the Government for many years.

There has been a marked decline in the number of ships passing through the Suez Canal in 1897, when compared with 1896, the numbers being respectively 2986 and 3409. This diminution is attributed to the commercial depression in India and Australia.

India.—A great fire has occurred at Peshawar, lasting for twenty-five hours, destroying 4000 houses, and doing damage estimated at four crores of rupees.

Polar Expeditions.—The German steamer Heligoland has just started on an expedition to the North Pole. Lieut. Peary will also attempt the pole from North Greenland, while Mr. Walter Wellman will make the effort from Franz Josef Land.

Italy.—Progress towards the solution of the crisis is being made. The Circolo S. Pietro and all Catholic clubs and associations in Rome are to be suppressed.—The list of new Ministers is complete; only four members of the old Cabinet remain in office.

The Soudan.—Dervish forces have been withdrawn from Shabluka, on the sixth cataract of the Nile, which it was thought they would hold, and have retreated to another position within forty miles of Khartoum.—An infantry brigade of four battalions is to be despatched to the Nile.

South Africa.—Judge Reitz has been appointed State Secretary in succession to Dr. Leyds. Formerly he was President of the Orange Free States.—In the Cape Assembly the discussion of the Redistribution Bill, which is an attempt to meet the increased need of the country, has been adjourned.

Austria.—No progress has been made in the Reichsrath, owing to the immediate opposition of the German party to the dissolution of the municipality of Gratz, on account of its attitude toward the Bosnian regiment garrisoned there. The present condition, says The Times, of the Austrian Reichsrath is one of hopeless demoralisation.

Distressed Cretans.—A further appeal has been issued by the Grosvenor House Committee on behalf of destitute families in Crete, as well as for aid to refugees who have sought an asylum in Athens and at Piræus, Syria, and Melos. There are at least 25,000 souls, for whom assistance is needed at once, suffering from insufficient food and want of clothing.

Canada and the United States.—Great satisfaction is felt in official circles at Washington and Ottawa at the holding of the Commission to settle all questions at dispute between Canada and the United States.—In the Canadian House of Commons Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a warm reference to the conclusion of the Canadian-American negotiations.

The Balkan States are getting restless, and the unfavourable situation, political and financial, in Servia has much to do with the disquiet. Prince Nicholas of Montenegro is one of the possible candidates for the Servian throne.—The Russian Government is about to present Montenegro with another 50,000 rifles. Those previously given have been distributed among the frontier population.

Turkey. — The Porte pays £T300,000 of the Russian war indemnity arrears in cash, and two annual instalments of £T280,000 are guaranteed by the Ottoman Bank. The delimitation of the Turco-Greek frontier has been concluded and the foreign delegates have returned to Volo.—The Armenian refugees in the Caucasus are to return to their homes gradually, lest large numbers appearing at Van and elsewhere should lead to unpleasant incidents with the Kurds.

Australia.—The results of the voting on the Federation Bill are announced. There was great popular enthusiasm in Victoria, with a very large majority. In Tasmania also a great majority. In New South Wales the numbers were 68,283 votes for the measure, and 63,499 against it; the statutory vote of 80,000 is not, therefore, reached. This is a decided disappointment.—The revenue for New South Wales for May amounted to £1,003,000, an increase of £110,040 over May, '97. The revenue for the eleven months of the current year shows an increase of £227,961.

France.—The reciprocity agreement between France and the United States has been signed by the French Ambassador and the special United States Plenipotentiary.—The new deputies have met.—For the election of President of the Chamber voting was practically equally divided between M. Paul Deschanel and M. Brisson. Another vote will be taken.—M. Paul Deschanel has been elected temporary president.—Admiral Maxse has published a pamphlet embodying a statement of the British case in regard to the Niger question which has aroused considerable interest in Paris.

Russia contains more than twice as many blind persons as all the rest of Europe combined. This is believed to be due to the long snow season and the uncleanly habits of the people. — The Russian Minister of Finance, after persistent agitation, has decided to admit a number of imports duty free and to reduce the duty on others. This will benefit chiefly British shipbuilders and the manufacturers of machinery and chemical manures.—A force of 300 Russian soldiers encamped in the north-east of the province of Ferghana has been attacked by 1000 natives and defeated, losing twenty killed and eighteen wounded.

The Far East.—The Pekin correspondent of The Times says that Prince Kung, who has long been seriously ill, has had a relapse and died. — The Korean Government has decided to open three more ports and to make Ping-Yang an open market.—A British force has occupied Wei-hai-wei, and is taking measures to improve the fortifications and to institute effective sanitation.—During the past week there have been sixty-three cases of plague in Hong Kong and sixty-one deaths.—It seems that passports are necessary for Port Arthur and Ta-lien-Wan, but the Russian visé is optional, not compulsory.—The Russians have imposed a heavy annual licence fee on traders at Ta-lien-Wan.—The Japanese Diet has rejected a motion for a petition to the Throne against the policy of the Government in China.

The Spanish-American War.—After numerous conflicting rumours as to the actual whereabouts of Admiral Cervera's squadron, the bombardment of the forts at the entrance of Santiago bay elicited the fact that the Spanish ships were really in hiding there. Later has come the news, apparently quite trustworthy, that the coal hulk Merrimac, in charge of Lieut. Hobson and seven seamen, has been sunk across the narrow entrance to the harbour—a brave deed undertaken at enormous risk. It is said, however, that the Merrimac has since been blown up by the Spaniards, and the fair-way is clear again. Other telegrams relating to the struggle are more or less problematical. No doubt measures are being taken by the Washington Government for landing troops on Cuba at some point near Santiago. But whether the despatch announcing the landing of 5000 men at Punta Cabrera is reliable it is impossible to state. There seems some ground for believing the report that Spain is ready to make overtures of peace.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Newcastle has been so indisposed that he is obliged to cancel all engagements for the present month.

Rev. F. E. Markby, of Bootle, has announced his intention to resign, with a view to taking up mission work abroad.

Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P., has accepted the Presidency of the National Protestant Church Union, vacant by the resignation of Lord Midleton.

Rev. E. Sidney Savage, late vicar of Jesmond, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and son-in-law of the Dean of Canterbury, has been appointed rector of Hexham Abbey.

Dr. A. Neve, C.M.S. Medical Missionary in Kashmir, has, while spending a week in Dublin, been speaking twice, and sometimes three times a day, on behalf of Medical Missions.

The annual gatherings of the Western Clerical and Lay Association were held last week; Canon Quirk, the rector of Bath, who is President of the Association for this year, presiding.

A scheme is on foot for the erection of a new church at Driffield, and £1500 has been promised by the Marriott Trustees on condition that a like sum is raised by private subscription.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man characterises unauthorised services at present provoking strife as idolatrous, superstitious, and absolutely inconsistent with the maintenance of the national Church as such.

No fewer than 150 children have been baptized at one time at St. Lawrence's Church, Birmingham. This is one of the poorest parishes in the city. After a careful canvass, 100 adults have sent in requests for baptism. We must not mistake this for real conversion; but as a sign of an awakened interest in rellgious matters the fact is encouraging.

Women's work in the church is fast coming into that prominence which is its right. Last week a special conference was held at St. Martin's Town-hall to discuss various phases of women's work in the diocese of London, and an interesting and useful time was spent. Mrs. Creighton presided, and in her opening remarks touched upon a very real difficulty in connection with women's work, viz., isolation.

Rev. Arthur Robins, rector of Holy Trinity, Windsor, in the course of a recent sermon, strongly denounced the extreme practices in vogue at some of the more advanced churches. There were those, he said, who professed themselves to be of our Communion, who in this nineteenth century, with all the solemn vows of ordination on them notwithstanding, had accumulated round the things they did so treacherously teach those very same idolatries by which a recreant Church had been slaying souls for nearly sixteen centuries.

The Archbishop of York has returned to England much improved in health. He is still suffering much pain from acute rheumatism in the right arm, but is resuming his usual work. Convocation of the Northern Province meets this week for the transaction of business in York Minster. In the Upper House the Bishop of Liverpool has on the agenda paper the following notice of motion:—"That, in the opinion of this House, the increase of lawlessness on the part of many of the clergy in the conduct of Divine worship in their churches, and especially the introduction of unauthorised services in the celebration of the Holy Communion, and the growing dissatisfaction of the laity in consequence of such lawlessness, demand the active interference of the Bishops."

Congregational.

Rev. G. Lang has closed his ministry at Soothill, Batley.

Rev. W. Harrop has been recognised as pastor of Grove Chapel, Gomersal.

Rev. J. Plowright has been recognised as pastor at Windhill, Shipley.

Rev. Herbert Arnold has been recognised as pastor at Southernhay, Exeter.

Rev. E. W. Lewis has been welcomed to the pastorate at Swan Hill, Shrewsbury.

Rev. A. J. Brown has been recognised as pastor of Whiting-street, Bury St. Edmunds.

Rev. Dr. Stalker will preach in connection with the anniversary of Cheshunt College at the end of the present month.

Rev. F. Hirst has concluded his ministry at Hope-street, Hull, and entered on the pastorate at Harley-street, Bow, on Sunday.

Mr. H. Ll. Willett Bevan, son of Rev. Dr. Bevan, of Melbourne, Victoria, has been accepted for foreign service by the London Missionary Society.

The opening of the new College Chapel at Mill Hill School will take place on June 22. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, will preach at the opening service.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have appointed Mr. P. L. McAll, B.A. (son of the late Rev. Robert McAll), as successor to the late Dr. E. P. Turner at Hankow.

In New Zealand the Congregationalists have taken a new lease of life. Though their numbers are not large, their influence is widely felt in the social and municipal life of the colony.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, President of the Wesleyan Conference, occupied the pulpit at Carr's-lane, Birmingham, on Sunday, while Rev. J. H. Jowett was at the C. E. Convention at Glasgow.

Over 10,000 homeless men are lodged and fed year by year by the London Congregational Union; 30,000 garments are distributed among the needy and deserving; missions are sustained in various parts of London for meeting the requirements of the immediate neighbourhoods; children's free meals are provided during the winter; new homes are found in British Colonies for suitable men; and interwoven with all these efforts there is the one aim—to make the religion of Christ an ever-increasing power in moulding the life and character of the people.

Baptist.

Rev. John Onions, of Tipton, has accepted a call to Gorse-hill, Swindon.

Rev. Joseph Gay has accepted the pastorate at Woodborough-road, Nottingham.

Mr. G. Armitt has been recognised at Long Preston.

Mr. W. G. Butt, of the Pastor's College, has accepted the pastorate at Stow-on-the-Wold.

Rev. and Mrs. Moir Duncan have reached this country on furlough from the province of Shensi, in Western China.

At the annual meeting of Wilts and East Somerset Association the membership was reported at 3587, an increase of forty-four.

Rev. J. Chadwick, of South Norwood, will close his ministry there on June 30. By medical advice he will take a period of complete rest.

Rev. H. N. Patrick, who has been compelled to leave Tangier, owing to the inability of his children to stand the climate, is now staying at Brackenhurst, Redhill.

Rev. R. H. C. and Mrs. Graham have arrived from the Lower Congo. Rev. C. J. Dodds, who is much better, has also arrived from the Upper Congo, having travelled by the new railway the entire distance from the Pool to Matadi.

Rev. W. Gay, at the meeting of the Yorkshire Association, took as the subject of his presidential address "The Christian Ideal." Rev. A. P. Fayers said the statistics of the year showed a total membership of 20,699, being a clear increase of 196.

A friend writes:—"The splendid meeting, held at the East London Tabernacle in recognition of Pastor Jones, has been followed by much blessing. Twenty were baptized on Thursday evening, and more are coming forward."

Last Sunday, at Battersea Chapel, Rev. W. Hamilton gave the right hand of welcome to twenty-two new members, several of whom have been brought to decision during a recent successful mission conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne.

The Home Counties Association held its spring meeting on May 24 at Annandale-road Chapel, Chiswick. Rev. W. P. Edgerton read a paper on "Evidences of the Presence of the Holy Spirit in the Church." At the dinner speeches were made by Mr. W. Hart, Mayor of Kingston-upon-Thames, Revs. J. P. Clark and F. G. Benskin. In the afternoon a meeting was held to deepen the interest of the churches in foreign missions. Addresses were given by Rev. J. J. Turner (China), Rev. C. Rudge (Nyassa Mission, Africa), and Miss Gleazer (Orissa). At night, Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached to a crowded congregation.

Methodist.

A Gospel car is now at work in the Isle of Man, with good results.

Dr. Crothers is closing twelve years' work as principal and tutor at Ranmoor College.

In the Hanley districts many of the chapels report "the incoming of a tide of spiritual life."

The first United Methodist Conference has been held in Queensland, Rev. Henry Youngman being chosen first president. In South and West Australia 1899 has been fixed as the year of union, and in Victoria and Tasmania 1902.

New chapels have been, or are about to be opened in Carlton-street, Burton-on-Trent; Tregoney, Mevagissey; Watford; High-street, Chelmsford; York-road, Southend; Ambleside; Mundesley, near Cromer; and Church Gresley.

The Primitive Methodist Conference, which opened at Leeds this week, will discuss a proposal for the establishment of a ministerial sustentation fund, the object of which will be to secure a certain minimum salary for every minister in the Connexion.

The London Mission Band Union mustered in great force on Whit-Monday at the Victoria Hall, East Greenwich, where services were held at three and seven, besides open-air services prior to each meeting. There were large numbers present and several cases of decision.

Alderman Thomas Snape expects early this month to leave New York for Liverpool, having completed his tour round the world. Throughout Australia and New Zealand he was most cordially received, and is the bearer of many interesting messages, which he will deliver at the annual Assembly soon to meet in Lincoln.

Presbyterian.

Rev. D. Watters, of Cardiff, has had to apply for an additional three months' leave of absence.

"Sister Bennett" has been appointed to assist Rev. P. A. Milne in the poor district of Lambeth.

Erskine Church, Newcastle, rebuilt on the old site, was opened on the 25th ult., the service being conducted by Rev. George Davidson.

It is stated that Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square, leaves in September to visit the mission stations and India. He will be absent about six months, returning in time for next Synod.

Salvation Army.

A new industrial Home for women has been opened in Toronto.

Salvation Army work has been commenced in Barbadoes, under very promising conditions.

The General will shortly visit Norway, Sweden, and Paris, where he will open a new shelter for men.

New Rescue Homes have recently been opened in Berlin, Perth (Western Australia), and Malmo, in Sweden.

The New South Wales Government have granted £300 to assist the Salvation Army Social work in that colony.

General Booth has been addressing a series of meetings in Belfast, and has been warmly welcomed by ministers and members of various denominations.

The Government of Ceylon makes a grant of 100 rupees per month to our prison gate work there, and has given some six acres of land surrounding the Home to assist with the work.

The Army in Canada has been invited to send an officer to conduct meetings in the Central Prison and the Mercer Reformatory, Toronto. The secretary for social work amongst women has also been asked to lead a Sunday meeting monthly amongst the girls in the Prison Reformatory.

Fallen Asleep.

At Almeley Vicarage (Hereford), on 27th ult., Rev. A. J. F. ADAMS, aged forty, of the C.M.S.—At Bawtry-cum-Austerfield, on 29th ult., Rev. A. D. CAREY, the vicar of the parish.—At Keighley, on 26th ult., Mr. DAVID SHUTTLEWORTH, a prominent leader in the work at Slack-lane.—At Maryport, Mr. G. L. COLLINS, an active worker and S.S. superintendent, and son of the Baptist minister at Little Broughton.—At Wheatfield, Oxon., Rev. C. V. SPENCER, aged seventy-one, rector of the parish for forty-six years.—At Eye, Mr. COUNCILLOR COLLINS, long and prominently connected with Christian work in Peterborough.—At Kilburn, N.W., Rev. MARK SYMONS, who retired in 1891 after forty-three years service as a Wesleyan minister.—At Nottingham, Mrs. LAWRENCE, aged sixty-eight, a devoted helper for many years.—At Carlton, Nottingham, Mr. J. CRIPWELL, aged sixty-eight, for nearly fifty years a faithful preacher of the Gospel.—At Grimsby, aged forty-one, Mr. C. TILLBROOK, an active useful worker.—At Wakefield, Mr. F. MILTHORP, formerly Mayor of the town, and an earnest Christian.—At New Brompton, Mr. T. DAVISON, an active worker among the Methodists.—At Wheatley, aged ninety-four, Mr. MOSES THORNE, a respected Christian helper.—At King's Langley, Mr. JEREMIAH ASHE, a preacher of the Gospel for sixty years.—Rev. W. M. ANSTEY, one of the oldest Free Church ministers in the county of Essex, who for a long period was pastor of the Congregational church at Tollesbury, and on his resignation, through advancing years, was succeeded by his son, Rev. W. Basil Anstey.—In Birkenhead, Mr. SAMUEL STITT, in his eighty-second year, one of the best-known Presbyterians in the district, formerly connected with Mount Pleasant Church, but since his removal to Birkenhead an office-bearer in Claughton Church; five years ago he celebrated his jubilee as an elder.—At Glasgow, on the 29th ult., Miss CHRISTIE, Bible-woman, Arbroath, aged fifty-six years, much regretted.—At Cunie, near Edinburgh, Rev. J. LANGNILL, D.D., seventy-four years of age, for forty years minister of the parish; a truly rural pastor.—At Londonderry, Mr. SAMUEL MORRISON, a devoted member of the Methodist Church.—At Ballydehob, co. Cork, Rev. ROBERT NOBLE, for eighteen years rector of the parish.—At Belfast, Mr. THOMAS MATTHEWS, an earnest worker and a liberal member of the Methodist Church.

Notices.

MRS. MEREDITH'S "COMMEMORATION DAY."—The date of this celebration is July 11; not, as given last week, by mistake, June 11.

MODEL LODGING HOUSE.—Will anyone who has had experience in starting and working a model lodging-house, small or large, send particulars of the same to Miss Douglas Dale, Holmesdale Gardens, Hastings, who is anxious to receive information?

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—W. R. Johnson, Templetown, Consett; Miss Chance, 21, Emma-street, Hackney-road, N.E.; Miss F. Wichett, 80E, Goldsmith's-row, Hackney-road, N.E.; E. J. Finer, 35, Dacre-road, Upton Manor, Upton; Rev. J. A. Clark, 81, High-street, Silverdale, near Newcastle, Staffs; Amelia Millard, 135, Old Ford-road, Victoria Park, E.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be CAREFULLY READ before being given away.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—P.H.B. A.K.P. Mrs. R.H. J.A.B. J.D.H. E.T.H. T.W.S. F.W.B. T.H. A.W.H. F.E.T. N.C.W. W.H. C.R.H. E.C.T. J.K. A.F. J.M. M.G.B. J.P.S. E.P. M.H. S.T. V.L. A.H.F. H.J.R.M E.S.L. J.S. M.G. F.O.R. S.A.G. A.A.M. W.C. A.M. F.J.M. T.C. F.H.F. W.H.G. M.M. A.H.C. R.C. D.D.T. E.S. F.B. G.B.H. H.M. J.F.M. A.C.M. I.W. R.W. S.K. H.H. G.P.G. W.R. S.P.E. J.B. J.B.B. B.M. A.F.B. E.A.M. F.S.C. A.B. M.I. N.H.

Lads in Guildford.—In the paragraph we recently inserted with respect to work in Guildford we ought to have stated that the address of Mr. Macdonald, the worker who is now laid aside, is The Baths, Commercial-road, Guildford.

Metropolitan Tabernacle.—A friend has placed at the disposal of the Tabernacle, for the benefit of the re-building fund, a number of views taken before and after the fire. They are 1s. each, and copies may be had of the secretary, College Buildings, Temple-street, S.E.

C.M.S. College.—There is need of good, sound Gospel tracts to be used in the mission conducted by the students of the College. Any tracts sent by readers shall be put to the very best use. Parcels should be addressed to the tract secretary of the C.M.S. College, Islington, London, N.

The Gospel in Camp.—About a thousand militiamen from various parts of England and Wales will be assembled for their annual training under canvas at Brecon, South Wales, in the course of a few days. Every year the camp is visited repeatedly and systematically by Christian friends with tracts and religious papers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets are earnestly solicited by D. Devoir Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff.—A visit after seven years was paid to the Strangers' Rest on Whit-Monday last for the meetings and tea given to the seamen on these occasions in order to gather them in under bright Christian influence, and keep them out of the temptations of the streets. My heart was rejoiced to find the same steady work going on with real spiritual warmth and vitality flowing through work and workers. Many a Christian worker to-day must feel glad that they ever knew and went to the Strangers' Rest, as well as many a foreign and English seaman! J. M. L.

Children and the Country.—A very prettily got up and well illustrated booklet sent out by the London Congregational Union gives delightful glimpses of the work of providing London children with a period of change in the beautiful country. "Ten shillings meets the entire cost of board and lodging of one child for a fortnight. How many lovers of children will spare this sum from the cost of their own country or seaside holiday? There are still thousands of poor little ones who have never known the pleasure and benefit of a fortnight, or even a day, in the country or at the seaside. They grow up somehow in the midst of poverty, knowing little or nothing of the wonders of God's beautiful garden. Is it surprising that so many of them are delicate and stunted, and that such a large proportion of them sicken and die? Let the sun shine upon them, let fresh air be all about them, let flowers speak to them and birds sing to them, and there will be such a transformation as will bring a new song into their lives, and new joy to those who have helped them to learn the song." The superintendent of the work is Mr. E. Wilson Gates, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London. E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
14 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

NOW that the summer has come, many will be looking forward to a holiday. May we remind such that thousands of poor children are longing for that one bright Day in the Country, which to the prisoners of London's dull courts and alleys means so much. From all quarters workers amongst the poor are asking for help to give their children this annual treat. Our fund for this purpose is now open, but as yet it is very far short of the amount needed to meet the claims which seem most urgent. Surely many of our readers will consider how much they can spare to aid in giving the children a glimpse of the green fields and a taste of the fresh air. We should be glad to hear at once from all who are willing to help in this matter.

Among the possibilities of cycling as an aid to Christian work is the opening afforded of conducting village work. There are very many villages within riding distance of our towns and cities in which local workers would heartily welcome relief parties to conduct evangelistic meetings. Such excursions would refresh both body and soul, and would awaken interest and reap a harvest in many a lethargic hamlet. As the difficulty is for those willing to work to get into touch with local friends, we would suggest that any country residents desirous of such assistance should address an appeal to the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of the nearest town. It would be surprising if many such appeals went unanswered; they would certainly obtain hearty co-operation wherever there was spiritual life, and we should be glad to hear of the results of experiments in this direction.

There should be a special value in the week-night service or prayer-meeting during th summer months. Many of the other activities in the churches are quiescent till the autumn. The strain and distraction of committees and organisations for the time are over. The whole thought and aspiration of the soul can be concentrated into this one channel of worship and fellowship. Apart from it, the week is a desert so far as common prayer and praise are concerned. If a little sacrifice of time and ease were made, what a happy time such gatherings would provide for those attending. Unfortunately this is too seldom the case; in most churches it would seem that most members look upon the summer as a kind of holiday from all kinds of religious exercise except on the Sunday. There is here room for a great and beneficial reform.

A thoughtful article in the Methodist Times calls attention to another form of neglect to which many Christian people are prone. That is, to absent themselves thoughtlessly from the Lord's table. The more vigorous our denunciation of the superstitious and sacerdotal errors so lamentably associated with the rite in the minds of many, the more earnest should be our witness to the importance and efficacy of this simple and beautiful memorial of the dying love of our Lord. There is a charming little story told of a Hindoo who had been led to Christ by reading the Gospel, who was miles away from any missionary, and had never been inside a Christian church who found in his New Testament the command to eat and drink in memory of the Saviour's death, till He should come. Knowing nothing at all of Church order and ritual, he was accustomed day by day to take a little rice, saying, "This I do in remembrance of Christ"; then, drinking a little water, he would say, "I drink this because Christ died for me." Thus in his solitude was the lonely disciple taught of the Spirit to nourish his inner life.

Ought those in the full light of the Gospel to be less devout and faithful to their Lord's commandment?

In his reply in The Contemporary to Mr. Heath's paper on "The Decline of Evangelicalism," Dr. Guinness Rogers undoubtedly makes some good points, e.g., where he shows that the Evangelical faith is often held where we least expect to find it, and that in the Bible Society, the C.M.S., the L.M.S., and the Religious Tract Society there are no signs of waning power; that such difficulty as does exist comes not from diminished incomes or fewer workers, but from increase of work to be done. But we think the optimistic apologist takes doubtful and dangerous ground when he says that the absence of the people from the worship of the churches may be traced to various causes, but among them is not a widespread unbelief.

They may have lost faith in the churches, but that does not mean that they have lost faith in God, in immortality, in retribution.

But inquiry reveals customs and habits among the great bulk of non-churchgoers that point not to any faith at all, but to utter indifference and ungodliness. It is not that thousands of them absent themselves from worship, and indulge in open, flagrant sin, but that they simply live without God; and the evidence goes to show that that is getting worse. That is the fact to be faced. "How can we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

On the other hand, there is an evident desire, as in the days of our Lord, to hear the Word of God. At the noon meeting at Aldersgate-street on Monday this was repeatedly asserted. Wherever the Scriptures are intelligently and Evangelically expounded the common people listen to the preacher earnestly.

Evangelists get into the way of parting with their converts, and think little of it, but it is often a sore trial to the settled pastor. When two souls come together, as did Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch, and the evangelist is removed, and the two see each other no more, but each goes on his way rejoicing, they have accomplished the Divine intent, and are not torn with a sense of unfulfilled service; but when a pastor has converts, whom he has just received into fellowship, removed from his care, he feels as if something had gone wrong; his work is cut short; his hopes are blighted. But this often comes to pass in these days, and will do so more and more. Facilities for travelling and the inevitable changes in residence show that the pastor, like the evangelist, will often labour for other men to enter into his labours. Let him take it cheerfully. Souls are converted for the service and glory of Christ, not for the comfort of a pastor or for the increase of a particular church.

What is it that constitutes a church? Dr. Forsyth writes in The Independent on the peril of prematurely acknowledging secessions and splits as bonâ-fide churches. It is not always and of necessity true, he urges, that every "two or three gathered together under the banner of Christ" are met in his name.

A church is not a group that cries "Lord, Lord," till they give proof of doing what He commands and of having Him in their midst. We have no right to recognise any church till we recognise in it Him who makes the church.

One characteristic act of the late Mr. Plimsoll has special meaning in view of the fast-ripening relations of brotherhood between this country and the United States. In 1896 he went across the Atlantic on a mission of mercy that has greatly helped to bring about this result. It is well known that American prejudice against England had been fostered by the way in which the historical relations of the two countries had been described in the school text-books. Mr. Plimsoll made it his business to see the Minister of Education on the matter, showed up the objectionable passages, and secured their suppression from the authorised histories used in Government schools. On his return to this country, when he ascertained the success of his mission, he fell on his knees and burst into tears of joy and thankfulness to God. His last days were cheered with a sight of the rapidly ripening harvest the seed of which he had helped so assiduously to sow.

The sudden collapse of Mr. Hooley, the company promoter, whose affairs are in the hands of the Official Receiver, illustrates the folly of those who "make haste to be rich." The morality of company promotion is a profound mystery, and the law on the subject is little better. Indeed, if there are statutes which need revision and reform, those relating to the responsibilities of this class of speculators are among the foremost. For a time these people carry all before them, and by the simple device of over-capitalising their concerns are able to heap up immense fortunes at the expense of those who trust in them. Mr. Hooley's case is a startling instance of the reversal of the wheel of fortune. From a sevenfold millionaire to a bankrupt seems a long way to travel; in this case a year has sufficed for the journey. But it takes many "dreadful examples" to effectually warn those who are ever feverishly trying to manipulate the financial world in the hope of growing rich.

Company promoters and speculators could not carry on their work if there were not hosts of men and women prepared to make money with their eyes shut as to the morality of the means by which it is made. When they have made their share, if they do make it, they are ready to pull away from the sinking man and his sinking concerns.

If those who fall into the snare of mammon worship, and sacrifice their soul's welfare in what is often a vain struggle to become wealthy, were to inquire into the mental condition of many of those whom they envy in this matter, they would probably pause before they gave up so much for so problematic a good. Here is the testimony of another millionaire on the subject, Mr. Carnegie, the great ironfounder :—

You know how people are all moaning about poverty as being a great evil, and it seems to be accepted that if people only had money and were rich they would be happy, and more useful, and get more out of life. There never was a greater mistake. ...There is more happiness, more satisfaction, and a truer life, and more obtained from life, in the cottages of the poor than in the palaces of the rich.

Surely Agar's prayer is still the ideal : "Give me neither poverty nor riches...lest I be full and deny Thee...or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain" (Prov. xxx. 8).

Mr. Sydney Holland, the indefatigable chairman of the London Hospital, is taking up the case of the terrible sufferers from lead poisoning in the potteries. The poor victims of this fateful industry appeal to Christian people with a pathos born of a dire distress. In a letter to The Times, Mr. Holland gives the case of these sorely afflicted workers as it came under his own observation. It is incomprehensible how the evil has been allowed to reach its present proportions without an earlier protest. This is what Mr. Holland describes :—

I have been appalled and sickened by a sight I have just seen at the London Hospital—a sight which convinced me that if the public could be brought to realise the terrible sufferings which are endured by a large number of women, children, and men in the Staffordshire potteries, the misery would be ended. I have just left a poor woman sitting quietly and patiently, resigned to her terrible fate, blinded for life by lead poisoning. By her side sat another girl, nearly blinded by the same foul poison, but whose sight we hope to save. In another ward is a poor man suffering from epileptic fits from the same cause...Not one of these people is receiving any help from their employers....Fourteen cases of blindness have just come to light...the majority total and incurable.

The appearance of a new novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward inevitably recalls her famous "Robert Elsmere," but it has to be recalled, for, once in everyone's mouth, now it is never mentioned, and the simple Gospel of the grace of God, which it seemed to threaten, still holds on its way. The same speedy and ignominious fate has overtaken that hysterical, unreal tale, "The Christian," notwithstanding its endorsement by many great names. These hot penny rolls are not good enough to live on ; "the sincere milk of the Word" and "the solid food" can alone sustain life and promote growth.

We do not depend upon such testimony as that given by Mr. Frederic Harrison in The Nineteenth Century as to the merits of our English translation of Sacred Scriptures. Our Bible is precious not so much—perhaps not at all—on account of "style." We prize it as the revelation of God. Its promises, time and again, sustain our sinking spirits. Its Gospel is the most beautiful thing under the shining heavens. Still we do not despise the beauty of the Bible from a literary point of view, when Mr. Harrison says :—

The English Bible is the true school of English literature...if you care to know the best that our literature can give you in simple, noble prose—mark, learn, and inwardly digest the Holy Scriptures in the English tongue.

Yes! but more than that. Our Bible shows us God in Christ in quest of men to restore in them the Divine image that sin has so wantonly defaced, and thus to save them, through the Cross, with an everlasting salvation.

In "Collections and Recollections," by "One who Has Kept a Diary," there is a striking passage on the revival of religion at the beginning of this century :—

The first thirty years of this century witnessed a great revival, due chiefly to the Evangelical movement, not only, as in the last century, on lines outside the Establishment, but in the very heart and core of the Church of England. That movement, though little countenanced by ecclesiastical authority, changed the whole tone of religious thought and life in England; it recalled men to serious ideas of faith and duty; it curbed profligacy, it made decency fashionable, it revived the external usages of piety, and it prepared the way for that later movement which, issuing from Oxford in 1833, has so momentously transfigured the outward aspect of the Church of England.

First, it was unnoticed by ecclesiastical authority, and that is generally the case ; "the kingdom of heaven is as a grain of mustard seed"—small and unobserved. Second, it was a great reforming and uplifting power in the social habits of the people ; religion is the salt of a nation. Third, it may have prepared the way for the Oxford movement, but that movement was not its legitimate offspring. Evangelicalism set the train in motion, and Tractarianism shunted it into a siding. True religion is always parodied and corrupted by false forms springing up.

One would imagine that the "freedom of thought" permitted in Unitarian pulpits was sufficient for all purposes, but some of the younger men seem to crave for something still less exacting. At the Unitarian Association lately they claimed that Unitarian churches should be free from any restrictions as to dogma, and that the basis of fellowship should be simply that the Church stand for "repentance, kindness, charity, justice, purity, courage, and godliness." The discussion that followed showed how impossible it is for any of these qualities and virtues to be taught or practised except on a foundation of doctrine. We might add that their perfect fulfilment depends on an adequate acknowledgment of the truths of the Gospel. Doctrine and goodness are related to each other as the head to the heart, as thought to life. Each must be full and broad and deep, in order for the other to realise itself. Paul's faith and Paul's character fed each other as the sea the cloud and the cloud the sea.

While so many deny the incompatibility of Romish and Royal supremacy in England, asserting that allegiance can be paid to Pope and Queen at once, it is interesting to have an object-lesson to the contrary furnished in the City of London by the Romanists themselves. In Ely-place, close to Holborn-circus, stands the interesting ancient church of St. Etheldreda, once the chapel of the Bishops of Ely. On account of its architectural and historical interest it is kept open all day, and visitors may see on the wall of the stairs opposite the entrance to the upper church the English coat of arms in relief, with this inscription beneath it :—

This emblem of the Royal supremacy was removed from the Church of St. Etheldreda on its restoration to the Roman Obedience, A.D. 1876.

Such a declaration requires no comment, but the plausible explanation which would doubtless be put forward by the Romish casuists does. Just as they avoid the consequences of the doctrine of Papal infallibility by attempting to discern between the man and his spirit, so one can imagine their attempting to show that here the supremacy of the Queen over the Church is alone referred to. No one would suppose that to be implied by the presence of the Royal Arms in any Nonconformist place of worship, or in any religious institutions whatever. Why should it be implied here? Other British subjects, of whatever sect or faith, delight in testifying their loyalty, but here we have it from their own lips, in their own words, that English obedience is incompatible with Roman obedience.

The success of Protestant propaganda among Catholic priests and others in France is so alarming (according to the June number of Le Chrétien Français) to the Catholic authorities, that they are descending to the use of the secular arm in order to prevent it from spreading. The ex-priest Charbonnel has created an immense impression in Belgium, and the Romish clergy, in despair of meeting him in argument, are loading him with abuse, and persuading the authorities to suppress his meetings. The editor of the above periodical deprecates the fact that so many priests who come over to Protestant views are content to slip away without making any noise or giving their reasons publicly. Thereby a great opportunity is lost of disseminating the truth in an impressive way. It is good not only to have, but to give, a reason for the hope that is in us.

The alarming decline just now in theological study in the English universities seems characteristic of the Continental schools as well. In Zurich, for instance, once "superlatively theological in tone," there are only thirteen out of 804 students in this faculty, and these will enjoy the services of nine professors, some of great ability and reputation. Whatever be the cause for this, it is a great calamity. Theology deals with the knowledge of God, and the nation that "forgetteth God shall go down to the pit." There is no antidote against the tyranny of the present like a hearty interest in things Divine and eternal. In this country the evil has not developed to the extent it has in France, Switzerland, and Germany, but it is serious enough to make heart-searching a duty on the part of all who have any influence with young students.

In the Revised Version of the New Testament there is a suggestive use of the definite article in several passages. Thus Acts v. 41 : "They therefore departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer dishonour for the Name." There was no other name worthy to be compared to this name in the estimation of the brethren, and therefore to them it was The Name. Again, in Philippians ii. 9 : "Wherefore also God highly exalted Him, and gave unto Him the Name which is above every name, that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow." The name above every name is the Name Jesus. We find a similar emphasis laid upon The Way. In Acts ix. 2, Saul asked of the high priest "letters to Damascus unto the synagogues, that if he found any that were of the Way, whether men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem." Again, xix. 9 and 23 : "Some were hardened and disobedient, speaking evil of the Way before the multitude...And about that time there arose no small stir concerning the Way." Again, xxiv. 22 ; "But Felix, having more exact knowledge concerning the Way, deferred them." The faith and the manner of life of the brethren were so marked and singular that it could be fitly described by this epithet : "The Way."

Pastoral Evangelism

By DWIGHT L. MOODY.

THE great question of every pastor's life ought to be, How to reach with the Gospel those who do not want to be reached. I admit that all have not the same gifts—that some are specially adapted for evangelistic work, while others seem born to teach. Yet I believe that many a pastor does not know the gifts that are in him because he has never tested himself. Who should seek out the unconverted in the churches and bring them to Christ, if not the pastors themselves; and who should look after young converts and feed them rather than they? The Church would die out if there were no additions born of evangelistic efforts.

I make no secret of the source of power for successful Christian work. It lies in a firm belief in the Bible as the Word of God, and in the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Whoever relies upon the Word of God and the Spirit of God will find his efforts fruitful in spite of his own deficiencies. The same results are produced everywhere. Unless the Holy Ghost attend the Word in power, the preaching will be in vain. Human eloquence is like sounding brass if the living Spirit be absent. The prophet may preach to dry bones, but only the breath from heaven can cause the slain to live. That is what we need—the old power that the apostles had, and not new themes and new organisations and new plans.

There ought to be at least three kinds of services in every church: one for prayer and praise; another for teaching; another for evangelising. Sunday morning is the best time for teaching, and Sunday night is the best occasion of the regular church services, to preach the Gospel and seek converts.

THE SUNDAY EVENING SERVICE.

It is a great calamity that many pastors nowadays have either given up the Sunday evening service altogether, or else throw away their opportunity by preaching on all sorts of sensational public topics. I believe that if our Sunday evening services were conducted as they were twenty years ago hundreds would be brought into the light.

One important reason why this night is so advantageous is that you can then catch a crowd that you cannot get at any other service. When I was in England some years ago I was told that over ninety per cent. of the working men of Birmingham, Sheffield, Leeds, and other towns never attended church. Now these, as a rule, do not rise early enough to attend morning service, but in the evening they would have time to come. The same is true of other classes of society, such as servants. Sunday evening is, therefore, the time to make a special effort to get them to attend.

ADVERTISING.

Much can be accomplished by judicious advertising. If business men conducted their business in the same way as most churches, they would fail inside of six months. Think of the millions of dollars locked up in churches that are closed five or six days a week! I know of no other greater waste of capital.

Almost the only notice you find on some churches is the undertaker's or the sexton's. This is surely wrong. There should be bulletin-boards on every church, so that no one can pass by without having his attention drawn to what is going on. Let the bill of fare be published. There is no trouble about having full churches if you invite the people and give them real spiritual food.

But someone says: "Advertising is not dignified." Dignified! "I do not find that dignity is the fruit of the Spirit," someone has said; and I do not see much dignity, or inspiration either, in preaching to empty pews.

The service itself should be made attractive and interesting. Get the young people into the choir, and have half an hour's praise service, with good bright singing, in which all join. Let this be followed by a red-hot Gospel address, lasting not more than half an hour. But do not stop here. Whenever the Gospel is preached there should be the expectation of immediate results. Hence, after the sermon, let the pastor give permission to any who are obliged to withdraw to do so during the singing of a hymn, and let him invite any who are concerned about their spiritual condition to remain to a short after-meeting. People do not expect to be converted at the morning service, but the net should be drawn in the evening. This programme should, of course, be varied to suit local conditions. The service should not be smothered by routine.

Some object to such services, and say they are sensational. Now, sensation may be true or false; and I think many churches need a little of the right kind. Perhaps the most sensational preaching the world has ever seen occurred nineteen hundred years ago. Didn't John the Baptist draw crowds out of the cities to the wilderness and the banks of the Jordan? Didn't Christ attract multitudes wherever He went? Didn't the apostles turn cities upside down? Would to God that we had more "sensational" preaching of that kind!

In order to support his own efforts, the pastor should have a capable of dealing with inquirers. Successful Christian work is personal work. Every believer ought to have a good working knowledge of the Bible, so as to be able to lead others to Christ.

TRAINED BODY OF MEN AND WOMEN

I challenge anyone to point out a church that has conducted the Sunday evening service on the lines mentioned above without having conversions all the time. And it will be found that the whole church will be raised into a good spiritual condition and all its activities quickened as a result of the revival spirit of the Sunday evening service.

THE PREACHING.

A few words regarding the preaching. I believe it is a woful mistake for ministers to seek notoriety by preaching on passing events. What does the average minister know about Cuba, and the problems of labour and capital? They are not fitted to speak on such subjects, because their study has been, or ought to have been, along other lines. Furthermore, the people are hungry for the Word of God. Can we say that we retain the apostolic idea of preaching when ministers can preach only half an hour once or twice a week, and then have to take two or three months' rest during the summer? The truth is, they wear themselves out looking for novelties, which prove to be vanity, because they bring no healthy increase in number or in spirituality.

I undertake to say that a man who studies his Bible faithfully will be running over with sermons, and will always be in demand. There is nothing that draws crowds like the old Gospel. It is the only remedy and balm for men and women tired of sin, and in all my experience I do not recall one pastor who has proved a failure if he preached the Word in simplicity and sincerity, and moulded his ministry along Gospel lines.

Cheltenham Convention.

MEETINGS for the deepening of spiritual life were held at the Assembly Rooms of this beautiful town last week, under the same auspices as the conference usually held at Gloucester. It is probable that it will in future be held in each place alternately year by year.

An earnest and devout spirit pervaded each gathering, and one expectant of blessing, which was not withheld.

Among the speakers were Revs. Evan Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, G. H. C. Macgregor, J. J. Luce, and other well-known teachers.

Care was taken explicitly to disown what is known as sinless perfection, the Divine standard taking account of sins of omission as well as actual wrong-doing. While the latter may and should be avoided by the Spirit-filled man, yet who can say he has attained to the standard of never leaving undone things that he ought to have done? It was further urged that the nearer the believer lives to God the more he will realise his unworthiness when his best endeavour is compared to the pure holiness and righteousness of God; and the less inclined will he be, therefore, to speak of his own attainment.

All the addresses were thoughtful and stimulating, and will no doubt—in answer to much prayer offered before and during the Convention—bear fruit in many regenerated and consecrated lives.

The Gambling Curse.

SOME few years since Mr. Hughes, M.P., speaking in the House of Commons, said that horse-racing had given to the British nation, in his opinion, a system of gambling the most corrupting, the most insidious, and therefore the most mischievous and abominable, that had ever cursed any country. "In my own experience," he said, "I have known hundreds of instances in which this system has been the absolute ruin of young men in this country. I have had to raise for different families no less than £20,000 for youngsters who have lost it in gambling on the Turf, and all that money has gone into the pockets of some of the greatest rascals unhung."

Mr. Gladstone, who was then Prime Minister, the same evening, in the course of his speech, said: "The House agrees with my honourable friend the member for Frome (Mr. Hughes) in his denunciation of the foolish, mischievous, and I will say ruinously vicious, practices associated with the Turf."

As I am writing the news comes of a woman living in this very neighbourhood (Shepherd's Bush) who has committed suicide, and when dying said, "Betting has been the cause of my doing this."

When a German officer committed suicide, after having lost all his wealth at the gaming tables of Wiesbaden, Count Bismarck had to break the news to the sorrowing young widow. As he returned he was heard to say: "This infernal business must be stopped," and it was stopped. But it is reported that no less than while the gaming tables were permitted; and are not our own daily papers constantly proving that losses through betting lead men to destroy themselves body and soul?

250 SUICIDES OCCURRED ANNUALLY

Said a "tipster" to one of our brethren at Doncaster races: "If you want to know the way to hell, keep on gambling, and you'll soon get there."

When speaking recently at Fulham Town Hall at one of the meetings held to protest against gambling, an ex-prison chaplain said: "In a Staffordshire gaol one whole corridor of cells is filled with young men who have been sent there as the outcome of betting.

I remember six young men appearing in prison clothes as witnesses against a man who kept a gambling-house in Bayswater. All these young men had been ruined through attending this place, and had been previously sentenced for robbing their employers.

Surely all this goes to prove not merely the folly, but the solemn danger, attached to gambling. Loss of money, of all true morality, of body—ay, and of soul—may be incurred when once the man or woman is launched on the dangerous sea of a gambler's life. Nearly all classes are affected by it; even a pauper the other day was discovered with seventeen shillings in his pocket, which he had gathered from the inmates of "the house"—he being the bookmaker. We need to lay ourselves out to warn specially the young of this awful disease, which is spreading so rapidly, and it would be well if we could put some good, sound, simple literature into the hands of those who are ensnared by the hopes of gain—booklets which, besides showing the folly and danger of gambling, should lead to heart-searching and repentance about the sin of gambling, and also set forth the only remedy, the acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour from wrong-doing and the strength of the soul to do the right.

CHAS. COOK.

Sunday Drinking.—A public-house in north-east London was under observation the whole of Sunday, June 5. From one to three o'clock the following entered the house and were served—45 children, 19 women, and 254 men; whilst from six to eleven the numbers were 97 children, 179 women, and 406 men. The totals for the day amounted to 142 children, of whom 57 were without jugs, 193 women, of whom 42 carried babies, and 663 men, making a grand total of 1003. The task of counting was voluntarily undertaken by members of the London United Temperance Council.

American Notes.

After leaving Chicago, we spent a few days at Byron, near London, Canada, with our old friend Mr. G. Rudston Garthorne, of whom many of our friends know as having, twenty odd years ago, given up a lucrative wine and spirit business, and thus exchanged a large income for restricted means. His eldest son has been in Canada for several years, and now Mr. and Mrs. Garthorne, with another son and a daughter, have gone to settle on a little farm of thirty acres, which in a not very distant future promises to become valuable as building land. Mr. Garthorne has found an open door for the Gospel, which Mrs. Garthorne's unostentatious piety commends. The family is a godsend to the neighbourhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Varley came to London during our visit, and an invitation from the Y.M.C.A. for a few days extended to weeks, during which, in Bible readings and Gospel preaching, Mr. Varley attracted the young men and others, and left many seals to his ministry. Mrs. Varley's addresses, also, were much appreciated; those who know her value as well as I do will not be surprised at this.

EVANGELISTS CRITICISED.

Some professional ministers were highly incensed against professional evangelists at this time, and Rev. George Gilmour read a paper at a Presbyterian Council very far from complimenting them. He was supported by Rev. A. B. Macgregor, who had no sympathy with travelling evangelists—they were dogmatic and emotional. Rev. J. G. Stuart's view was that the minister should be the evangelist; the churches should choose men capable of presenting that side of the truth. Rev. W. J. Clark also thought it was the office of the pastor to awaken and persuade people to start a Christian life. Mr. Moody had no doubt done good, but there were many imitators who did harm. They often presented false views of truth. They were often faddists, and made statements that were exaggerations; but it was unwise to enter into controversy with them.

Mr. Alexander lauded Dr. Paton, the old missionary hero, as a true evangelist. He objected to professional evangelists because their training and theology were defective. Mr. Reid thought emotional preaching as undesirable as emotional novel-reading. Mr. Armstrong described the professional evangelist as an unmitigated evil, likened the after-meeting at St. Andrew's Church on the previous Sunday evening to a religious auction mart, and characterised much of what an evangelist had been saying recently as "rot," but admitted, on the other hand, that many things he had said were worth treasuring.

On the other hand, Mr. John Cameron said:

The trend of the paper had been so strongly against visiting evangelists that he was not disposed to add to that side of the discussion. As to the question of harm done, let those who thought harm was done point it out. He would confine himself to some things that might perhaps reasonably be said as to the good that might be done:

1. There was often a new interest awakened by a new voice.

2. The visiting evangelists might not be able to do the continuous work of upbuilding, but they had often awakened and persuaded people to start in the Christian life.

3. They seemed often to reach people whom the regular ministrations did not reach—as did, say, the Salvation Army.

4. Perhaps their existence, like that of the Salvation Army, might indicate that some lack in the church had given the visiting evangelists their opportunity.

5. Special preaching services were not a new idea—all churches, Protestant and Catholic, at times brought them into use.

6. Mr. Moody, as a visiting evangelist, had surely done good, and so had others.

7. The fact that in special services at various times persons otherwise unreached had been converted was in itself some vindication of such special agencies. There were large numbers everywhere who were outside of the churches, and who had to be sought out and gone after. By whom? And how?

Mr. Duncan believed it wrong to draw comparisons between evangelists and ministers. Rev. Mr. Moffatt objected to the paper as too sweeping. He knew of many evangelists who did a great deal of good, and eulogised Rev. J. McNeill. Mr. Jas. Murdoch had always regarded the true evangelist as the salt of the earth. That there was the spurious article was no fault of the good. Evangelists had done much to build up the domestic churches.

Mr. H. M. Lay said it could not be denied that much of their work had been permanent. Look at the far-reaching results of the work of such men as the Wesleys and George Whitfield. They need have no fear. If the work of visiting evangelists was of God, it would stand; if not, it would not. There was not and could not be any close corporation in religious activity.

I have gathered the above from a lengthy report in the London Advertiser, which I have received since my return.

We spent part of two days, at their home in Hartford, Conn., with

REV. E. P. AND MRS. HAMMOND.

I have known this brother on both sides of the Atlantic as one of the most useful men of his generation. To him we owe it that the Children's Special Service Mission, with its splendid history, exists. Many thousands of useful lives in Great Britain and America have been lived from childhood to maturity in the service of God through his ministry as an evangelist. The experience of Rev. A. Torrey in the following letter is that of many. It is dated March 18.

Yesterday afternoon the Lord took away, by diphtheria, our little Elizabeth, nine years old. We have no complaint. I said to my wife that I was so glad I had read E. P. Hammond's "Conversion of Children," and that we had led our children to Christ. I do not know what we would do if we were not sure that Elizabeth was saved, and I shall urge parents as never before to bring their children to Jesus. I am sure the Lord is going to bless this sorrow.

Another parent writes a letter from which I quote one paragraph:

If I had the power I would publish Mr. Hammond's books in every paper, and place them in every family in the land. Every Sunday-school will be blessed by enriching their libraries with these soul-charming books. Fathers and mothers can here learn the greatest art that Heaven makes possible to man—"bringing up the children in the nurture of the Lord."

Shortly before our visit to Mr. Hammond, at one meeting in New York over 220, chiefly children, had professed a newborn love to the Saviour. If this to some sounds more than credible, let it be remembered who it was that said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall in nowise enter into that kingdom."

At New York we called upon Mr. Ballington Booth, commander of the American Volunteers, and his compact little wife, who is a very energetic morsel of sanctified humanity, and more than a helpmate to her husband. They have begun an admirable work among prisoners, whom they have obtained liberty to visit in many of their places of detention, and thousands of whom are thus continuously brought under the sound of the Gospel and under the influence of devoted Christians. In this and other ways they are doing a work sufficiently distinct from the older organisation to prevent the necessity of any rivalry between them.

R. Cope Morgan.

Depression in Jamaica.—At a meeting of the Colonial Missionary Society on Tuesday Rev. James Watson, of Porus, Jamaica, representing the Congregational Union of that colony, said the churches in Jamaica had suffered greatly from commercial depression, continued drought, and increased taxation. They desired to acknowledge their indebtedness to the Colonial Society for sending out suitable men to fill the vacant pastorates, also for such financial assistance from the home churches as would enable them to make up all deficiencies in ministerial stipends to the close of 1897. Despite all discouragements, and they have never been greater than at present, the outlook was hopeful. The future of Jamaica rested with the coloured people, only two per cent. of the inhabitants of the colony being white.

A Beloved Pastor.

It fell to me, some seven or eight years ago, when searching for some quiet spot on the Eastern coast where trippers were unknown and railways had not yet reached, to light upon that tiny old-world village Mundesley-by-the-Sea.

There, where the North Sea beats with fury in winter and spring, but where in summer soft breezes laden with life give zest to the strong and bring back the colour to the cheek of the invalid, I made another discovery. I found there a man in whom was no guile, and one in whom I was happy to find a friend.

He was the pastor of the little mission church, and had been located there about four years, having been called to the pastorate from Norwich early in the year 1889.

Rev. T. R. Matthews was a man of sterling worth, whom to know was to love. Not of robust health, but with the seeds of consumption in him, he was yet a most active man, never failing to visit, in whatever weather, any of his people who might be in sorrow, need, sickness, or any other kind of distress.

To the young he was winning; to youth he was guide, philosopher, and friend; to the sick and aged a companion; to the dying he was ever ready, with words of comfort, to lead them to the Saviour he himself so loved. Never wanting at the call of duty, he, with his devoted wife, lived and laboured for the well-being of his beloved people. When on the Sabbath they met for worship, he, with eloquent and thrilling words, gave them the knowledge of the bread of life, and of unseen things above, guiding them gently, leading them patiently, and speaking words of rebuke to the careless.

But, alas! about three years ago the hidden seeds of consumption began to show themselves. He was attacked with a relaxed throat, which led to a cough and severe hæmorrhage, and which culminated in the entire loss of voice. This was a great trial to him, but his people, though poor, were ever solicitous of their pastor's welfare. Ultimately a rich visitor to the place sent him at his own expense on a voyage to Australia and back, trusting that the change and rest would restore him.

He came back little better than he went. A consultation of his people was held; he saw a physician on the subject of his health, and ultimately it was resolved to send him to South Africa, where it was hoped the climate would restore him to health. Here he began to mend, but his recovery was so slow that at last he despaired of ever returning to England, and accordingly he was obliged to offer his resignation. This was with great reluctance accepted, his people still hoping against hope that he would return.

Mr. Matthews has now sent for his family to go to him, and he has decided upon a quiet spot in the South African Republic, where he hopes, amidst the darkness surrounding the people there, to bring to light the good news of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

He will be much missed by his beloved people, and many people who used to visit Mundesley in the season will be sorry to miss the well-known voice and the vanished face. Alfred M. King.

Fellowship Meetings at Barnstaple.

Some interesting and stimulating meetings were held at Barnstaple on Wednesday of last week in the quaint old chapel so long associated with the venerable Mr. Robert Chapman.

Among the speakers were Mr. Chapman himself, Mr. Richard Heath, Captain Murray, Messrs. J. L. Stanley, St. Dalmas, Lear, etc., the two first-named (one in his ninety-fifth year, the other over eighty) in particular being listened to with much enjoyment and edification.

The faithfulness of God, the stability of his Word in face of all attempts to belittle it, the wiles of Satan to draw men away from faith, the Divine provision of the Christian's armour—these were some of the themes from which helpful thoughts were adduced by the speakers.

In most of the addresses the younger hearers were kept in mind, and well will it be for their spiritual growth if they heed the counsels of wisdom which honoured age and ripe experience set before them.

Work Among U.S. Troops.

By D. L. MOODY.

I HAVE thought the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would be interested to know of the Gospel work being done among the soldiers now in camp in various parts of this country. Including the regular army and the volunteers called out by the President's proclamation, probably not less than 135,000 men are gathered together in these military camps; and a new call has just been issued for 75,000 more.

As everybody knows, a camp-life is subject to peculiar temptations, and thousands of mothers are trembling for their boys, exposed in many instances to such influences for the first time. From the beginning of the war I have felt that God was putting before the Church of America a magnificent opportunity for reaching men, such an opportunity as we might not expect to see again in this generation. My experience in the work of the Christian Commission during our Civil War taught me that there is no better place for reaching men and leading them to Christ than that afforded by these military camps. Large numbers of them are sobered by the thought of the perils of warfare, and are ready to listen to the Gospel. During the Civil War many of the camps were turned into veritable camp meetings, and a good many soldiers were led to Christ. To this day I meet men who were converted during these meetings.

Acting upon our knowledge gained at that time, we have formed a commission for a similar effort during this war. It is our plan to send experienced ministers and evangelists to all the camps to hold Gospel meetings, distribute Bibles and good books, and deal personally with the men. The Secretary of War has given his consent, and given us permission to enter all the camps of the United States army.

General O. O. Howard has entered heartily into the movement, and has himself gone to preach in the camps. He is a retired Major-General of the United States army, and used to be known during the Civil War as the "Havelock" of the service. Major D. W. Whittle, the well-known evangelist, and an old soldier, Dr. A. C. Dixon, pastor of the Hanson-place Baptist Church of Brooklyn, and Mr. J. H. Burke, the Gospel singer, are also in the work. Other good and able men stand ready to go as soon as we are able to send them.

The success of the effort thus far has been most gratifying and encouraging. The work began about three weeks ago among the 15,000 men encamped at Tampa, Florida. From the first it was heartily received by both officers and men. Dr. Dixon wrote to me of his first meeting:—"When we arrived at the Tabernacle last night every seat was filled and hundreds of men were standing up. I had to crawl over the back of the platform, and the choir could not reach the platform at all. The little hymn books were eagerly taken, and the boys sang with spirit the hymns they knew. It was as orderly a meeting as if they were in the church, and at the close of the sermon more than one stood or raised their hands for prayer. A large number remained to talk with us, and I am certain many were won to Christ at our first service."

This interest has continued. Some days as many as twelve services are held, reaching 8000 men. The Bibles and other books are eagerly taken, thoughtfully read, and carefully preserved.

General Howard and Major Whittle have just (May 23) gone to Mobile, Ala., to begin work among the 10,000 men there. Numerous other camps are open to us, and we hope to occupy them within a few days.

The response to the appeal sent out through the religious Press of this country has been such as to show that the Church realises the importance of this opportunity. I want to ask the Christian people of Great Britain to pray that the power of God may rest upon this work, and that the money necessary for carrying it on may be provided.

East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Dear Friends,—Our meetings for the soldiers here at the front are largely attended and deeply interesting. We find many Christians among them, and the boys seem to be glad to have the Gospel preached to them. The singing of the soldiers at the meeting last evening could be heard a mile away.

The weather is very warm, and the men are anxious to move on to Cuba at once. We are praying for the war to close before the hot weather of July and August, as it will be dreadful in its effects on the soldiers in the camps.—Yours truly,

IRA D. SANKEY.

Tampa Bay Hotel, Florida, May 30, 1898.

In a later note Mr. Sankey writes:—"General Howard, Major Whittle, Rev. A. C. Dixon, and Mr. Burke have gone north on account of the heat. I like hot weather, so I am holding the fort with the local ministers. The representative of the London Daily Telegraph says he never knew of an army that would attend so many meetings. Nor has any other country given so much attention to such things in the army."

Prayer for a Convention.

Let us pray! Our God is willing,
Willing now with rich supplies,
Every empty vessel filling
With the blessing of the skies.
God is willing!
Let the prayer in faith arise.

Let us pray! Our God is able
Every needed good to give;
Able to revive and bless us,
Help us for his praise to live.
God is able!
Blackest evils to forgive.

Let us pray! Our God has promised:
Faith upon the promise stands;
In the Father's presence lays it,
Points to it with eager hands—
"Thou hast promised,"
And God answers her demands.

Let us pray! Our God will do it:
Do his promised holy will;
Not one jot or tittle ever
But his faithful hands fulfil.
God will do it!
Pray and plead the promise still.

Let us pray! Our God is working:
Working as we kneel and plead;
Soon the prayer will turn to praising,
And Faith's song the singing lead.
God is working!
Filling now our every need.

WILLIAM LUFF.

Evangelical Tract Society.—We want to send out Bibles and portions in foreign languages, accompanied by a simple leaflet entitled "Are these things so?" by the late Mr. Cheyne Brady, which is intended to serve instead of the personal commendation of the Scriptures in those many instances where the missionary or preacher cannot possibly reach the people with the living voice. The Bibles and portions would be non-Catholic versions exclusively. SAMUEL E. ROBERTS.

10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Medical Mission Key.—The pioneer work of medical missions finds fresh illustration in an incident in the Chinese city of Yuinghan, in Eastern Sz-chuen, recorded by China's Millions. Thither Miss Gower has recently gone on an extended tour, and her medical knowledge opened for her the chief Mandarin's house. A chair was sent for her—the Mandarin's own chair—and she was borne in state, attended by a great crowd, to the Yamen. The ladies of the house were most friendly. She prescribed for the magistrate's wife, and spent the whole day with the ladies, speaking to them about Jesus. "We have never heard this before," was the wondering comment again and again. The visit may possibly pass from the memory of the inmates of the Yamen, though who can say what blessing it may have left behind there?

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was held on Friday at the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor presiding.

Mr. Alderman T. V. Strong read a statement, in which he said:—"We are here to consider the work of an institution which, besides being engaged in other efforts annually, provides a free and liberal breakfast to about 20,000; which annually assists about 6000 discharged prisoners to employment or with tools, clothing, etc.; which maintains five boys' homes for the reception of friendless juvenile offenders, into which about 500 such are admitted every year, and from which they are placed in situations, no effort being spared to transform them into honest, hard-working citizens. We receive daily expressions of thanks from judges and magistrates who send us the cases, and letters of gratitude from numbers we assist. It is admitted that we are doing a work of national importance, and yet during 1897 we received £1297 less in contributions than we did in 1896, and we had to commence this year's work with a deficit of £957.

"We have a number of male and female helpers who are constantly engaged in visitation work, and who daily have to witness sights and hear statements which make them doubly sad as they remember that the funds in hand will not permit them to give that relief which the case demands.

"A large number of our workers are unpaid, and we carry on evangelistic work extensively, both on Sundays and week-days. We also have a home for fatherless and destitute children, a home for women and girls, a seaside convalescent home for adults, and a seaside holiday home for children. Our Sunday-schools contain about a thousand scholars, who are taught by an earnest band of teachers, most of whom are poor and have to work long hours daily for their living."

The LORD MAYOR very emphatically urged the claims of the mission, citing actual cases (two of them that very forenoon) in which children brought before him had been taken hold of by the Mission, to be, doubtless, set on their feet, as thousands had been before them. He did not know what magistrates in a great city could do without such an institution. But it must be supported, for such work cannot be carried on without means.

After a few practical words from Mr. WHEATLEY himself, Sir JAMES VAUGHAN bore further and strong testimony to the valuable work done by the Mission, both among prisoners and among boys (first offenders), while, in addition, large operations are carried on among fallen women and girls and among the poor of St. Giles. The success of the Mission is mainly due to personal contact and personal sympathy with those who seek to escape from wrongdoing.

Colonel Sir C. E. HOWARD VINCENT, M.P., told how at a congress at Antwerp, in the preceding week, of prison workers, he had cited this Mission as the best example in Europe of an effective system of aiding and reforming prisoners. Like the other speakers, he made a strong plea for pecuniary help. Colonel MILLMAN spoke of the invaluable aid he had received at Holloway from Mr. Wheatley, and of the marvellous change wrought in boys coming under the care of the Mission. Mr. REYNOLDS, J.P., urged the value of the work among elder prisoners, giving two cases which had come under his personal observation, in which old offenders had become wholly changed characters.

The Society for the Protection of Birds have issued an appeal to clergy and to the masters and mistresses of elementary, Sunday, and other schools on the subject of man's duty to God in relation to animals. The extent to which useful and beautiful birds on our coasts and inland are being destroyed from sheer wantonness is urged. Also the unchecked employment of pole-traps and steel-toothed gins, by which gamekeepers inflict incalculable suffering on God's creatures; and, as in the case of owls, destroy the very agency designed to maintain the balance of nature and keep down the increase of rats and mice and other vermin. To the masters and mistresses of elementary, Sunday, and all other schools the committee would earnestly appeal to use their great influence in inducing their scholars to protect, instead of persecuting, birds, especially during the nesting season, their most joyful but most helpless time. Further information on the subjects dealt with in this appeal will be forwarded on application to the Hon. Secretary of the Society for the Protection of Birds, 3, Hanover-square, W.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 19.

"Called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord."—1 Cor. i. 9.

THE word for fellowship is the same that is employed in Luke v. 10, of James and John being partners with Simon. We have been called into partnership with the Son of God, in his redemptive purposes, his love and tears for men, and ultimately in his triumph and glory. He has entered into partnership with man, and we are now summoned into partnership with Him through the communion of the Holy Ghost. In the words of the Apostle, "our fellowship (or partnership) is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ our Lord."

How fruitful of comfort is the thought that Christ's interests are ours, and that we are at liberty to draw upon his resources to the uttermost. Suppose a poor clerk were to be summoned from his desk into the counting-house of a Rothschild, and informed that from that moment he was taken into partnership with the firm, would it not be less of an honour than this which has fallen to our lot? Association with millionaires in money-making were infinitely less desirable than association with the Son of God in world-saving. And would that poor clerk feel any anxiety as to his share in meeting the immense liabilities of the concern? However great they might be, he would know that the resources of the firm were adequate, and he would be able to sleep easily at night, though millions were due on the morrow. Child of God, cannot thy Father meet all his Son's engagements?

MONDAY, June 20.

"God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." 1 Cor. ii. 10.

Eyes of my soul, ye have no need to wait until the veil of the flesh that screens off the beatific vision has been rent in twain by the mighty hands of the Angel of Death, ere ye behold the land that floweth with milk and honey!

Ears of my heart, ye need not remain dull and listless till the peal of the archangel's trumpet thrill you, and summon you to the music of the harpers harping on their harps or the chime of the glassy sea.

Heart of mine, be expectant! Awake! Lo! there shall come into thee, penetrating, pervading, filling thy every recess, all those blessed things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. They shall enter thee, as a retinue of knights might enter a beleaguered castle to make it strong against any possible combination of the foe.

Only I must love God. Through Isaiah I am taught that I must wait for Him (Isa. lxiv. 4); here I learn that I must love. For love is quick to know. He that loveth knoweth God. It was the Apostle whom Jesus loved that beheld Him on the margin of the lake. It is to the warm tender atmosphere of loving hearts that the unchecked, ungrieved Spirit unfolds his secrets. Let me, therefore, bathe myself in the gracious atmosphere of my Saviour's presence, never going outside its genial glow, until I am entrusted, through the Spirit, with the deep things of God.

TUESDAY, June 21.

"Let every man take heed how he buildeth."—1 Cor. iii. 10.

A fitting illustration of the Christian life for the people of Corinth, famed for its architecture! We are all builders, whether we choose or not! We may be temple-builders! Each heart, each life, each character, may become a temple of the Holy Spirit.

Every act we do, every word we utter, the way in which we spend any moments of our time, is either a fragment of gold, silver, and precious stones, or of wood, hay, and stubble, built into the rising structure of the erection entrusted to our skill and pains. It does not so much matter what we do, but how we do it. Every time we perform any action with the best motives and spirit we deposit a tiny grain of gold-dust; whenever, on the other hand, we do aught after a slovenly, superficial, and careless manner, we weave into the structure of character a material which will yield as inevitably in the hour of temptation as wood, hay, and stubble before flame.

We sometimes, at the end of the day, reviewing the past hours, bitterly lament that we have done nothing in the way of character-building. "There is nothing to show for this day," we say mentally to ourselves. Ah! but there is. Every moment has left its record on your heart. Every act has left you confirmed in a good habit or in a bad one. The soul-life has not halted for a second; one has been growing to moral health, or towards decrepitude, consumption, and decay. If not gold, then wood; if not silver, then hay; if not costly stones, then stubble.

WEDNESDAY, June 22.

"He that judgeth me is the Lord."—1 Cor. iv. 4.

The Apostle enumerates four courts in which he may be tried; and through those four we all have, at one time or another, to pass.

First: Man's judgment. It is significantly spoken of as man's "day." Our conduct is narrowly scrutinised and weighed by many eyes which we know not of, but which are fixed on every act and word—the eyes of our neighbours, associates, fellow workpeople, servants. They are ever reasoning about us, comparing our lives with our professions, partly with the view of excusing themselves, if there is any gross inconsistency. But, after all, their verdict need not greatly move us. It is only for a day at the most. "Hosanna!" to-day; "Crucify!" to-morrow.

Second: The judgment of fellow-Christians. We are perpetually being summoned before the court of the church circle to which we belong; not always because we are inconsistent with our professions, but whenever we overstep the pace at which the majority is slowly moving. To be too zealous, too eager, too earnest, too particular, will, in some Christian communities, expose to a great deal of adverse criticism. But we have not to look right and left to get the sentence of our fellow believers when we are clearly prompted by the Spirit of God.

Third: The judgment of conscience. "I judge not mine own self." We are all apt to arraign ourselves at our own bar, and pass verdicts, which are altogether favourable, because we compare ourselves with characters and standards inferior to ourselves. It is a great mistake to judge yourself, for even if you score a favourable verdict—if you know nothing against yourself—it is liable to be reversed by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Fourth: The Lord's judgment. The Lord will come, bringing to light the hidden things of darkness, and making manifest the counsels of the heart.

THURSDAY, June 23.

"Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast,"—1 Cor. v. 7, 8.

Always, on the eve of the Passover, Jews go rigorously and carefully through their houses, cleansing every corner in case there should be some atom of leaven lurking in some remote corner, which would vitiate all.

The believer should look back. The Paschal Lamb was sacrificed for us on the cross. Though He had done no sin, and was without blemish, yet He was slain for us without the gates of the city. He made there a sufficient sacrifice, satisfaction, oblation for the sins of the whole world.

The believer should look around. With lighted candle, search the heart of your house, that there may be no speck or mote of leaven. Let us keep the perpetual feast of the Christian life, not with old leaven, nor with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

The believer should look on. Soon we shall hear the midnight trumpet sound, "Arise and depart, for this is not your rest!" and we shall go forth from Egypt, where we have suffered, and toiled, and been misunderstood; where also our Lord was crucified. It is but a little while (how little, how little!) and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry,

FRIDAY, June 24.

"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you...and ye are not your own?"—1 Cor. vi. 19.

This is a sentence which should be deeply pondered; every clause is significant. We evidently should know its deep and solemn meaning. Apparently it is one of the commonplaces of our holy religion. This knowledge, however, should not be merely that of the intellect, but born out of the deep musing of the heart.

The holy temple. Built up of the dust of the earth, our bodies are rarer than the most glorious structures that ever the sun shone on, because they are meant to be the shrine and home of God. Jesus spake of the Temple of his Body; and if He was so zealous for his Father's House that He drove out the unholy traffickers, and refused to allow a vessel to be carried through the courts, should we not be equally careful? We are the custodians of the Divine residence; let us be very careful that there be nothing to offend or trouble the celestial Inmate.

The Divine Inmate. Too often He is grieved, and driven to occupy the most secret shrine, concealed and hidden beneath the heavy veil of our inconsistency and unbelief. He is not driven out by our sins, but driven in. Whenever, on the contrary, we put away our sin, and walk in the light as He is in the light, whenever the veil is rent and the whole heart thrown open to Him, He comes in power to occupy every part of our being, so that there is no part dark, and the very body becomes transfigured.

The great price. Bought as any slave standing in the market-place for sale! Knocked down to the highest bidder! Ransomed from the direst slavemaster to the dearest Lord! The price, not corruptible things as silver and gold, but precious blood! Our life, henceforth not our own, but his—utterly, absolutely, and for ever—to do, to suffer, or to wait.

SATURDAY, June 25.

"Let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God."—1 Cor. vii. 24.

Strong temptations to restlessness beset the early Christians. The great change through which they had passed from heathenism to Christ threatened to dissolve all the ties by which they had been held, in the home, the business, and the State. Very necessary and wholesome, therefore, was the Apostle's advice. Stay as you are, until God clearly lead you into something else—only with this difference, whatever be the vocation of your life, therein abide with God. Paul was only careful that the thought of God should penetrate their entire existence, all else would come right in time, and he was only anxious that they should be laid hold of by that central, vivifying, transmuting influence.

Practice the presence of God. Brother Lawrence used to say that we should establish ourselves in a sense of God's presence by an act of the will, that put aside wandering, frivolous, and evil thoughts; and of continually conversing with Him. That we ought to give ourselves up to God, making Him the end of all our actions, and seeking our only satisfaction in doing his will. That even the set times of prayer should not greatly differ from other times, because all were equally filled with the thought of God's presence.

Such a sense equalises our lot. The slave realises that he is God's free man; the master that he is God's slave. The poor are enriched, and the rich are convicted of their poverty. So brother Lawrence said that, in his business in the kitchen (to which naturally he had a great aversion), having accustomed himself to do everything there for the love of God and with prayer, he had found everything easy, and was very well pleased to continue in the same post so long as it was God's will.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Progress in North China.

IN a recent communication Dr. A. D. Peill, of the L.M.S., Chi-Chou, North China, says :—

We are very comfortably settled in our new home, and busy with patients and language. Muriel [the writer's young wife] has been taking charge of the women's ward of late, and began operating lately by removing a cancer of the breast from an old lady, who was extremely grateful to her pretty surgeon, and will doubtless spread her fame now she's gone home again. Better still, she seemed to be really interested in "the doctrines," though we've heard no more about her since she left us, cured.

A nice thing happened here lately. We have a poor Christian, employed as scavenger for the hospital and boys' school, who gets a wage equivalent to about 4s. to 6s. of our money monthly, and has probably never had more in his life. He is wifeless, childless, homeless, without relations, and in fact with nothing except the clothes and scanty bedding he needs for present use. Three years ago he came to hospital to see if anything could be done for his deafness, which was very great. Dr. Macfarlane was able to improve him a little, and he listened to the Gospel with avidity. He began to learn to read, and then read every book he could get hold of bearing on his favourite subject. He soon began telling to others what he had learned himself, and is now respected by all who know him for his

SHEER AND SIMPLE GOODNESS.

This man came to Mr. Rees not long ago and said that God had been good to him so far beyond all his thought and expectation, had so fully provided for all his wants, physical and spiritual, that he felt he must do something to show his love in return, and had had it laid upon him that he ought to give to God a sum of about 30s., the saving of his life-time, with which he might have bought a little land, or in some other way provided for his future comfort or present needs. He lives in a little tumbledown mud-room on our old mission premises. I was in the room when he brought in the last of his money, and as he added a few more fioo (shillings) to the pile, over and above the sum he had stated, and I saw the light in his face and the tears of strong emotion standing in his eyes, I felt thoroughly ashamed of my selfish, easy life; while Mr. Rees, too, was deeply affected whilst he pointed to heaven and said something about the treasure laid up there. The man had literally given his all. The money is to be used for the pulpit in our new chapel here, and one hopes that from that pulpit God will send messages to the hearts of numbers in the years to come, when the very name of its giver has passed into oblivion, and is honoured only in heaven.

A PRACTICAL RESULT.

I was much struck the other day by the testimony of my Chinese teacher, a B.A., and a sort of village elder, who after remarking on the wonderful harmony between the several husbands and wives of our missionary staff, told me that wife-beating in this immediate neighbourhood had diminished seventy to eighty per cent in the last ten years, very largely, he seemed to think, owing to the presence and teaching of Christianity here. He says that in former days the wives used to be beaten in eight or nine out of ten homes around here, whilst now this is the case in only one or two out of ten at most.

The heathen about us here willingly bear witness to the fact that the streets of this little market town are far more quiet and orderly since the mission has been established here, and that "disreputable rows" are much less frequent. Of this the village elders are quite convinced. They are very friendly to us, and think that the prosperity that has attended the place ever since the Mission was started, nine or ten years ago, is due to our presence. Many of the villagers are deeply interested in the Gospel, and we look for large ingatherings from amongst the people of our own village here in the near future, which, sad to say, seems to be a rare state of things in missionary experience in North China.

A New Movement in India.

A NEW movement for the evangelisation of our great Eastern dependency is "The Indian Christian Realm," the motto prayer of which is "Thy Kingdom Come." The founder of the movement is Mr. Arthur S. Paynter, who is well known by his Indian name of Jai Bhai, and has worked for fifteen years with much success for God in India and elsewhere. His experience, ability, energy, and devotion eminently fit him for the responsible position of president, in which he is ably assisted by his wife. The vice-president is Mr. F. Grundy, (Ishwar Das), whose service in India has been nearly as long as that of his colleague, during which he has organised extensive mission work in Western and Northern India, and in this his wife has taken an active part. Closely associated with them is Mr. William Greet, better known as Isu Charan, who has spent twelve years in journeyings and labours in the wild and least known parts of Western India.

These leaders have hazarded their lives for the Gospel's sake, and become residents in India for India's sake. Other experienced workers, thirty in all, are already in the service of the Mission, and applications to join are continually coming from converted Indian Christians. To meet the needs of these brethren, who, in humble trust, have cast themselves upon the almighty arm of Jehovah, a small body of friends has been formed in London, whose object is to raise necessary funds to strengthen the hands and cheer the hearts of the labourers. Mr. W. T. Martin, late a judge in the Indian Civil Service, has consented to preside for the present over this English branch, and his position will, we trust, be a guarantee of the reality and integrity of the Indian Christian Realm.

As to principles and management, there will be no distinction between the European and Indian (native) members of the Mission — all are to be brothers, not in theory only, but actually. It will be a special mission of the Realm to allow the utmost freedom for the exercise of the highest qualities on the part of Hindu Christians. Their knowledge of country, language, and people will be made to serve the interests of the Kingdom of God to the full. To this end the number of the Europeans will be kept as low as possible, and only those accepted who are definitely committed to this great and essential principle. It follows that the agency will be as little expensive as possible. Self-support will be steadily aimed at from the first. Native clothes will be worn by Europeans and Indians alike; and as far as possible, all the workers will live in native houses, adapting themselves to the ways of the people. As regards doctrines, they are, and will be, what are usually accepted as sound among Evangelical Churches. The ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper will be observed, and enjoined upon all converts from whatever caste. The Realm will also be undenominational and interdenominational.

That there is a need of vastly more missionary enterprise in India is obvious from the fact that among a population of about 300,000,000 there is hardly more than one foreign missionary to a quarter of a million souls, and that the nominal Protestant converts is little more than a million, after the labours of a century.

These particulars are taken from a circular issued on behalf of the Indian Christian Realm, the chief centre of which is Broach, Bombay Presidency. All information regarding the undertaking may be obtained from the secretary in London, Mr. Herbert Page, 35, Tollington-road, N.

Armenian Orphans.

IN a letter from Harpoot, Turkey, dated April 28, Dr. H. N. Barnum, of the American Mission, writes :—

"We are supporting a good many orphans in private families among the villages, but this plan is not very satisfactory, so I have rented two houses in one of our near villages, and have engaged two Christian women as house-mothers, with two good men also. I shall now gather these scattered children into these houses, where they will have a genuine Christian home. The word 'home' does not exist in any of the languages in this country, because the thing, as we understand the word, does not exist. If I were asked what is the most tangible proof of the value of the missionary work in this country I would point to the changed character of multitudes of homes.

"Our missionary field is a large one, and takes in such cities as Diarbekir, Arabkir, Egin, and Malatia. We have six houses rented here, not very good, but the best we could secure, and in them we have more than 250 children. Including the two to be opened in the village of Hulakeuy, there are sixteen other orphanages, with an aggregate of 550 children. Two houses have been secured in the city of Malatia for the 100 children there, for which we are responsible, but the local government objects to the plan, so an appeal has been made to Constantinople, and we are awaiting the decision. There are other children for whose support we are providing in private families, so that the aggregate is more than 1000. There are other thousands who are equally needy, who have infinite possibilities, and whom we should be glad to rescue, but we are warned from abroad not to enlarge this work lest funds should fail, and we should be obliged to set adrift those for whom we are now providing.

"All these children attend school, and the most of them are making good progress in study. Those who are old enough to work spend a part of the day in some employment or trade which we hope may help to fit them to care for themselves when they grow up."

Rev. S. A. Griffiths, of Christ Church, Endell-street, W.C., will be pleased to receive help, to be forwarded to Dr. Barnum, for his good work in Armenia

Thuringia.—With reference to the work maintained at Blankenburg by Miss Von Weling, mentioned by Dr. Baedeker in our issue of last week, Dr. J. Gritton writes to us telling of the laying of the foundation-stone of the new hall on June 4th. He also reports a gathering of converts and friends at Mellembach, fourteen miles from Blankenburg in the heart of the forest. Fifty visitors went from Blankenburg and surrounding villages; there were present some 100 others. Three sermons were preached in the open air, and at a meeting indoors addresses were given by Miss Von Weling and Dr. Gritton.

A South African Anniversary.—Mr. C. Robottom, a deacon at Leytonstone, Essex, now on a visit to South Africa, sends home a description of the May anniversary meetings held at Philipton, where Rev. Leonard Thacker is labouring. No less than fifteen bullock waggons, besides many Cape carts and saddle horses, were used to bring the people to the meetings. The church was so crowded that many were unable to get admission. There must have been at least a thousand people in attendance. The debt was paid off, and the people, although dreadfully poor, gave to the very utmost of their means; both minister and deacons were much encouraged.

The John Howard of Japan.

MR. TANEAKI HARA, OF TOKIO.

JAPAN and its affairs engage a widespread interest at the present time. Politicians are observing the establishment on an ever-growing scale of Western institutions in "the Great Britain of the East," and Christians are noting the rise and progress, in pleasing numbers, of religious and philanthropic organisations. While disposed to wait with patience for some of the many blessed developments of Christian civilisation, we are not surprised to hear occasionally of works giving promise of a speedy fulfilment of great ideals.

A few years ago we told the story of Mr. Juju Ishii, "the George Müller of Japan." Now it is our pleasure to introduce to notice another remarkable philanthropist, Mr. Taneaki Hara, of Tokio, "the John Howard of Japan." Coming of a good family, Mr. Hara was engaged as a mine-owner before his conversion, in 1874, through reading the New Testament. At his baptism he was asked by the missionary, "Would you remain firm in your allegiance to Christ even if the Government should arrest you and cut off your head?" Mr. Hara replied, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Shortly after this he gave up his mining business in order to engage in work of a definitely Christian character, and opened a store for the sale of Bibles and religious books. This undertaking was instrumental in the wide dissemination of Christian literature. In other ways, however, God was going to use his servant, and it was through a singular incident that the sphere of future service was seen and entered.

Mr. and Mrs. Taneaki Hara, of Tokio.

In 1883 several members of the Japanese Parliament were arrested for having offended the Government. Believing firmly in freedom of speech, Mr. Hara published a pamphlet sympathising with the offending Liberals. For this he was sent to prison for three months.

There he met a man who recognised him as a "Jesus Teacher." The man informed him that he was suffering punishment for a robbery he had committed. In Mr. Hara's words:—

> One evening, walking along Ginza-street, greatly troubled in his conscience, the man happened to join a crowd of people to whom someone was preaching. I happened to be the preacher, and the words of the Gospel of Christ fell deeply into his heart, and he was anxious to know if Jesus Christ would save him. A few moments after this he was arrested and put into prison. With tears of joy and gratitude I began to explain to him more fully the story of the Gospel, and in a short time he was soundly converted. After this I was called the "Jesus preacher" of the prison.

That was the beginning of a new career with Mr Hara. The officials allowed him to talk to the prisoners every night, and as he got into close quarters with the men he found that none of them were originally bad characters, but that they had fallen into their miserable condition through manifold temptations. Pitying them with all his heart, Mr. Hara lost no opportunity of teaching them the Way of Life; and when the time came for his own release he had a new sense of duty, regarding which he waited upon God for help and guidance. After earnest prayer, he was impressed with the personal application to himself of the words spoken to the Apostle Paul: "Thou shalt be a witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard" (Acts xxii. 15). Without delay, and notwithstanding opposition on the part of friends, Mr. Hara resolved to renounce all worldly ambitions, and give his life to Christian work in the interest of prisoners.

These particulars of Mr. Hara's career are taken from an article in the February issue of The Japan Evangelist, written by Rev. J. W. Wadman, of the Methodist Publishing House, Tokio. Still following that account, we are reminded of the practice of the Government during recent years to send long-sentenced convicts to the Hokkaido, in the hope that their labour would prepare the way for colonists in the northern island of the empire. In five large prison settlements as many as seven thousand men have been employed cutting down forests, making roads, and cultivating the land. Hither, on his ministry of mercy, Mr. Hara went, after some years of labour in the prisons of the south. He went at the request of the Government, who appointed him Christian pastor for the prisons of the Hokkaido; and till about a year ago he toiled with extraordinary success among the inmates of these retreats.

Upon the death of the Empress Dowager last year, an Imperial decree was issued, ordering the release of several hundreds of these poor fellows. The joy of liberty was but short lived, for, being outcasts, despised, and forsaken, the ex-convicts were without means of support. Mr. Hara was residing at Tokio at the time; returning to the capital, the men promptly found him out, and sought his help and sympathy. Putting aside his own work, under a conviction that God was calling him to a new line of service, Mr. Hara looked around for a place of shelter and means of livelihood for the released prisoners. First, he took some into his own household, and then he welcomed eighty to a hundred in an old daimio residence, a portion of which was placed at his disposal by the authorities of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At length the men were got into settled employment, and in many cases enabled to get the victory over the drink snare. Christian teaching accompanied other influences; in fact, inspired such influences, and in due course some were baptised. More than that, their changed lives preached eloquently to relatives and friends, who in numerous cases were converted and joined the Christian Church. In the course of the first half of last year Mr. Hara helped 262 prisoners, and when he had drafted his protégés into institutions, or placed them among friends in country districts, he kept them under supervision, writing them letters and sending them books. These men call Mr. Hara their father, and love him dearly. In the words of Mr. Wadman:—

> This great work has been accomplished as a work of faith. Mr. and Mrs. Hara have made great sacrifices, and their friends, including missionaries and Japanese Christians, have co-operated with them in forwarding this noble enterprise. To quote his own words:—"I firmly believe from my own experience that criminals can be reformed. The salvation of Jesus can save them entirely from their sin. The Holy Spirit can melt down their hearts, no matter how hard. By feeding and clothing them I wish to win their love, and then it is easy for me to lead them to Christ. Preaching is very necessary, but it is not all. We must visit the poor and outcast; we must go to the prisons, and lead bad men to true repentance, so as to start them on a new life. This is a great work, and it brings joy to many sad-hearted parents, brothers, and sisters. Prison reform is a great blessing to Japan. Our success brings glory to Christianity."

The Government of Japan recognises Mr. Hara's important work, and renders him help in finding suitable employment for ex-convicts, as well as searching for their relatives and friends. A recent undertaking of the philanthropist has been the translation into Japanese of the remarkable English work, "Penological and Preventive Principles," by Mr. William Tallack, the devoted secretary of the Howard Association, London. Mr. Joseph Cosand, the American Friends' missionary at Tokio, joins in a hearty commendation of the work, in the furtherance of which many Christian people in various parts of the world will rejoice to have a share. All such may address their communications to Mr. Taneaki Hara, 30, Kounmachi Nista, Tokio, Japan.

Our Indian Army.—Lord George Hamilton has laid upon the table of the House of Commons a copy of a memorial signed by 73 registered medical women practising in the United Kingdom and India, protesting against the measures recently enacted for dealing with contagious diseases in the Indian Army. The covering letter forwarded to the India Office with the memorial is signed, on behalf of the acting committee, by Florence Nightingale Boyd, M.D., L.R.Q.C.P.I., of Harley-street, London; Mary Gordon, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., Edinburgh, L.F.P. and S., Glasgow; I. M. Macdonald, M.B., London; Jane H. Walker, M.D., L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., of London, and Helen Webb, M.B., L.S.A. of London.

The Philippines.

BY A NATIVE OF MANILA.

THE Philippine Islands, which form quite an extensive group (thirty-one islands and hundreds of islets, rocks, and reefs), are situated in that part of Oceania to the south-east of Siam and Southern China. They were discovered in 1521 by the great explorer of the middle ages, Magellan, who named them after his master, Philip II., King of Spain. The population amounts to over 6,000,000 people. The vegetation is very luxuriant, and the products are varied, including cotton, coffee, cocoa, sugar, sago, tobacco, hemp, maize, and fruits of many kinds. The chief minerals are amber, marble, and gold-dust. The climate on the whole is good.

In recent years the Church of Rome has acquired such a powerful influence that now the people live under a very oppressive and tyrannical priesthood. The priests are the real authorities in these islands; the ordinary officials govern only nominally. The natives, realising this, have broken out in open rebellion, and wish to be free from an intolerant and crushing rule. One of their principal grievances is in connection with these interesting events—birth, marriage, and death, the registration of which is in the hands of the priests. A priest will not marry them for less than £6, just what many of them earn in half a year. There is a heavy exaction from the priests for baptism, which costs £5 or more. For burials the tax rises with the age at death, from £2 for an infant to £10 or £12 for an adult. Till the tax be paid the body remains unburied. The native-born priests enforce these hard terms as harshly as do the imported Spanish priests. The lay Spanish residents are mostly officials, they afford no help to the natives in effecting reform.

The Inquisition in a modified form is practised among the people. The poor natives are tortured, though not for religious failings only. The thumb-screw and similar instruments are applied. When a native is apprehended on suspicion of robbery an application of the thumb-screw will make him confess to almost anything. Most of the school and cottage teaching is conducted by priests. The children, young men, and women are so trained that they pay more reverence to the priests than they do to their own parents. When a priest enters a house every member of the household must bow the knee and kiss the priest's right hand.

In the Philippines, as in other parts of the world, there are a few who know the truth, and, being made free by it, protest against the Papacy, but are not allowed to make public their religious views, as there is no religious liberty whatever in these islands. There are also the careless ones—perhaps the worst sort. As a rule, the people work six days in the week, and make Sunday their day of enjoyment and pleasure-seeking. The theatres, bull-fighting rings, dancing saloons, cock-fighting rings, etc., are all crowded on Sundays, more so than during the week.

So strongly do Romanism and superstition prevail in the islands that nothing but the mighty power of God can break the bondage. At present the land is closed against the messengers of Christ. A few years ago the London Missionary Society sent three missionaries there, but soon after they had landed and commenced preaching the Gospel to the natives they were put into prison. They appealed to the British Consul, and the Consul to the Government on their behalf, but as the laws of the country would not allow of any strange religion being preached within its boundaries the three missionaries were obliged to return home.

Lagos.—The native church over which Dr. Agbebi presides at Lagos, West Africa, observed its decennary recently by a two weeks' waiting upon God. There has resulted a vigorous revival in consequence, and eight bands of preachers have been formed from the membership for local evangelistic work. Work has also been initiated in the Ibo country and in Fantiland. A vigorous young people's society has been organised in connection with the church.

Among Roman Poor.

THE good work carried on in Rome for so many years by Mrs. Wall continues to yield many deeply interesting results. In her little report, lately issued, our good sister records not a few incidents to prove the universal and perennial uplifting power of Christ's Gospel, simply declared and backed up by sympathetic practical action.

One case is that of a young and once devout Roman Catholic lady, who had lost faith in all religion. Through attendance at the Mission Hall she was soundly led to decision for Christ, and had to endure much hardness and persecution in consequence. She abode faithful to the Saviour, and entered on work for the promotion of his cause.

The report says:—

We had long felt the need of a crèche in that part of Rome, so I told Elisa that if she could gather together eight children we would consider the question. In a day or two she told us she had found twelve who were anxious to come, and that the mothers would be only too glad to bring them, and so be free to earn their daily bread. We accordingly began, and the number of children gradually rose to forty, the utmost that the hall will contain. Elisa's wish was granted. Through her untiring kindness to the children she has gained the confidence and affection of the mothers. Most of these women had never before heard the Gospel or seen any part of God's Word, yet now many of them not only come to the women's meetings and general services, but allow Elisa to bring their elder children to the Sunday-school in Lucina. It does one's heart good to see her marshal up her little troop of twelve or fifteen children to our central school every Sunday morning.

That is a sample of many encouraging facts set forth in Mrs. Wall's statement of a year's work. A small home for persecuted and aged Christians is partially supplying a great need. The Medical Mission work, begun ten years ago, continues to grow, and hundreds are blessed through it physically and spiritually, every week. The home for Christian workers enables Mrs. Wall to have the efficient and hearty help of both English and Italian ladies. Those who cannot give personal service may further this good work by contributing to the support of an Italian worker. Mrs. Wall's address is 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

MR. AND MRS. HARA, THEIR FOUR BOYS AND FOUR GIRLS SEATED BESIDE THEM, AND THE EX-CONVICT INMATES OF THEIR HOME IN JULY, 1897. (See opposite page.)

HOME MISSIONS.

George Yard Missions.

THAT veteran friend of the children Mr. George Holland welcomed a large party of helpers and sympathisers at his annual meeting, held at the Schools, on Tuesday last week. The president of the mission, the MARQUIS of NORTHAMPTON, presided, and in a hearty and earnest address enlarged on the life-long and abundant labours of this Ragged School pioneer; and touched on the great and important operations carried on at George Yard, and reaching the very poor—adults and children—to an extent little suspected by those not closely familiar with the work.

Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND read extracts from his new report, showing that much fruit has been seen from the seed sown in the hearts of young and old. While the work is primarily spiritual, "we have not forgotten to be the succourers, the friends and restorers of the lost and perishing."

The Sunday and Week-day Ragged Schools have been crowded with the poor and miserable—many, indeed, being homeless—and no starving child is permitted to lack bread. Other valuable operations—the sewing classes for boys, the girls' sewing and knitting classes, the children's services, the rough boys' meetings, the Band of Hope, and benevolent schemes—are full of encouragement.

The "Wild Flowers of the Forest" Infant Day Nursery is of great importance to poor mothers, who are compelled to go out daily to earn their bread. Widows have felt a load of anxiety removed. They have not liked to trust their little ones to the care of strangers, so have been glad to leave them for the day in our little nursery, knowing that they will be fed and well cared for. The nursery is a large room, well warmed and properly ventilated. A properly qualified nurse has charge of the little ones. The old nursery is still used to shelter children. Cases often occur in connection with the work requiring prompt attention. Children sheltered are either placed in a Home or are given up to their friends.

The various agencies for the welfare of the young people, lads and working girls, such as the Kinnaird Institute, have been greatly blessed. So also the work among adults. Notwithstanding the indifference of many pertaining to their temporal and eternal welfare, there is reason to praise God for the great work He is doing through the instrumentality of his servants labouring among the grown-up people. The evangelistic services, the mission to inebriate women, the mothers' meetings, the lodging-house and open-air services, and the men's and women's Bible-class have all been accompanied by tokens of lasting result.

Mention was also made of the Fresh Air and Rest for children and adults, at the Bookham Home, built and sustained by Mr. Barclay, and at Mrs. Drummond's Home at Fordcombe. A cottage has been taken by the sea, to be used as a temporary Home, until the Memorial Home at Combe Wood has been built. At the Training Home for Motherless Girls, Nonington Hall, Addiscombe, a valuable work continues to be done.

Hearty speeches followed by Messrs. J. F. Shorey and T. A. Denny, Rev. Silas Mead, Col. Macgregor, and Col. Morton (of Mildmay), Dr. Cory, Rev. F. B. Hobbins, and Mr. John Kirk.

Christian Medical Students.—There are few classes of young men who stand in greater need of spiritual help than medical students, the conditions and associations of whose studies tend so much to secularise and rationalise them. It is therefore good news that the Medical Students' Missionary Association, whose purpose is to promote a higher spiritual tone among them, is doing such excellent work. At the recent annual meeting it was announced that twelve medical missionaries had gone out from St. Bartholomew's, and twenty-five from other London hospitals, during the last ten years, and that eighteen are now in training for foreign service. There is no method by which the Gospel is able to reach the hearts of the benighted races so readily as that afforded by the healing art. In this work we are following directly in the steps of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, who healed diseases as well as forgave sins.

The North Central Mission.

THE remarkable work done by this section of the London Wesleyan Mission lends special interest to the anniversary held on Monday of last week in the New North-road Chapel. The afternoon was devoted to the sisters' meeting.

Sister GRACE spoke first of the three mission sisters. She told an unvarnished tale, remarkable no less for its pathos than for its simplicity. One incident illustrated a woman's special work. A friend of the superintendent's wife gave her an address at which to call. Here she found a nurse, whose sixth baby had just been born, whose husband had basely deserted her, and who was in the extremest need. Of course the sister attended to her temporal wants, and among the confidences the mother made elicited the fact that she had once occupied a far better position in life, and that two of her brothers were medical men. When she rose from her sick bed Sister Grace obtained employment for her.

Sister LOUIE gave a deeply affecting address detailing remarkable cases of suffering and sin, and told how the mission had been able to alleviate them. She mentioned one woman who, also forsaken by her husband, is keeping several children by box-making, and comes to class regularly, though the sacrifice of the time for doing so makes serious inroads upon her earnings. Since she has become converted she never works on a Sunday, in spite of the fact that keeping the Sabbath means that she must start Monday's work just after the last stroke of midnight. The members of the mothers' meeting, though poor themselves, make a little weekly collection for other mothers poorer still.

Sister JEANIE spoke of work among the poor, and a drill class for girls.

Mr. J. B. REYNOLDS, one of the best workers in the mission, presided in the evening. Revs. Thomas Allen, Peter Thompson, and Marmaduke Hare (the catholic-spirited vicar of Bow), with Mr. John Lowles, M.P., Mr. A. Blott, and the superintendent of the mission, all made brief speeches. Rev. ARTHUR WOOD reviewed the work of the year, and, after cataloguing the many agencies of its operation, remarked, amidst the hearty assenting applause of his people, "The chief centre of our own strength is the class-meeting."

A point that should not escape mention shows the real love the people have for the Mission. The stewards and helpers worked hard to make the anniversary a success, giving up the afternoon of Monday for the purpose. As several of them had to lose a half-day's work and pay in doing this, their spirit of devotion will at once be perceived.

Cripples' Holiday Home.

THE Marquis of Northampton opened a Home for Cripple Children at Bournemouth on Tuesday afternoon. The new building, situated in the Alum Chine, and within view of the sea, and erected mainly at the cost of Mr. J. Passmore Edwards, is strictly a Holiday Home, accommodating twenty children selected from a large number of crippled and ailing little ones in London, who are on the register of the Ragged School Union, and visited regularly in their own homes by the voluntary workers of the society.

Mr. Passmore Edwards' generous offer would have entirely defrayed the expenses of building a Home such as was at first contemplated, but there have been developments of the original plan which have involved an extra outlay of £1200, for the purchase of the freehold and for other purposes deemed necessary to the efficient equipment of the institution. An appeal to clear off this balance met with a liberal response.

Howard-street Gospel Mission. — The annual meeting of this Mission was recently held, and a large number of friends and workers were present. Addresses were given by Rev. J. Hanger, Mrs. Horner, Mr. W. Edwards, and the superintendent. The secretary gave a brief record of the work: 597 meetings held during the year; Gospel services, open air work, Sunday and ragged school work. Much blessing had rested on the efforts put forth, and many cases were given by men, women, and young people, who had been restored or brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. We are in great need of workers just now in our work among the young. JOHN SOAMES, Supt.

Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Royal Hospital for Incurables.

THESE who know something of the sad cases which find home and help in this institution will be interested in the proceedings at the annual banquet held in the Hôtel Métropôle on Tuesday week, when £1875 10s. was raised in aid of the Hospital at West Hill, Putney.

It is stated in the report that seldom had voluntary effort for ameliorating the condition of the deserving poor had a worthier record to put forth than the Royal Hospital for Incurables. The applications for nominations to the list of candidates had of late been so numerous that the board could select only a slight proportion, but, with due limitations, the list was open to the United Kingdom, and each case was considered separately upon its merits. The board were under deep obligations to the ladies who visited the inmates.

It was a pleasing sight to see the children of wealth, strong in health and in sympathy, sitting by couches whereon reclined the victims of sickness and misfortune. The seaside house at St. Leonards-on-Sea was doing good work. The board are of opinion that the experiment of extending in this manner the usefulness of the house at St. Leonards has been abundantly justified. The happiness afforded—the bright spot in can be the lot of such only as are able to undertake the journey. By far the greater number have to be reconciled to an uninterrupted lot of quiet seclusion.

THE HISTORY OF AN IMPRISONED LIFE—

But the daily round has been redeemed by the comparative independence given by the modest income enjoyed through the bounty of subscribers. A larger number than usual of pensioners have sought admission into the home, a privilege the Board has power to grant when the strain of long-continued illness or the loss of friends has rendered the sight of the familiar roof-tree no longer a thing of possibility. Then the home at Putney opens its doors, and the patient feels that he or she cannot become a castaway.

Alderman G. W. Truscott, who presided, commenced a speech overflowing with sympathy with the statement that the reliable income of the charity was totally inadequate to meet the expenditure, which had been found by careful experience to be the lowest possible to maintain the benefits of the charity on their present level. He reminded his hearers that the ideal which the committee of the institution must ever have before them was to enlarge the area of the benefits conferred and never to contract them. At the present time the total number of persons receiving help from the charity was 832, of whom 210 were in the home at Putney, while the remaining 622 were resident throughout the length and breadth of the land as pensioners.

£24,000 is required yearly to carry on the work of the hospital, but only about half of that amount was to be relied upon, and the remainder had to be made up by voluntary contributions and legacies. As the result of a visit to the hospital he was very much impressed with the desirability of such an institution as the one at Putney. Some people said that the home was an extravagance; but he considered the beautiful surroundings to constitute part of the happiness of the poor people confined therein. In his further remarks the Alderman instanced the case of one of the inmates of the hospital who had been bedridden for twenty-eight years, and one of the women pensioners who had been in bed for twenty-five years.

In conclusion an earnest and touching appeal for funds was made, addresses being given by various sympathetic gentlemen.

The Guildford Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held this year on July 4-9, in the Borough and County Hall, North-street. The speakers will be fewer in number than usual, and these will mostly be present during the whole of the conference days. The convener is Rev. F. Paynter.

Conference at Epping Forest.—For the third year in succession a conference for Bible study will be held at Chingford, Epping Forest, on Friday and Saturday, July 1 and 2. There will be meetings each day at 10.45, 12.15, 2.30, and 5.30. Frequent trains run to Chingford from Liverpool-street, Gospel Oak, Stratford, and intermediate stations. Christian friends are heartily invited. Railway tickets, at a reduced fare, can be obtained beforehand through Mr. A. Garstin, Queen-square, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Scripture Gift Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission and of the Crystal Palace Bible-stand was held in the Chapter House, St. Paul's Churchyard, on Wednesday week. In the unavoidable absence of the Archdeacon, the president of the Mission, the chair was taken by Colonel Geo. Philips.

The report read by the hon. secretary (Mr. W. Walters) stated that besides replenishing the stock of the Gospels in various tongues, eight parts in English, and one each in French, Italian, German, and Portuguese, had been issued through the year. A new illustrated edition of the Gospel of John in Arabic has been issued; and the Gospel of Matthew in German was just ready.

Upwards of 72,000 Gospels had been distributed to the guests at the Jubilee dinner inaugurated last year by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales; over 60,000 Gospels in French had been circulated at the Brussels Exhibition; and numerous grants of Scriptures had been made to missionaries, evangelists, and Christian workers in the United Kingdom and in various parts of both hemispheres. These had been much appreciated and greatly blessed.

With regard to the work at the Crystal Palace Bible-stand, the report stated that not only is the Bible-stand a witness to the truth to the many thousands of visitors who come from all parts of the world, but Gospel portions in various languages are freely circulated, so that whosoever will may read in his own tongue the wonderful works of God. The groups of natives brought from different countries are sought out and are presented with the saving Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Subscriptions received during the year amounted to upwards of £2000; the number of Scriptures circulated was 470,795. There has been disseminated since the commencement of the work more than 28,000,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions in various languages; and over 14,000,000 Scripture leaflets and cards.

The various speakers heartily commended the work of the Mission, Prebendary Webb-Peploe saying that he had very great pleasure in advocating its cause, and prayed God that it might prosper in every way.

The Costers' Mission.

THE work at the great Hoxton centre of evangelism is well and vigorously maintained. The new report gives details of service in the most densely populated, and probably the poorest, district in this huge metropolis. The hon. superintendent says:—"It is not the privilege of many laymen to continue constantly and vigorously in one work so many years. We planted our evangelistic standard in the slums of Golden-lane in the City of London on Whit Sunday, 1861, the same year that the Metropolitan Tabernacle—just destroyed by fire—was built. We have out-lived most of our earliest co-workers, but we have not out-lived our faith in the Gospel of the Grace of God, and its all-sufficient power to save them that believe. We live now in an age of shifting creeds, social remedies, secular Sabbaths, and startling Romanism; but these things do not bring men into the Kingdom of God. Our regular Sunday evening congregation of 600 poor people at Costers' Hall—drawn together by no other attraction than a simple evangelistic address—is a living protest to the secularists and the supporters of the thinly attended Ritualistic churches.

"The mission work now embraces fifty-five distinct operations, of which seventeen are decidedly spiritual, and deal with more than 4000 adults and 1000 children. Twelve operations are classed as social and educational, and include costers' donkey shows, swimming and cricket clubs, libraries for adults and children, and Bands of Hope, lectures, and concerts. Thirteen are benevolent operations, dealing with 112 needy crippled children; starving children during the past winter, etc.

"The wear and tear in such a well-used building is very great, cleansing and repairs must be constant; yet we keep our expenses down to a low limit, the heaviest items being for rent, taxes, light, renewals and cleansing. The income from rentals relieves us of much that would be charged to the General Purposes Fund; and there are no expenses of offices, clerks, or advertising.

"W. J. Orsman, J.P., Hon. Supt.

"Costers' Hall, 242, Hoxton-street, N."

R.N. Scripture Readers.

THE annual meeting of the R. N. Scripture Readers' Society took place at Admiralty House, Devonport, by the kindness of the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Hon. Sir Edmund Fremantle, K.C.B., who himself presided, and observed that less than one-third of our men-of-war, viz., eighty-one out of 286 in commission, have chaplains. It was essential, therefore, that in the remaining ships someone accustomed to seamen should go on board to give them religious instruction. The committee of this Society for thirty-seven years had endeavoured to supply this want, but the funds would not admit of the employment of more than fourteen readers. That number was obviously inadequate, and he therefore hoped a special effort would be made to substantially increase the funds, so that there might be a larger number to work in our increased Navy.

Colonel Scafe, Commandant R.M.L.I., testified to his personal knowledge of the work of the reader among the recruits at Walmer, and though it was impossible to measure what was done, he was convinced of the immense influence for good, and he was also able to bear testimony to the value of the reader's spiritual work at Stonehouse Barracks.

Rev. J. Brabazon, R.N., said they were glad to have as readers men who had served in the Royal Navy. Rev. F. Flynn urged the claims of the Society. Rev. F. C. Stebbing, R.N., called for their practical sympathy with the work. Captain Aylen, R.N., spoke to the great change for the better among the seamen and marines through various causes, but added that there is still plenty to be done.

Rev. J. M. Clarkson, R.N., then spoke, after which Mr. J. Derrick, R.N., related some of his experience as a Scripture reader during some years past. With such a limited number as fourteen among nearly 100,000 men it was impossible to come into contact with even half of them.

A Plea for Clothing.

ONE of our Mission girls wants to leave the factory and get a situation as domestic servant, but she has no suitable clothes, and our wardrobe is exhausted.

Here is a widow, her refined, sad face telling a story of better days. Four years' hard struggle, and now she is nearing the land where they lay every burden down. But the children; a family of five depending on the earnings of a girl of sixteen—7s. a week. Where does any clothing come out of that sum?

That man and his wife, they would come to the hall, only, the usual excuse, "No clothes." Not exactly an excuse, either; rather a grim, depressing fact. Many similar facts might be told if space allowed.

"Do clothes influence character?" a young lady asked us the other day. We venture to affirm that at least the lack of them does. The demand is here; plain, urgent, constant, year in and year out. Parcels of clothing, new or secondhand, will be thankfully received by the Superintendent, Berger Hall, Empson-street, Bromley-by-Bow, E.

A Quiet Day.

ON Tuesday, June 7th, interesting and well-attended all-day meetings were held at the Southwark Home Mission Hall, Holland-street, Blackfriars, S.E., to provide a quiet day of spiritual rest and refreshment for all interested in the Lord's work. The morning meeting was especially devoted to "Instruction," and the afternoon to "Consecration." Addresses were given by various brethren.

In the interval between the afternoon and evening meetings an opportunity was given to friends present to take part in the usual open-air gatherings held in the lanes, courts, and alleys in the vicinity of the hall.

The evening meeting was occupied by short, earnest testimonies from many of the Christians present to the Lord's gracious dealings and deliverances in their own experience, and by a stirring Gospel appeal from Mr. Leonard Weaver, in response to which several were brought to decision for Christ.

Caledonian Christian Club.

THE eleventh annual meeting was held in the Club, 52, Upper Bedford-place, on June 9. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided. A representative Scotch gathering filled the spacious rooms, and took part in one of the most hopeful meetings of the C.C. Club.

The report, read by the secretary, gave evidence of a year's earnest and successful work. Some 220 young men, mainly from Scotland, were received at the Club during the year. Eleven years' experience has shown a most practical way of solving a problem of deepest moment to the Christian Church, and reveals the missing link in the splendid work of the Y.M.C.A. This was so much felt that all the speeches plead the great urgency of multiplying similar clubs all over London.

The various agencies of the Club, such as library, musical and social evenings, the labour bureau, along with the homely appointments, are devoted to the special benefit of new comers. How to secure situations and lodgings, and attachment to their respective churches, and how to make the best and most of London, requires great vigilance, care, and kindly influence.

The speech of the evening was that of the Rev. John McNeill. He said: "This is a city of many centres, with thousands of population around each, and I only wish that we had in each a Caledonian Club Home—or any name you like so long as you have the Christianity and the Club. Man is a 'clubable' animal. Our chairman has said that many of our young men coming up from Scotland are ruined within the first three months. Are you aware that with regard to many of our young men it is not within the first three months, the first three weeks, or the first three days, but in the first forty-eight hours that

THE FATAL TEMPTATION COMES?

"I believe that if we had spread all over the city, and especially at the Northern termini, a big advertisement to catch the eye of the young traveller immediately on his entering London, you would save these young travellers in their first forty-eight hours. Maybe the young fellow has some lines to some minister in his pocket, but he thinks if he delivers these he will be anchored up, so he keeps them in his pocket, for he has heard something about the Piccadilly hell at midnight, and the moth flutters about the candle. He has heard something about certain music halls. He goes and sees these things, he gets inflamed, and goes the next night again, and inside three months, three weeks, three days, he is ruined. The temptations of this great city are tremendous, and the loneliness is tremendous. I have realised even in first-class hotels what loneliness is; and the force of the question, 'What can I do with myself?' comes with strong emphasis. I can easily imagine what it must be in dismal, dingy lodgings, and how glad the stranger is to escape from his forlornness.

"Knowing what a young man is, and how impressionable young men from the country are under the glamour of London, I deem this to be a work of God, and one of the greatest magnitude. I wish I could get some rich Scotsmen to help in having something of the nature of this Caledonian Club dotted all over this great city. At the railway station where he arrives he will see plenty about Sapolio, Scotch whisky, and many things of the same kind; but his eye should fall on something that may make him feel that love is stretching out her hand, and that a cheery Highland welcome awaits him in this homely Scottish club, when he is alone in London."

Scottish Fishermen.

AFTER some weeks' rest, Mr. Josiah Nix, the well-known missioner, purposes visiting the north-east coast of Scotland to conduct Gospel services among fishermen at various ports. We anticipate much interest and many happy results in connection with this effort. Mr. Nix's bright, lively, direct style of address renders him peculiarly well fitted, in our judgment, to evangelise among these bluff, warm-hearted sons of the sea.

We trust that earnest Christians in the different ports of Aberdeenshire and the adjoining seaboard counties will heartily co-operate with Mr. Nix, and do all in their power to aid the work by prayer and effort. Any friends wishing to help, or to have services held in their districts, should communicate at an early date with Mr. Josiah Nix, Oxford.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

MR. McNEILL IN LONDON.

A HOPEFUL commencement of the Albert Hall Mission was made on Monday. In the afternoon there was an attendance of between 2000 and 3000, for whom Mr. McNeill drew many valuable lessons from the incident of the emotional, impulsive disciple, who undertook to follow Jesus everywhere, without having duly counted the cost.

In the evening there was a greater concourse, the spacious area and stalls being well covered, besides others in the boxes and balcony. The evangelist preached for three-quarters of an hour on the message to the Laodicean Church in Rev. iii. The treatment of the subject was very tender and impressive, embracing many an exhortation to reality from those whose practice belies their profession. The preacher seemed to be well heard in every part of the great auditorium, and a very solemn impression was evidently made.

A Scotch friend sang several solos at both meetings. The mission continues each week-day, afternoon and evening, till the end of next week. Tickets for the meetings can be had from Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

WEAVER BROTHERS IN GLASGOW.

THE district of Keppochhill lies to the north-east of the city. It is largely isolated from its immediate surroundings: Springburn, Possil Park, Maryhill, and the great city itself. For upwards of twenty-five years Christian work has been carried on there under the auspices of the Free Church Presbytery. It has passed through many vicissitudes. Ten years ago it was sanctioned by the General Assembly, and twelve months afterwards an ordained minister was settled there.

He and his office-bearers have laboured earnestly and diligently, and with a considerable measure of success. But the want of a church was a serious hindrance to the progress of the work. Recently a commodious church and splendid suite of halls and class-rooms have been built. They are admirably fitted for aggressive work. Rev. Thomas Havre, the respected minister, has had the aid of agents from the Evangelisation Society, and good was done, but it seemed difficult to move the place as a whole.

Two years ago we had arranged provisionally for a mission by the Brothers Weaver, but circumstances did not permit of their coming at that time. On May 15 they kindly agreed to begin work. The opening on Sabbath was very hopeful, and there were several persons awakened. Night after night the work continued with good audiences and deepening impression. The second Sabbath increased both the numbers and interest, and by the middle of the week it was manifest to all that the mission ought to be extended if at all possible. To this the evangelists kindly agreed, and so the work went on till May 31, the last night being one of exceptional power and blessing.

On Wednesday evening last week a gathering of those who had received blessing was held in the hall. Rev. Thos. Havre presided; and Rev. John Pugh (of Cardiff) and the writer gave suitable addresses. On the following Monday evening Christian Endeavour Societies, junior and senior, were started. We are hopeful for the future of the cause here. The hearts of minister, missionary, and workers have been greatly cheered, and their faith in God greatly strengthened. We feel thankful to God for sending his servants, whose fellowship in the Gospel and in the service of the Master is enjoyed by all.

May I ask the continued prayers of your readers for Keppochhill, and sympathy and help towards removing £2500 of debt still on the buildings, associated as they are with the honoured name of Rev. Dr. Somerville, himself so wonderfully blessed as an evangelist.

WILLIAM ROSS.

42, Windsor-terrace, Glasgow.

[534]

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN WIGAN.

MR. CLARKE has revisited Wigan, and conducted a four days' mission in the Drill Hall. Throughout the opening day there were many tokens of the beginning of another gracious season, and at the close of the evening service many inquirers remained to be guided to the Saviour.

On the three following days the great hall was filled with "eager anxious throngs." After each service the inquiry room workers were busily engaged among the scores who sought salvation.

Meetings for mill-girls were held in St. Thomas's Church on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the commodious building was filled to its utmost capacity on both occasions. One fine feature of the mission was the hearty and harmonious co-operation of ministers of the Established and Free Churches. A thanksgiving service was held on the evening after Mr. Clarke's departure, and was largely attended. Many touching testimonies were given by those who had received blessing during the mission.

J. K. C.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

FEW evangelists have been able to carry on their work for the Master for many years without a breakdown. Yet it has been the privilege of Mr. CHARLES INGLIS to have laboured in the Master's cause incessantly for over thirty years without a break of any kind. He has a marvellous constitution and wonderful lungs, never having known a day's illness.

In Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., he has preached annually for the past twenty-seven years, so that he is by no means a stranger among the denizens of that part of our vast metropolis. Years have not had the effect of weakening his power, for during the past five weeks he has thundered forth every night the mighty Gospel, which has again proved its power; although it might be thought that after being declared in the same place for over eight thousand nights consecutively it would perhaps lose its efficacy and hold upon the people. The weather was extremely bad, but the meetings were wonderfully sustained, and exceeded the average. Both on Sundays and week nights the inquiry-room was sought by many who had been made anxious during the proclamation of the precious truth of God. During no period since Mr. Inglis has visited the Great Assembly Hall has he been more powerful in the delivery of God's Word. This opinion has been expressed by those well qualified to judge, and who have been among his hearers ever since he paid his first visit to the East End. Again he has left, and the prayers of hundreds will follow him, for God's blessing on his future efforts.

N.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

ONE of the gratifying results from the reopening of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, is the vigorous and successful evangelistic and temperance work Mr. JACKSON has inaugurated. Not only is the work of the Institute for the benefit of East End lads being carried on with efficiency and success upon unsectarian lines, but a definite and extensive ministry is directed against the vice and intemperance of Whitechapel and district.

To assist in this Gospel crusade Mr. Jackson invited the students of Manchester College to spend a fortnight at the Institute. Sixteen students responded to his invitation, and are now duly in residence there. The work in which they are engaging embraces conducting open-air services in the streets, visiting the slums of the district, holding meetings in lodging-houses, gathering the outcasts and waif and stray children and supplying them with a free supper, accompanied with Gospel singing and addresses. Large crowds have gathered in the Whitechapel-road at the open-air services held each night. So powerful has been the Word preached at some of these services that the sight of students kneeling on the flag-stones and praying with awakened and penitent sinners has been witnessed.

The students have also visited upwards of 2000 families, and whenever and wherever possible have prayed with the people and told the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." The mission of these earnest young fellows has supplied additional evidence, were it needed, that there is nothing that can move the indifferent and unsaved in such districts as Whitechapel like a devout and enthusiastic presentation of the Gospel does.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

LAST year the Open Air Mission undertook a work of village evangelisation in England and Wales, by which many thousands of our villagers were reached, and their homes visited; Gospel literature was distributed, and the Word of God preached in their midst.

Briefly, the scheme consisted in sending forth a company of two, four, six, or eight evangelists to a given centre for a week or more, from which they visited "all the region round about." The earlier part of each day was devoted to visitation, and large open-air services were held in the evening. Sometimes almost the whole population of the village was present.

Co-operation was earnestly sought from local clergy and ministers, who often expressed great thankfulness. The reception of the preachers by the people was most favourable, and they were frequently begged to come again. It is proposed to continue and extend this good work during the present summer as funds permit. The committee seek: (1) Information from friends as to the most needy and most appropriate centres for visitation; (2) local hospitality for the preachers or the provision of lodgings; (3) the fellowship and help of Christians of all Evangelical denominations; (4) donations towards the sustenance of so great a work, the expenses of which are necessarily heavy. If any of your readers can kindly help in either of these directions, the committee will be grateful.

The scheme is eminently applicable also to the visitation of populous seaside resorts, and great gatherings of the people, such as at races and fairs, and the committee are prepared to send preachers to such places in similarly strong force where openings occur, and local friends are raised up to offer co-operation.

GEORGE MACKINLAY, Major, Hon. Secretary.
FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.
11, Adam-street, W.C.

MR. VARLEY IN CANADA.

IN its issue of May 19, The Daily Press, of London, Ont., gives an account of services held there by Mr. HENRY VARLEY. The writer says:—

"The evangelist has spent four weeks in London, though at the beginning the most hoped for from him was three days. The closing meeting was held at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and a large audience was present. To very many of the people of London the Bible readings and addresses by Mr. Varley have been full of profit. The evangelist seemed to possess a rare gift of exposition of Holy Writ, and wherever and whenever he has spoken in this city he has not lacked for deeply interested hearers.

"He came here under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, and a majority of his meetings have been held at the Auditorium. On the closing night Y.M.C.A. Secretary Sayers, on behalf of the Association, thanked Mr. Varley for his visit, and asked all those present who had received blessing in any measure to rise to their feet. Nearly the whole audience responded. Rev. Robert Johnston, pastor of St. Andrew's, also added a vote of testimony along the same line. He said that for the first time since he came to London he found that entertainments and general pleasure and business matters had to stand aside for the work of the Lord.

"Mr. Varley said it was with great joy, moderated with sorrow, that he was speaking for the last time, at any rate for the present series of meetings. He was glad to be able to announce some slight arrangement for the carrying on of his work. It certainly should not cease, he said, and in evidence of the further good which might be looked for he referred to Brantford, where, after his first visit there, twenty-three years ago, the meetings were continued for four months, and from 1000 to 1500 people were brought to Christ. A band of 400 young men were raised up, who so took advantage of the law of local option as to entirely wipe out the licensed sale of liquor, and there had been so little retrogression that to-day only two licences existed in the city. The police had nothing to do, the jail was empty, and this past year only one old lady had asked for relief. He earnestly pleaded for a greater interest in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association.

"At an afternoon meeting, held in the Auditorium, Mrs. Varley addressed a ladies' gathering that filled the building."

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Earnest missions have been held in the parish church, Portaferry, co. Down, by Rev. J. P. Cushing. A tent mission has also been held at Milltown, Dungannon, by Messrs. Wm. Duff and Wm. Cowden.

In various parts of Ayrshire tents are being pitched for Gospel work in the summer months. The interest in some cases is most gratifying, and already there have been many evidences of a work in the Gospel.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding mission services at Partridge Green, Sussex, with tent No. 4. Although the weather at first was very wet and cold, there were good meetings, and we believe much good has been the result. There were Bible-readings and services for the young. Nobody knows how refreshing and cheering a visit like this is except those who reside in villages. E. J. Green.

Since October last cottage meetings have been held at Upton Snodsbury, Worcestershire, by Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton. These have led to the erection of a mission-hall, given by a gentleman in the neighbourhood. The new hall was opened on May 31, when ministers and friends from Worcester and Pershore, etc., were present to express their sympathy and good wishes. The opening services are being followed by a mission, conducted by Mr. G. D. Shipley.

Mr. Henry Thorne has held a series of encouraging meetings at the Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood; Park Chapel, Camden Town; Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood; the Congregational Church, Farnham; the Baptist Chapel, Nunhead; and South-street Chapel, Greenwich. At Farnham the Congregational minister testified that he had been led to Christ at a meeting conducted by Mr. Thorne at Peterboro' about fifteen years ago. At Greenwich two meetings were held under the presidency of Rev. Charles Spurgeon.

After closing (on 20th inst.) his present mission at Barrow-in-Furness, Gipsy Smith will rest till the beginning of September. Since September last he has held twenty special missions, besides addressing many meetings. He feels profoundly that the whole season has been one of the most remarkable, for interest and results, of his life. The sphere he has found in connection with the Free Church Council is large and important; and God is wonderfully using the Word inside the churches as well as outside.

Mr. W. R. Lane, speaking on Monday at the Central Noon Meeting, unconsciously confirmed Gipsy Smith's views by saying that he sees tokens of a distinct revival in the work of God in the land. From January last to the present time he had seen more of the saving power, more solemn evidences of the presence and power of God than during any past six months in a number of the towns visited. "Let us," he said, "thank God, and take courage." Some may be fishing in ponds so often fished over that the fish have become shy; let them go further afield, and they will find elsewhere abundant eagerness.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mrs. Baeyertz, June, Clitheroe.
Gipsy Smith, Barrow, to June 20.
Mr. J. Neech, Pirbright, during June.
Mr. George Clarke, Bristol, June 12-27.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
Mr. W. Monro Collings, at Holt, Norfolk, June 12-26.
Mr. Charles Inglis, Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, during June.
Sergeant Pullinger, Gospel Hall, Doddington-grove, Battersea, June 19.
Mr. Henry Thorne, Devizes, June 17; Bromley, 19 and 26; Maidenhead, 22; Maidstone, 29; Ashford, 30.
The following evangelists of the Evangelisation Society are to preach as follows:—Wakes Colne, H. Collins; Braehead, R. Hill; New Byth, J. Wharton; West Hoathly, J. Lovell; Countesthorpe, F. Holmes; Friston, J. Clark; Layham, J Harris; Takeley, J. Whiting; Burwash, N. Taylor; Mildenhall, G. Tuffin; Aylesford, J. Johnson; Coupar, T. Canning; Clydebank, J. W. Moodie; Harrowden, K. Lambert; Dunsfold, J. Brown; Kilsby, C. Noakes; Elmswell, J. Stanger; Dexthorpe, C. F. Goode; Henley-in-Arden, J. Simmonds; Penicuik, R. Lapsley; Wick, D. Pittendrigh; Barnstone, G. Pell; Oswaldtwistle, J. Shields; Parkstone, J. Greenwood; St. Andrew's, J. Galletly; Langcroft, D. M. Bayne; Muirkirk, C. G. Roger; Astley, S. Bryant; Alderholt, H. Bray; Potter-street, W. Notman; Pencraig, R. Williams; Langham, F. Tarrant; Scottow, C. Chenery.

Bloomsbury Chapel.—The friends at Bloomsbury Chapel, W.C., are celebrating their jubilee this year by thoroughly renovating the church premises, for which a sum of £2500 will be required. Tuesday, June 21, has been set apart as a thanksgiving day, when the pastor will be in his vestry, from 8 a.m. until 9 p.m., to receive contributions towards this amount. It is hoped that many former members of the church and congregation will have fellowship in this endeavour.

Salisbury Conference.

THIS conference, always full of life and interest, was held this year in June (6-10), instead of September as heretofore. Rev. E. N. Thwaites, the convener, presided as usual, but, in consequence of an affection of the throat, he did not give the prayer-meeting addresses, which were always a pleasant feature of every day.

Rev. A. S. Selwyn preached a preliminary and searching sermon on Monday night from Rev. iii. 20, at the close of which he asked all who felt it right to do so to say audibly, "Lord, I open the door of my heart to thee," and all over the church words to this effect were spoken. In a second address Mr. Selwyn gave some useful instruction as to being filled with the Spirit.

The addresses of the subsequent days were all sound, earnest, and timely.

The after-dinner five-minute talks were full of encouragement.

Rev. W. Constadine spoke of the Evangelical Alliance as the origin of all these conferences, and gave instances of its valuable work. In one case the Alliance interposed where some Protestants were persecuting Roman Catholics—with good result in meeting an objection that it was all on one side.

Rev. Norman Bennett had had more encouragement than ever in speaking to boys in public schools. A new departure was contemplated in taking a number of them to visit the stations of the North Africa Mission. £16 16s. would pay for a boy; perhaps some friends would like to contribute that sum.

Miss Lawrence, whom Mr. Thwaites had met in India, told of work among Indian women.

Mr. Hutchinson spoke of the Children's Special Service Mission. They had had vans made for work in villages, and in one case the whole village seemed to be converted.

Mr. Gostelow, Windsor, gave a cheering account of work in neglected villages. In one case two publicans successively had given up that business and returned to their own trades.

Miss Poynter, zenana missionary in India, among other interesting reminiscences, told of a Roman Catholic lady who wrote a cheque for the Converts' Home which she had visited. There was a look on the face of one of them such as she had never seen before.

Rev. Mr. Hughes represented the Irish Church Missions, and read some remarkable passages from letters of converted priests.

Rev. J. Wilkinson said there were 60,000 attendances of Jews last year at their hall in Whitechapel. After one meeting twenty-four Jews and one Gentile went into the inquiry-room. Twelve gave assent to what they heard, and twelve asked for prayer.

Miss Weston brought two man-o'-war's men, one of whom sang "Throw out the life-line," and the other addressed the meeting, which Miss Weston had already thrilled with the really wonderful story of her work. One of her narratives was of a terrific hurricane, during which a boom got adrift, and was beating the vessel, so as greatly to increase the danger; but to attempt to secure it was so full of peril that the captain hesitated to call on any man to do it. A young Christian sailor came forward and volunteered the dangerous duty. The captain consented, after telling him it would be at the risk of his life and admiring his bravery. The sailor said he knew the danger, but would willingly give his life to save the rest. He knelt down and committed himself to God, asking for his help, then went and with great skill and dexterity secured the boom. The captain warmly acknowledged his bravery, and said he had probably saved the ship and all their lives from destruction.

The praise meeting was full of power. Seven offered for foreign mission work if the Lord opened the way, and twenty-one parents offered their children if God gave the call.

Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.—"Ye are Christ's" was the text given by Miss Child at the June muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," when pointed addresses were delivered by Colonel MacGregor, Mr. William Luff, and several others. Miss Child gave very encouraging accounts of work during the past month, specially mentioning the growth of the work at Strood (Kent), where the accommodation of the hall is proving too small, and in consequence had just had to be extended.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

June 26.

"Fishers of Men."—John xxi. 1-17.

Golden Text.—"Lovest thou Me?"

CHRIST appeared unto his disciples for the third time (14). They could only see Him as He chose to manifest Himself. The Higher Being must reveal Himself to the lower. "No man hath seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, He hath declared Him." No man by searching can find out God.

Illustration.—The landscape appears at dawn. It has been there all the time. So Christ is amongst us, but He only appears when his glory reveals Him.

I Go a Fishing (3).

Peter was getting tired of waiting. After the death of Jesus, the disciples thought their work was at an end. They were returning to their former duties.

Lesson.—We should not be ready to give up Christian service—fighting our temptations, doing our duty in office or shop among worldly people—because we do not see the presence of the Master, He is there and will soon reveal Himself.

Toiled All the Night (3).

Hard to go on working with no success in anything. Compare minister or teacher who sees no conversions.

A mother's prayers for a wayward son. Augustine's mother's prayers for him answered after many years.

Christ Comes with Morning (4).

He brings morning with Him. He has watched the faithful workers through the night, and has come now to bring success beyond their dreams. So in all the cases referred to above He who blesses comes at last. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Compare.—How the Jews waited for the promised Messiah.
How the disciples waited for Pentecost.
Richard Weaver's mother waited for twenty years for the conversion of her son.
The thousands of faithful souls fighting against sin or poverty. He comes just when we need Him most.

To Show his Love (7).

No sooner did Peter know it was the Lord than he jumped into the sea to get near his Lord. This he did to show his love. Did the others love the Master less? No; only they had a different way of showing it.

Different sects, from the Salvationist to the Archbishop of Canterbury—they may have different methods of work. But their work is to show their love to Jesus. We must not too rashly condemn any man or method.

Christ Brings What we Need (5, 6, 12).

These toilers on the sea were hungry; that was the common need that Christ first satisfied. "Give us this day our daily bread" is in the Lord's Prayer, and we should expect Him to satisfy our need even in material things.

We should pray for what we want, and not for a thousand things we do not care about. Christ is waiting to give us the blessing we need.

Christ's Question (15).

He questioned Peter to make sure to Peter himself that the denial was remembered and fully repented of. The loving Master would not remind his follower of the fall save to do him good.

We forgive and remember. God forgives and forgets. He is almighty to forget. "I will cast thy sins behind My back and remember them no more against thee for ever."

Condition of Service.

Love to Jesus Christ. We have no business to engage in work for Jesus impelled by any other motive than this. To gain money or applause will not answer at the Judgment Day. It will not answer now. We cannot expect the blessing of the Master if we work for Him on any other terms than this. Teacher should impress on scholars how love for Christ will help them to bear troubles, to fight temptations, and to do their duty. The long line of martyrs and faithful heroes were able to bear and do because the love of Christ constrained them.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Shoes of Peace.

By Rev. GEORGE ELDER, M.A., Greenwich.

"Your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."—Eph. vi. 15.

At the other end of the body, the eyes of which are reading these words, are to be found a pair of little feet, and on the feet a pair of little shoes. Your feet are shod. Poor little feet, much to be pitied would they be if they had no shoes, for roads are rough and stones are sharp, and many a thorn might pierce them. In much discomfort and pain would they limp along. But you have on your feet shoes so cosy and comfortable.

I should like to know whence you got these shoes. "Oh," you say, "I went the other day with mother to a shop, and there I got a pair that fitted me excellently." Yes, but I wish you to look further back than that. You only bought them in the shop, but whence came they? I will tell you something that perhaps you never thought of before. Behind every pair of shoes lies a death. The blood of another had to be shed before you could be shod.

What do I mean? Let me explain. Your shoes are made of leather, and leather is the prepared skin of an animal. Before you could get your shoes, then, another had to die—an ox perhaps, or a kid, or a calf, it matters not which, and as the fruit of that death you got your comfortable shoes.

In our text God tells us to be shod with peace. I am sure you understand that God is not speaking of the feet of your body. He is speaking of your soul, and He wants your soul to be shod as well as your body. Strange shoes these are He bids you put on—"shoes of peace."

First, then, Whence are they to be had? Well, they can be had like the shoes for the body, only by the Blood of Another being shed. A great death lies behind them. You can no more make peace for yourself than you can make leather. The Lamb of God shed his blood. "He made peace by the blood of his cross" (Col. i. 20). He saw the need that we sinners had of shoes of peace, and in love and pity He gave Himself for us. Had He not died there would have been for us no peace. But now that He is "the Lamb slain" there is peace, "abundance of peace," enough to supply shoes of peace to all who will have them. Shoes that will give you great comfort, that will protect you amid all the rough places through which you may have to go, for "the peace of God shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 7).

Secondly, then, How are these to be had? A very important question, for so few know how. When you bought your shoes from the shopman the other day you, or someone for you, had to pay him money, and if you had refused to give him money he would have refused to give the shoes. It is Jesus who sells these shoes of peace, the same who made them. And He sells them "without money and without price." I have often seen in the windows of shops where shoes are sold the price attached to each pair. But I never saw any with this printed over them: "Without money and without price." Were some shopman to write that above his shoes I think he would have many customers, and his stock would soon be sold out.

Lastly, When are we to get these shoes of peace? If you were going a long journey on foot, when would you wish to have your shoes? Would it be at the beginning of the journey or at the end? "At the beginning, of course," you say; "I should want them for the journey." Exactly. It seems hardly possible, but is, alas! too true, that many are foolish enough to want these shoes only towards their journey's end. They would like to die with them on, but don't want to live with them on. Do not be among those foolish ones. You are just starting on life's journey, by which you hope to arrive at God's Beautiful City. Now is the time to get your shoes of peace. As soon as the younger son came back to his father (Luke xv. 22) he got "shoes on his feet." Get them from Jesus without delay. They will make your journey ever so much more easy.

I have heard of cruel women who have robbed little children of their shoes, and did not mind that they suffered from the loss. There is a cruel one who will try to rob you of your shoes of peace when you get them; but watch you and pray, and cling unto these precious shoes of peace which Jesus gives, always remembering that before you could be shod his blood had to be shed.

What the Spider Teaches.

I WONDER if any of you are fond of spiders! No doubt you like watching them; it is so interesting to see the clever way they make their webs. Do you think they teach us any lessons? Let us find out what the Bible tells us about them. The spider is only mentioned three times, once in Job, once in Isaiah, and once in Proverbs.

In Job viii. 14 we are told the hypocrite's hope and trust is like a spider's web. Now, do you think any of you would trust to a spider's web? I am sure you would not. But I want you to think if your hope is like this one. I dare say you hope for a great many things, but what hope have you of going to heaven? What hope have you of knowing that your sins are forgiven? If you are trusting in the Lord Jesus, then you have a good foundation for your hope, because "his blood cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7). If not, then your hope is like the one in our chapter, like a spider's web.

The second lesson the spider teaches us is in Isaiah lix. 5-6. The beginning of the chapter tells us how God's people had separated themselves from Him by their sins, and then they were wearing garments of works, like spiders' webs, to cover themselves. Did you ever think that the naughty things which you have done will separate you from God for ever, unless you are sorry for them, and ask Him to forgive you because the Lord Jesus died for you. It is no use for any of you to try and cover up your sins. Anything you may do to hide them is only like a spider's web in God's sight, and you all know how easily you can see through that.

Now, the third lesson the spider teaches us is a very bright one. We shall find it in Prov. xxx. 28. I suppose we should not be surprised to find plenty of spiders in our gardens, and in cupboards, and places of that kind, but this verse tells us that the spider is in kings' palaces. Fancy a little spider finding a place for itself in a king's palace. It seems to speak to us of little children finding a home in the palace of the King of Kings. You will all know who is spoken of in the Bible as the King of Kings. It is the Lord Jesus, and He has a place prepared, a mansion ready, for everyone who loves and trusts Him. You can find the verse in one of the Gospels which tells us about the many mansions. J. L.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 125.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Douglas Adams, J. H. Archer*, Wm. Aston.

B—Teresa and Lilian Blackie, Geo. Brand, Janet* and Elizabeth* Black, Aline* and Chappie* Bazett, Florence Blackman*, Henriette Bardot*, Massy Baker, Charlotte* and Mabel* Bailey, Ethel and John Benger, Mary Beck*, Gordon*, Daisy*, and May* Bligh, E. Biddlecombe, A. Bridges, Stanley V. Boxer, Ralph Bourne, Gordon Bolton, Sydney Brown, Nellie and Beatrice Brookfield, Robt. and Eva Browne, Ashley R. Bowker, Ernestine Buhl.

C—M. M. Craven, B. M. Cashford, Mabel Clay, Lily Clarke, Jack Clarke, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, Nellie and Janie Crawford, Colin and Gershom Campbell, Alice E. Crang, Lois M. Craven*, Mary and Wm. Charles, Walter, Maggie, and Jessie Carter, Beryl* and Gladys* Calvert, Bessie Cheale*, Henry J. Cheney*, Edith and Dora Corrie, Annie Cooper*, Dorothy Cooper*, Marjorie Collins, Edith Corrick, Arthur G. Cox*, Wm. S. Corrick, Ruth Coupe, Nina Coote, Ethel, Susie, and Walter* Cumbers, Emily Church.

D—Polognia Daws*, J. Ernest Davey*, Marie Denizot*, Kenneth Dunbar,* Gordon Duncan*, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke.

E—Sarah Evans, Muriel Edwards*, Muriel Ecroyd, Eva Edmundson.

F—Arthur and Richard* Farmer, Janet Fawkes, James* and Marian* Freegard, Madge W. Frew, Hyacinth B. FitzSimons*, Louise Filhol, Willie*, Ernest, and Reginald Findlay, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Janetta Fullarton.

G—Ivan Garrod, David Gardiner*, Edith and Margaret Gray, Albert* and Maudie Gray, Maurice Greenleaf, Daisy, Alfred and Mary E. Greenacre, Edith Grieve, A. and F. Gibbs, Minnie Giddings, Dorothy Grove, Daisy Groves.*

H—Winifred and Edith* Harvey, Rose Hamilton, Dorothy E. Harris*, Jack Harris, Ella Hake, Annie Hazledine, Edith Harris, Jessie M. Haybittle, May* and Sandy Handasyde, Edith and Emily Hearn, Daisy D. Hinton, P. B. Hickling, Theodora Hill, Byres Hill, Lucie Hourdain, Margaret D. Hogg*, Louise H. Hooper, Alice M. Hogben, Marjorie R. Hogge, Violet A. Holford, Evelyn M. Humphys, Mena and Edith Hunter, Lila K. Hughes, Tom, Harcourt, Helen, and May Hunter.

J—Nellie Jelfs*, Lizzie Johnstone, Henry B. Johnston.

K—W., A. D., Alex., T. and I. M.* Kay, Flossie Key, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Nessie and Henry Laing, Arthur J. Lamb*, Wm. C. A. Law, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Alex. and Annie Lemon, Murray and Grahame Lloyd, Harry M. Lowe, Nellie Lovegrove.

M—Edith Marnham, Margery and Trevor Mathews, Jean H. Maxwell, Lillie Mallory, Dora Marples, Enid L. V. Mather, Margaret Macphee, Florence Mackenzie, Abraham, Maggie, and Bella Mack, Mary MacWilliam*, S. E. Mackintosh, Kathleen J. G. McClure, Dugald and Kate McGilp, Ada B. Macnutt*, G. Macdonald, Barbara and John Maconchy, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Avie Mallory*, Reginald Measor, Hilda Medal, Charlotte Millar, May C. Mills*, Howard*, Arthur, and Gwendoline* Moir, Annie Moule, Mabel Morris*, Lewis F. and Owen* Morice, Dora Muir.

N—Edith and Ernest Nash, Herbert Newton*.

O—F. A. Osmond, Lottie and Harriette Orr.

P—Herbert Parr, Willie, Jessie, Maggie, and Ada Palmer, Dorothy Patten, Walter C. Perryman*, Vera Petrides, Louie M. and W. M. Penny, Edwin Peters, Laura D. Percy, Eva Petter*, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Susabel Pim, Kathleen Pincott*, Cyril Pomeroy, Ernest Poynder, Dorothy Pope, Jessie and Lillian Pook.

Q—Edith and Minnie Quick.

R—Edward H. and Herbert Rainey, Nora Read, Phillis Riddle, Jessie*, Ellie D., and Isabel C. D.* Roe, Cyril M. Roberts, Sydney and Olive Robertson, Mildred Robinson*, Charles S. Rudge.

S—Dollie and Bob Salt, Elsie M. Slark, W. Stangoe, Chas. W. Saunders, D. D., T. M., and C. D. Stanier, Hilda Schaeffer, Stuart Scragg, Bessie Scantlebury, Gladys E. Wilfred, Llewellyn, Undine, Gwendoline Shaw, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Rosetta and Muriel Sherwin, Agnes M. Sterry*, Frederick Seth*, Nellie Sery, May Spiganovics*, Florrie Smith, Mildred Scott, Edward Short, Emily Stuart*, C. Bessie Symes.*

T—Winnie Taylor, Louie* and Nannie Tibbits, Violet and Olive Tritton, John W. Thomson, Willie D., Kate and Nettie Thomson, Harry Thompson, Lucy Trotter, Neville Tufnell, Arthur Turnbull, James Tuff*, Maud and Edith Tyson.

V—Elsie Vigars.

W—Greta Watson*, Louisa and Violet Walker, J. Wm. and Edith J.* Wheeler, Edith Wilkins, Eva Winpenny, Florrie K. White, F. Wilson*, Pringle Wilson*, Ada Willmer, Arthur Wright, Evelyn H. Wood.

Y—Annie Yeo.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (126).

1. "Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat?" (John vi. 5).

2. Philip and Andrew.

3. (a) The disciples gathered the fragments together and filled twelve baskets (John vi. 13). (b) "This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world." They wanted to take Jesus by force and make Him a king (John vi. 14, 15).

4. The people had not seen Jesus pass over the Sea of Galilee with his disciples, and wondered how He reached Capernaum (John vi. 22-25).

5. "That ye believe on Him whom He hath sent" (John vi. 29).

6. Because they did not understand when He said He was the Bread of Life, and that no one could come unto God except through Him (John vi. 53-65).

7. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God" (John vi. 63, 69).

8. Because they could not agree as to who Christ was. At the feast of Tabernacles (John vii. 2, 40-43).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert, Jessie Alen Dora, Ralph*, and Ernest Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, W. T. Aldous.*

B—Edith Ballard, Herbert H. Braddon, Edith and J. Barker, Edith E Bensted*, May, Gordon, and Daisy Bligh, Phyllis Boyd*, Gertrude M. Bush.

C—M. M. Craven, Eleanor Chance*, Rosaline Castelo, Bessie Cheale, Ida Edith*, Mabel, and Annie* Cole, Dorothy Cooper*, Irene Coppard, Kathleen and Brereton Code.

D—Ralph and Dorothy* Daintree, Vera Dickinson*, Claude and Violet Dodsworth, Violet, Kitty*, and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Wm.* and Mordaunt* Doll.

E—Eva L. Edmundson.

F—Eric and J. A. Field, Eva and Ethel Fielder.

G—Albert and Maudie Gray, Clarice and Bertie* Gale, Gershom and Philip* Green, Emma Goodier, Mary Gover.

H—Frances Harding, Sandy Handasyde, Dorothy Reader Harris*, Edith Harris*, Florence Harbord*, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Byres Hill, Joshua and Dorothy Hughes-Games.

J—Dora Jay, Betty Jacobs*, Florrie Jennings*.

K—Max and Eva Kalb, Ethel, Mary and Cara Kestin.

L—Edward*, Henry*, May*, and Sidney* Law, Blanche Lindup*, Cecilia Lichtenstein*.

M—Gladys and J. Hugh Mather, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, May C. Mills, Evelyn* and Edward* Moir, Lewis F. and Owen L. Morice.

N—J. and Henry L. Neligan, Peter* and John G. Nicholson, Eleanor* and Valerie* Noel.

P—Mary Papprill, Herbert Parr, Ethel* and Kathleen A.* Pasley, Alice M. Palmer, Haden Palmer*, Winnie Page, Myrtle Perry, Dora M. Phillimore, Kathleen Pincott*, Rhoda Porter, Mary E. Plumb*.

R—Ernest Ross.

S—Margery Smart*, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Harold Sandors, Betty Swanston, Frederick Seth*, Sydney and Janet Speed, Annie Shepherd, Kate Smith*, Flora Simmons*, Florrie Smith, Betty Stokes*, Jessie and Ethel Snowball, Herbert M. Stuart*, Ronald Studd.

T—Olive and Violet Tritton, Herbert Teller, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Laurence*, Peveril*, and Herbert* Turnbull.

V—Dorothy Vigers*, Kenneth J. Vining, Edwin and May Vickers.

W—J. Wm. and Edith J. Wheeler, Edith M. Williams, Arthur H Williams, Cecile, Noel, and Philis Wright, Evelyn H. Wood.

FOREIGN LIST.

, Will all those who send in papers from abroad kindly remember that they can only be sent by letter post (2½d. per ½oz.). I have received several this week upon which I had to pay.

Correct answers received from: No. 113. Willie D. Mudditt (Chefoo). No. 117. Cuckoo Lister*, Alice and W. E. Henderson (Jamaica). No. 118. Alice Henderson*, Maria H. and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). No. 119. Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 122. Dora E. Wallace, Jean McN. Scott, H. and A. Baillie (Canada). Nos. 123 and 124. Francis W. B. Field (Germany).

Prize Competition.—Div. II.: 2nd prize, Mildred Fryer (Sydney), Janet Garrett (S. Africa). 1st cert., Maria Hermina Lister (S. Africa). Div. I.: 1st cert., Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa).

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 127).

1. What good man "sat in the gate" of a wicked city? (Gen. xv. to xx.).

2. To whom was the promise made, "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies"? (Gen. xxi. to xxv.).

3. Who said, "This is the gate of heaven"? and on what occasion? (Gen. xxv. to xxx.).

4. Who at midnight carried away the doors of a gate? and of what city? (Judges).

5. What old priest died by the side of a gate? (1 Sam.).

6. In the gate of what city was an unbelieving lord trodden to death? (2 Kings v. to x.).

7. To what two gates did the Lord Jesus refer in the Sermon on the Mount? Quote the passage, as in Matthew.

8. Of what city is it said, "The gates of it shall not be shut at all by day"? (Rev.).

[Those under TEN do any three questions; those under THIRTEEN any five.]

Personal.

I have received the following letter from Miss Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester:—"Please tell your kind nieces that their parcel has arrived safely, and that we are grateful for it. The invalid soldiers are arriving, and these little gifts open the way for us to speak to them of God's great gift, eternal life, for whosoever will receive it. Several ships are expected this month and next."

The Hon. Sec. of the Bible Flower Mission also writes thanking my nephews and nieces for boxes of flowers, which have been much appreciated by the sick people to whom they were taken.

Gordon Bolton.—At present you are eligible; you must be correct nine times during the twelve weeks.

M. Papprill.—You will not be able to enter for the next competition, as you started too late this quarter.

James Barker.—When a paper is written with extra care a star is given.

Lois M. Craven.—It was intended for your name.

Francis W. Milne.—I have nieces much older than you are. I should be sorry for you to give up belonging to the Searcher. Uncle Tom.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun.	June 19,	1 Kings	i. 32-49	Th.	June 23,	1 Kings	vi. 1-14
M.	„ 20	„	iii. 1-15	F.	„ 24	„	vii. 40-51
Tu.	„ 21	„	iv. 20-34	Sat.	„ 25	„	viii. 1-13
W.	„ 22	„	v. 1-18

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Slough, June 18-19; Mildmay, June 21-23; Ilkley, June 24; Leeds, June 25, 26; Osmanby, Lincoln, June 28; Springfield, Chelmsford, June 29; Croydon, June 30. Rev. Regd. Callender, Streatham Hill, June 17; Beckenham, June 18; Highgate, June 25. Mr. E. Hughes, Waterlooroad, June 19; Hawkstone Hall, June 21. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Misterton, near Crewkerne. Mr. Hankinson, Throcking, Buntingford, June 29; Guildford, July 8-10. Mr. Hewlett, caravan, Crawley.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

PRAYING TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dear Sir,—I have read over carefully Major-General Hutchinson's letter in your issue of the 9th inst. re the above, but notice that all his Scriptural quotations are taken, with one exception, from the Old Testament and the Gospels. It was not till Pentecost that God's people became fully acquainted with the work, personality, and Deity of the Holy Spirit. Our Lord told his disciples, in John xvi., that when the Spirit was come He would reprove or convince "the world of sin," etc. And if the Holy Spirit is God, must it not be right to speak to Him, and ask Him in prayer to do this his own work in his own way? The general teaching of God's Word, without doubt, is that our prayers be directed to God the Father, in the name of God the Son, and by the power of God the Holy Spirit. But is it not the experience of most of God's saints that they are frequently led to address themselves to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit?

With regard to the "certain difficulty in directly addressing" the Holy Spirit on account "of the Spirit of God dwelling in us," might not the same be said of the Father, for our Lord says, in John xiv. 23: "If a man love Me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make our abode with him?" And the Apostle's prayer in Eph. iii. is that we might be strengthened with the Spirit, possessed by Christ, and "filled with all the fulness of God."

Still, as one is most anxious to pray at all times according to the will of God, it will be well to hear further what more of your readers have to say on this important matter, especially those who have become familiar with "the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2-10).—Yours faithfully,

John Roberts.

9, Oakfield-road, Clapton, London, N.E.

Dear Sir,—If we believe the Holy Spirit to be not merely an influence or an emanation, but a Person in every sense as truly and essentially Divine as the Father and the Lord Jesus, it must also be an article of our faith that He is equally an object of worship, and, while insisting, properly and rightly, upon the work of Christ and the love of the Father, we should never forget that when one came to Jesus complimenting Him as a God-sent teacher Jesus rejoined by insisting on the nature and necessity of the Holy Spirit's work in reference to the soul's spiritual enlightenment.

There is no rivalry in the Court of Heaven as to who shall best hear a sinner's cry for mercy or a saint's prayer for guidance. Let us not, in these degenerate days, when the admittedly felt want is more of the Holy Spirit's power, play into the hands of the arch enemy of souls by suggesting an inferiority in any part of Deity; but make our prayers as much to the Holy Ghost as to the Father and the Son, for He is the Author and Giver of Life, and Deity characterises the whole of his saving work.—Yours faithfully,

P. Macdonald.

Woking, Surrey.

"REFORM OF STAGE MORALITY."

Sir,—Under "Notes and Comments" in your last issue, you refer to an article in The Church Times on this subject; and, while endorisng "its plea for earnest co-operation with those in the theatrical profession who desire to raise the tone of its morals," and for "personal visitation of individual members, especially in country towns visited by travelling companies," you add a valuable suggestion as to the necessity of cultivating the friendly assistance of lodging-house keepers in the provinces.

Will you permit me to point out that this is pre-eminently the work of the Theatrical Mission, whose labours are being constantly directed to the "reform of stage morality" by personal contact and intercourse with individual members of the profession, and by a systematic and widespread organisation of provincial agencies.

In almost every city and town visited by travelling companies we have correspondents and helpers, and we are able to supply to those leaving London for the provinces lists of suitable lodging-houses in the various centres. In these lodging-houses copies of the Bible are left for the special use of those frequenting them, and only this week we have received as a present from the founder of the Theatrical Mission a valuable parcel of Testaments and Psalms for this purpose.

At the present moment we have over thirty members of the theatrical profession lodging at Macready House, most of whom are from the provinces, and without friends in this great city. Here they find shelter and protection from the temptations of their calling, and are surrounded with homely and Christian influences. Many others come here every day for rest and quiet companionship.

Unfortunately, like almost every other evangelical work, we are greatly harassed by want of funds, and shall be grateful for the practical help and sympathy of the numerous readers of The Christian.—Faithfully yours,

Samuel E. Burrow, Secretary.

Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Nantes 1598-1898.

Apostate France, awake!
Sackcloth and ashes don!
With eyes averted gaze
Thy guilty past upon!
And liquidate in holy tears
The sad procession of the years.

Muse on thy wrongs of old
To faith and conscience done
By people, prince, and priest
In cruel concord one,
When red Bartholomew in blood
Essayed to quench the light of God.

Muse how in glory's hour,
Perfidious in thy pride,
Thou didst revoke the law
That nurtured at thy side
Thy noblest sons with purest faith,
The relics of that elder death.

To England's pious coast
The sorrowing exiles fled;
Faith unto faith more kind
A kindred shelter spread;
And graceful thrift and dexterous toil
Repaid their welcome to our isle.

Fair Church of France reformed,
Daughter of Calvin, hail!
Against thy suffering few
The fierce shall not prevail,
Though mitred zeal and sceptred sway
And atheist wrath one host array.

Surviving seas of blood,
Thy patriot course pursue;
God's grace thy leading star,
God's Word thy compass true;
Bear onward to the heavenly shore,
Where storm and struggle vex no more.

Herbert J. R. Marston.

Belgrave Chapel.

Bible Society of Scotland.—At a meeting of directors in Glasgow it was stated that in Northern and Western China there had been a large circulation of the Scriptures. In six months Mr. Annand, of Tientsin, had issued almost as many Scriptures as in all last year. Mr. James Murray, of Chung King, had circulated 34,154 Scriptures and 17,920 tracts. The death was reported of a distinguished missionary, Dr. G. F. Verbeck, for thirty-seven years resident in Japan, and one of three missionaries who translated the Old Testament into Japanese.

A Remarkable Village Work.—Rev. G. T. Candlin, in a communication from North China, gives an account of a remarkable revival movement in Kai-Ping Circuit. During his twenty years of missionary labour he says he has never seen a more promising work of grace. The scene is a village thirteen miles from Tangshan. For some years work has been carried on there, but until twelve months ago no preacher had been stationed; Mr. Candlin himself bought the chapel. The native preacher is an ex-Taoist priest, and though but a poor scholar possesses great personal influence. He has prevailed upon all the members to work hard for the cause, the chapel is overcrowded at every service, and the "infection of gracious influence" is said to be spreading on all sides. A girls' school has been started. At his last visit Mr. Candlin baptized sixty persons, and a Communion service was held.

OBITUARY.

MR. HENRY RICHARDSON.

This earnest servant of Christ has been called, after a severe and protracted illness, to his eternal rest. He has been at work in Shropshire for nearly thirty years, most of this long period in connection with the late Miss Harford Battersby and the Country Towns Mission. His work has been productive of much fruit. He never spared himself; in fact, frequently did more than his strength allowed. For many years he has been travelling with a "Gospel Tent," and his labours were greatly appreciated in the sadly needy districts of this and the neighbouring county. This splendid work has been and will be carried on on purely unsectarian lines, and it is much hoped that the necessary funds will be forthcoming to meet the expenses for the following summer months, and to proclaim a simple Gospel in the districts where it is so much required.

T.R.

MR. J. G. ROBINSON, DONCASTER.

This earnest worker was suddenly called home by drowning on Monday week. Not feeling very well, he had gone out for a row, and having lost his hat, upset the boat in trying to reach it, and, though an expert swimmer, got entangled in mud and weeds, and lost his life. He was a Churchman, and was connected with every evangelical effort in the town. He had been a Sunday-school teacher, superintendent of Sunday-schools, open-air preacher, conductor of Bible-class, and was at the time of his death hon. secretary of the Y.M.C.A. and of the C.E.T.S., also one of the committee of the National Protestant League, and one to whom everybody in the town looked for advice and assistance in every good work. It is no exaggeration to say that he was beloved by all, Churchmen and Dissenters alike. His consistent life and his bright and holy example will never be forgotten by those who had the happiness and privilege of knowing him. About half the young men in the town have been under his care in one way or another. For three years he was a member of the Corporation, but retired, being much more concerned in religious than municipal life. He leaves a widow and large family, who have the sincere sympathy of all.

MR. CHEYNE BRADY.

This esteemed Christian brother entered into rest on Friday afternoon, June 3. He had never recovered a fall at Acqui some time ago. With his wife and daughter, he had arranged to go to St. Martin Vesubie, above Nice, for the summer; but when the time came for leaving he was too ill to go. I went over to Cannes to see him on June 3, and was told that a change for the worse had passed over him, and the doctor had said that there was no hope of his recovery. We all assembled around his bed. I repeated the words of Psalm xxiii. 40, and we commended him to God. He was quite conscious up to the last. He gradually sank, and departed peacefully, and without any pain.

Our dear friend had a very large and wide circle of friends. His home at Cannes has been for years a centre of Christian love, influence, and hospitality; and a meeting-place for Christians of all denominations, for Bible-readings and good works. Many a stranger to Cannes has not only met with a hearty welcome under Mr. and Mrs. Brady's hospitable roof, but has also formed Christian acquaintances of real lasting value. Mr. Brady, as you well know, has been a blessing to many by means of his tracts. Your readers will be sure to remember the widow and the family in prayer.

Henry Collings.

Chaplain of St. John's, San Remo, Italy.

Cambridge.—The Master of Trinity presided over a large meeting of members of the University held in the Guildhall, Cambridge, in support of a movement which aims at the establishment of a missionary library and reading-room. It is proposed to obtain for the purpose the ground floor of the Henry Martyn Hall, the upper part of which is already the centre of missionary work in the University. At the present time over 100 Cambridge men are formed into bands for the study of missionary facts, history, and principles.

Items of Interest.

Home.

A new gas has been discovered in the air by Lord Rayleigh and Professor Ramsay by the aid of the spectroscope, which it is proposed to call crypton.

The National Association for the Welfare of the Feeble-minded aims to establish homes for such children, to train teachers for the special work, and the support of cottage homes for adult cases.

The oral teaching of the deaf has become very successful. "Instead of remaining a caste by themselves, and almost outcast, the deaf are taught to speak like other people, and restored to humanity."

North Wales University College, in order to illustrate experimentally the teaching of agriculture, is about to acquire a farm at Lledwigan of 358 acres at a cost of £4000. The Drapers' Company have promised £1000 towards the scheme.

The number of boys and girls sent into the country by the Children's Holiday Fund, of which the Princess of Wales is patron, reached last year a total of 31,412.—The Boarding-out and Cottage Training Homes Association is doing excellent service among poor children; 6498 were boarded out last year.

The Coal Trouble.—At the conference on Saturday the men's representatives refused to accept a joint wage board, with an automatic arrangement for regulating wages by selling prices. The employers' representatives intimated that on no consideration could they agree to any system of arbitration for the regulation of wages. The conference ended without result. The outlook is most serious. The men on strike are restrained from violence only by the presence of the troops.

Charitable Contributions.—The City Corporation, 50gs. to the North-Eastern Hospital for Children.—The Cordwainers' Company, 10gs. to the Ragged School Union.—From S. Mordan and Co., £11 18s. for the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund.—Anonymously, £1000 to the Lord Mayor of Liverpool has been given to the Stanley Hospital.—At a function at the Hotel Métropôle £1875 for the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney.—From the Trustees of Smith's Charity (Kensington Estate), £200 to St. Thomas's Hospital.—At the centenary of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, presided over by the Prince of Wales, £134,000.—£1000 from Mrs. Douglas Henty to St. Mark's Hospital for Fistula, to endow a bed.—£100 to East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women.—£1000 from the Merchant Taylors' Company to the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund.—By the will of Mr. D. Myles, of Dundee, £1000 to University College, £1000 to the Royal Infirmary, £500 to the Industrial Schools, and £100 each to the Institution for the Blind, Sick Poor, Nursing, Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and Willison Free Church, of which he was an office-bearer.—£1000 from "G. R." to St. Thomas's Hospital.—£250 by the trustees of Smith's Charity to the Dental Hospital.

SCOTLAND.

A most interesting work is being carried on by the Scottish Outdoor Blind Teachers' Society. The Society has ten mission stations in Scotland.

Free Church friends in Thurso are lamenting the near departure from their midst of Rev. G. H. Morrison, who has accepted a call to a pastorate in Dundee.

The committee of the Edinburgh Children's Fortnightly Holiday Fund have, since its institution, sent about 20,000 poor children into the country for a fortnight.

Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, announces that a friend has offered to build the second block of the Consumptive Hospital at the Bridge of Weir, at a cost of £8000.

A four days' conference for the deepening of spiritual life was held at Aberdeen from June 7 to 10. Several Scotch ministers were the speakers, and the addresses were characterised by much power and freshness.

A band of young men go from Glasgow every Saturday afternoon during the summer to visit surrounding villages with a view to having Gospel meetings. There has been much to cheer and encourage the workers in their labours.

IRELAND.

The tenth annual convention for the promotion of holiness has been held in the Antient Concert Rooms, Dublin. Among the speakers was Rev. E. H. Hopkins, of London.

The Mission to the Adult Deaf and Dumb of the Cork centre has had a year of very successful work. In addition to other meetings and services a weekly Bible-class is held for the mutes, and is well attended.

In connection with the Nationalist celebration of the anniversary of the rising of 1798, serious disturbances have taken place at Belfast. There were sharp collisions between rival mobs. The military had to be employed to quell the disturbances.

The General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church has been in session in Belfast during the past week. Rev. Wm. Beatty is moderator. A resolution was adopted in favour of commemorating the opening of the twentieth century by raising a fund of £100,000 for various religious objects. Nearly £200,000 was contributed for various purposes last year. The Presbyterian Church is doing an excellent work in Ireland, and was never better equipped than at present.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The North Liverpool Association has made during the past year steady advance. In the religious work blessing has been manifest, not only in the most important matters but also in the smaller details. Many have professed to find Christ; others have been led into service for the Master.

The work at the Liverpool Central Association has been carried on with unabated vigour during the past year. Aggressive evangelistic work has been conducted at two mission rooms in the poor part of the city, and over eighty lodging houses have been visited every Sunday, where tracts have been distributed, and services held in many of them. Foreign missionary work has been encouraged by the operations of the Foreign Missionary Auxiliary.

An interesting ceremony took place on Monday week, at the Old Bell Inn Buildings, Bedford, when Mr. Arthur Edmonds, secretary, to whose persistent efforts the Association owes the success of the new building scheme, had the pleasure of removing the first brick of the old building, which is to be replaced by a handsome four-storey block, costing over £10,000, in which the local Y.M.C.A. will in future find a home. An important feature of the building is a temperance café on the site of the public-house known as the Bell.

Foreign.

Coal mines have been discovered in the provinces of Havana and Santa Clara (Cuba).

The House of Commons has authorised the raising in England of the new loan of £10,000,000 for administrative purposes in India.

The Canadian Parliament has passed a farewell address to Lord and Lady Aberdeen on their approaching departure from Canada.

Dr. Koch declares that the spread of malaria in the tropics is due to the propagation of blood parasites by mosquitoes, and that the surest means to effect a cure is a timely administration of quinine.

An illuminated album and books have been presented to the Duke of Westminster in acknowledgment of his efforts to relieve Armenian distress. "The Archbishop of Trajanopolis and those over whom he presided wished to express their thanks to the Duke for his manifold services to the Armenians in Turkey, Bulgaria, and Egypt."

Much importance is attached in Germany to the approaching visit of the Emperor William to the Holy Land, as likely to further extensive projects of German immigration into Asia Minor.—According to the report of the British Consul at Jerusalem the total foreign trade through Jaffa (Joppa) last year amounted to £61,600. From Gaza 32,000 tons, chiefly of barley, were shipped to the United Kingdom.

The Transvaal.—The Orange Free State Volksraad has rejected the proposal for reciprocal franchise with the Transvaal.—The situation in Swaziland is very grave. War may break out at any moment; 20,000 well-armed warriors are ready to fight. There is much anxiety.

Italy.—The military tribunal at Milan has already dealt with 116 of the accused in regard to the recent rising. Most of them are quite young men, only seven above the age of forty. The total penalties decreed amount to 157 years' imprisonment.—Many social and economic reforms are contemplated by the Government, among them reclaiming and improving uncultivated land and the abolishing, in small communes, the octroi, which is the principal cause of the dearness of the necessaries of life.

Greece.—The evacuation of Thessaly has been virtually completed by the retirement of the Turkish troops from Larissa, which has been occupied by General Vassos.—Now that Volo has been peaceably evacuated by the Turks and occupied by Greek troops, the final instalment of the war indemnity will be paid.

Turkey.—The Grand Vizier at Constantinople raises difficulties as to the repatriation of 40,000 destitute Armenians living on charity in the Caucasus, as the property abandoned has been divided among the Turks. Russia is pressing the matter upon the Porte.—At last the Porte has consented to inquire into the ill-treatment which the Serbs inhabiting the province of Kossovo suffer at the hands of the Albanians.

The Far East.—A convention has been signed by which Great Britain leases territories on the mainland opposite Hong Kong for ninety-nine years, and all the water ways of Mirs Bay and Deep Bay, China retaining the right to use the waters for her ships.—Japan requires certain settlements and an indemnity of £15,000 for damage sustained by Japanese property in the Sha-Shi riots.—More Russian reinforcements are being sent to Port Arthur, and a steamship line to the Far East is to be inaugurated.—An Imperial edict has been issued at Peking ordering the establishment there of a university on the European model.

China and Foreign Trade.—The Tsang-li-Yamen have signed a contract with the Russo-Chinese Bank for a railway 140 miles from Ta-yuen-fu, the capital of Shan-Si province, to Chen-te-fu.—A second contract is granted to an Anglo-Italian syndicate for working coal, petroleum, and iron throughout Central Southern Shan-si, with the privilege of building railways.—The total foreign trade of the port of Chung-King amounted last year to over £2,750,000, and showed an increase in every branch of trade despite serious disadvantages.—The Chinese Government has conceded to France a railway line in the Province of Kwang-tung—this completes the system of trade routes from Tong-King into Southern China.

Africa.—Dr. R. Koch, the eminent bacteriologist, has been consulted by the East African Protectorate as to preventive measures against rinderpest, which is again rampant in the interior.—The rising in Sierra Leone is apparently in a state of early collapse. The rebel leader, Bai Burch, is reported to be eager for peace, and the cruiser Blake is on her way home, which shows that the acute stage is over.—The advance on Khartoum will begin at the end of August.—All questions in regard to territory hitherto in dispute between France and England in West Africa (Niger territory) have been adjusted.—The Anglo-French Commission on the Niger question have come to a complete understanding. Niki is to belong to France, and Busa and Bere to Great Britain. France will retain Bona, but England will obtain in favour of her Sokoto possessions a zone of sixty miles. The navigation of the Niger and tariffs are also definitely settled.

The War.—The conflict with Spain seems now to be pushed forward with much energy by the United States. Santiago's bombardment a week ago merely tested the strength of the fortifications. The state of things in the Philippines has caused a profound sensation in Madrid. General Augusti is reported to be driven within the walls of Manila. In Cuba some progress is being made. Caimamera, at the head of Guantanamo Bay, is occupied by a naval brigade of marines from Admiral Sampson's squadron. This will be held as a point d'appui for further operations. In a formidable midnight attack the Spaniards charged the American marines with great courage, but were not adequately supported. At daybreak field guns were brought into position, and the attacking force was dispersed. There were losses on both sides.—The question is being asked, "How long will the war last?" while rumours are in circulation of an impending intervention of the Powers.—The Countess de Casa Valencia has received a long despatch from Madrid, giving particulars of the misery prevalent among the Spanish sick and wounded and the widows and orphans.—All the hotel accommodation at Kingston (Jamaica) is taken by wealthy Cubans, who, to the number of between 2500 and 3000, will stay there until the war is over.

The Bell of Love.

Of all the bells of earth that swing,
This is the sweetest one to ring:
Pull! pull!
The Golden Bell of Love,
To make the earth more beautiful,
More like the angel's land above.

Yes, I will ring the Golden Bell!
I love to hear the music swell,
Swing! swing!
The bell on this bright day,
While we our grateful tribute bring,
Ring, ring the Bell of Love we say.

O I would ring the bell for all!
The rich and poor, the great and small;
And tell
How Jesus came to me,
And how He brought this Golden Bell,
A happy ringer I would be.

O I would love to ring it where
There is no music on the air;
No bells
Of Sabbath joy and rest;
I love the music, for it tells
Of Jesus whom I love the best.

—Selected. Dwight Williams.

THE BOOK WORLD.

AN OLDEN QUAKER.

Those who have dipped into the histories of the early Friends know that there is a wealth of strong, helpful experience in their memoirs. In A Quaker of the Olden Time we have a reprint (in its original quaint dress) of a book published 150 years ago—the memoir of John Roberts, by his son, Daniel Roberts. (Headley Bros.) John Roberts, a plain farmer, served in Cromwell's army, but afterwards, as a man of peace, had to endure the buffetings, persecution, and imprisonments with which early Friends became so familiar. His grip of truth is clear and firm. His argument with the bishop is admirable, and plain John seems to have the best of it. The lives and endurance of other members of the Roberts family are also narrated. It is, in fact, a book to be conned again and again; for these old Quaker heroes teach many a grand lesson. The spelling is a study in itself of the growth and changes in our mother Saxon. It is curious to note, for example, how the pronoun and preposition "their" and "there" have interchanged spelling, being used in the memoir exactly in the contrary way to their modern use.

CONFLICTS OF METHODISM.

The repeated divisions which have rent the ranks of our brethren the Methodists have to some extent been inexplicable to outsiders. The clue, however, is given in a volume from the pen of Rev. Dr. B. Gregory, Side Lights on the Conflicts of Methodism, during the Second Quarter of the Nineteenth Century, 1827-1852. Taken chiefly from the Notes of the late Rev. Joseph Fowler on the Debates of the Wesleyan Conference; with a biographical sketch and a centenary contribution to the Constitutional History of Methodism. From various causes the publication of these invaluable and long looked for documents has been from time to time postponed. They clear away the mystery which has hitherto enshrouded the devastating series of secessions which disturbed and darkened a period of unprecedented activity and expansion, and of almost heroic liberality. These disruptions culminated in the catastrophe of 1849 and 1850, which tore off 100,000 members at one fell swoop. The value of the book is much enhanced by a sketch of Rev. Joseph Fowler, the model of a Christian pastor. (8s. Cassell & Co.)

SOME STORY BOOKS.

Four of these are before us, and all may be heartily commended for reading in leisure hours. Two carry us back to the memorable past. Echoes of a Vanished World, by R. Holmes (6s. Marshall, Russell, & Co.), is a most moving narrative of the stirring Reformation times in Cromwell's days. Many a doughty deed is recorded, and many a beautiful instance of fidelity to conscience. The Young Queen of Hearts, by Mrs. Marshall (Seeley & Co.), is perhaps more prosaic, but yet full of genuine interest, and by no means devoid of romance.

The other two volumes are quite up to date. The Soul of Honour, by Hesba Stretton (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.), is redolent of bubble companies and the ruin they have wrought; of humble self-sacrificing labours for the good of others; and of the vicissitudes of human life nobly lived. The name of the author is a guarantee for wholesomeness of tone. Concerning Isabel Carnaby, by Ellen T. Fowler (6s. Hodder & Stoughton), is a notable and exceedingly clever tale of modern society—too clever, indeed, for strict realism. As one reviewer remarks, "drawing-room people do not talk in perpetual epigrams." Nevertheless, the story is intensely fascinating, and high-toned in its general drift.

Lovers of allegory will find a pleasing series in The Silver City. By Margaret E. Ashley. (Headley Bros.) The conception is fine, and the teaching high-toned and spiritual.

Mr. Bullock has issued half-yearly volumes of his monthlies (6d. each) Hand and Heart, Day of Days, and Home Words—each replete in attractive reading for the home circle. ("Home Words" Publishing Office.)

In a vision or allegory, under the title Is Jesus' Cross the way to Peace? Rev. W. A. Allan brings out strongly the Evangelical aspect of the Cross, with some sharp comments on the worldliness of many of the churches. (6d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

The rescue of a runaway slave, under the title of For Love's Sake, by Rev. Evan Thomas (1s. 6d. net, H. R. Allenson), proves to be a series of pointed lessons specially addressed to young people from the story of Onesimus. We find in it many suggestive thoughts pleasantly put.

Already lives, more or less complete, are appearing of the great Liberal statesman. Messrs. W. F. Mack & Co. have issued (1s.) W. E. Gladstone, a brief popular review of his career, compiled by F. C. Warne. The same firm issue an album of photographs (with explanatory notes) of the Ashley Down Orphan Homes (6d.).

The latest addition to Messrs. Nisbet and Co.'s "Preachers of To-day" Series is Brief Sermons for Busy Men, by R. F. Horton, D.D. (1s. 6d.) Without theorising or theologising, Dr. Horton treats such subjects as sin, atonement, immortality, the Church, in a very plain, practical, and pungent fashion that must impress every earnest reader.

Some of the papers that were read at last year's Summer School, convened by the Society of Friends, are published under the title of Echoes from Scarborough. (2s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) We referred to the gatherings at the time, and need only say here that the papers read show that our Quaker friends are fully alive to the intellectual and spiritual movements of the time.

The Sacrifice of Christ. By Henry Wace, D.D. (Seeley & Co.) The great central theme of human history finds in these reverent pages a very clear and satisfactory unfolding. Dr. Wace deals with the various aspects of the subject, and ably gathers into a brief compass the teachings of Christ and the apostles as to the way of reconciliation between a just God and a sinful race.

David Hume. By Henry Calderwood. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) This posthumous contribution by Dr. Calderwood to the "Famous Scots" series will be read with a pathetic interest. It modifies the popular view of Hume; showing him to be less of the arch-infidel than the philosophic thinker, who allowed human reasoning to override the deeper instincts of his nature.

While even yet varying views prevail as to particular points in prophetic study, the hope of the personal return of our Lord is now widely and warmly cherished. Hence such books as The Lord will Come, by W. W. Fereday (1s., 1s. 6d. A. Holness), possess a perennial interest. The author develops the futurist view, and seeks to base his teaching closely on the Word itself.

The incidents and memories of Thirty Years' Clerical Work, in Ireland and England, provides plenty of readable material. Rev. W. H. Disney, the rector of Winwick, in issuing these reminiscences, has much to tell of quiet, fruitful service among Roman Catholics, in Bible-classes and evangelistic missions. The volume contains much of interest to admirers of earnest work. (2s. Snow & Co.).

The refining effect of suffering is the keynote of Through the Crucible. By J. Harwood Panting. (2s. Partridge & Co.) A motherless girl is adopted by a country lady, marries an aged gentleman, is charged by-and-by with his death and found guilty, till fresh evidence appears in time to save her. Even then her sorrows are not ended; but at length all is cleared up, and there is sunshine after rain.

Even a ragged-school boy may be true knight and hero. Doubters, if such there be, of an oft-proved fact had better read Ben, a Story of Life's Byeway, by Lydia Phillips. It is a winsome story of poor life and precious result of a ragged-school teacher's efforts.—A companion volume, The Secret of the Yew, by Frank Yerlock, deals with a vastly different line of life—an impoverished baronet, who bravely faces his lot and ends by winning back his own. In his sphere he is a true hero, as Ben, aforementioned, is in his. (1s. 6d. each. Partridge & Co.)

The Church Hymnary (Henry Frowde). This new compilation has been prepared by a committee representing the different Presbyterian bodies in Scotland and Ireland with a view to its common adoption by all these churches. The selection is choice and thoroughly comprehensive. We have not detected a weak hymn in it, and all moods of Christian aspiration and praise find appropriate and uplifting expression. The work is produced in various sizes of type. Musical editions are also in preparation, and we believe the book will meet with wide acceptance in many churches.

Regent Square. By John Hair. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) This well-written sketch of an historic London congregation deserves to be widely perused. Few modern churches could show a more brilliant array of successive pastors than Regent Square, which has been closely associated with the public labours of Edward Irving, David Brown, James Hamilton, Oswald Dykes, W. G. Elmslie, and John McNeill, not to speak of the present pastor, Mr. Connell. The book is ably and impartially written, and many beyond the pale of Presbyterianism will gather both pleasure and profit from its pages.

Rev. James Paton, of Glasgow, is best known, perhaps, as the brother and home-helper of "The Apostle of the New Hebrides," but he has already proved his literary gift. Now he sends forth a "braid Scots" story, Castlebraes (6s. Blackwood & Sons), giving a series of Scotch characters, true to the life, albeit a life that is disappearing save in the most remote corners. Good grit, strong commonsense, and intense love for truth, as they know and hold it, are among their characteristics, while the dry Scottish humour lends a flavour to it all. A glossary is appended to help Southerners in dialectical difficulties.

The story of Uganda and the noble lives laid down for Christ and his cause in that far-off post, has enriched by many a stirring volume—such as Hannington, Mackay, and Pilkington—the romance of missions. In Uganda for Christ, by Rev. R. D. Pierpoint (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), we have a story of another type—a brave, devoted, true-hearted, intense young life laid down after a few weeks' labour in Central Africa. Rev. J. S. Callis, formerly a curate of Mr. Webb-Peploe, and of All Saints', Plumstead, went out only to die, yet, strange as it seems from our short-sighted point of view, who will dare to say such a life is wasted?

Mr. D. L. Moody's pungent and Scriptural, direct and simple utterances have burned into the souls of tens of thousands, who will gladly welcome two fresh volumes from his pen—Weighed in the Balances: Addresses on the Ten Commandments, and The Faith which Overcomes, and other addresses. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. each. Morgan & Scott.) Here the Law and the Gospel are expounded in the author's trenchant style, with that aptness of illustration which characterises this mighty soul-winner. Apart from their interest for those who seek a firmer grip of the verities of our faith, these volumes ought to be in the hands of all who preach, or are preparing to preach, the Gospel they so faithfully set forth.

A full and busy life as S.S. missionary to the children of India lends deep interest to—A Biographical Sketch of Dr. J. L. Phillips. By his widow. Edited by W. J. Wintle. (3s. 6d. Sunday School Union). The son of a missionary, and born in India, his soul from early days was fired with missionary longing, and his life was devoted to the cause, first as a missionary among the Santals, and then as a principal of the Bible School at Midnapore. After a year or two's useful service in America, he entered in 1890 on the work in India, in connection with our own Sunday School Union, with which his name is peculiarly identified. The story is one of charming interest, heroic adventure, and intense fervour.

"Fresh, spontaneous, racy . . . a delightful book to read:" so Dr. Whyte describes Fifty-one Years in the Home-Mission Field, reminiscences by Thomas Cochrane, of Pleasance Territorial Church, Edinburgh (James Thin, Edinburgh), the story of sixty years' slumming work in "Auld Reekie," beginning in 1826 when "slumming was risky work." As Professor Charteris shows in a brief preface, the results of the author's long and unobtrusive service have been marvellous. "Five thousand members (largely excavated from the irreligious) have, from first to last, been added to the church roll." The secret of the singular power of this quiet worker over the masses shows on every page of these unconventional memoirs. Nor is the old spirit dead—he ends (seventy-five years of age), "I lay down the pen, proposing to renew my work." Evidently there is romance in home missions as well as in foreign.

BECAUSE WE BELONG TO CHRIST, an address to believers, by John R. Caldwell, on very practical points in Christian work. (1d. Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow.)

RICH IN FAITH, a brief memoir of the life and labours of the late Mr. George Müller, by Mr. J. E. Hawkins. (1d. Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow; Hawkins, London.)

Mr. J. I. Sims has prepared a chart giving his conception of THE SEVEN AGES, taking the six creation days as typical of six work ages, and the rest day as typifying the Eternal Rest. (1s. Pickering & Inglis.)

CASSELL'S GUIDE TO LONDON.—Amongst the new matter in this new edition may be mentioned an account of the Tate Gallery and the consequent re-arrangement in the National Gallery. The Destruction of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the Completion of the Decoration of the Choir of St. Paul's, the Opening of the Wesleyan Museum, the New Closing Arrangements of the British Museum, the Reopening of the Alexandra Palace, etc., are also noted. (6d. and 1s.).

God's Days.

"The evening and the morning were the first day."—Gen. i. 5.

GOD reckons not his days as we,
Who start from dawn's victorious shouts;
But close with quickly setting sun,
'Mid darkling clouds. . . .

From twilight shadows sweet and dim He counts,
And onward leads through mists and tearful cries,
Till, from grim Night and her encircling shades,
Breaks into glory the Eternal Noon! E. A. H.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The scheme for a new bishopric in South Yorkshire has been abandoned for the present.

Canon Bartram has been elected a Proctor in Convocation for Canterbury, in the room of Canon Whitehead.

Rev. S. A. E. Elworthy Brooking, vicar of St. Simon's, Leeds, has accepted the charge of Markington, near Ripon.

Lord Eustace Cecil, brother of the Marquis of Salisbury, is erecting, at his sole cost, a church at Lychett Minster, Dorset.

There were very large congregations at All Souls' Church, Langham-place, on Sunday last, to welcome the rector-designate, Rev. F. S. Webster.

Bishop Cabrera, of the Reformed Church of Spain, has been preaching with much acceptance in Sheffield on behalf of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society.

The Bishop of St. Albans makes an appeal in aid of the spiritual needs of the 300,000 persons who are annually added to the population of East London over the Border. Fourteen additional churches and eighteen new mission buildings are said to be needed.

The Bishop of Newcastle, who, as we announced a fortnight ago, was suffering from a recrudescence of influenza, travelled to Newcastle on Saturday last and held personally the ordination on Sunday. Acting upon medical advice his lordship went to Buxton on Monday.

The consecration of Prebendary Turner as Bishop of Islington and of Rev. Joseph Charles Hoare as Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, took place on Saturday morning in St. Paul's Cathedral. The sermon was preached by the Archdeacon of London. The Bishop of Islington was on Friday inducted as rector of St. Andrew's Undershaft, in the City of London.

Sunday last, being the anniversary day at the Foundling Hospital, the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland, conducted the service in the morning. After the service, which was very largely attended, the Duke of Cambridge distributed in the adjoining school-room a Bible and Prayer-book and a purse containing five guineas to each of eight young women and six young men who had formerly been inmates of the institution.

The annual meeting of the London Guild of Hope, and of the London Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, was held in St. Martin's Town Hall, the Bishop of London presiding. Mr. J. R. Newman, the secretary, reported that there were now 416 Bands of Hope affiliated to the guild, with about 100,000 members. The school lecturers' scheme had been a great success, 359 lectures having been given at eighty-four schools to 29,000 children.

"A Churchwoman" has just sent to the hon. chief sec. (Rev. W. Carlile) the initial cost of 100 guineas for providing one of the society's mission and colportage vans for West London. Another van has been presented by "A Yorkshire Churchwoman" for work in the East of London, and a third by an anonymous friend for work in the Bristol diocese. The West London and the Bristol vans are "In memoriam" gifts. Canon Robinson has just secured 100 guineas for placing a second van in the Newcastle diocese.

Forty years in one curacy! The fact seems almost incredible. On Monday week Archdeacon Sinclair presided at a numerously attended gathering in the Hampstead Conservatoire, when Rev. John Christian Hose was presented with a cheque for £1000, on the completion of his forty years' ministry as curate of St. Saviour's, South Hampstead. It was stated that Mr. Hose had on more than one occasion been offered preferment, which he had declined, preferring to continue his happy connection with St. Saviour's.

Congregational.

Roydon Chapel, Essex, has celebrated its centenary.

The jubilee of Gainford Chapel has been celebrated.

Howard Church, Bedford, reports a membership of 236, and an income of £585.

It is announced that Rev. Dr. Stalker will preach at the anniversary of Cheshunt College on the 30th inst.

Mr. Alfred J. Shepheard has been re-elected Chairman of Committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

The North-East district of the London Union held a meeting at Ponder's End to consider the desirability of erecting a new chapel there.

An interesting valedictory has been held at Whitefield Tabernacle, Moorfields, in connection with the departure of a member of the church, Mr. W. E. Barnard, for mission work in Spain.

Captain Mitchell, who for some years has been first officer of the present and former John Williams, has been appointed to take command of the L.M.S. schooner Olive Branch, stationed at New Guinea.

Rev. W. Pearce, of West Hampstead, has been appointed by the committee of the Congregational Union to visit the churches of British Guiana in February, 1899. He will be accompanied by Rev. George Cousins, who is deputed by the London Missionary Society.

The opening of the new College Chapel at Mill Hill School will take place on June 22, the annual New Foundation Day gathering and the distribution of prizes. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, will preach at the opening service, and in the afternoon the prizes will be presented by Sir William Henry Wills, Bart, M.P.

A very large congregation assembled at Park Chapel, Camden Town, on Tuesday week to welcome Rev. John G. Binney as pastor. Congratulatory addresses were given by Rev. Allen D. Jeffrey (Presbyterian), Rev. Herwood Allen (President of the North-West District, London Congregational Union), and Rev. A. F. Riley (Baptist).

The Sheffield Association has held a meeting, the president, Mr. Joshua Kirkham, in the chair, to consider a scheme for the amalgamation of four of the central [illegible] building of churches in the populous suburbs. In explaining the scheme, Rev. Harold E. Brierley said the trend of the population was towards the suburbs, and the centre of the town was being depopulated very rapidly.

Baptist.

Rev. R. B. Clare is resigning the pastorate at Dorford, Dorchester.

Rev. W. Osborne has commenced his ministry at Whitstable-on-Sea.

Rev. W. Jenkins has commenced his ministry at Farnworth, near Bolton.

Mr. Alex. Hay, of Spurgeon's College, has accepted a call from Grantown.

Rev. E. M. Andrewes, of Shepshed, has accepted the pastorate at Ramsbottom.

Rev. Arthur and Mrs. Jewson have reached this country on furlough from Calcutta.

On Sunday last the pastor of West Green Baptist Church, London (Rev. John Edmonds), received twenty new members into church fellowship.

Rev. O. Tidman has resigned the pastorate at Noddfa, Abersychan, having accepted the pastoral supervision of the Bangor Baptist College Home Mission.

Dr. Clifford has made arrangements to preach in Tremont Temple, Boston, during September, and Dr. Lorrimer will preach at Westbourne Park for the same period.

Rev. J. Chadwick has announced his intention of resigning the pastorate at South Norwood, which he has held since the formation of the church, eleven years ago.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare is not making such rapid progress towards recovery as was expected, and it is feared it will be several months ere he will be able to resume his engagements.

Oxford Association has held its ninety-sixth annual meetings at Chipping Norton. Rev. G. W. Davidson took as the subject of his presidential address "Puritanism." Rev. G. L. Ambrose read a paper on "The Officers of the Christian Church: Their Duties and Responsibilities."

On 10th June Rev. Z. T. Dowen, D.D., completed his twenty-five years in the ministry, and also his silver wedding with his beloved wife. The double event was commemorated at Brixton Chapel by an "at home," at which considerable numbers were present, and a very happy time was spent.

Anniversary services have been held at St. Paul's, Skegness, a united conference being held on Monday week on "Witnessing for Christ." The annual statement, read at the public meeting, showed the results of the year's work in many precious souls. Rev. G. Goodchild proposed an extension scheme—the erection of a new chapel, to cost probably about £5000.

Methodist.

Dr. Rigg is again laid aside by a bronchial attack.

The Folkestone Wesleyans are about to build new chapels at Hythe, Sandgate, and Canterbury-road.

The temporary illness of Rev. W. Watkinson, president of the Wesleyan Conference, has almost entirely passed away.

Rev. James Proudfoot, superintendent of the United Methodist West African Mission, is now in England, and hopes to return to his work towards the close of the year.

A forward movement is contemplated in Northampton in order to meet the urgent needs of the rapidly growing population of that prosperous town. A new chapel is proposed as a centre of fresh work.

The New Connexion returns for the year show a net increase on the English circuits and home missions of 572 members, on the Irish stations 9, on the Chinese missions 305, making a total increase of 886.

A chapel is to be erected at Ermalo, Swaziland. By a bazaar and subscriptions some £460 has been raised of the £500 required. Jews, Dutch, Germans, as well as English, have contributed. Rev. G. H. Eva will have charge.

Rev. R. M. Omerod, writing from Tana River (East Africa), states that the new church at Bura has been destroyed by fire. Rev. W. G. Howe (Ribe), writes despondently in relation to the scarcity of food resulting from the long-continued drought.

Rev. G. W. Olver, senior secretary at the Wesleyan Mission House, completes at Conference his seventeenth year of office, and will be nominated for an additional year beyond next year. He is now fully restored to health, and has oversight of Indian and Chinese mission affairs.

The annual Conference of the Primitive Methodists was held at Leeds last week. Rev. J. Smith, missionary secretary, was elected President of the Conference for the ensuing year, and in his address from the chair alluded to his interest in village questions and to the great work before the Free Churches in connection with rural life.

The final closing of the old Wesleyan Chapel in Great Bridgewater-street, Manchester, has given rise to a remarkable manifestation of regard for the old place in which "the people called Methodists" have been wont to worship for nearly a hundred years, and in which at one time or another most of the renowned ministers of that communion have preached.

On June 5 and 7 Mr. Josiah Nix paid his annual visit to Waltham-street, Hull, on behalf of the mission, preaching on the Sunday to large congregations, and at the close of the evening service several sought and found the Saviour. On Tuesday evening a large meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. John Kemp, Revs. W. Goodridge and C. J. Hoskin, and Messrs. Josiah Nix, H. Mould, and Councillor J. Brown taking part. Mr. Nix rejoiced in the good work already accomplished by the mission, but felt, after what he had seen of the neighbourhood, that the time had come when a large hall should be built where a small mission has existed for many years in the midst of a densely populated district.

Presbyterian.

Services are about to be commenced in the Institute at Bexhill, the opening one (on July 3) to be conducted by Rev. R. Cowan, of St. Leonards.

The lease of the church at Southwark, which expires four years hence, has been purchased by a firm who purpose erecting business premises on the site.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of South Africa will meet in Cape Town in September. It is believed that a large accession of churches will be reported.

Moderation in a call at St. Andrew's, Woolwich, has been fixed for the 20th inst. It will be addressed to Rev. Samuel Scott, ordained assistant to Rev. William Watson at Claughton.

Society of Friends.

Joseph Taylor writes from Leoni-Malwa, India:—"In the early morning of May 9 the whole of our new meeting-house, bookshop, schoolmaster's and head mission-helper's houses were burned down, together with the principal business part of Leoni-Malwa."

Caleb Rickman Kemp, the clerk of the London Yearly Meeting, was officially present in Westminster Abbey at the funeral of the great and good Christian statesman Mr. Gladstone. "He felt it was an impressive occasion of deep historical interest, and was touched by several incidents in the ceremony."

Henry E. Clark and daughter and Mrs. Ringzett left England on the 11th inst. for Madagascar, to resume their missionary labours there. In spite of the changes wrought by French and Jesuit influence, a great spiritual work is in hand in the island, and Friends feel they cannot desert either the work or the workers there. Indeed, they are very hopeful of much blessing. Henry E. Clark has had to leave his beloved wife behind, yet bravely faces the duty of returning to the scenes of his toil.

Fallen Asleep.

At the Close, Lichfield, Archdeacon Scott, aged seventy-one, a descendant of the great Commentator; for many years he had done quiet, useful evangelical work at Ockbrook, Litchurch, Derby, and Lichfield.—At Brighton, on 4th inst., Mrs. Hurndall, widow of the late Rev. W. Evans Hurndall (who died so sadly from gas poisoning a year ago). Mrs. Hurndall was seriously hurt with her husband in the accident, but has lingered on till now.—At Tollesbury, Rev. W. M. Anstey, aged seventy-three, who has laboured devotedly at Plymtree, Fulbourne, and Tollesbury for over forty years.—At Warminster, Mr. George Bigwood, a devoted Sunday-school worker.—At Mirfield, Miss Mary Sharp, aged eighty-one, for fifty years a very earnest worker.—At Ebley, Mr. Joseph Smith, a Christian worker for forty years.—At Dubuque, U.S.A., Rev. W. S. Perry, Bishop of Iowa, widely known as the historiographer of the American Episcopal Church.—At March Baldon Rectory, on 2nd inst., Madeline Augusta Elizabeth, wife of Rev. Philip Charles Bevan, rector of March Baldon, near Oxford.—At the Rectory, Burton Agnes, on 3rd inst., Archdeacon Palmes, aged seventy-two.—At Chulmleigh, Mrs. Carne, widow of Rev. Isaac Carne, a useful Methodist minister, and herself a quiet faithful helper.—At Reedham (Norfolk), Mr. S. Smith, aged seventy-eight, for half a century an active worker among the Methodists.—In Boston, on May 17, Rev. Joseph T. Duryea, D.D., one of the ablest men in the American pulpit, who had held important charges in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Omaha, in Nebraska, in which place his health broke three years ago, through overwork, in the hard times in the relief of the destitute.—At Aston Tyrrold, Mr. George Fuller, a leader among the Presbyterians.—At Ashton-under-Lyne, Mr. John Hill, for many years a devoted worker, especially among the children.—At Drawton Manor, South Cave, Hull, on 9th inst., Alderman C. Richardson, a prominent Methodist, and three times Mayor of Hull.—At Dublin, Mrs. Starkey, wife of Dr. Starkey, of Rathmines, a most earnest Christian worker.—At Edinburgh, on June 9, Ex-Councillor W. Petty, aged sixty-six, a leading member of Nicolson-square Methodist Chapel.

Appeals.

Miss Child, of the "Sailors' Welcome Home," would feel very grateful if any of the readers of The Christian would kindly let her have an in-patient's letter for the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, for a sailor who is in great need and much suffering.—Iron Bridge, Canning Town, E.

Notices.

Communications Received with Thanks.—J.H. J.A.W. T.W.H. H.C. J.B. A.M.K. J.S. A.E.S. F.A.P. S.C. T.W. J.G. W.T. H.B. H.H. R.C. J.K. C.I. H.M. M.L.I. H.J.E. E.H.B. A.C.G. S.E.B. F.W. O. W.H.W. P.A.T. Mrs. C. T.J. J.W. J.O.J. T.A.L. T.A.P. G.E. M.D. G.H.M. S.H. J.O. F.H.M. T.H. E.H.B. C.P. A.G.A. E.E.W. G.P. F.A. F.C.B. J.A.B. F.H. E.W.H. T.M. F.D. M.J.R. E.T.S. T.R. R.C. B.J. H.E.J.M. H.R. M.A. J.T. I.C. L.R.J. B.M.H.T. R.C. A.W.H. J.W.F. H.J.R. J.P. S.C. G.S. J.E. J.L.S. C.A. Z.T.D. M.S. E.S. A.K. H.T.N.U. E.H.B. G.W. G.B. R.E.C. H.C. C.F.S. G.S. W.J. C.R. J.B. S.B. E.R. W.K. H.M.K.W. R.T.S. H.C. W.K.

Applicants for Tracts.—Rev. T. W. Thomas, Wesleyan minister, Pakokku, Burmah (tracts, booklets, and Christian papers); Miss A. C. Wilkinson, 54, Rake-lane, Clifton, Manchester; Mr. A. G. Andrews, 57, Dover-street, Canterbury, Kent; Mrs. Brown, Holmside, Norfolk-road, Milton-next-Gravesend; A. G. Fitch, 12, Bellenden-road, Peckham, S.E.; E. T. Payne, 50, Hawkstone-road, Rothernithe, S.E.; Mrs. Perry, "Grantham," Greenfield-road, Colwyn Bay (some for children); W. Mayes, 15, Thorpe-road, Forest Gate, E.; Miss Florrie Whittaker, 78, Oswald-street, Clapton Park, N.E.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be carefully read before being given away.

Care of the Feeble-minded.—A meeting was held on Friday at Stafford House, under the presidency of the Duchess of Sutherland, to promote the work of the National Association for Promoting the Welfare of the Feeble-minded. The Duchess said the association had federated homes scattered over different parts of England. Its aims were to increase the number of the homes specially adapted to the needs of such feeble-minded children as might be sent to them; the boarding-out of the children near the special classes which were becoming a feature of the Board Schools; the training of teachers for the special work of developing the feeble-minded; and the support of cottage homes for adult cases. Lord Herschell moved the first resolution, affirming that "the existence of large classes of feeble-minded persons is a danger to the moral and physical welfare of society, and calls for immediate attention both on the part of public authorities and charitable enterprise." He spoke of the great importance of training feeble-minded children after school age to some useful occupation. Addresses in support were given by Sir D. Galton, Sir J. Crichton Browne, Mrs. Garrett Anderson, Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, the Earl of Stamford, and Mr. R. B. Martin, M.P.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings. London. E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Orincluding Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DURING these summer months, when the world is clothed in beauty and is busy ripening her fruits for harvest, every green field and flowering tree has a message to the devout mind. The response of the earth to the influence of the sun is a parable of the higher life. We are living under the summer warmth of the Sun of righteousness. Are we showing promise of the fruit of the Spirit? Are there ripening elements of character in us? The earth responds to the heat and light of heaven unknowingly, and cannot resist if she would.

Now that the summer has come, many will be looking forward to a holiday. May we remind such that thousands of poor chilldren are longing for that one bright Day in the Country, which to the prisoners of London's dull courts and alleys means so much. From all quarters workers amongst the poor are asking for help to give their children this annual treat. Our fund for this purpose is now open, but as yet it is very far short of the amount needed to meet the claims which seem most urgent. Surely many of our readers will consider how much they can spare to aid in giving the children a glimpse of the green fields and a taste of the fresh air. We should be glad to hear at once from all who are willing to help in this matter.

The jubilee of Dr. Parker as a preacher of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is in many ways unique, and deserves kindly recognition. The congregations crowding the City Temple on Sunday were a testimony to the great popularity he has won and continues to maintain. He is certainly a great pulpit orator. His dramatic style is not equally appreciated by all his hearers, but undoubtedly he wields a mighty power for good in the heart of the capital of the world. His Thursday noon service for City men has been carried on with unvarying success and without a break for thirty years. He has written a number of books, but his "People's Bible" will be a monument to his memory in generations to come. We are glad that he has kept so firmly to Evangelical truth. The Higher Criticism has not commended itself to his mature judgment. We cordially wish him yet many years of unimpaired activity and usefulness.

In endeavouring to speak the truth "as it is in Jesus," preachers should not forget the "hard sayings" which he uttered from time to time. It is possible so to preach the Gospel of Love as to take away all its value, by reducing it to a mere expression of sentimental good will. The kingdom of grace is the kingdom of righteousness, and it must be proclaimed as such. It means "the strait gate," the "bearing of the cross," the "denying" of one's lower self, the striving "after perfection" at the price of all that hinders and hampers the soul. There is no "salvation by rosewater"; it is to be obtained only at the price of blood. Jesus in his teaching made this abundantly clear, and his apostles went into their work for Him with open eyes, and so endured to the end. It is well to make this clear as daylight in pulpit and class and inquiry-room. On no other basis can enduring results be obtained. Shallow preaching breeds only "fair-weather Christians."

When faithfully preached and earnestly followed these "hard sayings" of Christ are found to be like sweet kernels within hard shells. The "strait gate" leads to the garden of God, the price of perfection gives a passport to the peace of Christ, the upgiving of earthly joys to the realisation of pleasures for evermore at the right hand of the Most High. The "hard life" thus transforms itself to the "easy life." But the hardness must be endured with a willing heart, and without a mercenary eye on the reward; otherwise it will never be attained; for the joy comes of loving endurance for the sake of "the Name." It is through the reversing of these elements of self-denial and reward that much preaching in the present day fails of its mark. In an age so pleasure-loving there is an insidious peril to lower the standard to the level of easy acceptance, which always spells after-failure.

When Ananias, of Damascus, was first instructed to go to Saul, he was afraid, and sought to excuse himself. Is not the same feeling often in the hearts of Christians when it is borne in upon them that they ought to speak to some particular person or do some particular thing? Yet, as the terrible persecutor was blind and helpless, praying for mercy, ready to welcome anyone who could show him the path of life and peace, so are some of the most unlikely persons found to be anxious to learn, yearning for a Christian to guide them aright. How strikingly different often the reception they would give from that which is anticipated from them.

The controversy between the Rev. J. M. Gibbon, whose brilliant defence of the place of the miraculous in the Gospels, in his recent sermon before the L.M.S. has attracted much attention, and Rev. K. C. Anderson, who denies this position, ought to clear the air of much that looks like veiled evasion of this subject in the pulpit. The religious public has a right to know where its teachers and preachers are in this matter. A halting ministry makes a sceptical people. The time has come when a clearer note should be struck on questions so vital to the faith. Nothing is so provocative of unbelief as an uncertain voice in those who profess to preach the full counsel of God. The people are hungering for clear guidance, and because they do not get it many are losing interest in religion altogether.

The "Kensit campaign" is resulting in a remarkable disclosure of what even The Guardian confesses to be a state of "anarchy under a less alarming name" in the Church of England. The bishops, with the exception of one or two led by the veteran Bishop of Liverpool, are showing a weak and vacillating front towards the intrusion of purely Romish practices into the State Establishment. There are signs, however, that the laity, who have hitherto been strangely quiescent, are beginning to rouse themselves. On Trinity Sunday vestments and incense were to have been introduced in Holy Trinity, Hoxton, but on the petition of a number of parishioners, the bishop advised the vicar to hold the question in abeyance pending a decision of the Church Council. This is the utmost that the Bishop of London has done as yet to moderate the swift advance of the Romanist wave in London. It is significant that it was the result of a popular appeal. The great aim of many dignitaries of the Church seems to be "Peace! peace!" —"when there is no peace."

On the consideration of the Benefices Bill, as amended by the Standing Committee, its rejection was moved and a most important discussion brought on. Mr. Samuel Smith affirmed that "idolatry ought to be considered 'gross misconduct' under the Bill." He contended, as did others, that clergymen ought as much to be bound by their word as a military man by his oath. The Bishops came in for a good share of blame. Mr. Smith's closing words were very searching :—

> There could not be a doubt that some of the Bishops sympathised with this movement—hence their extraordinary feebleness and apathy. For a long time past—and the Governments of both parties had been to blame—nearly all the high offices had been conferred on High Churchmen. To be a Protestant was to be boycotted; to be faithful to his ordination vows excluded a clergyman from any chance of preferment. Meanwhile there was the deepest indignation among a large body of the laity. The vast bulk of the population of this country was still Protestant, and utterly opposed to Rome, and it would find some way of enforcing its convictions. He spoke as a true friend of the Church when he said that if this cancer was not cut out the doom of the Church was sealed. Unless some remedy was found, the Church would be disestablished in the throes of angry revolution.

One of the most remarkable utterances came from Mr. W. Johnston, who said, "the growth of Roman Catholicism in the Church of England demanded the attention of the Government." Although the Bill was proceeded with, the discussion gave vent to thoughts and feelings that are widely and deeply sympathised with, and the Government may be sure it will hear more of them.

Mr. Samuel Smith further drew attention to the rapid progress of "confession" in the Church of England, as shown by a book issued by the Society of the Holy Cross for children six or seven years old. In this outspoken volume they were urged to go to confession > because God, when on earth, gave to his priests, and to them alone, the Divine power to forgive men their sins.

And they were further told :—

> I have known poor children who concealed their sins in confession for years. They were very unhappy, were tormented with remorse, and if they had died in that state they would certainly have gone to the everlasting fires of hell.

That national funds should be used for the dissemination of mischievous teaching of this kind is a crying scandal. It is time that the power to do so should be put an end to.

The Welsh Congregational Union held its Annual Assembly last week in London. About 250 ministers and delegates attended, and the meetings, which were conducted in Welsh, were able and enthusiastic. The chairman for the year, Mr. C. R. Jones, Mayor of Llanfyllin, North Wales, delivered an instructive address on "Congregationalism in the Light of the Developments of the Age." He earnestly urged preachers to fall back on the methods of older preachers, which were more in the line of patient exposition and doctrinal teaching, rather than on popular sermons whose chief object was to rouse the emotions and tickle the fancy. Wales, and we may add England, was never in greater need of spiritual teaching than to-day. The men whose influence regenerated the Principality were accustomed not to appeal to the popular taste, but to come forth from the counsels of the Most High and say, "Thus saith the Lord!" These are the preachers that are always wanted.

It is a hopeful sign that prominence is being given to the Christian life amongst the young. The Conference of the Methodist New Connexion has been held at Nottingham, and that of the Primitive Methodists at Leeds. In each case special attention was drawn to Sunday-school work and the Christian Endeavour movement. Amongst the Primitive Methodists there are as many as 566 Endeavour Societies, with 15,651 active members and 5774 associate members; while at a great Sunday-school demonstration at Nottingham it was announced that in the Methodist New Connexion schools there were 20,000 scholars over fifteen years of age, and 7000 more in adult Bible-classes and P.S.A.'s. Such indications augur well for the future. As the veterans fall one by one these will be required to take their places and carry on the struggle with "the world, the flesh, and the devil."

Some wise words were spoken to the lads leaving the Leys School, Cambridge, by Sir H. Fowler on their recent speech day. It is a very critical time with a youth when he leaves school. The world is open before him. He has to be something and to do something that will help to lift the nation out of sordid ways and low, base ideas of the ends for which men should enter into trade and commerce. Sir Henry put the question on the right level when he remarked:—

> In the twentieth century the controversies would be very different from those of the nineteenth. He thought they would be on a far higher plane, but they would involve far more serious results. The battle that was coming fast was the old battle—he would not say between virtue and vice, but it would be between belief and unbelief—the battle not between the Christianity of Great Britain and the heathenism of India, but between the Christianity and the heathenism of Great Britain.

Amid much that is alarming in the foreign outlook, it is a matter of unmixed satisfaction that the quarrel between England and France on their relative positions in West Africa has been amicably settled, and that the matter is not likely to rise again for thirty years at least. A time existed, not many weeks ago, when our relations with our neighbours were dangerously strained. We have emerged from the controversy more friendly than before, and future sources of irritation have been guarded against. It is wise for us to avoid international complications and to live at peace. Concessions made for this end are in the line of the best interests of the nation.

The horrible efficiency of the latest destructive weapons has been proved in an extraordinary manner by the effects of the dynamite bombs thrown by the new American cruiser the Vesuvius last week. The charges were sent into the air by pneumatic pressure. There was no noise, no flash, no smoke; but huge masses of gun-cotton were flung at the Spanish fortifications with the following result:—

> A few seconds after the gun was fired there was a frightful convulsion on the land, and the hill where the Spanish guns had withstood the missiles of the ordinary ships of war. Tons of rocky soil rose high in the air. The land was smitten as by an earthquake. Terrible echoes rolled around and around through shaken hills and mountains. The sea seemed to tremble with the awful shock. The dust grew into huge clouds and hid the scene of destruction. Then came silence, and next another frightful upheaval, and following it a third, so quickly that the results of two mingled in mid air. No details have been received of the exact damage done, but the practical use of dynamite guns and their awful effects has been fully established.

The awful "carnival of destruction" described above betokens that the power of offence in modern warfare is outstripping the possibilities of defence. With every advance in this direction the art of war tends to defeat itself and to establish arbitration as a means of settling international differences.

A story significant of a widespread tendency in human nature was told at the annual meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association last week. M. Darmesteter had once written a book for the use of schools on the history of civilisation, which showed the blessings of peace. It was shown by them to the Minister of Public Instruction in France, who was asked for his approval. The minister returned the book with the remark—

> It is beautiful—it is lovely! It is one likely to impart into the heart of youth a love of peace. Every boy shall have it—as soon as France has recovered Alsace-Lorraine!

In the spiritual as well as in the political world there are plenty who are willing to initiate reform—when they have recovered their Alsace-Lorraine. When we have settled our account with the world, recovered our position in business, attained our earthly ambition, we will turn and repent, and strive after perfection. Till then men postpone the matter to a more convenient season.

A statement prepared by Rev. T. W. Gladstone, of the Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday, appears to prove that Sunday closing does not in practice increase the number of private clubs as some have asserted it did. The statistics cited seem to be conclusive. Mr. Gladstone, quoting from a recent return, shows that London, a non-closing area on Sunday, has one club to every 6381 of the population, while in Scotland, which enjoys Sunday closing, there is only one club to 25,310 of the population. As to counties, Glamorgan, in Wales, which has Sunday closing, has forty-five clubs to a population of 687,000, as against Cheshire, a non-closing county, which has eighty-nine clubs to a population of 463,000. The lesson to be deduced from these and similarly striking figures is that reformers may press for the extension of the Sunday closing movement without any fear as to evil results in the increase of illicit or secret indulgence in intoxicants.

P. C. Mazoondar, a prominent member of the Brahmo Somaj of India, gives in the American quarterly The New World an instructive summary of the prospects of Christianity in our great dependency. He says there is a striking contrast between the decaying religions of the East and the wondrous vitality of the Christian faith.

> Many forms of the Hindu religion, pantheistic or idolatrous, have risen and fallen. Buddhism, with its cruel agnosticism, has been swept out of India and seems to have an uncertain tenure in Ceylon, Asia, and Japan. Islam is tottering on the verge of exhaustion in Eastern Europe. But it is a very strange thing that, despite its many shortcomings, Christianity is as undying as the solar system. It appears continually to share in larger measure the universal character of its Founder and the higher life of mankind...It is ceaselessly rising into nobler types of character, into higher forms of faith and life. Christ's religion is a Divine fulness of spiritual and practical life, into which enter all the attainable perfections of man's nature. It is the unity of everything that is everlasting in man in all his relations to God and to his fellow men.

This is the testimony of a keen observer, and has the value of independent evidence. Those who turn a deaf ear to the perpetual testimony of missionaries to the same effect will do well to listen to it. That this view is spreading right among the masses of educated Indians is a fresh proof of the glorious opportunity now open to missionary effort.

We have before us a report of an undenominational mission, which we need not name, that may be taken as an encouragement in well-doing. The work was begun, fifteen years ago, on behalf of women and girls in a very needy place, with only a few pounds in hand. It has been conducted on the most economical plan, not a shilling being spent on working expenses. Year by year some thirty to forty women have either been saved from a life of sin or kept from entering into it, the most of whom are now living respectable, some of them happy Christian, lives. The few have grown to four hundred. Work for Christ is to be done as we have time, means, strength, and opportunity, and if we are only content to go on quietly and patiently, from day to day, year after year, we shall ourselves be astonished with the aggregate result. "God giveth the increase."

That is a remarkable saying of Mr. Justin McCarthy that "the whole of that system of legislation which is founded on a recognition of the principles of humanity may be said to belong to our times." To make it more complete we may add, "and it was initiated and mainly carried through by Christian men in the name of Christianity." The father of a great deal of it was Lord Shaftesbury, another section was mainly due to Cobden and Bright, another to Joseph Arch, another to Samuel Plimsoll—all of them avowedly Christian men. And whatever view anyone took of Mr. Gladstone's work, he always professed to base it upon the principles of humanity and revealed religion; Lord Salisbury called him "a Christian statesman," and the world endorsed that judgment.

It is sometimes brought as a complaint against the New Testament that it makes too little of the "joy of life." Nothing could be further from the truth, for its message is a revelation of the possibilities of joy in unexpected places. The Gospel may be called the transfiguration of sorrow, the redemption of pain, the transmutation of suffering. The life of Jesus was sad enough outwardly, but within, at its very heart, was a springing fountain of delight. It was his dearest wish that his people might have his "joy" in them. His grandest epithet was "Blessed." His work was to bring light into dark places, and turn life's tears into laughter. This was done so effectually in the cases of his first followers that for love of Him and the reward of his fellowship they cheerfully endured the loss of all things. And so Paul was able to write letters from prison full of joy-bells, and could rejoice in the Lord under the shadow of the headsman's block

Modern Pharisees.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

THERE are few portions of the Gospels that are read with more zest than the denunciations and exposures of the Pharisees and Sadducees that run like a line of fire through the discourses of our Lord. There are certainly no passages that are read with a vaguer sense of their applicability to the spiritual problems of our own times. We have a comfortable habit of looking at these ancient types much in the light of extinct monsters, like the epiornis and ichthyosaurus, whose grotesque models are to be seen in the South Kensington Museum.

In blasting the sins of the Pharisees by lightning flashes of truth, as in Matt. xvi. 1-12, our Lord had a prophetic and not a retrospective end in view, having in mind not only those shoddy people who strutted their little hour on the stage of Jewish life, but also the germinal Christian Church around Him in the persons of his disciples. What He says to them He says to all his people—"Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." For there is a Pharisaic and a Sadducean leaven, or principle, capable of being planted in the religious life in all ages, and which is everywhere disastrous and fatal in its influence.

What is meant by the leaven of the Pharisees? In what sense are we in peril of it?

The first thing we have to remember about this sect is that in its inception it was the witness to a great principle and a holy ideal. Historically the Pharisees were the descendants of the Puritan party among the Jews. Their system in its essentials was the fruit of a burning conviction, and it embodied undying principles. Pharisaism in its simplicity meant this—that the people of God must live for Him and not for the world; must be uncompromising in upholding Divine standards of character and conduct; must hold no truce with uncleanness and vice. The earliest Pharisees were splendid men. Just as our Puritans saved England from licentiousness and moral ruin by their witness to the austere rigour and purity of the Christian life, so these ancient Puritans were as the salt that saved their nation from political disaster and moral decay.

Great reformations usually pass through three stages of manifestations. The first is that of holy enthusiasm; at this point they are all good and no evil. Then comes that of consolidation and custom; at this point there is sure to be much good, but possibly also a germ of evil. The third is that of cold tradition and dawning hypocrisy; the movement, having passed into a fashion, ends in a mere pretence. Here there is sure to be much evil in it, with, perhaps, little or no good. You will see Pharisaism in its golden age in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, who were the typical Jewish Puritans. You will see it in its second stage in the period of the Apocrypha, when the primary impulse had become an elaborate organisation. You will see it in its decrepitude and decline in the Gospels, where it had sunk into a form of godliness without its power, and had become a tissue of make-believes from beginning to end.

The symptoms of the decay of Pharisaism were these:—

1. NEGLECT OF THE DUTIES OF THE PRESENT IN AN EXAGGERATED REVERENCE FOR THE PAST.

Jesus accused these people of "building the sepulchres of the righteous, and garnishing the tombs of the righteous," and of being guilty of the very same sins as led to the slaying of those ancient witnesses to the truth. And they stand for the perpetual tendency to over emphasise the ideals and traditions and institutions of the past.

Theologically, this may be done by cleaving to outward interpretations of Scripture and doctrine, and placing a hindrance against all progress in spiritual thought. There is a way of speaking of the "old Gospel" in such a tone as to hide its everlasting newness and adaptation to the changing needs and problems of the time. The grand feature of "truth as it is in Jesus" is, that while it is ever the same in its essentials, it can be expressed equally in the language of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow; that new light ever breaks through the Word; that while in substance it is as old as the rock, it is in its form as fresh as the foam that glistens upon it. This idolatry for its own sake of what is hoary and ancient was what the Saviour. They were blind except when they looked back into the mists of antiquity; deaf except to the echoes of voices long since dead; hard as adamant, except to the tread of dogmas that were the mere ghosts of dead doctrines. And so when the face of Christ came into their vision they saw only the face of a pretender; when the voice of the living Truth fell on their ears it was to them as a clanging cymbal; when the authentic message of God knocked at their hearts seeking admittance, they said of Him who brought it, "Away with Him! Crucify Him!" Let us beware of the same evil tendency, lest the same fate befall us.

MADE THE PHARISEES REJECT CHRIST

We may idolise the past in matters of custom and ritual. The Pharisees followed not the law of God, but the custom of the fathers. Was anything old and mildewed? Then it was sacred. It must be kept up, perpetuated. They would argue by the hour about the order of service, the niceties of religious ceremony, the proprieties of Sabbath observances, the shape of vessels and vases; and they would lose sight of thronging duties and grave problems, and be deaf to the clamorous calls of the distressed and helpless. "For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers." This is the sin of ritualism, and it is possible to fall into it even while we of the times. There is a "pride of the unjewelled finger," of the bare sanctuary, of the non-liturgical service. The prime thing to be treasured and guarded is not form, or absence of form in worship, but sincerity of spirit.

SCORN THE SACERDOTAL HERESY

2. A second feature of Pharisaism was the tendency to REVERSE THE PROPER RELATION OF APPEARANCE AND REALITY, of principle and details, of character and reputation.

The Pharisee had no moral perspective. Some things were great in his eyes which were really insignificant, while essential matters seemed very little things. He "strained out gnats, and swallowed camels"; he "tithed mint and anise and cummin, and neglected the weightier matters of the law." He lived spiritually in a topsy-turvy universe, where high was low, and little was large, and first things were last. What governed this strange perversion of moral judgment? A very simple principle. Whatever was visible was great in the eye of the Pharisee: whatever was vital but out of sight did not exist for him. His religion was the cult of externalities.

Alas! this cult is not dead yet. When empty courtesies take the place of real politeness, where "wickedness and worship" are joined in unholy matrimony—there is Pharisaism. Men who are polite to their customers and cruel to their wives; women who set so great a store on having a well-ordered house that all their household are made uncomfortable; people who in public are full of smiles and simpers, but in private break forth into hasty and violent tempers; those who honour God with their lips, while their hearts are far from him—such are the modern Pharisees. The Christian is solicitous about his character, the Pharisee cares only about his reputation; the Christian acts on principle, the Pharisee on expediency; the Christian humbly aims at being good, the Pharisee is proudly happy if he can be thought proper. Is it any wonder that the kindest lips that ever spake charged these men with being "whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outwardly, while within they were full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness"? Let us beware lest we fall into worse condemnation.

3. A third feature of the Pharisee is that he lived

FOR EXAMPLE AND NOT FOR RIGHT.

It is good so to live that men may safely follow us, but the truest example is to do right and let our influence tell on others by its own weight. In the strict sense, no man can safely do as another man may do. We are not made after a pattern; we are not placed in the same circumstances; we are not called to the same destiny. We truly follow a good man not by copying his actions, but by emulating his spirit; and we offer a good example not by thinking constantly how our conduct affects others, but what is right in the sight of God.

Because the Pharisee reversed this law he got to think little of what he was, and all of what he seemed to be. His life became thus a process of spiritual posing; he ever had one eye on himself and the other on the crowd who looked on—the prey of a rabid self-esteem and a quenchless love of approbation. Therefore our Lord said, "Take heed that ye do not your righteousness before men to be seen of them"; and applied this warning to alms, to prayer, to fasting, and all the ritual of worship and conduct, with a scathing vigour that ought to have burnt the lesson for ever into the brain and heart of humanity.

This, then, was the Pharisee—a man who was deeply "religious" and yet hopelessly wicked; who forgot present duty and all spiritual progress in idolatry of a stagnant past; who reversed the right order of inward motive and external act; who lived not for right but that he might be "seen of men." A worn-out extinct type? Nay—he is to be found in every street, and it is well if he does not intrude into every church.

The Social Purity Alliance, which aims to promote strict individual morality, to encourage the recognition of equal morality and equal condemnation of immorality in both men and women, and a variety of cognate principles, assembled in annual meeting, on Friday, at Westminster Town-hall, with the Archdeacon of London as chairman. The secretary's report of work done showed an active and extensive propaganda, the formation of many local provincial branches, especially in Ireland, and the co-operation of a great number of churches. The Venerable Archdeacon of London, in his speech, quoted and strongly endorsed the emphatic declaration on personal chastity of the Lambeth Conferences of Bishops in 1888 and 1897, and expressed his own opinion that a branch of the Social Purity Alliance was necessary in connection with every church diocese.

Missionary Investments.

By BISHOP J. M. THOBURN.

ALL supporters of the missionary enterprise should not only give willingly, but also carefully and prayerfully, to help forward this good and great work. The children of this world make the most careful inquiries before investing their money in any enterprise, and the children of light should not show less wisdom in investing money in their Master's name. Such investments can be made in two ways. The money may be given outright, in which case it becomes money lent to the Lord; or it can be invested as a loan in such a way as to yield an income to the lender, and at the same time help forward some form of missionary work. The latter plan can be adopted by those who need a stated income, and yet who wish to assist personally in some missionary enterprise. To illustrate, let me state a case in which I have been personally concerned.

More than twenty years ago I became connected with a girls' school in Calcutta. We had no buildings, and rents were so high as to be almost prohibitive. For six or seven years we struggled along as best we could, but finally secured enough credit to enable us to erect a suitable building for both a day and boarding school. When we opened the school it was burdened with a debt of £7000, and our only hope of payment was based on the income of the school. The situation was considered desperate by many, but year by year this debt has been reduced, until now it is so small as to give us no concern. During all these years we have been paying a higher rate of interest than is usual in England, the lender meanwhile being abundantly secured by a mortgage on encumbered real estate.

Let us suppose now that someone wishing to aid missionary work had advanced the money at the outset at a lower rate. In that case six years of valuable time would have been saved, the debt would long since have been paid, the school would have been in a vastly better condition to-day, and in the meantime a staff of six or more Christian workers would have been maintained, while the lender

WOULD NOT HAVE SACRIFICED A PENNY.

Many other similar cases might be cited. This very week a missionary has written me that the successful missionary press which he manages will hereafter provide for his support, which means that indigenous support has been found for a missionary. Six other missionaries in our own field receive in like manner indigenous support, and the system is capable of indefinite expansion. The higher grade of schools can do much in this direction. Mission presses can do much. Industrial enterprises can be utilised, such as tea and coffee planting, fruit culture, and, if carefully managed, ordinary cultivation. Hundreds of devout Christians in Great Britain have money invested at ordinary rates, yielding an income, it is true, but accomplishing no special good. If equally good security can be given in a foreign field, why not invest this money where it will aid not only in accomplishing present good, but in establishing a permanent support for Christian work for years and centuries to come?

I have assumed thus far that the lenders are all persons whose first concern is to secure their money against all contingencies, such as persons of limited resources who are dependent upon the income arising from the investment in question; but all who wish to aid missionary enterprises are not thus dependent. The missionary himself must incur various risks. His health may fail, or he may die at his post, or his plans may be thwarted in various ways. As the worker in the field is willing to assume his share of risk, so the investor can make financial risk secondary, and be more anxious to do good with his money than to receive large return from his investment.

THE PROSPECT OF DOING GOOD

may be better than that of earning dividends. In other words, the conditions under which all business operations are carried on prevail here. Those who wish to invest can make their choice among a great variety of enterprises, and the question of securing it can be studied in all its bearings as the same question could be studied if missionary work had nothing to do with it.

It is here that we find the practical basis of the Industrial Missions Aid Society. The idea upon which this Society is based is not only a noble one, but its plan of operation is practical, and its promise of usefulness very great indeed. Throughout the whole of India and the Straits Settlements mortgages can be given as readily and upon as good security as in England. Real estate in Bombay, Calcutta, or Singapore is held as securely as in London. An immense impetus would be given to missionary work in the East if investors could be induced to come forward and place their money where every day in the year it would be not only serving its owners but also working for good. Those wishing fuller information concerning the possibilities which these investments hold out should correspond with Mr. W. H. J. Hatch, secretary, Industrial Missions Aid Society, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

A Bird's Bidding.

A LOVELY June morning, spent in grounds where Art and Nature have worked hand in hand to produce rare beauty of surroundings, and in the trees an orchestra of heaven's own providing; and out of the musical babel of bird-voices there comes to me continually one persistent note, mounting high above the rest, "See-ye-do-it," "See-ye-do-it." I am not wise enough in bird-lore to identify the notes. I think it comes from the marvellous throat of a thrush, but I know how its message has reached my heart, for only a week ago I had sat again and again in the meetings of a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, and as fresh, vivid teaching came to me and was blessing my own life I had vaguely purposed to pass on some of the thoughts to fellow pilgrims by the hand of the widely travelling and welcome courier, THE CHRISTIAN. But busy days and a tired brain kept me silent until, amid the sweet rest of this country visit, the message of the bird has found me.

First of all, the winsome way in which the power and grace of the Holy Spirit was emphasised. I believe there are many who, with strong conscientiousness and an earnest desire for a more consistent and victorious life, are yet nervously afraid of "high doctrine" as leading in their case to a morbid self-introspection which is not healthy, and which is almost certain to end in discouragement and a distaste for the whole subject.

But in these meetings there was only the simple and unquestionable teaching that, as in all things pertaining to physical healing a sick patient must entirely submit to the treatment of the doctor, and that then the whole responsibility of the cure was his, so in spiritual matters we were only convinced of shortcoming and failure to be pointed, as at first to the atoning sacrifice of Christ, so now to "the renewing of the Holy Ghost."

"You have tried again and again to conquer besetments and evil tendencies in your own strength, and have utterly failed; now yield yourself fully into his hands and trust Him to do it for you."

But though the contemplative and emotional side of the religious life was treated with much caution and wise reserve, there was unflinching testimony to the practical view of Christianity which we sometimes think it needs a modern Wilberforce to re-enforce. Very striking were the thoughts on God's demand for full weight and measure in his service. "According to the shekel of the sanctuary" was his enactment in the Mosaic ritual, and by his prophet Malachi He complained of the lame and valueless cattle being brought to Him in sacrifice. "Offer them now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee?" was the pathetic remonstrance, and we wonder how the old Jews dared so to insult their God, and can only attribute it to their national tendency to greed. But

ARE WE CLEAR IN THIS MATTER?

We like just dealings in all our mercantile transactions, and if any of our tradespeople inflict on us short weight or scant measure we quickly remove our custom elsewhere. But do we give full measure to God? Our tithes—are they all in his storehouse? Our time, our affection, our energy—has He his due share of these?

God's main purpose in all his requirements and in all his discipline is to produce Christliness of character. We may call it by what name we choose—the higher life, sanctification, consecration, holiness—that is a mere question of nomenclature; the only thing that satisfies the Divine Father is that we should be conformed to the image of his dear Son. And this is what the Holy Spirit longs to effect. Dr. Adamson, in a recent work "On his Person and Offices," says that He is so devoted to Christ that it is his highest joy to produce more loyalty and more likeness to Him in the hearts of believers. In an address on the passage, "Beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image," we had a most telling illustration from one of the processes of photography. "When anyone is taking a likeness he must bring the object to be portrayed and the surface on which the image is to be received

WITHIN FULL VIEW OF EACH OTHER.

But before the plate is placed in the camera it must be rendered sensitive to impressions. Then, having withdrawn the intervening veil, the operator stands aside and exercises faith that the great photographer—the light—will do its work. So, when we are brought face to face with Christ, and our hearts are rendered susceptible to his loveliness, the Divine Photographer, in response to our faith in his gracious operations, imprints the image of the Lord Jesus on our character."

But there is a final stage in the process. When the plate is removed from the camera, it is taken into "the dark room" to be developed; and are we speaking too strongly when we say that no true reflection of the Saviour is produced in a soul in any degree of perfection except in the dark room of trials? And so there followed strong, encouraging words to those who were now in that dark room—God's developing chamber—through suffering of any kind or degree. And with that suggestive thought, our jottings from a memorable convention must close, and the bird monitor may now chant his message to some other listener.

M. C. F.

Percy Park, Tynemouth.

Mrs. Grattan Guinness.

MISS GUINNESS writes:—So many inquiries about the health of our beloved mother are reaching us that I hope you will insert in The Christian some news of her progress, for the friends in many lands to whom her name is dear.

About a month ago, while Dr. Guinness was in North Africa, visiting the stations of the North Africa Mission, and studying an important unevangelised region of the Atlas Mountains, she was suddenly overtaken by a paralytic stroke. Dr. Wrench, of Chatsworth, and other helpers did everything possible for her, and showed unremitting kindness throughout the anxious days during which she lay unconscious and apparently at death's door. We were hoping for the change that has brought recovery after previous similar attacks; but the stroke was more severe than those of past years, and it seemed quite a question whether the remarkable recuperative power that has enabled her to rally so often was not about to fail. Day and night, as we watched in the silent, darkened room, the prayer went up that she might be spared to welcome home her missionary children from far-off China, if the Lord will, next year. Much prayer had been made by our Institute friends and students at Harley House, Cliff, and elsewhere, and the answer we hoped for was given.

Early on May 23 a change came. She slept quietly for hours, and woke better—spared. Since then there has been a slow but marked improvement, and as I write she is sitting in her old seat by the fireside corner, still seriously affected in speech, and unable to communicate with us freely, but in other ways much like herself. We would ask for continued prayer for a full recovery. We also ask your readers specially to remember in prayer at this juncture the worldwide missionary work in which the dear life whose day of service is now done was so long and unreservedly "spent out."

We would ask friends, while remembering in prayer the life whose sunset hour of leisure we are watching day by day, to remember also the work that was so dear to her, and for which so many an earnest appeal was made by the silent pen and lips that can no longer plead for heathendom.

Cliff, Curbar.

The Need of the Hour.

BY REV. JOHN SMITH, D.D.

WHAT a searching light falls from the incident of Peter walking to Christ on the water upon our hearts and lives. Instead of saying "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" are we crying, "Lord, bid me do this, let me have that," which, with the credit of obedience to Him, would win us place and a name? What a searching and difficult thing it is to be a Christian. This self-seeking is utterly futile. The thing Peter asked for had no justification of use. How many, closing their eyes to the great practical necessities of men, are crying "Bid me do this, that, or the other thing, in respect of which I may stand on the pedestal of distinction," and who are consuming time, energy, talents, on what has not the slightest effect in helping on the kingdom of God.

Surely the great need of all the disciples in that hour was that Christ should come into the ship. And He was coming, but Peter arrested his progress. The need of this troubled hour in the kingdom of Christ is the Master's presence. But the mood of the Church at this hour is not the mood of prayer. We are not crying for his coming. It is the conceit of cleverness. We must go out to Him. We must restate his Gospel. We must put Him in a fresh light before men, and then we will bring Him into the ship. Presumptuous folly; it is Christ Himself, in the glory of his Divine power, abasing men to be the simple organs of his grace—it is Christ Himself who shall make all things new.—The Presbyterian.

Harley House. — The annual midsummer gatherings will be held at Harley House at the close of the session on Friday, July 1, when some earnest farewell words will be given by the students and deaconesses who are leaving to take up work in different parts of the world. The grounds will be opened at three p.m., and at the close of the afternoon meeting tea will be served in the tent and the college halls.

The Auction Sale.

A WAKING DREAM.

IT was a cold, wet, dark evening, and I had an hour to wait at a small railway junction before getting a train to my destination. From the cheerless station I wandered along the village street wondering where, save in a public-house, I could find rest and warmth, and soon my eye was caught by the repeated flash of light that seemed to come from the opened door of some building in front. When I came up to it, it seemed to be a sort of hall, and a bill on the door told what was going on within; but my eyes had got so dim with the darkness and the rain that I could not make out the words rightly, for what I read was, "Auction Sale To-night; Souls on Sale or for Hire; the Highest Offer may Not be Accepted." Laughing at the mistake I must have made, I entered the building.

My eyes were so dazzled with the brightness that it was a few minutes before I could see clearly, but I knew that I was in a fairly large hall with a platform at the further end, which was ascended from the back by a succession of men and women, lads and girls, each of whom, after some talking in the neighbourhood, passed down to the right hand, or, mostly, to the left. The first that I could see with any distinctness was a young woman, and as she came forward I thought I heard one asking for offers for her life; and then there came, first from the right and then from the left, one who seemed to offer her a true life or a wrong one, but I could not quite make it out. Only when she stepped down on the left hand I heard the voice on the platform say, "Another gone!" and

I WONDERED WHAT IT WAS.

Her place was at once taken by a young man, for whom the first offer came from the left hand. "You are just the sort of man I am looking for—a man that wants to see the world and have lots of fun, not tied to his mother's apron strings, and telling her about every sixpence he spends, and getting scolded whenever he stays out for an extra half-hour; a man having his fling and his larks, and showing he knows what is worth while living for." There was no use, I saw, in making any other offer for that young fellow, for he was of the utterly thoughtless class; but I had learned now something of what it all meant, and as he too stepped down on the left hand I listened for that voice again, "Another gone!"

But it was not always so. The very next was a bright boy, whom you heard jumping up the staircase two steps at a time before you saw him, and who instinctively looked to the right hand as one came forward, saying, "Yes, you are the sort I want, with the making of a man in you. You know that there is work to do, hard enough to test your mettle, but true work and strong—work that is worth the doing for our Master. He is looking out for soldiers that will who won't be afraid to do what is right and true, men that are strong to do and dare. He is so grand a leader." And I knew there was no use in anyone from the other side trying for him. He never waited, but jumped down on the right hand; and somehow the hall looked brighter, and there was a sound of singing in the air.

FOLLOW HIM THROUGH THICK AND THIN,

I must pass over many whom I saw, but I must tell you about one old man that soon came on the platform, a well-living man (as we say), who had made his slips, but never big ones, a man you liked, but you never were sure about—and he never seemed sure about himself. For him the first offer was from the left: "Don't think the happiness of life is over yet; there is a lot for you still, a little work to keep you from wearying, a friend dropping in to talk about the old days over a glass," and so on; but the old man was not half contented until one came forward on the right: "No; that won't do. You need much more than that, and I can give it: days cheered by a Father's love, evenings bright with a Saviour's care, the past all forgiven, the future all cared for—no doubt, for He loves; no anxiety, for He cares for you. His rod and his staff shall comfort you." And the old man passed quickly over; and, as he was helped down on the right hand, I thought I heard him say, "Even me!" and again there was the sound of music.

Another I must tell you of—a young woman about whom, as soon as I saw her, I was so anxious. She had been more than a good living girl; she had had her times of deep impression when she meant to come right out, but she had never quite done it. I knew that times had been hard with her lately. I trembled as one came out so cunningly on the left, and said, "This is nice. I was just wondering how I could get hold of you, for one of my friends has just come and offered to take me to the theatre or to a dance—whichever I liked—to-night, and I can't go; and I was wondering if you would. I know you don't go to these places, but just for once you might, for I know work is hard just now, and you are so good to your old mother; and you don't know what might come of it if you went to-night, he is such a nice fellow." I was afraid for her, for life was dull and money scarce, but one came forward on the right and said, "I am so glad to see you, for the Master was just speaking about you last night, and He was saying it was long since He had a right talk with you, and He was afraid things were very dull with you just now—your mother ill and needing so much time and money you can scarcely spare; and He was telling me about a new joy He has for you, and a plan for getting a change for your mother.

HE IS SO KIND A MASTER.

Why! here He is Himself to tell you." And as the young woman fell at his feet, I am sure her eyes were wet with tears; but mine were too, and I could not see.

But what is this strange sound I hear? The sound of unsteady feet tottering up the steps Strange! Nay, rather were it strange if, in Scottish village on such a night as this, there were not drunken men and (God help them!) drunken women. At once a transformation took place around; even on the left hand the bidders turned away, and I heard their leader say, "What sort of place will hell be with all these drunkards; but we can't let Him get them"; and he left one menial to offer for them. It was easily done; he had only to hold out a glass of whisky, and you could scarcely help weeping as they all rushed for it. All! No, not quite; for meanwhile, on the right hand, one voice had been raised in singing, and a few of them paused; one old man in his rags I noticed especially as he tried to steady himself and began to say: "What's that? 'The Lord's my Shepherd'; that's what my mother used to sing, and the very tune she used to sing it to. Poor old mother! How she used to plead with me and pray for me; she is in heaven, and I—I'm fast going to hell; there's no doubt about that. What's that? 'My soul He doth restore again.' No, no, I'm too old and bad for that; He would never look at me; and yet I wonder if He would." The old wreck turned to the right and cried out: "Have I any chance? Would He even look at me?" And the answer rolled back: "He loved thee and gave Himself for thee." "But me," he said, "such an old drunken wretch as me?" And again the answer came: "He loved thee, He died for thee; able to save to the uttermost." And one came forward with outstretched arms to receive the old man as he stumbled down on the right side; and I wondered who would do such a thing as that, till I saw in the open hands a strange mark, as if a nail had pierced them; and then I looked at his brow and I saw a mark as if a crown of thorns had been pressed home. And I heard the music of the harps of God.

Need I interpret my dream? I think not. Which voice have you listened to—which offer have you accepted—in exchange for your soul?

J. R. MACPHERSON.

The Students' Summer Conference will be held this year at Ripon, Yorkshire, from July 30 to August 8. There will be Bible-readings and addresses on the spiritual life. College work will be considered, and an account given of the World's Students' Christian Federation. The S.M.V.U. will co-operate in the Conference with the British College Christian Union. Fuller particulars can be obtained from the general secretary of the B.C.C.U., 93, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

Parents' Mission.—The annual meeting of the Parents' Mission was held in St. Michael's Hall, Blackheath Park, Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, vicar, in the chair. Rev. E. J. Kennedy, in moving the adoption of the report, showed the need of arousing parents to a greater sense of their privileges and responsibilities, and how necessary it was for all who are working for the good of the rising generation to obtain the co-operation of the parents in training their children in such habits as would make them good citizens.

Christianity and Womanhood.*

BY MRS. ISABELLA BISHOP, F.R.G.S.

THE time is too short to admit of tracing the historical aspects of the elevation of the women of Christendom through Christianity. Allow me to sketch in a very few words the position of the 400 millions of women in continental Asia—as I have seen it in seven and a half years of Asiatic travel in countries where the civilisation is ancient and elaborate, and in which ancient and philosophical systems of religion, which in their beginnings contained high moral teachings, hold an undisputed sway—and to contrast it with our own.

In these Asiatic countries the birth of a girl child, especially if she be a firstborn, is at the best a subject for condolence with the parents, and none who have heard it can ever forget the wail of the Chinese mother for sorrow that a woman is born into the world. The prevalence of secret infanticide in India, and of the same crime done openly in China and elsewhere, attests the light in which girls are regarded—their birth a token that the gods are displeased with the mother; and both parents regarding them as a bitter well-spring of anxiety and expense. Into households steeped in prejudice, and hardened by cruel customs which have the sanctity of antiquity, the girl child comes unwelcomed. At a very early age she is secluded in the women's apartments, and at her marriage at twelve or thirteen is removed to the seclusion of those of her mother-in-law, where she spends her time in menial offices. She prepares her husband's food, but he does not demean himself by eating with her. Faithfulness in the marriage relation is not incumbent upon men, and is believed to be impossible for women without the protection of seclusion within the harem walls.

It would not be possible to put into words the deep distrust which all Orientals, especially Moslems, have of women. Woman is regarded as a necessary evil—a thing of no account, soulless, not destined to immortality; motherhood her only title to a species of respect. In China, to teach her to read or write is counted the height of folly, if not a crime, and she is habitually spoken of as

"THE MEAN ONE WITHIN THE GATES."

Polygamy, the facilities for divorce, the disgrace, with its barbarous accompanying customs, which attaches to widowhood in India, and child marriage, enhance the degradation of the lot of our Eastern sisters.

The woman's house has none of the sanctity of home. I speak from extended personal experience in Turkey, Persia, China, Korea, and the native Malay States, where, owing to storms, or floods, or tribal outbreaks, I have accepted hospitality for days at a time in upper-class native houses, making acquaintance, on the whole, with 140 harems. In rich men's houses there are often as many as 200 inmates. Privacy is unknown and impossible. There are legitimate wives and wives who have few legal rights, slave wives, discarded wives who are practically slaves, female slaves, aged women who act as spies and duennas, girl children, daughters-in-law, and women of several colours and races.

Even the favourite wives in rich men's houses are totally illiterate, knowing nothing of the world outside their walls, hearing of foreign countries rarely, and then only as inhabited by infidel barbarians, precluded by rigid custom even from such a light occupation as embroidery; graceful inanity an art to be practised without any possible outgoings in the direction of philanthropy or kindness, never crossing the threshold of their dwellings except in closed chairs, ignorant even of the road to their own houses, and of all their chief occupations are playing with their children, counting their jewels, changing their dresses, eating sweetmeats, dyeing and dressing their hair, painting their faces, staining their finger nails, smoking, sleeping, and practising petty tyrannies and cruelties upon their slaves. Their recreations are the performances of singing and dancing girls and fortune tellers, shopping at home, and small dramas acted by their servants, full of a corruption of language and suggestion perfectly astounding.

THE BEAUTY OF THE REVOLVING SEASONS—

In intellect these secluded women are not higher than children, but their circumstances foster an early and gigantic growth of the worst passions which deform humanity—envy, hatred, malignity, unbridled jealousy "strong as death and cruel as the grave," revenge, slander, greed, impurity, a leprosy of unholiness which affects well-nigh every home and heart, a foul atmosphere in which every generation receives its earliest impulses. Purity as a spontaneous virtue is not believed in. There are no ideals, no examples of goodness to be studied, nothing to raise the thoughts. Influence is represented by intrigue. There are no duties in life other than those to children and parents-in-law, and no true companionship can exist between husband and wife. To be the mother of boys is a woman's highest aspiration.

In all the countries of continental Asia girlhood, with its charm, its indescribable winsomeness, its brightness and sweetness, its ofttimes noble aspirations and not always reasonable hopes, its freshness and purity, its enthusiasms, its frequent alacrity of service, and the bright possibilities for its future, is altogether unknown. There is no middle platform between childhood and the loveless seclusion of wifehood. In the woman's house all that is good in a woman's nature is undeveloped and blighted; all that is evil is DEVELOPED AS IN A FORCING HOUSE.

To give anything like a correct idea of Oriental womanhood this sketch ought to have its details filled in and to be painted in much darker colours, but time fails. The imperfect picture I have given represents Hinduism, Islam, Buddhism, Demonism, and womanhood, and is a purely Oriental one.

In the days when Latins, Teutons, Slavs, and Anglo-Saxons were heathens women occupied a very different position from that of the women of the East; and there is a risk of exaggeration if we attribute the whole of the freedom and enlightened influence of the women of Europe and America to Christianity. It is apparent that the Christian religion modifies rather than effaces racial characteristics and customs.

This is evident in the case of the Syrians and Armenians, who were Christian nations for centuries while our fathers were painted savages, but among whom women occupy a position of decided inferiority, not sitting down at table with the men, and eating their leavings in becoming privacy. The necessity for silence is early inculcated on the Armenian bride. Up to the day of the birth of her firstborn she is the drudge of her father-in-law's house, and may not speak to anyone but her husband, and not to him in the presence of his parents. Her tongue is so far liberated by maternity that she may talk to her child, and then to the females of the household; but she may not speak freely till some years of this singular novitiate have passed by. Her education is totally neglected, and by custom and ignorance she is incapable of knowing or understanding the wider interests of her husband.

But Christianity has given to the Armenian and Syrian women

THE BLESSINGS OF MONOGAMY,

a seemly measure of freedom, purity in the household, rule in domestic matters, equal religious privileges with men, the high ideals of the New Testament, and the hope of a blessed immortality.

When Christianity came to Europe, with that wonderful elasticity which distinguishes it, it adapted itself to, or rather I should say it incorporated itself with, such national social customs as were not contrary to its spirit. It found women unveiled and with a certain measure of liberty and influence, and it left them so; or rather it taught the value and use of that liberty as liberty to serve. It established new standards of purity, of mutual respect between men and women, of absolute fidelity in the marriage relation, of the duties of mothers to the souls as well as to the bodies of their children, of duties to servants, and all that group of virtues which in the early days, as now, ennobled the Christian matron and set her high above the finest examples of womanhood among Greeks, Romans, or Teutons.

Passing over the eighteen centuries during which the evolution of Christian womanhood has been proceeding, allow me to point out a few of its salient features. In the ever-blessed Founder of our faith we have the unique spectacle of a character which, by combining the highest ideal of womanhood with the highest ideal of manhood, affords both sexes a perfect pattern on which to model their own lives. So that, in so far as the perfecting of the moral and spiritual natures goes, there is in very truth "neither male nor female."

While the false religions are made for men, and either ignore women or take cognizance of them only as vastly inferior beings, Christianity, while recognising, within limits, inevitably different spheres of harmonious action, regards the souls, the lives, the work, and the responsibilities of both sexes as on an equal platform. It has developed women all round, in intellect as well as heart, and has set before us the highest ideals as well as the loftiest themes of thought. It has taken away the reproach from unmarried life, which is one of the salient features of Eastern social systems, and has consecrated it, not in the seclusion of the cloister, but to the hard work of the world; so that it is greatly by unmarried women that difficulties are faced and severe social problems are solved. It has made women the invaluable and necessary coadjutors of men in all parochial, philanthropic, and educational work. It has taught women, and is daily teaching them more widely, that they have responsibilities outside of the walls which protect rather than seclude their Christian homes, that there is a duty to the State and to the fabric of society which cannot be evaded or shirked by the woman who is

FASHIONING HERSELF ON THE PATTERN OF CHRIST.

So the freedom and high consideration which Christianity has bestowed upon us enable many hard-working and gifted women to evidence their gratitude for these blessings by serving the State in many capacities, such as sitting on school and parochial boards, acting as factory inspectors, prison warders, nurses, emigration officers, and the like. Time would, indeed, fail to allude even to the thousand methods in which the Christian womanhood of our day is taking a leading position in every species of philanthropic work and social reform.

Nor must it be forgotten that one duty binding on women, whether in the home or out of it, is to refine and help men, to be examples of purity and feminine refinement in speech as well as life, and by gentle and wholesome influence to aid in forming a righteous public opinion—a duty never more incumbent than now. To us much has been given—of us much is required. Among the growing blessings which Christianity has conferred on womanhood is that of combined service. Formerly good women worked each in her isolated circumstances, without the strength and cheer of association. The tendency of the age is to combination, and it is very apparent among our women workers. This gathering of Young Women's Christian Association delegates from every part of Christendom is one evidence of it. The indwelling spirit of Christ which has led mothers to care for other women's daughters, and all the members to care for young women as they would like their own sisters to be cared for, has tightened and strengthened the blessed bonds of this special service, which at once includes and ignores race and country and external forms of faith.

Throughout the world I have seen the Briareus arms of these linked associations stretched out, union adding strength, and everywhere blessing, guiding, and protecting the ignorant, succouring the tempted, and in alien lands giving to the stranger

THE PRECIOUS SYMPATHIES OF HOME.

I will close by saying that woman's work is daily opening out in new directions, and that its indefinite expansion depends upon women themselves. In preparation for these and perhaps larger spheres, may I suggest that all young women should set themselves diligently to acquire those habits of business, thoroughness, perseverance, and self-effacement which are essential to successful work; and that all of us, however harassed and hard-pressed we may be, should strive to emulate the "gentleness that was in Christ," seeking on all occasions to show that kindly, individualising, sympathetic courtesy which minimises the frictions of life and helps many in unsuspected quarters to bear their burdens more easily. For all that Christianity has done for our womanhood we express our thankfulness best by endeavouring to extend the same blessings to others in the spirit of the question, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" esteeming it the highest ideal if by life-work and self-sacrifice each may attain to the fulfilment of the ancient prophecy, "A servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren."

* An address at the Mansion House to the World's Y.W.C.A. Conference.

The Mildmay Conference.

FOR the forty-second year in succession the June Conference of Christians at Mildmay Park has been in session this week. It opened on Tuesday morning in the warmest of midsummer weather, and with a good, though not a crowded, attendance. Lord Polwarth was able to be in his place as president, but we concluded from his remarks that he is not in robust health and would not be in close attendance at the meetings. At the appointed hour an opening hymn was sung, and Prebendary Barlow, of Islington, led the company in prayer.

After reading a portion of Scripture, THE CHAIRMAN gave a very brief opening address. He said these conferences had been conceived and carried on in the spirit of prayer. Every brick in the building seemed to him to be cemented in prayer. Yet we have much to learn concerning true prayer, which is the topic of this year's Conference. Philosophers speak of God as a silent God, but as Christians we know that He has spoken to us, and has invited us to speak to Him. His heart is opened towards us, and He desires us to open our hearts to Him as his children. May the Conference be a real sitting at the Master's feet! This is not a subject to theorise about or speculate on, but one to be experienced. We do not cry to an unknown God. Let us make much of the cleansing blood of the Saviour in our approaches to God; that is our ground of acceptance, and not our Christian profession or our spiritual acquirements. The veil is now rent from top to bottom, and all may enter in.

Another hymn of praise being sung, Mr. J. E. MATHESON recalled to the gathering some appropriate memories of the late Mr. Geo. Müller, the man of faith and prayer. He possessed in a very remarkable degree that attitude of mind which we call faith. On three separate occasions he spoke at Mildmay on the words in Psalm xliii. "God my exceeding joy"; perhaps that was the great secret of his wonderful life. Prayer followed by Rev. Sholto Douglas.

The first address on the morning's theme, "The Foundations of True Prayer," was given by DR. MONRO GIBSON.

Prayer, he said, is the breath of the spiritual life. How important, then, is prayer. No prayer, no soul life; little prayer, little life; much prayer, much life. In theory nothing is simpler than prayer, but in practice it is difficult. Some give up prayer because, to them, there is nothing more in it than a mere form.

What are some of the chief hindrances to prayer with serious-minded people? Men ask: Is it any use? This question arises from a doubt, not as to the existence, but as to the heart of God. Is our God anything more than "a force"? At one time material science seemed determined to annex the domain of spirit. Materialism is not now so blatant, but it is still the spirit of the age. People do not seem in our day to live so much in the unseen world as before; the realm of sense engrosses them. The unseen and eternal are gradually pushed out of our daily life, and God becomes more and more shadowy and abstract and distant. Here we have the need of a strong and vivid "revelation of God the Father." Perhaps we admit that God is "an infinite mind," but that does not help us much in the life of prayer. A modern poet has said—

> And dreaming much I never dared to dream
> That in my prisoned soul
> Fluttering trembling prayer could move
> The mind that is the whole.

Increase of knowledge alone truly increases sorrow in the direction of fellowship with God. But what if there be a heart in God? A Prime Minister and a boy crossing sweeper may intellectually be miles and miles apart; but in heart they may be much akin. So we may say with reverence that in the time of need of our poor humanity God will not be less God because in the love of his heart He thinks of his sick child. Reason may not affirm it, but it may confirm, and cannot deny it. He that taught men to love, shall He not love? What we learn of the Father's love from Jesus Christ is the corrective of the false impression given by those who confine themselves to the region of the intellect. Christ Himself is, indeed, the revelation of the Father. If God seems far off, every act, word, and tone of the Son of God is that of a brother and a friend; and He is "God manifest in the flesh." When the wise and prudent are left in ignorance, Christ reveals God to the babes—those who possess true love in their hearts. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father"; that is the answer to all the questionings of the heart.

Another difficulty is this. Granted that God is, dare I pray to Him? Have I not offended Him? This difficulty is met by "the mediation of God the Son," who has not only revealed the Father in his incarnation, but has borne the burden of human guilt and sin, and as our representative has made a way of free and open access to the Father. So the second gulf is bridged. Christ is not only The Truth; He is The Way. A third difficulty is, Even if I dare to pray, can I pray? My spiritual condition is such that I feel helpless in prayer. This is met by the coming and indwelling of God the Spirit. It is only by his promptings that we can pray. We may walk in the Spirit, and live in the Spirit, so that the act of faith may grow into the habit of faith. Prayer will be without ceasing, if the bronchial tubes of the soul are kept free from the microbes of sin and the dust of contact with the world.

Prayer was made by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor and Dr. Baedeker before the closing address of the morning, which was given by REV. CHARLES A. FOX.

If, he said, we are only sure that we are in God's presence it is not so hard to pray. We need this deep consciousness in all our prayer meetings and in our private petitions. We have now an open heaven, and an opened earth, and an open Bible. But the secret of the shut door of the chamber is not so well realised. This is the great need of our time. The mediation of Christ has been spoken of. Why is He our mediator? Because He belongs both to God and to us; and He died both for the Father and for us. He is the one and only link between God and us, uniting in his own blessed person the wounds of humanity and the splendours of divinity. The only place that belongs to us in the whole universe, because it has been purchased for us, is the holiest place of all within the veil. What need is there for other mediators? What sins can any human priest atone for? There is one sacrifice alone; one altar alone. This altar was not the possession of any Church; it was erected outside the camp, where Christ stood alone between the living and the dead. So it is the peculiar possession of no Church. Have you noticed that Christ was ever outside—born outside, living, worshipping, and ministering outside, suffering agony in a garden outside, and crucified outside? On God's side there is nothing between, but on our side there is need for the constant mediation of Christ, by the Holy Ghost, secretly, in the hearts of believing men. Why is prayer not always answered? Because the suppliant is not always ready to receive the blessings God would give us. We are all heirs of God, but how few of us are inheriting our possessions. We are disappointed heirs of blessing, like Jacob of old. Like Jacob we have first to be undone, before we can claim the blessing.

> Dark waters blossom out in breaking,
> High souls are made in the unmaking.

We overcome God by being overcome of God. Then we shall overcome our offended brother. Not only are there disappointed heirs, but blighted lives. An illustration of this Mr. Fox found in the case of the Syrophenician woman whom Christ at first repelled, but who afterwards overcame the silence, the sovereignty, and the severity of God the Son by the clinging of her prayer. She got the children's bread. What is that? The power to cast out the devil. How few of us are able to cast the devils out of our children and out of those around us! This is the power we need to-day; as missionaries know well when they go to heathen lands. Do we so deal with God, in the secret place, that the answer comes, "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt"?

How shall we overcome the flesh by prayer? Take the case of Paul, whom God fought against, as it were, by the thorn in the flesh. Was there ever such a worker as Paul? Yet God buffets him and brings him to his knees, so that he overcame at last by prayer. He got a revelation—"My grace is sufficient." That was to the Apostle like Hagar's well in the desert. The thorn was not removed, but grace was triumphant. There are those who have to fight with some thorn in the flesh every time they speak or work; but God's grace is sufficient. Paul learned that his weakness was his strength. Man's importunity, in his extremity brings God's opportunity and man's blessing. To overcome there is but one thing to do: yield yourself as a living sacrifice, and put yourself at God's disposal. There will be such a change that you will be transfigured before the wondering eyes of your fellow men.

Bridge of Allan Convention.

THE seventh annual convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held last week in a tent at Bridge of Allan. This year's convention (says a correspondent) has been one of the best. The weather has been all that could be desired. Mr. Robert Wilson presided.

Among the speakers were Rev. J. R. Macpherson, Rev. G. L. Hamilton, Dr. Elder Cumming, Pastor Theodore Monod, Rev. John Smith, and Dr. White. The addresses were on the usual lines of a call to confession and surrender, with many comforting words as to the power for life testimony and service placed at the disposal of the Christian. In the after meetings many were brought to the point of definite acceptance of the promised gift of the Holy Spirit.

The convention closed on Friday by a largely attended missionary meeting. The same evening there was a well-attended praise meeting, when many interesting testimonies were given to blessing received. One happy feature was the number of local ministers and laymen who attended the meetings.

The Twined Flags.

ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

Let us twine our flags together,
We will clasp hands o'er the sea;
Let us stand beside the other
In the cause of liberty.
We have a true blood brotherhood,
Then for ever let us dwell
In a union far more powerful
Than of cannon shot or shell.

What though the Atlantic billows
Roll their foaming waves between?
What though you have a President
And we a British Queen?
We both possess the Bible,
That our fathers loved and read;
Those who bought our rights with sorrow,
Who were tortured, burnt and bled.

Then let us be united,
In every holy cause,
So peace, goodwill, and concord
Abound instead of wars.
Our noble heavenly missions,
On earth mankind to bless;
Spreading abroad the Gospel
Of Truth and Righteousness.

S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

Waitresses have been honoured with a Bill in Parliament. The Bill establishes a ten hours' day for waitresses, and requires seats to be provided for their use. One of the sections provides that "a waitress shall not be prohibited by regulation or otherwise from being seated when not actually engaged in the course of her employment." This provision is much needed in London. In many well-known restaurants the waitresses are forbidden to sit down. Indeed no seats for them are provided.

Preservation of Health.—The work of the National Health Society is a great testimony to the value of cleanliness. Men and women in middle life can remember when consumption was a terrible scourge, but in sixty years the death-rate from it has been reduced by more than one-half, and one authority thinks that in thirty years the disease will have disappeared. There is no doubt that a great many of the scourges of our race spring from our own fault; disease and poverty are questions best solved by applying the laws of simple temperance in living to all conditions and classes.

Rousing London.—The executive of the London Auxiliary of the U.K. Alliance have arranged for a fortnight's mission by Rev. Leonard M. Isitt, of New Zealand, extending from Sunday, October 23, to Friday, November 4, and including four Sunday services, a special reception, six large district meetings, and three Exeter Hall demonstrations. To prepare for these great gatherings, and to consider how to make them instrumental in giving a new impulse to all departments of temperance effort throughout the metropolis, it has been decided to call an aggregate conference of London temperance workers in Exeter (lower) Hall, Strand, on Thursday next, June 30. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., M.P., will take the chair at 7.30 p.m.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 26.

"If meat maketh my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore, that I make not my brother to stumble."—1 Cor. viii. 13 (R.V.)

THERE are two principles for our guidance in doubtful and debatable questions. First, the law of conscience. The Apostle does not hesitate to say that the scruples of the weaker brethren were unquestionably needless. Idols have no real existence, and the presentation of food in their presence before it is eaten is a matter of complete indifference. "If we eat, we are not the better; if we eat not, we are not the worse." At the same time, if a man were not able to reach this high standard, and still believed that an idol had a real existence, and that it was wrong for him to partake of food which had been offered to it, he must abide by that decision, not in any way forcing himself to more liberal action. His conscience might be misinformed, and he should take every means of bringing it to a more healthy condition; but if it still remained stationary, he must accept its ruling.

Secondly, the law of charity. We must consider one another. No one liveth to himself. We are members of the body of Christ, and have no right to injure any who are so closely allied with us, and on whose healthy existence our own materially depends. If, then, we see that certain other souls are constantly being caused to stumble because of what we do; not simply surprised and startled, but actually made to sin; trying to do as we do, but perpetually falling short; unable to take our steep path without falling; always brought into condemnation when in our company; there is no alternative—for their sakes we must forego what is innocent and pleasant to ourselves. It may be a daily glass of wine, or attendance at some form of amusement, or some other habit of life. The love of Christ forbids.

MONDAY, June 27.

"Lest I myself should be a castaway."—1 Cor. ix. 27.

Is it for one moment to be supposed that Paul really feared being cast away from the love and presence of God into the outer darkness with its weeping and gnashing of teeth? Surely not! Had he not said unmistakably that nothing could avail to separate him from the love of God which was in Jesus Christ! No, it is impossible to think such a thing. He knew too well that none of Christ's members can be amputated, none of his sheep perish.

But when the Apostle speaks of being a castaway he means that he feared lest, after having proclaimed the rules of the contest to others, he should himself fail shamefully of the prize. And what was that prize? Certainly not forgiveness nor eternal life, because these are not procured by any efforts of our own. These are not the prizes of agility or strength, but the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. What, then, is the prize? The context reveals it. It is surely the guerdon of saved souls, the blessed joy and crown of bringing to Jesus those who had otherwise never known his name, the knowledge that through our means the glory of Jesus shines in hearts that otherwise had been ever closed to Him (19-22).

But we may fall short of this. We may set others to do what we fail to do. We may appear before Christ with handfuls of withered leaves. We may yet be rejected. Esau missed the crown of his birthright, Moses the Promised Land, Saul the founding of a line of kings. We may miss utterly and irretrievably. God help us to watch and pray, and bring the body into subjection!

TUESDAY, June 28.

"The profit of the many, that they may be saved."—1 Cor. x. 33.

Probably the world has never seen a more enthusiastic soul-winner than the great Apostle. If he visits a strange town, he will cast out the demon from a possessed girl. If he takes up tent-making, beside an unbelieving Jew and his wife, he will before long have won each for Christ. If he is cast into prison, he will have baptized the gaoler before dawn. If he stands before a judge, he will almost persuade him to be a Christian. If he is a prisoner in a hired house, he will speak to all who come to him, and win a runaway slave like Onesimus to Christ, and make him profitable to Philemon. Always and everywhere, he sets himself to win souls. His favourite motto was that I may by all means save some (ix. 22).

Here, also, we see how this one passion ruled his behaviour in all things. He was willing to yield to men in matters where only his own comfort, but not his conscience, was concerned. He set himself to please all men in all things, not seeking his own profit, but "the profit of the many, that they may be saved." How careful he was to avoid what would cause the least disciple to stumble! How eager to go to the very furthest limits of Christian consistency to meet men's prejudices and whims. It was for his compliance with the timorous suggestion of the Christian leaders at Jerusalem that he had to suffer two years' imprisonment at Cæsarea and two at Rome.

Oh, for more of this sacred passion, such as inspired, for instance, the Moravians to expatriate themselves for the sake of the lepers of Table Bay!

WEDNESDAY, June 29.

"Eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, if he discern not the body."—1 Cor. xi. 29 (R.V.)

How many humble and earnest souls this verse, as rendered in the A.V., has kept from the blessed enjoyment of the Lord's Table. They did not understand the nature of the sin which the Apostle was describing; they were terrified by the word damnation, and they felt that it were better to forego the privilege than risk the peril.

But the difficulties largely disappear when we understand the disorders that disgraced the Corinthian Church, and which arose from the abuses of the love-feast which preceded the Lord's Supper. At that repast each disciple was expected to put the provisions he had brought with him into a common stock, from which all shared alike. But at Corinth the rich and their friends ate of their luxuries, whilst the poor were allowed to go without. After such an introduction, the church could not approach the Lord's Table with that appreciation of the solemnity and tenderness of the ordinance which could alone consist with the holy memories of the betrayal-night.

The eating and drinking unworthily arose from not discerning the Body. This does not refer to the Lord's Body which was broken for us, but to his Body the Church. "The bread which we break, is it not a communion of the body of Christ, seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, one body?" (1 Cor. x. 16, 17). We eat and drink unworthily when we fail to discern that the poor, and weak, and simple, who belong to Jesus, belong also to us, that they are members with us, and that we are bound to share our gifts and graces with them for the glory of our common Lord. The one thing which disqualifies us from joining in this feast of dying love is our refusal to feel and manifest love. We must recognise the Body.

THURSDAY, June 30.

"Those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary."—1 Cor. xii. 22.

How apt we are to judge one another and ourselves by the standards of human greatness and excellence. "The weakest must go to the wall" is an economic axiom. Let the frail die that the stalwart may have more scope to live, and the "weak brother" be stamped out that the strong may the better succeed. Nay, we are all members one of another, and the robust cannot truly say to the fragile "I have no need of thee."

We recognise the dependence of the weak upon the strong. How would the invalid wife or child fare, but for the sturdy toil of the faithful husband or loving father? Yet would he be the noble, strong man that he is, were it not for the softening effects of affliction in his home? In the midst of the stress and strain of a busy life, when engaged in the struggle with unsympathetic elements around, he finds in his home an atmosphere, like a breeze from the distant sea, that braces his spiritual nerves and refines his nature.

Feeble, frail invalid, let thine heart be strong and take courage. We who are in health have need of thee, of thy prayers, of thy piety, of the sweet influences which float from thy sick chamber.

FRIDAY, July 1.

"The greatest of these is love."—1 Cor. xiii. 13 (R.V.)

What a light must have shone on the Apostle's face as he broke into this exquisite idyll, this perfect poem of love! The change in tone and rhythm must have caused his amanuensis to look suddenly up into his master's face, and lo! it was as the face of an angel. Why is love greatest?

Because it is the crown of the other two, and includes them. Faith is the root, hope is the stem, love the perfect flower. You may have faith without hope, and hope without love; but you cannot have love apart from faith and hope.

Because it is likest God. God's nature is not specially characterised by faith, because there is no uncertainty with his perfect knowledge; nor by hope, because there is no future to his eternal existence. But God is love, and to love is to know and resemble God.

Because it will immeasurably outlast the other two. Human knowledge, at best but the spellings of babes, will vanish in the perfect light of heaven. Eloquence will seem like the lispings of infancy. Prophecies will have no place, because all the landscape of the future will be revealed. Faith and hope will be merged into realisation. "What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" But love will live for ever.

Because love brings the purest rapture. "Where is heaven?" asked a wealthy Christian of his minister. "I will tell you where it is," was the quick reply, "if you will go to the store, and buy £10 worth of provisions and necessaries, and take them to that poor widow on the hillside, who has three of her children sick. She is poor, and a member of the Church. Take a nurse and someone to cook the food. When you get there, read the twenty-third Psalm, and kneel by her side and pray. Then you will find out where heaven is."

SATURDAY, July 2.

"There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and no kind is without signification."—1 Cor. xiv. 10 (R.V.)

There are the voices of nature. The deep bass of the ocean wave booming along the shore; the crash of the ice; the silver choirs of the stars; the song of bird, hum of bee, shrill trumpet of gnat, the rustle of the leaves, the patter of the rain, the chorus of the hail-stones—how varied, and charming, and musical! No doubt if we could listen to all these from a distance we should detect perfect chords.

There are the voices of human life. First, the mother's, then of the brothers and sisters of our home (and sad is the lot of the lonely child which has none), then of the teacher, the minister, the friend, the lover, not one could be spared; not one that has not a significance; not one to whose words we shall not do well to give heed.

There are the voices of our daily lot. Now we are called to experience joy, now sorrow, now gain, and now loss; now of the harsh reprimand of disaster, now of the tender assurances of sunny hours. Behind all these God is speaking. Listen, therefore, heedfully to all, and try to acquire the lesson He is longing to inculcate. What is He saying to you, by your circumstances, at this moment? Is it in tones of pleading, of remonstrance, of blame?—

> Where is thy favoured haunt, eternal voice,
> The region of thy choice,
> Where, undisturbed by sin and earth, the soul
> Owns thy entire control?
>
> 'Tis then we hear the voice of God within,
> Pleading with care and sin.

Home Missions.

Shaftesbury Institute.

THERE is, perhaps, no quarter in London where the contrast between the extremes of poverty and wealth, want and luxury, is more sharply defined and less realised than in Marylebone. Here, in Lisson-grove, is the centre of Miss Meredith Brown's good work among a population of 50,000, of whom about one-half is poor. At the last census it was found that over 23,000 persons in the West End were living on their own means, while 128,000 (also in the West End) were living in one-room tenements; and in Marylebone the homes of about a third of the population consist of a single room.

By the kindness of Lady Farquhar the annual meeting of Miss Meredith Brown's Institute was held last Friday afternoon at 7, Grosvenor-square, W. After Rev. Geo. Hanson had opened with prayer, it was mentioned that apologies for unavoidable absence had been received from Princess Christian, Canon Duckworth, Lady Jeune, Sir Donald Currie, Lord Kinnaird, and others.

The Earl of Hardwicke presided, and after brief reference to the numerous agencies which the Institute maintains in active operation for the benefit of poor women, girls, children, men, and lads, he urged that personal influence is needed to secure the object aimed at in this work, namely, moulding the character of those who need assistance. He trusted that the patience, energy, and loving self-sacrifice of Miss Meredith Brown and her deaconesses would not suffer discouragement from lack of adequate support.

Earnest words of advocacy fell from the lips of Canon Barker. It had been his privilege to visit the Home where poor girls are homed and mothered, and he considered that the wealthy were deeply indebted to those who throw their energies into that care for the suffering poor which requires a deep love of Christ and of humanity, together with a special and particular call from God to such work. In view of these shelters for the homeless and tempted, it was surely true that none have learned to live until they learn to give.

Miss Meredith Brown exemplified in her statement the saying that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, for her review of what has been done and needs to be done in connection with her loved work covered much interesting detail. Referring to work in the Girls' Institute, she showed that the Women's Shelter is a rest for the weary, a hope for despairing ones, and that it often proves a stepping-stone to higher things for the needy, friendless woman and girl. The Women's Labour Home is a most important and successful part of the shelter work, which recognises the principle of self-help. Work among factory girls embraces evening classes four nights in each week, with visitation of the homes and of the factories during the dinner-hour. The need of all that is done to save the children may be judged of from this

DISTRESSING BUT COMMON STORY.

"They've drunk everythink now," said a little girl, four years old, to the nurse; "arter they done the chairs, mother she drunk the bed, an' we lays on straw; now father 'as drunk the table, and we 'as to eat off the floor." Mr. H. Curtis Bennett, the magistrate of the neighbouring police-court, who has sent many girls to the Training Home in Maida Vale, expresses confidence that "such good work must appeal to the generosity of the benevolent." The men of the district are not neglected, for there is a fund for succouring the hungry and homeless, a Night Shelter, and a Labour Home for their benefit. An extensive visitation of common lodging-houses is also maintained. The greatest need at present is better accommodation for the resident deaconesses. The cost of the purchase of a twenty-five years' lease of suitable adjoining premises, with alterations and necessary repairs, would be £600, towards which £60 has been received.

Lord Overtoun said that the best thing for those interested in the work is to go and see it for themselves. We who profess to be followers of Christ may well remember that He did not disdain to leave his bright home to search for many a bright gem lost in the moral mud and mire of this world; for nothing is so precious in the Saviour's sight as a human soul.

After Rev. O. P. Wardell-Yerburgh had testified, from personal observation, that the work is carried on in a thoroughly efficient manner, a collection for the general purposes of the Institute was made, and realised £336. The sum of £900 was required, and one gentleman offered to be responsible for £100 on condition that four others would do the same. Three sums of £100 are promised; two more are earnestly awaited.

Miss Meredith Brown writes: "We are making some improvements and new arrangements in our Girls' (Preventive) Training Home, Clarendon House, Maida Vale. We want much a washing-machine. The cost is about £6. Also, we are thankful for clothing for all branches of the work, underclothing, cast-off clothing (gentlemen's as well as ladies'), pieces of material. Address, Shaftesbury Institute, Union-street, Lisson-grove, W."

The Bridge of Hope.

THERE is no occasion for me to enumerate the various departments of the "Bridge of Hope," for to readers of The Christian it is well known. After twenty years of unceasing activities here in this poorest of East-end parishes, the need is as great as ever to "seek and to save."

From every part of London, and also from the provinces, we get urgent appeals to help sad cases. Now it is a child with an unutterably painful story of unchildlike life—and again, some young girl, wronged and suffering, or perhaps badly brought up, and as a consequence needing watchful care to save her from ruin. Every day these applications come; but we have literally no money to carry on this work of saving young lives from shame.

As I write we have simply nothing to meet the day's needs. In one of our best Christian papers recently there was an article from which I venture to quote these pregnant words:—"There is nothing really fruitful except sacrifice. How many of our great public charities in England to-day are supported without costing anyone much self-denial. They are maintained out of superfluities," etc.

Surely this is only too sadly true, for if each one of those who have the means sacrificed ever so little, we should not now be without the means with which to provide food and clothing for our large family. Surely, in his name, who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, I may plead the cause of those for whom He pleaded.

The summer vacations are near, and our friends will soon be leaving their homes for the health-giving change of sea and mountain. Before they go I shall be most grateful if they will lighten our difficulty by sending liberal gifts. Throughout the summer months the poor applicants from the crowded streets and courts round about will still be coming to our door, and beside these we have daily more than two hundred in the homes for whom food and clothing are as necessary in summer as in winter. It is even more trying than usual to work in Ratcliff-highway during the long hot days, and I am sure we shall not be left without means to carry us through the season. Mary H. Steer.

"Bridge of Hope," 28, Betts-street, St. George's, E.

Hackney Y.M.C.A.

IN connection with the fourteenth anniversary of this Association two public meetings were held last week at 275, Mare-street. At the afternoon meeting Mr. R. L. Barclay presided, and Mr. H. E. Walker in the evening. Most helpful and inspiring addresses were delivered by Bishop Thoburn, Dr. Harry Guinness, Rev. H. E. Selwyn (Rector of Bengeo, Hertford), Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield (Vicar of St. James-the-Less, Victoria-park), and Mr. J. Fyfe Stewart (Society of Friends).

A most encouraging report was presented by the secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter. The present strength is three hundred, an increase of twenty for the year. The agencies include four conversational Bible classes, senior and junior P.S.A., evangelistic and prayer meetings, open-air services, ragged Sunday-school work, etc. Many total abstinence pledges have been registered. A strong contingent of the Association rendered valuable help at the special crusade demonstrations held in various parts of the metropolis. Amongst the workers sent forth during the year were two missionaries for the Congo and Central America, whilst another entered Harley House for future service on the Congo, and yet another became general secretary of the Shoreditch Y.M.C.A. Several others are also being led in the direction of foreign service.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

ON the invitation of Lord and Lady Kinnaird, the sixty-third annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society was held at 10, St. James's-square, on Monday afternoon. His lordship, as president, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. The report, read by Mr. T. A. Wallis, secretary, stated that the past year had been a fairly satisfactory one. The operations of the society take the form, for the most part, of a house-to-house visitation of over 720 of the poorest of the blind of London, by the staff of blind visitors. The blind are also educated in reading, writing, knitting, sewing, and elementary scientific knowledge.

The blind visitors, having had their own trials and difficulties, are able, from a personal experience, to counsel those whom they visit, and it is found that there is in such circumstances much more mutual sympathy than where the visitors are able to see. The East End superintendent (Mr. Wm. Mead), after thirty years' service, reports that the social, moral, and religious condition of the blind of London was never equal to what it is now. One or two cases met with, and the Society's method of dealing with them, were given. (1) A man of fifty years, who had been a draper, recently became blind, started a boot club among his friends, and by a little substantial help from the Samaritan Fund was now doing fairly well. (2) A blind man, who was also paralysed, was started in a green-grocer's business; the wife did the active work, and he drew the attention of passers-by to the excellence of the stock. (3) A man who had been blind thirty-four years, and is also deaf and dumb, was taught the Braille system of reading and writing, and, having a little knowledge of carpentering, was encouraged to try and make stools, soap boxes, etc., being supplied with tools by the Society. He now earns a livelihood.

Lord Kinnaird, in proposing the adoption of the report, said that being on the committee of the Gardner Trust he knew a good deal about societies for the blind, and he knew of none that more deserved the support of Christian people than this, for it was doing a most excellent work in helping the poor blind to make a living for themselves. Moreover, it was working entirely on Christian lines. Dr. William Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, described the Society as an admirable one, for it had carried light and hope into many a dark home and weary life. Canon Barker and Rev. Herbert R. J. Marston (who spoke from the point of view of a practically sightless person) also addressed the meeting in terms of warm approval of the work.

A Novel Enterprise.—One of the most striking devices for raising missionary money is that of the two ladies who, two summers ago, opened a superior "pension," with a view of devoting the profits to foreign missions. The Congo Balolo Mission is to have the benefit of this kind arrangement, and the address of the "pension" is Warrender House, Moffat, N.B.

Young Women in London.

CONSIDERING the numbers and importance of the class whose interests it promotes, we imagine there is no more valuable modern organisation than the Y.W.C.A. It has achieved much in the past in the way of surrounding our wage-earning young women with healthful influences, and also in bringing them to a personal choice of the Christian life. Much more remains to be done, and will be done if the Christian public but generously strengthen the hands of those friends who devote time and strength to the details of the work.

The annual meeting of the London Associations was in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening last week. An extra interest was imparted to the proceedings because of the simultaneous sessions of the first triennial conference of the World's Y.W.C.A.

A social reception of delegates in the lower hall, by the kindred Y.M.C.A., was largely attended; and later in the evening the great hall was filled almost exclusively with fair forms and bright, intelligent faces. Lord Kinnaird fittingly presided, seeing that the origination of the Society was largely due to his esteemed mother.

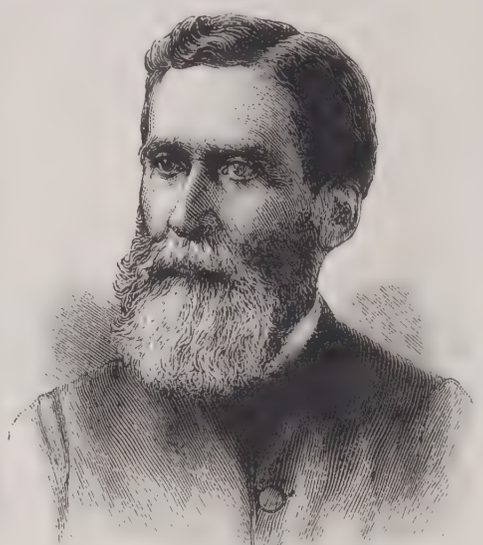
A VERY HEARTY WELCOME

to the visitors was appropriately voiced by Mr. J. H. Tritton; brief responses were made by friends from Hungary and Switzerland. The United States representative, an eloquent American lady, Miss Barnes, delivered the greetings of thirteen millions of girls and young women in the States. She said the American delegates had been amazed at many things they had seen in this country, but the thing that had most impressed them was the deep-rooted desire manifested to help in evangelising the world. She pledged her word that Christian young women across the Atlantic would join them hand-in-hand in this glorious work. Mrs. Stephen Menzies replied for British delegates, and took occasion to recognise the great service rendered by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird in connection with the World's Y.W.C.A.

The Chairman, having announced with regret the unavoidable absence of Mr. W. T. Paton, through illness, gave some facts relating to the year's work, which the committee have thus summarised:—

During the year and a-half now closing the general work in London has been steadily maintained. A few weak centres have been closed, but this has been compensated by new branches started, the number of London centres remaining at 140, and the membership rather over 14,000.

The new sitting-room and the gymnasium at the central Institute will be of great advantage to the members; interest is already revived, and the attendance at the Bible-classes is increasing. At Finsbury good work has been done in the Institute and in the preparation house by the training of students. The "Welbeck" has extended its usefulness by opening "Ames House" in Great Portland-street, both homes being always full. At the Princess House Restaurant there is an average of 160 or 170 young women at dinner each day. At the Percy Institute, King's Cross, which numbers 300 members, a varied and most useful work is in progress. At Belgravia and Camberwell it is hoped to reorganise the work; at other institutes there are many reasons for encouragement,



The Park Mission Lodge housed and trained eighty girls during the year, and the Park Mission dealt with sixty preventive and rescue cases. The Teachers' Department has a branch numbering 784 members. The Employment Agency found situations for 1012 applicants. The Central Flower Mission distributes about 1600 bouquets on Wednesday mornings at eleven large houses of business, and similar work is carried on at other branches. Morley Rooms has had fifty-two boarders and been visited by 2350 girls in the course of the year. In the Holiday department 325 girls were assisted in taking a sorely needed holiday. The Library department has eleven boxes of 100 books and fifteen boxes of fifty books each in constant circulation. These are only a few illustrations of the work in progress.

The noble chairman, unfortunately, had to admit a deficit of some £1400 in the funds, for which he earnestly appealed.

An address followed by Rev. E. A. Stuart, who spoke some helpful, stimulating words to the members of the Associations before him, by way of counsel and exhortation. He referred to the value of corporate life and influence in such an Association, as well as the importance of individualism. The power of Christianity in elevating the status and condition of women, and in sweetening family life, was appropriately magnified; and the hearers were urged to reflect the life of Jesus Christ in the home, in the social circle, and in Association work. Our young women ought to be "polished corner stones," binding together the members of the household, and uniting them each to God. To the working delegates Mr. Stuart quoted and applied the words of the Psalmist, "My work is for a king."

BISHOP THOBURN

was the last speaker. He said that the anointing of the Spirit at Pentecost given to women, alike with men, was the charter of Christian womanhood in all succeeding ages and in all lands. There are some spheres of work where Christian women show more courage than those of the stronger sex. As an example he referred to the remarkable movement among American women in 1873, when they went out in bands and prayed in the street. In Cincinnati a company of them were arrested and taken before the Mayor. When the chief magistrate ascended to his seat on the bench all the women were on their knees praying. The Mayor dismissed them, telling them to reappear when he sent for them; that was in 1873, and he has not sent for them yet. Other incidents were told as illustrating the possibilities of Christian womanhood. Then there are some kinds of work that women can do that men are not well fitted for. Women have more delicacy of touch in the blessed work of binding up the broken-hearted. The ministry of deaconesses in the homes of the people was mentioned as a wide channel of service for Christ. Bishop Thoburn was able to find in India striking illustrations of the great opportunities that lie to the hands of Christian women in working for God and for humanity. During the next six months, he said, he would have to appoint a thousand native Christian women in India. In that country there are 1300 native members of the Y.W.C.A.

Bishop Thoburn.

The following extract from the report may be more suggestive to our readers, and more serviceable to the Association, than any more detailed notice of the evening's proceedings, interesting though they were:—

"Much remains to be done; there are debts to be cleared, closed institutions to be reopened, new branches to be formed, new openings for missionary work to be seized while opportunity offers; and to those to whom these suggestions may seem too large for practical response, the Association says:—

"Will you get hold of employers who are often so good to their people, and will perhaps do a little more, and ask them to subscribe—and generously?

"Will you deny self something in dress or ornament for Christ's sake, and give the help instead to some poor struggling bread-winner?

"Will you ask friends living near London to invite women and girls to their garden for a Saturday afternoon or Bank Holiday?

"Will you consult with the hon. secretaries at headquarters (26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.) on the way in which assistance can be most helpfully given?

"Let us all think of these things, and especially any readers who are girls of means and leisure. Think of how, for the very luxuries of dress and ornament which add so great a charm to life, you depend on your hard-working sisters—children of the same Father—whose lives are one prolonged toil, whose atmosphere of gloom is rarely pierced by one ray of the sunshine which gladdens your life, and yet whose lot you could so materially brighten by practical sympathy and interest."

THE WORLD'S CONFERENCE.

As noted in the preceding report, a Conference of the World's Y.W.C.A. was held in London last week; the proceedings extended from Tuesday to Saturday inclusive. The main gatherings were arranged partly at the headquarters of the Association in George-street, Hanover-square, and partly in the Polytechnic Hall, Regent-street. The delegates were welcomed by Viscountess Portman, at Portman House, on Tuesday evening. On the morning of each of the three following days Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave Bible readings at 26, George-street; after which some time was devoted to the transaction of business relating to the organisation.

The afternoons were given up to reports from delegates and addresses on selected subjects. The reports on Wednesday afternoon were from America, India, and China; and telling addresses followed from Miss Clifford, Miss Lidgett, and others on "Women's Duties towards the State." The reports on the Friday were from Great Britain and British Colonies, and the interesting subject of the address was "Work in Women's Colleges in U.S.A." As a sample of the practical proceedings we furnish some notes of the afternoon meeting of Thursday, under the presidency of Miss Morley, when there were presented

REPORTS FROM EUROPE.

The President of the Italian Y.W.C.A. gave a very pleasing account of the progress of work among young women in the sunny land of Italy. From a very small beginning in 1894, the Associations there have moved forward till last month a conference was held in Turin with representatives from all parts of Italy. A distinctive feature of the work is that done by girls for girls, with the help of a ladies' committee. Geneva, Rome, Naples, Florence, all have active branches; while at Milan, Bergamo, and San Remo there are young efforts that promise well.

A short survey of the work in Norway followed. There are nine branches, with a membership of 1400 (whose ages range from fourteen to seventy). Some of the town associations take a deep interest in foreign missions, and contribute towards that work. Temperance is kept well to the front, and various agencies are in operation. The parents of the girls are occasionally invited to meetings, so as to increase their interest.

The lady who represented Sweden said that missionary effort was the mainstay of Association work throughout the country. There are thirty-nine branches, and all classes of society are reached. Wealthy ladies and factory girls sing and pray side by side. Even in the youngest of the branches blessed results have been seen. It was interesting to note that these Swedish Christian ladies are showing practical solicitude for young women in shops by a movement to provide them with seats when not actually serving customers.

Eight branches are at work in Denmark, and the conversion of young women is the prime object kept in view. Judging from the little report read by a young friend from Copenhagen, in somewhat broken English, the Association work is very varied, very practical, and very hearty indeed.

The Finnish lady, who spoke for her far Northern land, deemed it necessary to preface her report by disabusing the mind of the Conference of the idea that Finland is a half-savage country, not long emerged from heathenism. Why, the teachings of Christianity were made known in Finland in the end of the twelfth century, and the standard of education is one of the highest in Europe! In the course of her report the speaker said that even their factory girls have not such a bad name as those in London. All sections of the community appear to be embraced in the efforts of the Association, and the agencies used are extensive, covering all the social and individual needs of all classes, and providing work for Christian women. There are at present 830 members. The business-like demeanour of this Finnish delegate greatly delighted the Conference.

A special interest attached to the statement of the Spanish delegate, who said that as women are the greatest supporters of the Romish Church, there is a corresponding need for Y.W.C.A. work. In the course of her little report of the work carried on, she said that in Spanish there are two words for prayer—one meaning the repeating of prayers, and the other speaking to God. The girls are taught by the priests to repeat prayers to the Virgin, but never told to pray to God except through the Virgin.

In Gibraltar a quiet and hopeful work is going on, not only for English girls, but among those of other nationalities.

INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL TRAINING.

This was the subject of addresses during the second part of the afternoon conference. Mrs. George Cadbury read a short paper dealing with it. She argued that the cultivation of the intellect strengthens moral perception. Enlarged knowledge in any branch of study tends to humility and the banishment of individual conceit. There are those who talk of the delights of the world to come who never take the trouble to find out the delights of scientific study in this present world. A well-trained mind, too, will discern between emotion and experience. Another result of increased knowledge is the growth of charity towards others. On the point of intellectual equipment being an aid to faith Mrs. Cadbury had a good word to say for certain phases of the Higher Criticism, which, she contended, has done much to place the sacred records on a firmer basis. Recent archæological discoveries by explorers were referred to as confirmations of a well-grounded faith. This paper was able in its reasoning, and an excellent example of the intellectual training which was its theme. More thought and less feeling, she said in conclusion, is what is needed for the young women of to-day.

Mrs. Carus-Wilson (née Miss Mary Petrie), in a short but thoughtful address, emphasised some of the points in the previous paper. She laid great stress on the importance of real mental training as opposed to the mere acquisition of certain sorts of knowledge. The best impulses are often neutralised by the absence of this training. We too often think that a smattering of a profound subject is worth more than the serious study of a commonplace subject. With a fine scorn, Mrs. Carus-Wilson referred to those who will chatter about evolution or Egyptology, reproducing the utterances of a brilliantly superficial magazine author, written as though it were not only the last word that had been said, but the very last word that could be said. The Conference was much amused with the stern criticism that the speaker dealt out to the saying of one whose daughter was going to college, and who said, "If she marries it will be all thrown away." She contended that to a mother, at any rate, all the intellectual training of former days is of the greatest value, especially when sons grow up to plunge into the world of the mind. Another bit of well-deserved sarcasm was directed against a lady of good social position and high religious profession, who would never think of going out with a cheap bonnet, but was extremely anxious to know where she could find a cheap secretary.

An excellent little heartfelt talk from an American delegate, on various ways of bringing the intellect and all that goes to make up abundant life into complete subjection to Jesus Christ, closed a deeply instructive session of the Conference.

MANSION HOUSE RECEPTION.

On Thursday evening the Conference enjoyed the hospitality of the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House, when delegates and other friends mustered in considerable force.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress held a formal reception in the entrance-hall, and refreshments were provided. Thereafter a meeting was held in the Great Pillar Room, the Lord Mayor presiding. His lordship extended a hearty welcome to the Conference, as head of the City of London, and spoke very cordially of the work of the Association.

The chief speaker of the evening was Mrs. Bishop, the renowned traveller, who gave an address on "Christianity and Womanhood." A more vivid presentation of the degraded and sorrowful condition of women in lands that are unreached by the Gospel could scarcely be imagined, and the Lord Mayor well remarked that we ought to feel thankful we live in this country under very different circumstances. We reproduce Mrs. Bishop's impressive address in another part of this issue.

The subsequent speakers were Archdeacon Sinclair, Lord Overtoun, and Preb. Webb-Peploe. The last named gave the delegates an exhortation as to abiding in Christ if they would enjoy power for service.

The closing meeting of the conference was mainly for prayer and consecration. Helpful addresses were given by Mrs. Bannister and Pastor Theodore Monod; while many petitions and thanksgivings arose from the delegates throughout the hall.

From Other Lands.

A Northfield Sunday.

ORDINARILY a Northfield Sunday would mean a first day spent at one of those wonderfully interesting and inspiring conferences through which Northfield has become known and blessed to the ends of the earth; but the particular day now referred to was one spent before the throngs of students and Christians had gathered to feast at the feet of eminent students of the Word. Just an ordinary quiet Sabbath in May, when all Nature was budding forth her welcome, when the hills were taking on their robes of splendour, jewelled by the flowers of spring; when the mountain air, strong and bracing, was tempered by the sunshine and each breath thrilled and exhilarated.

Coming from a busy city, freighted with the turmoil and strife of commerce, and with the rumours of war and the exultant shouts of far-off victories, it is a rare delight to find one's self in which Northfield lies. Approaching the village by train, one passes Mount Hermon schools and the buildings of the Northfield Seminary, which stand as noble monuments to the faith of man in an all-powerful God, and immediately is brought to one's mind many thoughts of the man whose work has made Northfield beloved of all Christians.

TUCKED AWAY IN THE PEACEFUL VALLEY

The Sabbath, God's day, day of rest, day of worship! These thoughts come to one instinctively as, on awakening, the beauty and calm impress one as being thoroughly consonant with God's purpose in reserving one day for his own; and how gladly do we render the day to Him, for nature itself calls upon our souls and all that is within us to praise and magnify the Lord.

On this Sabbath Mr. Moody is at home, his evangelistic tours suspended in the interest of his greater work, the planning of his college of colleges, in which the Lord Himself is principal, and the faculty composed of teachers tried and true, who render willing testimony to the power of God.

Interest naturally centres in the service of the Second Congregational Church, a society founded in 1825 by Puritan descendants, for a tablet tells us of many a Priscilla, Chloe, Hiram, and Noah who were among the original members. The auditorium of the present building seats 1200 to 1500, and to-day it is filled. In the absence of the regular pastor, Rev. C. I. Schofield, D.D., Dr. A. T. Pierson conducts the service, which is to be in the nature of a memorial of George Müller. The students from Hermon and Northfield are present, and they must surely be an inspiration and a foretaste of reward to the founder of the schools. A Bible-teaching on the life of faith leads us to an inquiry into the forces that went to make George Müller a combination of the characteristics of Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and Moses.

Dr. Pierson lifts us to an appreciation of the providence of God as exemplified by the life of trust of the sainted Müller, who, being "tired," God lately called from his finished work to abide with Him. Mr. Stephen Menzies, of Liverpool, followed with a of Mr. Müller—he having been accorded the privilege of an interview only a short time before the translation. Then Mr. Moody followed with one of his homely, practical talks, interpreting to us all the motives of such a life as Müller's. And when he told that had there been no Müller there might have been no Northfield schools new interest was added and new inspiration was gathered from a life so modest, yet far-reaching as the world.

DELIGHTFUL PERSONAL REMINISCENCE

It is delightful to see Mr. Moody in his home church, pastor of his own family as it were; and there cannot be any higher tribute to a man than to find the companions of his boyhood days, with the rising generation of sons and daughters and the small army of students, gathered together to worship God as He leads them, nor can there be stronger testimony than that a man should be so well known and so well beloved in his own immediate and intimate circle. The whole the prayer, the preaching, the praise a unison of heart and voice. The singing itself is a wonderful inspiration. Everybody sings and sings heartily. The choir, well trained, sings not empty words, but a Gospel message. The "boys" from Mount Hermon, led by their quartet, sang as only sturdy young men can when their souls are filled with gratitude and love for their Great Teacher. The song service does stand out so boldly against the high-salaried quartets of modern church life, and fully evidences that "let all the people sing" does not of necessity mean that harmony must take wings.

SERVICE IS ONE OF THE HEART;

The afternoon is for rest, and the evening is given to a service in the church, led by the young people. In Marquand Hall Mr. Menzies has a meeting for the students of Northfield, and at Mount Hermon Mr. Hadley, of the Water-street Mission of New York, conducts a service for the "boys."

So the day passes, and with soul refreshed and body renewed there comes to one the conviction that this is the way the Lord would have his day observed, and even from most selfish motives one could wish to spend many such Sundays.

George H. Doran.

News from Ecuador.

MR. W. E. REED, the North American missionary, writes from Ambato, on the road to Quito: "I have stopped here for the present, and will await direction from God before taking another step. The real cause for stopping was a lack of funds, but though these were supplied shortly after our arrival we did not feel sure that God's purpose in allowing the stop was yet fulfilled. We have had some blessed experience of the care which God exercises over us. We were ordered to leave the house, and looked in vain all over the town for another. Threats were freely made that anyone who should rent to us would have his house burnt. We waited to see what God would do on our behalf, and surely enough a man came to our house and offered us his.

"Meantime, the people of Quito are in a state of excitement at the announcement that we are only stopping here, but expect to make Quito our home. If we should now go there it would have the appearance of fleeing from persecution, and would encourage the people of Quito, who are more fanatical than those of Ambato, to apply the same methods (mob violence) to us. The opening here is very promising, and, though I expect to move on before the end of the year, I am not so much concerned about the future as about the present. To-day has been a good one, as we have seen the beginning of conviction in two lives, and I have such a longing to be used in bringing men to the Lord as I never had in my life."

Mr. Reed writes later: "I have been unable to send this letter earlier, and can add that the Lord seems to have been working during these days. Only a few have come to the house, on account of the threat of the Archbishop of Quito to excommunicate any who come, or buy or read our books. Those who have come are under conviction of sin, and one young man appears to be really converted."

Sweden.—Mr. C. F. Johnson, a well-known missionary in Sweden, writes to say that he has left the church at Ängsas in charge of a younger brother, and gone further south to Tyringe, Skane, where he and his wife are giving themselves to Gospel work. Travelling constantly, he generally holds two meetings on week-days and several on Sundays. He asks for the sympathy and help of our readers in maintaining this mission work, which is attended with many difficulties because of the opposition of those adhering to the State Church.

North Africa Mission.

WRITING from Alexandria, Egypt, Mr. C. T. Hooper sends us an interesting account of a month's itinerating, in company with Mr. W. Dickins, through towns and villages in the delta of the Nile.

During a day's stay at Tanteh entrance was obtained to the mosque of Sheikh Said El-Bedouie, but the Gospel books and papers were of necessity left outside. Women, allowed to enter during certain hours, were rubbing their hands on the tombs and then on their sick bodies, expecting to receive healing; and numbers of men were washing, preparatory to prayers which, alas! only left them steeped in sin and darkness.

Before sunrise next morning the travellers started for Zifteh, the open car on the branch railway affording opportunity for preaching Christ to attentive listeners, who asked many questions. Singing of hymns in Arabic, during long waits at the stations, brought people to hear, and some who could read received Gospels. At Zifteh, a town with eighty villages around it, a room over a cornshed was secured for cooking, sleeping, and locking-up the few things while Mr. Hooper and his companion were out among the people. Next morning found them in the first village, seated among thirty leading men gathered outside the house of the omda or head of the place. Coffee was served, and these natives read Gospels aloud, afterwards politely returning them, but the omda retained one.

"Next day," says Mr Hooper, "we crossed the river to Mount Ghamr, a place with a hundred villages, one of which we reached after a good two hours' travelling. Crowds listened attentively to our words about sin and God's remedy. After some Syrian Christians had urged upon us the need of a missionary to the 30,000 souls around them, Zifteh was vacated for Saft, a purely Moslem city of about 6000 souls, crowded together in small mud huts. Here one man read three chapters of a gospel to a group of about twenty others, and conversation ensued.

"Abou Sir was the next stopping place, and two villages were visited, with encouraging results. On our return to the town the son of a wealthy Bey invited us to his father's palace, where we received much attention, and the steward read from a gospel to the household.

"Before next sunset we arrived at Sammenud, and found the degradation of the people and the filth of the town proportionate to the number of mosques. Three days were devoted to visitation of surrounding villages. Sometimes fanaticism led to return of books given away, but offered for sowing the Word of God. The station-master of the place seems to be a true believer, and we spent a night and held service in his house. Admitted to the Coptic church, we distributed Gospels in the adjoining schoolroom, and prayed that light and blessing may enter that dark place. A similar distribution was made among merchants in the market-place, and we then left for Mount Assco. The poor fellaheen who are constructing waterways for irrigation in this district are practically slaves.

VARIED OPPORTUNITIES

"The American Mission has a good work in the fine town of Mansurah, where we met with Rev. G. Grubb speaking through an interpreter to the natives in their church. God gave us much favour with the people in neighbouring villages. On our way to Damietta we again found, in a rail journey, full scope for our work. More village visitation, and then, taking a westerly direction, we gave a day to Cheribin, and, detained sometime in Bessendeleh, spent a happy time with a number of men who gathered round. At Belcas one Moslem accepted a complete Bible, and others asked for gospels. By way of Bishbeech and Kafer-es-Sheikh, we reached Fuah, and had thus crossed the whole delta of the Nile, leaving behind us, in every place visited, testimony which we trust God may own and bless. Coming to Fuah we met the old Sheikh Hassan Maghour, a convert of a former journey, who received us with much joy. His growth in grace and love for the truth cheered us very much. Next day we mounted donkeys, and, after three and a-half hours on their backs, reached Mutobis, where we took boat to Rosetta. Here we enjoyed fellowship with other missionaries before going on to Alexandria.

"God is giving much encouragement with his work in Egypt, and we ask the prayers of all his people for blessing on the seed sown and for grace to continue the sowing."

The Y.M.C.A. in Belgium.

A MOST encouraging forward Y.M.C.A. movement is being made in Belgium. Through the instrumentality of the Central International Committee, central associations have just been founded at Antwerp and Brussels. In the former city (growing by leaps and bounds) about fifty young men have rallied around the work; funds have been secured for taking commodious premises, and it is hoped that a general secretary will soon be called. M. E. Favre, of Geneva, and Mr. Hughes, of Lyons, have just held at Antwerp some most encouraging meetings. The active and devoted president of the Antwerp Association is M. Pyl, who will gladly give any information required. His address is 88, Rue St. Lambert Berchem, Antwerp.

In Brussels about 100 young men have formed the United Central Associations. An influential advisory council has been constituted. Mr. Hughes has been called from Lyons as general secretary, and a commodious building, situated in the very heart of the city, next to the University, has been purchased by a generous member of the committee, who is having it adapted to the needs of the work.

When furnished the building will, in addition to the ordinary facilities offered to young men, contain a public refreshment bar, a restaurant, a students' room, a soldiers' room, and several furnished rooms. In a word, it will be organised so as to carry on the fourfold Y.M.C.A. programme.

For the present the Brussels Association comprises three branches, i.e., a French, a German, and a Dutch-Flemish. It is hoped that an English branch will be formed in the autumn, young Englishmen being very numerous in the Belgian capital.

Mr. Hughes will be grateful if friends who have hitherto sent him books, papers, etc., for his work in Lyons will kindly note the address of the Brussels Association, 10, Rue des Finances (next to the University).

Women in the East.

A MEETING of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East was held at Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Wednesday, June 15, Canon Fleming in the chair. The Society, he said, has strong claims upon Christians. It is the oldest of all agencies carrying the Gospel to the women in the East. It is at work in India, China, Japan, Mauritius, South and West Africa, the Levant, and Persia. The Society's agents enter into the zenanas and homes of those who are much deserving of our pity, prayer, and help. It trains lady workers as teachers to visit zenanas and enter schools and orphanages, and prepares native converts for similar work.

Rev. G. H. Pole (C.M.S., Japan) testified that during his experience of eighteen years in that country there were no lady workers more worthy of being regarded as model missionaries than those representing the society. Miss Fletcher, who has been for seven years one of the society's honorary missionaries in Hong Kong, stated that hardly any of those who are educated in the schools there leave without being decided Christians. The Society has now six Bible women in Hong Kong and eight day schools.

Miss Webb (secretary) spoke of the marked success which has attended the work in the different centres of operation, and emphasised as the great present need increased support, so that many more workers may be sent out.

The Figueras Mission.—In the July "Letter from Spain," Madame Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, deals with the effects at home of the war. Her sympathies are naturally with the people among whom she and her husband live and labour—those who are mourning, many of them, the loss of relatives and friends; and none will grudge the sympathy thus shown. Madame Rodriguez wisely distinguishes between the people and a bad Government. "The Ultramontane element permeates and corrodes the entire constitution of the country." Our readers will join their prayers with those of these workers that the outcome of all the recent sad developments may be to open yet wider doors to the Gospel in that priest-ridden land.

At Work in Bhamo.

DEAR SIR,—We of the C.I.M. are just now taking up work in the busy city of T'eng-Ueh. This has been the wish of the Mission for many years, as it will help towards completing a line of stations in the far west of China right on to Bhamo, where we have quarters. At present Mr. Pledger and myself are located at the Imperial Telegraph Office, the manager of which has been kind enough to let us have two rooms.

We have been here now about two months, and have been trying to rent a house, but have not succeeded. It is not an easy matter to rent a house in China, as the official classes as a rule are against it. According to the agreements that China has made with England the missionaries of the "Jesus Religion" are at liberty to rent houses and buy land, and these official proclamations should be issued by command of the Emperor in every city by the local Mandarins, but this is very seldom done except under pressure. In our city of T'eng-Ueh this has not yet been done, and the people know nothing about the Emperor's wishes in this respect. We are six days distant from the British frontier, in all about eighty English miles (a few hours' journey at home, but not so in China).

We should much value the prayers of yourself and numerous readers for the work of God in this most difficult city.—Yours faithfully,

C.I.M., Bhamo. Chas. Wm. Bentley.

An Open Door at Trieste.

TRIESTE is a city of 180,000 inhabitants, of whom 170,000 or more are Italians, while a good number of those who are either of German or English extraction have forgotten their native languages, and now only speak Italian. They are mostly Roman Catholics, to whom the Bible is a sealed book.

There is at present a real awakening among them, not only among the poor, but also among the more educated classes. Sig. Dardi, who himself is a native of Trieste, and was brought to the truth while preparing to become a Roman Catholic priest, has been holding meetings in the town. The German colony offered their place of worship for these services. Every night the church was packed, and people listened eagerly. The priests were furious, but the work went on.

The people are anxious to have a hall and regular services. The A.M.E. Church has promised to send Sig. Dardi to Trieste, but they do not undertake to provide the hall, etc. £100 is needed the first year for the rent of a suitable hall, the expenses of furnishing, etc. £25 has been promised by the people of Trieste themselves, but for the remaining £75 Sig. Dardi has to look to friends of the Lord's work in England and America. His address is 924, Cannaregio, Venice.

French Ladies in Conference.

THE annual meetings of ladies engaged in Christian and benevolent works in France were held at Versailles on June 9, and proved most interesting and important. Mdlle. Sara Monod presided, and several hundred women assembled in a large tent.

The president's opening address of welcome and exhortation was listened to with marked attention. A well-prepared paper was read by Mdme. W. Monod on education, a prominent place being given to the home and maternal influence on children. A paper on the life and work of the late Frances Willard was read by Mdme. Tabadie, followed by an address on total abstinence by Miss Agnes Slack, who had visited Paris to endeavour to form a branch of the World's Women's Temperance Society.

The afternoon session was devoted to other papers, the most important of which was on the better housing and treatment of domestic servants in Paris and elsewhere in France.

Sophia L. Burgess.

Among U.S. Soldiers.—Writing from Brooklyn, on June 10, Dr. Cuyler says: "My neighbour Mr. Sankey returned yesterday from preaching to our soldiers at Tampa. There were large audiences, and he expects good results. One of the benefits of this sad war is that evangelistic work is reaching thousands of soldiers. To-day hopes of peace grow brighter."

The Crisis in Spain.

DEAR SIR,—The peculiarly trying circumstances through which this country is passing seem to call for a brief statement, partly to assure some who might, very naturally, imagine that the Lord's work is materially hindered, and also to point out the favourable opportunity that Spain's misfortunes offer to effect more easily what, a few months ago, presented considerable difficulties.

As far as the capital and the larger towns are concerned no more than ordinary difficulties are experienced, nor have foreign workers been molested in any way; further, cheering news reach us of new doors opening and of others being re-entered, where in former years it was my privilege to labour and that were then the strongholds of Popery. Then, too, there is a general conviction that the ultimate issue of this unhappy struggle will be open doors for the Gospel both in Cuba and the Philippines, and, possibly, also a wider one even in Spain itself.

Here in Chamberi, where, as you know, there is a well organised mission and church of some hundred believers, it pleases the Lord to give us continual proofs of his favour and blessing. The past three months have been particularly marked with evidences of the Holy Spirit's work in hearts. During the so-called Holy Week, when, as for many years past, special Gospel services were held nightly, many previously prepared and some others appeared to receive definite blessing; and since a weekly inquirers' meeting has had to be held to deal with these more closely than is possible at the ordinary services. The moments thus spent are most interesting, affording opportunities for spontaneous testimony that has frequently called forth devout praise to our God. On the 15th ult. I had the joy of baptizing two—one the mother of a girl in our school, whose longing desire is to follow her example; the other a young man recently converted, and now married to one of the church. Of those attending the inquirers' meeting I have every reason to believe that the majority are converted, and some of them will doubtless confess their Lord ere long by baptism.

The second matter I wish to refer to is the sorrowful condition of the country; scarcity of work and dearness of the necessaries of life are terribly apparent, and how to help at all adequately is indeed a problem. Some little aid distributed amongst the most needy has been very gratefully received, but work that means wages is what is really needed. A master builder who owns several houses told me recently that he was effecting expensive alterations mainly with a view to keep his men employed, as there were scarcely any orders to execute. How thankful I should be to be able to carry out at once the plans that have been lying in my drawer for more than a year! When first spoken of these would have required about £800, now with the high rate of exchange £500 would easily cover the whole cost, and not only secure suitable classrooms for the girls but also provide a boys' schoolroom, now rented and costing £40 per annum. Towards these very necessary alterations to the premises, that are happily our own, £50 are promised, and £2 are in hand; were the remainder given at once while the exchange continues at its present figure the work could be accomplished at the best season, and whilst materially aiding many a distressed family would be a practical evidence of our sympathy with them and their present trying circumstances.—Yours very sincerely,

Madrid, June 15. CHAS. E. FAITHFULL.

Calcutta.—An effort is on foot to start a temperance hotel in Calcutta, so that young friends sojourning in the city may be out of the way of temptation. Mrs. Brockway, 136, Dharamtala-street, Calcutta, recording secretary of the local W.C.T.U., is interested in the movement, and will gladly correspond with anyone who can help it on.

The Matamoros Hall, at Malaga, was opened eighteen months ago. It is an important centre of Evangelical light and truth. Mr. Wm. Greene, writing from 3, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W., informs us:—"The building is generally filled to overflowing, and the worshippers are those who once were Roman Catholics. The preacher is Dr. Enrique Blanco, half-brother of Matamoros. He is now in London, and is trying to raise about £60, which is owing for drainage and repairs recently done in connection with the hall." Friends wishing to help in the liquidation of this debt may send their contributions to the office of THE CHRISTIAN.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

July 3.

"THE KINGDOM DIVIDED."—1 Kings xii. 16-25.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger."—Prov. xv. 1.

THE teacher should introduce this lesson by reference to the history which precedes it. Note—

THE KINGDOM AS LEFT BY SOLOMON.

The twelve tribes united occupied about 1300 square miles (about size of six northern counties of England). Population some six millions (about same as London). Commerce so flourishing that gold and silver were said to be as plentiful as stones. The fly in the ointment lay in the heavy taxes under which the people groaned. The successor of Solomon had no easy task before him, but one with infinite possibilities for good or ill.

SUCCESSOR OF SOLOMON.

Rehoboam: "enlarger of the people." His mother was Naamah the Ammonitess (1 Kings xiv. 31). She was the idolater for whom Solomon built the temple of Moloch. His training neglected by his father—under the influence of his mother's religion. His character weak, wilful, conceited, foolish.

DEMAND FOR REFORM.

The northern tribes met at Shechem in order to confirm Rehoboam in the kingship, but they had determined not to do this until reforms had been promised. Jeroboam was to be spokesman (he had been recalled from Egypt whither Solomon had banished him). There were two chief grievances:

(1) The burden of taxation.

(2) System of "corvée," or forced labour, by which men were compelled under the whips to labour with very little food — their families being left to starve or keep themselves as best they could. Compare oppression of Israelites (Ex. v. 6).

It was against this oppression that the northern tribes appealed to Rehoboam before they would acknowledge him as king.

THE KING'S ANSWER.

The elders advised the king to grant the requests of the people. But before acting the king sought the advice of the young nobles who were always around his person. Their advice was madness. "My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins, etc." (1 Kings xii. 10-16). "Scorpions" were whips laden with hooks which stung like scorpions.

Youth should listen to the advice of age. Teachers might impress this by reference to obedience to parents, and the result of disobedience.

THE EFFECT OF THE ANSWER.

The people said, "What portion have we in David?"—i.e., our requests are not attended to by, and we have no advantage from, being ruled by the descendant of David. "To your tents." A signal to prepare for battle. Tell the story of the loss of our American colonies, which is just a parallel so far as the folly of a king and the heroism of the oppressed are concerned.

MAD ATTEMPT TO CONCILIATE (18).

Once it was known that the people had revolted the best man to conciliate would have been either an independent person or one of the elders who favoured the cause of the people. But the king sent the very man who was the symbol and expression of all that they hated—the tax collector.

Teachers should here bring in the golden text, and illustrate it from the experience of the children.

THE CHOICE OF THE PEOPLE (20).

It does not follow that people who have fought for their rights will use those rights properly. Jeroboam set up images for them to worship. No doubt he had fanned the flame of dissatisfaction, hoping that he would be made king.

Lesson.—The moment of success is the time when we should be most watchful. Perils of temper, of overcoming difficulties and temptation. When we have successfully beaten our foes in front the devil attacks us in the rear. Each one has a kingdom to govern. Turning points in our life where a single action means failure or success for life.

Dr. Parker's Jubilee.

SUNDAY last was the day on which Dr. Parker celebrated his "pulpit jubilee," or rather the preaching of his first sermon on June 19, 1848, from a saw-pit on the village green, four miles from his home, which was at Hexham, where his father worked as a stone-cutter. Next, as he has shown in his autobiographical "Tyne Chylde," he preached at a woodwright's door, standing on a large block ofold oak. Then in a blacksmith's shop. Then in green lanes in the summer time, passing at length to busy Banbury, to wealthy Manchester, to England's capital. Four years ago Dr. and Mrs. Parker were presented with gifts on the occasion of the doctor's completing the twenty-fifth year of his ministry in the City of London.

There were crowded congregations in the City Temple at both services on Sunday. Dr. Parker had received innumerable written congratulations, and the rostrum was resplendent with choice flowers sent by friends and well-wishers. Preaching in the morning from Leviticus xiv. 30, and the words "Such as he can get," Dr. Parker said that he had so loved his work as to give to his hearers "such as he could get," such as he had been able to get. He had given them not the sermons which another man would have preached, nor the prayers that another man would have offered, but such prayers and expositions and appeals as God by his Holy Spirit had enabled him to get, and he had worked with them and for them with a willing heart. He had not found his livelihood there, and his enjoyment somewhere else.

God had enabled him to realise that there was nothing under heaven like preaching the Gospel, and no sphere so great and productive in the best results as the sphere pastoral, in which a minister could, by his tenderness, age, experience, and wisdom, help a poor soul onward and upward now andt hen, until the night was past and the east was glorious with the purple of the dawn. And they had brought Him "such as they could get," some large gifts and others small, measured geometrically and arithmetically, but constituting in their significance and poetry a great blossoming love. "I am able, in this solemn moment, to testify that when a man gives his heart to Christ, to the ministry of the Cross, and when he has no other object in life except such purposes as are cognate, the result must be good—substantially, practically, lastingly good. And now that we are beginning another fifty years I promise that I will give you 'such as I can get.' And may I live in the assurance that you will return me in co-operation and the zealous fidelity of companionship 'such as you can get.'"

Oxford Notes.

ON Tuesday evening the friends of the Holy Trinity Church met together to wish Rev. H. G. Bunbury good-bye on his leaving them for work in Hong Kong under the C.M.S. Mr. Bunbury has been curate of Holy Trinity for three years, and by his unselfish zeal he has endeared himself to all. The prayers of many will follow him to his new sphere.

An interesting lecture on the Waldensian Church of Northern Italy was given by Rev. C. J. Casker on Tuesday evening. It was interesting to note that the Waldensians have a rule that each minister must serve three years as a missionary. Special emphasis was laid upon their loyalty to the truth, and that after a persecution of 500 years the Waldensian Church set itself the task of evangelising its persecutors. Canon Christopher presided, and expressed a wish that God would preserve all hearts from those Roman errors which produced such awful results, as seen in the history of the Waldensian Church.

Special meetings in connection with the Irish Church Missions were held this week, Rev. N. F. Duncan, secretary, being the deputation. Interesting information was given of the society's work; and, in the face of the indifference shown by so many Protestants, Mr. Duncan urged that [illegible] there was gross ignorance of what Rome really was doing or that the English mind was under a stupor otherwise hard to explain. He declared that Rome was leading souls, not to Christ, but away from Christ.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Child Life and Sorrow.

III.—THE CHILDREN OF RESPECTABLE PARENTS.

IN my last paper on homeless children I promised to give you a few facts about respectable children who have lost father's support, mother's love, and the joys of home by the death of their parents. There are various institutions which accept such, but I am thinking just now of a new scheme of Dr. Bowman Stephenson's, in which I have been much interested, and am sure you will be also. He reckons that there are about 2000 Nonconformist children in the workhouse schools. Think what it means for children who have had home and love, as you have, to be sent to a huge barrack-school where, among, perhaps, 1600 children, they feel they have no one to love them. They are lost in the crowd, and, besides, a pauper taint clings to them afterwards. Perhaps some will wonder why I mention "Nonconformist." It is because Churchmen, naturally, like to look after the children of Church people; there is, for example, the Church of England Waifs and Strays Society.

So, while my heart goes out to all sorrowful children, I am telling you specially of these just now to interest you in the sorrows of the once happy little ones, now homeless, fatherless, motherless, and friendless.

Here are one or two cases which Dr. Stephenson has kindly given me for you:—

Flossie and Janie, two fine, promising girls aged ten and twelve. Their Christian father died some years ago, and the good mother literally worked herself to death to keep the decent little home together. These bright children are the youngest of a family, and if the Home had not received them they must have gone to the workhouse. The aged grandmother, who is a member of a Christian church, is most grateful to know that the children she loves so dearly have found a happy home.

Bobbie and Charlie, two tinies of three and five, who, on the death of their good mother, the last surviving parent, were about to be taken to the workhouse. A kind-hearted lady boarded them out with a villager near her residence, while she made application to the Home for their admission. Now they are happily sheltered in the Home, and saved from that sad fate, a workhouse life.

Prince and George, two fine coloured laddies, whose mother died some years ago. Their father, who had rendered excellent service to the Church of Christ, and was greatly beloved, has recently died, leaving a young stepmother, whose hands are tied by a little baby of her own and a crowd of step-children. So the Home promised to take these two boys, and here they are, as bright and merry as possible.

Some years ago the Home received two fatherless girls named Mary and Ethel. The mother was almost an invalid at the time of their admission, but she did her best for the two other children left in the poor home, for she was a devoted Christian woman. One of these children was a lad who had dreadful epileptic fits, yet the poor mother nursed and cared for him till she grew too weak to keep him from hurting himself when he fell down in his fits. Then, because there was no home for epileptics to which she could send him, she was obliged to put him in the workhouse, though it almost broke her heart to do so. By-and-by she heard that Dr. Stephenson was about to open a home for epileptics, and on her dying bed she wrote a few feeble lines begging that her Johnnie might be transferred from the workhouse. Just before she died the promise was given that the boy should soon be taken out of the workhouse. Now he is here under medical care and kind treatment, and we hope that some day he may be able to earn his own living.

I should tell you that in all these cases—and Dr. Stephenson has about eighty like these in his Children's Homes, besides the 1000 other children for whose support he has to depend upon subscriptions—the Poor Law Guardians are contributing towards the support of the children. What a comfort to think they are now in a happy home! But what about the others in workhouse schools, which he cannot receive for want of funds? How one pities them!

Pearl Fisher.

Hosanna!

When Jesus came riding the hill-side down
He looked like a king, though He wore no crown;
And children whose faces like sunshine glowed
Came thronging the gentle colt He rode;
And loud they sang—"This is Jesus dear!
The King of our hearts and our homes is here!"
And they clapped their hands, while the Saviour smiled;
For sweet is the song of a loving child!
Oh, Hosanna, our King!
Hosanna, our King!

Our Jesus has gone for a little while,
But soon He'll come with the same sweet smile!
And children his milk-white steed shall throng,
Chanting his praise amid angel song!
There will be a crown on his head that day
When clouds roll backward to make Him way!
And the sweetest words from his lips will be—
"Suffer the children to come to Me."
Oh, Hosanna, our King!
Hosanna, our King!

Elizabeth Surr.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 126 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

A—Douglas Adams*, J. H. Archer, Wm. Aston, Geoffrey Aldom.

B—Elizabeth* and Janet* Black, Lilian and Teresa Blackie, Mary Ballantyne, Henriette Bardot, Mabel* and Charlotte* Bailey, Florence Blackman*, Conyers and Massy* Baker, Gertrude and Edith Badham, Albert P. Baker, Frank and L. Bentall, Victor Bellerby, John and Ethel Benger, Mary Beck*, Leslie and Jasper Bell, A. Bridges, Mabel Birney*, E. Biddlecombe, Chas. Brown, Herbert and Ernest Bond, JohnBott, Eva* and Robert* Browne, Lindsay* and Leonard* Browne, Ashley H. Bowker*, Ralph Bourne, Gertrude B. Brookfield, Gordon Bolton, S. V. Boxer, Gerald T. Burke*, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Mary and W. Charles, Gladys Calvert*, Lois M. Craven*, Colin* and G. Campbell, D. Rosalind Clarke, Lily Clarke*, Mabel Clay*, Alice E. Crang, Isabel, Mabel*, and Charles H. Candlin, Walter Carter, Nellie Crawford, B. M. Cashford, Daisy M. A., Clarke, Jessie* and Maggie* Carter, Lottie* and Daisy* Carmichael, Louisa Chevrier, Henry J. Cheney, Edith and Wm. Corrick, Ruth Coupe, Marjorie Collins, Nina Cooke, Annie Cooper*, Arthur G. Cox, Emily Church, Susie, Walter, and Ethel Cumbers.

D—Jas. E. Davey, Pelognia Daws*, Blossom Davis, Marie Denizot, Kenneth Dunbar, Gordon S. Duncan, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke.

E—Muriel Edwards*, Sarah Evans, Leonard Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Charles Faillettaz, Jeanne Fancon, Janet Fawkes*, Richard and Arthur Farmer, Marian and J. F.* Freegard, F. A. and Aileen* Figgis, Hyacinth B. FitzSimons*, Francis W. B. Field, Reginald and Willie Findlay, Louise Filhol, Maggie*, Agnes, Janetta*, and Flossie* Fullarton, Constance Furlong.

G—Ivan Garrod, Margaret*, Edith, and Stuart Gray, David Gardiner* Alfred H., Mary E., and Daisy Greenacre, M. Greenleaf, Edith Grieve, Minnie Giddings*, F.* and A.* Gibbs, Dorothy P. Grove, Daisy Groves*, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Ella Hake*, Edith and Winifred Harvey, Dorothy E. Harris, Annie E. Hazledine, Rose Hamilton*, Ada Heap, Phyllis and Nora Hill, Dorothy Hinton*, Theodora Hill, Phoebe B. Hickling, Louise H. Hooper, Margaret D. Hogg*, Violet A. Holford*, Georgette Hoffman, Lucie Hourdain, Marjorie R. Hogge, Edith and Mena Hunter, Lila K. Hughes, Helen, May, Harcourt, and Tom M. Hunter.

J—Jas. S. Jackson*, Nellie Jelfs, Lizzie Johnstone, Kate G. Johns, Agnes Jones, H. B. Johnston.

K—Alex., Agnes D., Thos., Willie, and Isa* Kay, Flossie Key, Helen L. Knight, G. Norman King, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—E. Lawrence, Henry and Nessie Laing, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh, Harry M. Lowe.

M—Avie Mallory, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Gracie and Margie Marston, Aubrey and Robert Marriott, Dora Marples, Jean H. Maxwell, Edith Marnham, Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Margaret Macphee, Kathleen G. McClure, E. L. Mackenzie, Maggie, Bella, and Abraham Mack, Barbara* and John* Maconchy, Florence Mackenzie, S. E. Mackintosh, Dugald* and K. G.* MacGilp, Geo. and Chas. Macdonald, Ada B. Macnutt*, John MacMurray, Reginald V. Measor*, Francis W. Milne, Charlotte* and Bessie H. Millar, Annie E. Moule, Mabel Morris, Eva Monti, Howard and Gwendoline* Moir.

N—Edith and Ernest Nash, Dorrie and Henderson Nathan, Herbert G. Newton, Maude and Amy Nottage.

O—Katie Oliver, Arabella Onslow, F. Osmond*, Lottie and Harriette Orr.

P—Dorothy Patten*, Maggie, Jessie, Willie, and Winnie Palmer, J. Ernest Pearce*, Clarice M. Peach*, W. M. Louie and Mary Penny, Eva B. Petter, May, Daisy, and Vera Petrides, Evelyn P. Pechey*, Laura D. Percy, Edwin T. Peters, Francis S. Phillips, Gladys* and Isabel* W. Phipps, Cyril Pomeroy.*

Q—Edith and Minnie A.* Quick.

R—Edward* and Herbert* Rainey, Nora Read, Isabel, and Ellie Deane Roe, Sydney and Olive Robertson, Cyril M. Roberts, Mildred Robinson*, Chas. S. Rudge.

S—McLeod and Pussy Staight, Flora Shadbolt, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Bob* and Dollie* Salt, W. Stangoe*, Edith Saunderson, Chas. W. Saunders*, Bessie Scantlebury, Eric, Gladys, and Mervyn Shaw, Stuart Scragg, Elsie M. Slark, Kathleen* and Douglas* Shepherd, Ida Schwengeler, Agnes M. Sherry*, Bella Steadman, Ivy, Muriel, and Rosetta* Sherwin, Cicely C. Sherbrooke, Ada M. Spencer*, Nellie Sery*, Mary C. de Spiganovicz*, Constance M. Scott*, E. Short*, Gertrude and Mildred Scott, Emily Stuart, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Winnie Taylor, Frances Taggart*, Nannie and Louie* Tibbits, Lucy M. Trotter, Willie and Nettie Thomson, Harry Thompson, John W. Thomson, Alice M. and Frank* Thompson, James Tuff, Neville C. Tufnell, Maud and Edith Tyson.

U—Lily and Queenie* Upton.

V—Gertrude Vellacott*, Elsie Vigars.

W—Violet, Arthur, and Louisa Walker, Greta Watson*, Stewart Watson, May, and R. Watson, Pringle Wilson*, Eva Winpenny, F. Wilson*, Arthur Wright, Ada Willmer, Maggie Wight.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (127).

1. Lot, in the gate of Sodom (Gen. xix. 1).
2. To Abraham (Gen. xxii. 17).
3. Jacob. On the occasion of the vision given him at Bethel (Gen. xxviii. 17).
4. Samson. The doors of the gate of Gaza (Judges xvi. 3).
5. Eli (1 Sam. iv. 18).
6. In the gate of Samaria (2 Kings vii. 1-20).
7. To the "strait" gate and the "wide" gate. "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. vii. 13, 14).
8. Of the new Jerusalem (Rev. xxi. 25).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Jessie Alen) Zeldah Albert, Dora, Ralph, and Ernst Aldwinckle, A. Rose Anton, Violet Ashworth*, W. T. Aldous*.

B—James and Edith Barker, Herbert Braddon*, Edith Ballard*, Frank and Leonard Bentall, Leslie and Jasper* Bell, Edith E. Bensted*, Emily Bridgewater, Daisy, Gordon, and May Bligh, Lindsay Browne*, Leonard S. Browne, Gerald T. Burke*.

C—Cicely and M. M. Craven, Mabel Clay, Eleanor Chance, Rosaline Castein, Bessie Cheale, Brereton Code, Edith, Mabel, and Ida Cole.

D—Dorothy Daintree*, Cecil Davis, Vera Dickinson, Nellie Dowsett, Ivy, Violet, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Wm., Philip, and Mordaunt Doll.

E—Eva Edmundson.

F—Aileen* and F. A.* Figgis, Eva Fielder*, Constance Furlong.

G—Clarice and Bertie* Gale.

H—Dorothea Reader Harris, Nellie Hatchett, Rose Hamilton, Evelyn* and Dorothy G. Hewer, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Florrie Jennings*, Kate G. Johns*.

K—Maurice Kalinsky, Max, Eva, and Stanley Kalb, Ethel, Cara, and Mary Kestin.

L—Henry, Edward, May, and Sidney Law*, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup*, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.

M—Aubrey*, Winnie, and Robert Marriott, Enid* and Gladys* Mather, Ada B. Macnutt*, Kathleen J. G. McClure, Reginald Measor, May C. Mills*, Edward, Arthur, and Evelyn Moir, L. F. and O. Morice, Eva Monti, Helen Morgan.

N—May R. Newall*.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Winnie Page*, Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Alice M. Palmer, Mary Papprill, Myrtle Perry, Dora M. Phillimore, Francis S. Phillips, Rhoda Porter, Mary E. Plumb*.

R—Ernest Ross, Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Margery Smart*, Frederick Seth*, Annie Shepherd, Esther Simmons, Flora Simmons*, Reginald O. Skinner, Jessie and Ethel Snowball, Betty Stocks*, Herbert M. Stuart*, Ronald Studd, D. J. Symon.

T—Frances Taggart*, Violet* and Olive Tritton, Frank and Herbert J. Tomkins, Peverll, Laurence*, Herbert*, and Arthur P. Turnbull, Edith and Maude* Tyson.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—J. Wm. and Edith J. Wheeler, Cecile, Noel*, and Phillis Wright, Edith and Arthur Williams.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received from:—No. 119. Maria H. and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). W. B. and Alice Henderson (Jamaica). No. 120. Janet Garrett (Kimberley), Alice Henderson*, Launcelot H. Knight (Texas). No. 121. Launcelot M. Knight. No. 122. Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale. No. 126. Helen T. Eardley-Wilmot (Switzerland).

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 128).

Say in which verses the prayers given below occur.

Find a response to each in the other chapters named, and write it out.

1. Strengthen Thou me according unto thy word (Ps. cxix.).
Response, Deut. xxxiii.
2. Give us help from trouble (Ps. lx.).
Response, Ps. l.
3. Let not the waterflood overflow me (Ps. lx. to lxx.).
Response, Is. xlii. to xlv.
4. O Lord, make no tarrying (Ps. lxx.).
Response, Is. xlvi.
5. Teach me good judgment (Ps. cxix.).
Response, Ps. xx. to xxvi.
6. Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies (Ps. cxliii.).
Response, Ex. xxiii.

[Children under TEN do any two, under THIRTEEN any four.]

 PRIZE COMPETITION NEXT WEEK.

I shall be glad if as many as possible will send me in their Answers to No. 128 QUITE EARLY, on account of making the "eligible list" for the Prize Competition as complete as possible.

Will each "Nephew" and "Niece" kindly remember to give their full ADDRESS, as well as their name.

Personal.

Susie Cumbers.—You all write very neatly, but your papers would look so much better if you left a space between each answer.

Nellie Sery.—I should be glad if you could send me your paper by Friday.

Edith Ballard.—I was very pleased to receive your photograph; many thanks for sending it.

Henry B. Johnston.—A star is given when a paper is written extra carefully.

Annie Hazledine.—I am sure you will miss your governess very much, but you will be able to write to her in West Africa, and she will doubtless tell you of her missionary work out there.

Helen T. Eardley-Wilmot and Gerald Burke.—Am very glad to welcome you as belonging to the "Bible Searcher"; you will both find your names in the correct lists.

Uncle Tom.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun. June 26, 1	Kgs. viii. 14-30		Th. June 30, 1	Kings	x. 14-29
M. „ 27	„ viii. 54-66		F. July 1	„	xi. 4-14
Tu. „ 28	„ ix. 1-9		Sat. „ 2	„	xi. 26-40
W. „ 29	„ x. 1-13

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Ilkley, June 24; Leeds, June 25, 26; Osmanby, Lincoln, June 28: Springfield, Chelmsford, June 29; Croydon, June 30; Southfleet, July 1; Gravesend, July 2; Cranleigh, July 2, 3; Kingston, July 4; Reading, July 9, 10. Mr. Hankinson, Throcking, Buntingford, June 23; Guildford, July 8-10. Mr. Tyler, Herne Bay, July 3-15; Birchington Bay, July 17-25. Mr. H W. Figgis, West Brighton, July 9-27. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Axminster, Devon.

Children and Foreign Missions.—A gathering of children took place at St. Paul's Cathedral on Saturday afternoon last, such as has not been witnessed since the days when the pupils of the old charity schools used to pay their annual visits to the Cathedral. It was a service arranged, under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, with the object of interesting the young in missionary enterprise. The vast building was filled with nearly 7000 boys and girls, who came in from 150 Church of England Sunday-schools in the metropolis, and they were accompanied by teachers in the proportion of something like one to every eight children. It is probable, in view of the success of this the first service of the kind, that a similar one will be held each year in future. The Bishop of Stepney, after a few words of welcome to the children, narrated the incidents that led up to the erection of St. Paul's Cathedral. A feature of the service was the repetition by so many children, after the Bishop, of the prayers, "God bless the missionaries" and "Is it God's will that I should be a missionary?"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

OLD TESTAMENT TYPES.

DEAR SIR,—Will you oblige me by inserting the following thoughts on an interesting subject.

Now, all these things happened unto them for ensamples (types): and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world (age) are come.—1 Cor. x. 11.

Egypt is a type of this present evil world; Pharaoh, of Satan, the god of this world; the children of Israel, of the people of God; the Paschal Lamb and the blood sprinkled on the door-posts and lintels, of Christ our Passover, who was sacrificed for us. The Red Sea sets forth the death and resurrection of Christ and his triumph over all our foes; the smitten rock in the wilderness, Christ as the smitten Rock of our salvation, in connection with the giving of the Spirit, as set forth by the water which flowed therefrom. The wilderness sets forth our present experience as the children of God; Amalek in the wilderness, a type of the flesh in a believer; the manna, of Christ in his humiliation as the Bread of God which came down from heaven; the old corn of the land, of Christ in resurrection life and glory; the Jordan, type of Christ's death and ours in Him; Canaan, of the heavenly places, our present standing in Christ before God; the Canaanites, of the wicked spirits in the heavenly places, seeking to keep us out of our spiritual blessings. As the Red Sea sets forth Christ's death and resurrection for us, so the Jordan our death in Him, not so much the believer's death as Christ's, and Canaan not so much a type of heaven as of the heavenly places. To consider Jordan primarily as a type of the believer's death, and Canaan of heaven, involves us in this difficulty—that Israel's greatest conflicts took place after they had crossed the Jordan. Now there will be no conflict in heaven, no adversary or evil occurrence—all peace there. But viewing Jordan as a type of Christ's death and the believer's in Him, and Canaan as setting forth the heavenly places, the difficulty disappears. The heavenly places is where Christ is now seated, according to the apostle's word, Eph. i. 20, "Which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." It is where we now are, according to Eph. ii. 6, "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." It is where our conflict is, according to Eph. vi. 12, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness (wicked spirits) in high (heavenly) places."

The children of God, then, may be looked at in three aspects. As to the body in the world, exposed to the assaults of Satan, according to our Lord's own words in his intercessory prayer, John xvii. 15, "I pray not that Thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldst keep them from the evil (one)."

As to experience in the wilderness, indwelt by the Spirit in conflict with the flesh.

As to standing in the heavenlies, seated in Christ.

I journey through a desert drear and wild;
Yet is my heart with such sweet thoughts beguiled
Of Him on whom I lean, my strength and stay,
I can forget the sorrows of the way.

J. S.

PRAYING TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

DEAR SIR,—I think that the readers of your valuable paper are much indebted to your correspondent, Major-General H. Hutchinson, for calling your attention to this subject. I thoroughly endorse his opening statement, which is—"Nowhere in Scripture can I find any authority for addressing Him (the Holy Spirit) directly." In Hebrews i. we read: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

From this I gather that the direct instructions of the Lord Jesus are to be our guide in the matter of prayer as in regard to everything else; and we may be assured that if we depart from his instructions we are neither serving God faithfully nor honouring his Son whom we profess to love. These instructions are surely summed up as follows:—"Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name He will give it you" (John xvi. 23). "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my Name that will I do that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my Name I will do it" (John xiv. 13, 14). Keeping in mind the formula which begins with "Our Father who art in Heaven" (Luke xi. 2), we have in these quotations the doctrine involved that "the God and Father" is the only person to whom prayer is to be addressed, and that the Lord Jesus Christ is not only the only medium of prayer in asking, but the medium in dispensing the blessing invoked.

But the question arises, What part has the Holy Spirit in the prayer of faith? The answer is, He is the inspirer of true Christian prayer. "The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth...God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 23, 24). These, I think, are the only words of Jesus in regard to this matter of worship, which includes prayer. We have a view of the practical operations of the Holy Spirit in Acts iv. 23-31. The narrative closes in this way: "And when they had prayed the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the Word of God with boldness." Confirmatory of this is Ephesians iv. 18, "Praying always with all supplication in the Spirit"; and Jude, 21st verse, "Praying in the Holy Ghost."

I am persuaded of three things in these last times: (1) The great majority of professing Christians are much in darkness regarding the place and work of the Third Person in the Divine government. (2) There cannot be any real unity among Christians of accepted united worship till it be acknowledged that if a man is a Christian he has already what the language of certain hymns now constrain him to ask for (Acts v. 32). (3) The Romanising tendencies so much complained of in these days will go on and increase till the first principles taught by Jesus and his apostles are again known, appreciated, and put into practice. In other words, when the Holy Spirit is not worshipped, but when his teachings and guidings are waited for and obeyed.—Yours very truly, OBSERVER.

Glasgow.

Obituary.

HON. A. NOEL.

The death is announced of the Hon. Henry Lewis Noel in his seventy-fourth year. He was the son of the first Earl of Gainsborough. He served in the 68th Durham Light Infantry, and was captain in the Rutland Militia, J.P. for Rutlandshire (High Sheriff, 1863), Middlesex, and Leicestershire. Mr. Noel was connected with several philanthropic organisations in London, notably the British and Foreign Bible Society, having been a member of the committee for many years, and also of the London City Mission. He was a member and office-bearer in Marylebone Presbyterian Church.

BISHOP ALFORD.

Dr. Charles Richard Alford, late Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, died on June 13 at Tunbridge Wells. He was the son of Rev. Charles Alford, rector of West Quantoxhead, Somerset, where he was born in 1816. After serving in succession the curacies of Finningley and St. Matthew's, Rugby, he was appointed in 1846 vicar of Christ Church, Doncaster. In 1854 he came to London as principal of the Highbury Training College, and after filling that office for ten years he was presented to the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Islington. In February, 1867, he was consecrated Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, in Canterbury Cathedral. He resigned the see in 1872, and, returning to England, served for a time the curacy of Bowdon, Cheshire. In 1874 he was presented to the vicarage of Christ Church, Claughton, and in 1877 to the vicarage of Kippington, Kent, which he gave up in 1880. He retired from active service in 1881. Bishop Alford, who was an eloquent preacher, belonged to the Evangelical school of thought in the Church of England. He was the author of "First Principles of the Oracles of God," a charge on China and Japan, and various sermons and pamphlets.

Friedenheim.

MANY more friends are becoming interested in this work, under the honorary superintendence of Miss Davidson, in Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W., and it is increasingly sought after as a place where hopeless and dying cases can be received, and carefully watched and tended to the end.

Decided progress was reported at the annual meeting last week. The isolation ward for men, on the ground floor, built last year, has been a great boon, and the building and furnishing have been completely paid for. Mr. J. H. TRITTON, hon. treasurer, mentioned in his financial statement that a legacy has covered the large outlay for necessary sanitary improvements, and has also secured repayment of a bank advance, £500, to meet current expenses.

The patients' accommodation having been enlarged, it is needful to think of greater comfort for nurses and servants. The work, which deals largely with such cases as cancer and consumption, is of a very trying nature; and a new wing is much needed, so that those who are in constant contact with the patients may have separate sleeping room. By such an addition portions of the main building would be available as isolation wards for women. The sum required would be from £2000 to £3000, but until the money is, at least in part, subscribed or promised, no definite plans can be made.

Lord OVERTOUN, who presided, spoke of work done at Friedenheim as a proof of that unselfish love which results from knowing and serving Christ. This Home not only secures quiet and pleasant surroundings for the suffering and dying in place of the squalid discomforts and noise in poverty-stricken dwellings, but the governing purpose is to impart the peace of God. He urged all whose hearts are engaged by this effort not only to give of their means to its support, but to pray on its behalf, and, where possible, to devote time to the hearty advocacy of its claims.

Personal experiences during missionary travels in dark Central Africa and South America afforded Dr. HARRY GUINNESS material for describing the condition of the sick and suffering in those lands, where misery, degradation, and oppression intensify their physical pains. Such pictures bring into vivid relief the kindliness and peace which reign in this Home.

Mrs. BISHOP knew of no other among the many works of mercy carried on in this country which appealed more to her personal sympathy than did Friedenheim. To one who had witnessed the miseries of the poor and dying in the slums of great cities, and the inhumanities practised towards sufferers in almost every country of Asia, it appeared that a sight of the blessings enjoyed in this Home is calculated to enlarge Christian sympathy, and to secure extension of such benefits. Other speakers were Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. Schofield, and Mr. C. Baynes.

United Temperance Demonstrations are to be held in the five metropolitan parks (Hyde Park, Battersea Park, Finsbury Park, Victoria Park, and Southwark Park) on Saturday, June 25. The purpose of this annual demonstration is to give everyone interested in the cause of temperance an opportunity of making some small personal sacrifice on behalf of the greatest moral reformation of the age. The demonstration is absolutely free to all abstainers and temperance societies. The London United Temperance Council has made itself responsible for the expense. Mr. A. F. Hills asks for the cordial co-operation of all temperance reformers throughout London, in order that there may be achieved a phenomenal success.

English Church Union.—The annual meeting of this body was held last week in the Church House, Westminster. Lord Halifax presided, and said he did not believe that they were in the midst of a crisis brought about by ritual extravagance and insubordination. It was quite certain that lights, vestments, incense, and the mixed chalice would not be given up; but services not directly prescribed by the Prayer Book must be given up if the Bishop of the diocese desired. A resolution was carried declaring the readiness of the Union to give all possible support to the lawful authority of the Bishops, but also to assist incumbents and congregations in protecting the services of the Church from profanity and sacrilege, and protesting against Protestant and Latitudinarian omissions and deviations from the Book of Common Prayer.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

MR. McNEILL IN LONDON.

THE mission in the Royal Albert Hall was more of an experiment than any of the other series of meetings since this London campaign began, now five months ago. A Gospel mission on a large scale in London, especially in the West End, at midsummer, at the height of the "season," is a new thing in any case. There have also been untoward circumstances in other directions. Last week the World's Y.W.C.A. Conference drew off a large slice of public attention in Christian circles; this week the Mildmay Conference will doubtless have a similar effect. Despite these and other drawbacks, the attraction at the Albert Hall has proved powerful enough to draw increasing throngs every afternoon and evening on which the meetings were held.

Of course, the intention and desire of the committee were to reach as far as possible the wealthy dwellers in the West End. Not that they are more precious in the sight of God than the Lazaruses of the town; but it is admittedly more difficult to bring the Gospel Message to bear upon them. The numbers of these carriage folk attending have been very considerable. One afternoon last week it was estimated that nearly a hundred carriages were in rank waiting for their owners at the close of the meeting. The fears entertained that Society people would be conspicuous by their absence have, therefore, been disappointed. Not only have they come, but a good many of them have conveyed to the evangelist, either by letter or in person, their thanks for his earnest words spoken in their hearing. There has been quite a remarkable attendance day after day of members of the House of Commons; and at least one ex-judge of the High Court intimated his presence.

Saturday is usually a dies non in evangelistic missions, because of the preacher needing his weekly rest. As the hall has not been available on Sundays (though the evangelist has not rested on that day, but has preached in different West End churches), Saturday also was devoted to work. The result of the experiment was most satisfactory—a large muster in the afternoon, and quite 4000 hearers in the evening.

The acoustics of the building have proved to be all that could be desired. Without any voice strain or effort the preacher has been able to ring out his Gospel messages—now rough and sharp, now tender and pathetic—so that all ears were reached; and, judging by the close attention, intellects and hearts as well.

Last Monday evening the beautifully symmetric auditorium showed a splendid sight. The orchestra area and stalls were well filled, besides many in the boxes, the bright summer attire of the ladies helping to make the spectacle a most brilliant one. Our representative heard accidentally that a contingent of Oxford students were in the meeting, the great cricket match at the Oval no doubt being the occasion of their presence in London. In the early part of the service Mr. McNeill observed that as Her Majesty the Queen became the occupant of the British throne that day sixty-one years ago it would be fitting, and quite consonant with the purposes of the meeting, that a verse of the National Anthem should be sung. This was done very heartily.

Mr. McNeill's theme was "The Rich Young Ruler"—"the man," as Dante puts it, "who, through cowardice, made the great refusal." The two extremes of great riches and great poverty, said the preacher, are both obstacles to a saving personal interest in Jesus Christ; but if these two opposing interests are not to meet in a death grapple, it must be by the remedial power of Christ's Gospel. "My father was a poor man to the end of his days, but he was 'as happy as a king.' H'm, is that a suitable metaphor? Are kings really happy? I doubt it." In dealing with the legal tests of conduct applied by Christ to the young ruler, Mr. McNeill said that Society's greatest commandment is, "Thou shalt not be found out." There is much sympathy in some quarters with this young ruler because he was so benevolent, gave away lots of money and all that. But it was not good enough. We Evangelical preachers do not denounce goodness; go away and be as good as you can. All we say is that human goodness is not good enough; God is not going to build up his kingdom on such shoddy as that. The moral of the story is, "No road to heaven this way"; "by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified."

Saturday next is the closing day of the mission and of the present London campaign. It is purposed that the afternoon and evening services of that day shall take the complexion of thanksgiving for blessing experienced in the course of the mission. Friends who have served in the choirs at any of the London missions, and especially all those who have experienced spiritual blessing and revival, will be particularly welcomed at these closing gatherings. No tickets are needed for them.

THE GOSPEL AT ASCOT RACES.

ENGLAND furnishes few more difficult fields for Christian service than does Ascot Heath during race week. Here wealth and poverty, robes and rags, hold high carnival. The grand stand and reserved paddocks are crowded with aristocrats. The silken gowns and lofty headgear of the fine ladies, it may be allowed, lend a sort of enchantment to the scene, but there are not found wanting terrible elements of danger and degradation.

After our private prayer meeting we formed our ring in front of the Grand Stand, and immediately unfurled our beautiful Gospel banner. Here we were allowed to hold the fort all through the forenoons with the tacit consent of the mounted police. We were now and then assailed by Mr. Foulmouth, Squire Hategood, and Madame Flashfire, but the Lord continually beat them down and made our hearts glad. Not once but many times anxious inquirers, some of whom were in tears, came to us for counsel; while, best of all, we have reason to believe that sinners were converted and backsliders restored.

Our al fresco lunch we partake of as far off the battle-ground as we can get, and even here we are invaded by gipsies, who come to wish us good luck, and foretell the same for us in spite of our protests. However, they never leave our camp without carrying away gospels and other good things.

When the races are in full career we cannot be on the course, but we plant the standard on the broad plateau which stretches away parallel with the course, and which is now teeming with humanity. Here are the merry-go-rounds, etc., and the bookmakers hard at it plying a busy trade. We had, especially on the last day (Friday), much blessing, and many, we believe, were the "slain of the Lord." When the shouts announced that the horses were approaching, and were passing close by abreast of us, our practice was to drop on our knees for a moment or two. The novelty of our behaviour attracted attention—nothing more, for he must be a cowardly fool who would dare to interfere with men at their prayers. It was nearly time to cease preaching when Charles Cook was blasphemously assailed by an opponent who hurled his dart and walked off, a customary device. Charles overhauled him with "Prepare to meet thy God," and, far beyond his calculation, this man heard this terrible call ringing in his ears, again and again repeated.

Two strange and wonderfully clad senior-looking females, of great size, came up to the ring about five p.m., and with sincere thanks and genuine modesty accepted St. Mark's and St. John's Gospels. It is evident that there are lost and perfectly outside individuals who can be found nowhere else excepting on the racecourses of our land. Incidents might be multiplied, but space forbids. We have the addresses of once successful gamblers, that of a Jew who was much impressed, and others with whom we shall communicate by their own desire. Oh, that the Lord may raise up someone who, like Miss Alexander, of Epsom, may be able to arrange for entertaining the workers somewhere near the scene of action at this annual race meeting.

The scramble for a seat, often unobtainable, on the return journey to town in the evening, is a great tax and strain upon a man whose work has been hard all day. Mr. Frank Cockrem, a few others and myself, found ourselves on Tuesday night wedged in a carriage among a fearful company of low and blaspheming wretches. One old sinner of eighty-two was boasting of his infidelity, while another excelled him in horribly blasphemous language concerning the God who made him. To these men we proclaimed the Gospel, yet they are only samples of thousands more. We prayed that they might be snatched from the impending destruction, which we faithfully assured them awaited them.

Every fresh disclosure these visits make to us emphasises the fact that if the sporting portion of the population is to be reached, and the Gospel is to be brought before them, it must be carried into their very ranks. We call for the fervent, effectual prayer and the generous fellowship of our fellow Christians wherever this record may come.

B. Barry Wake.

11, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

OPEN-AIR SERVICES IN ARKLOW.

THE street-preaching in Arklow is a wonderful witness to the living power of God, and the victory He gives to those who faithfully obey his command to preach the Gospel "to every creature." Every Sunday the glad tidings of salvation is preached in eight different places in the town.

Sunday, June 7, was a very remarkable day, showing how completely the spirit of antagonism in the people has disappeared. A large open-air concert was organised by the Roman Catholics. (This was held on the pier, where it did not in any way interfere with the street-preaching.) Before the concert commenced the brass band belonging to the town paraded the streets, followed by a large number of people. When passing the preachers for the first time the band ceased playing, and many heard the Gospel message. When the preachers had moved to another place the band passed again, this time playing, but quiet and orderly, and not an insulting word was heard.

Rev. R. C. Hallowes, rector of Arklow, owing to his late severe illness, is not yet allowed to take part in the open-air services, which are being carried on, as usual, by his curate, Rev. J. W. Harrison, assisted by Rev. J. Hoffe and Mr. Couch, I.C.M. It is, however, a great joy to his congregation that their beloved rector is again able to take part in the church service. L. K. J.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. William Forbes has been conducting Gospel services in the Baptist Chapel, Elgin, during the past week. The general testimony is that they have been of a helpful nature. Mr. Forbes is this week conducting meetings in Inverness.

Mrs. Baeyertz, June, Clitheroe.
Mr. J. Neech, Pirbright, during June.
Mr. George Clarke, Bristol, June 12-27.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Great Assembly Hall, E., in June.
Mr. Charles Inglis, Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, during June.
Mr. Henry Thorne, Devizes, June 17; Bromley, 19 and 26; Maidenhead, 22; Maidstone, 29; Ashford, 30.
Mr. G. Pullinger, Iron Room, Strathmore-road, Croydon August 3.
Mr. Monro Collings, Holt, Norfolk, to June 26; Maundrel Hall, Salisbury, July 3; Wimbledon, 6; Marden, 10; Wimbledon, 13; Bromley, 17; Wimbledon, 20.

Requests for Prayer.

For an only brother, that he may be led to see his need of the Saviour, and to give himself to Him.

For special services in the Central Hall, Pokesdown, near Bournemouth, conducted by John Elliott, evangelist.

For the West End of London, and for meetings in Conference Hall, Eccleston-square, and thanks to the Lord for his constant blessing upon the little companies that gather there.

Deptford Medical Mission.—In connection with this work a convalescent home at Bexhill-on-Sea serves a useful and necessary purpose in providing a quiet resting-place for those who otherwise would remain in ill-health and poverty for an indefinite time. There are here ten beds, and from the spring of last year to the end of autumn they were occupied by a succession of patients varying in years from eight to eighty, each remaining such time as the exigencies of the case required. Since the home was opened in 1895, 356 patients have been received. It is found that support must be largely increased if the home is to continue its beneficent work. Hon. director, Rev. F. A. Pring, 188, High-street, Deptford.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Home.

There are about 2500 affiliated associations of the Y.W.C.A. in various parts of the world, their work being done in many languages, including Chinese, Japanese, and six of the vernacular tongues of India.

The Sanitary Committee of the House of Commons and the police approve of empowering the Liverpool Corporation to license boys under fourteen and girls under sixteen who engage in street trading. Far more children in Liverpool than in London are occupied in this way. It is a doubtful benefit.

Total collections for the Hospital Sunday Fund exceed £14,000.—The Press Bazaar, in aid of the London Hospital, promises to be very successful. There is an enormous demand for tickets. Some thousands of pounds have already been contributed. —The adoption of a uniform system of education and examination of nurses in British hospitals is being seriously considered.

THE COAL TROUBLE.—The Cardiff County Council have passed a resolution calling upon the Mayor to communicate with the mayors of councils and the chairmen of district councils in South Wales in order to the formation of a deputation to wait upon Mr. Ritchie, asking him to use his influence and the powers conferred upon him to bring to a settlement the unfortunate industrial strife. The non-associated colliers in the Llanelly district have agreed to join the strikers unless the full twenty per cent. increase of wages is granted.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—Numerous further sums have been received for the memorial to the Duchess of Teck—the Home of Rest for poor women—ranging from £5 to £10 10s.—100 guineas anonymously to the Church Army for providing mission and colportage vans.— There has been a good flow of subscriptions to the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund, as the result of a recent general appeal. The Empress Club sent a shilling subscription from each member, which reached £136 15s.— £10 10s. from the Salters' Company to the After-Care Association; and £5 5s. to the Industrial Home for Boys.—£1000 from R. G. P. to North London Hospital for Consumption.—£100 from the Goldsmiths' Company to Hospital Saturday Fund.— £2160 from annual function to the Royal Eye Hospital.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The spiritual side of the work at the Coventry Association has made decided advancement, the Bible-class and Sunday evening meeting for members being well attended, with profit to all.

The Doncaster Y.M.C.A. has suffered great loss by the death of its hon. secretary, Mr. J. G. Robinson, who was drowned whilst boating on the Don, and who leaves a widow and eleven children.

On Wednesday, June 15, a large gathering attended the summer breakfast meeting of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Since October last sixty-five names have been added to the membership roll, while upwards of one hundred have joined as associates, progress being made in all the departments of the work. Addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. R. Richard, Mr. George Clarke, and other gentlemen.

Foreign.

Anti-Semitic riots have taken place in Galicia. The gendarmes fired on the mob, killing nine peasants.

Eleven Christian villages on the Montenegrin frontier have been destroyed by Albanians. In his protest to the Porte, the Montenegrin representative has received the support of the Russian Embassy.

Mr. Benson, the honorary relief commissioner in Thessaly, in an interview with the Queen of the Hellenes, stated that there will be a great need for blankets and clothing during the coming winter, and that the peasants required now household goods and live-stock for agricultural work.

THE WAR.—The position may be described as "imminent." At any moment news may arrive of the American troops having landed at Santiago, and that the independence of the Philippines has been proclaimed. The Spanish position there has been "desperate" for some days. The Captain-General fears famine even more than the combination of the Americans and the insurgents.

CHINA AND FOREIGN TRADE. — The Chinese Government has signed a preliminary contract with the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank for a loan of 16,000,000 taels for railway extension.—An Imperial decree has been issued at Peking sanctioning the creation of the office of Minister of Trade. Facilities are also to be provided for the sons of members of the nobility to visit foreign countries and promote international intercourse.

CRETE.—Fresh efforts are being made at Constantinople to induce the Powers to accept as Governor of Crete a Christian subject of the Sultan. Russia insists that the Governor must be acceptable to the Cretans.—The instalment of Prince George of Greece as Governor-General awaits the good pleasure of Russia and the Powers co-operating with her. Meanwhile a modus vivendi has been found for carrying on the Government of the island.

TURKEY.—The Russian Embassy has presented a note to the Porte demanding the immediate repatriation of 40,000 Armenian refugees in the Caucasus.— The insurrection in Yemen (Arabia) is spreading. Reinforcements of 7000 men are to be despatched, and Abdullah Pasha is to take the command.—The trouble in Albania has become serious. The Turks have burnt 450 Servian houses in the district of Berani, and are giving to the flames whole villages.

INDIA.—The Indian Government will shortly send home a despatch containing final proposals for the future management of the Khyber.—Plague and famine are responsible for a decline of trade in India. Compared with the previous year the 1897 imports were 252, and the exports 610 lakhs less than 1896. —Lord Dufferin has spoken of the prosperous condition of Burma, and points to it as a fine field for emigration from crowded India. Fresh doors for missionary effort would thus be opened.

SIERRA LEONE.—Rotifunk has been attacked by Colonel Woodgate's men, and punishment inflicted on the natives who murdered the American missionaries. The British force met with serious opposition, the fighting being very severe on several occasions. Sir D. Chalmers, late Chief Justice of British Guiana, has been appointed Royal Commissioner to inquire into the rising. A price has been put upon the head of Bai Bureh, leader of the revolt. A deputation from the Gold Coast has arrived in England to protest against the proposed vesting of the lands of the Colony in the Queen.

International Arbitration.

THE annual meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association was held in St. Martin's Town Hall last Tuesday. Mr. HODGSON PRATT, chairman, urged that the Peace Societies of Europe should co-operate in placing before the public at the first appearance of any international dispute a full and impartial statement of the facts concerned. Whether from ignorance or from some other cause, the constant misrepresentation of British proceedings was full of danger. It should be remembered that the foreign countries whose enmity we were incurring by territorial extensions, for which increased armaments were required, were really our best customers.

Mr. WILLIAM CLARKE moved a resolution, appealing to all who desired to see international relations on a more secure and rational basis to join the Peace Societies in their respective countries. M. PAUL BLOUET (Max O'Rell), while commending the association's noble work, believed that sometimes war was inevitable. The world was divided between civilisation and barbarism, and it would be difficult for an arbitration society to decide a case with the Mahdi.

Evangelical Continental Society. — The annual meeting of the society was held in Lyndhurst-road Congregational Church, Hampstead, on Thursday, June 16. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson presided, and gave a sympathetic speech. The secretary submitted a résumé of the Society's operations in France, Italy, Bohemia, Belgium, and Spain. M. Paul Guignard referred to the renewed and ever-deepening opposition to the Gospel by the Jesuits, but in the significant movement among French priests and other "signs of the times" he was most sanguine as to the near advent of better and brighter times for France. Rev. J. Brierley, B.A., delivered an address upon the claims of the Continent upon British sympathy and support.

Merchant Seamen's Institution.—At Belvedere, in Kent, there is a very pleasantly situated "home" for the reception of one hundred aged and weather-beaten British mariners who are forced by circumstances to have recourse to charity for their last "anchorage" in this world. This "haven of rest" is under the control of the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, which also grants to 270 old "sailor men" a welcome monthly allowance. At the Cannon-street Hotel last week there were pathetic scenes in connection with the election of twenty-five pensioners and five inmates of the Belvedere Home. The list of applicants was so long that over 200 were doomed to disappointment, but an allocation under the will of the late Mr. Alfred Marriott enabled the trustees to elect more than would otherwise have been possible.

Personalia.

Dr. A. T. Pierson will not be able to attend the Keswick Convention this year.

Rev. Charles Inwood hopes to leave for a tour among Chinese Missions in August.

Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo celebrated their silver wedding last Friday at Mossford Lodge, Ilford.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has left England upon a visit to the land of Moab, and will not be back until September. No letters will be forwarded to him.

The late Mr. Samuel Plimsoll is to have a national memorial; it is proposed that it should take the form of an orphanage for the children of seamen lost at sea.

Lord Kelvin, it is said, will be offered the office of Principal of the University of Glasgow, vacant by the resignation of Dr. John Caird. The post is worth over £1100 a year, with residence.

Mr. Robert Rae.—We learn with much regret that the esteemed secretary of the National Temperance League, through an accident in the street one day last week, suffered a fracture of the thigh bone, which will probably produce lameness for life. Mr. Rae is at present in St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Rev. F. B. Meyer requests us to state that he has filled up every available date till the middle of December. He does this to save disappointment, and to lighten his own correspondence. If he should not go to India, for any unforeseen reason, from December to March, he will be glad to fill up that period. But indications at present point to India.

Rev. Alfred A. Cooper leaves this country in the course of a few days to take up the appointment of assistant-agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Egypt, Syria, and Palestine. Mr. Cooper was for a year Hebrew tutor under Dr. A. B. Davidson and president of the Edinburgh New College Missionary Society. After three years' arduous work in India, Mr. Cooper has acted for the last few months as literary superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, London.

"From plough to President's chair" has been the history of the new President of the Primitive Methodist body. Rev. John Smith commenced as an agricultural labourer, but in the course of an industrious and studious life has become a cultured thinker and eloquent preacher, has done marvels for the denomination, both as a South African missionary and as general missionary secretary, and has altogether spent forty years in the ministry, twenty-five of which have been in East Anglia, where he is highly popular.

An Encouragement.

YOU said once you were always glad to know of any features in your paper which your readers found specially helpful.

Six years ago, in the village of Bamburgh, in Northumberland, two or three met on Sunday afternoons to read the "International S.S. Lesson" and other Scripture, with prayer and praise. It was the "day of small things," which the Lord did not despise.

As the outcome, a chapel was put up last year, and a six weeks' mission held, at which many found the Lord and Christians were blessed. It is an iron building, costing £300, and we expect in a month's time it will be clear of debt.

I send this as a word of encouragement to any who in their humble way are trying to extend the kingdom of Jesus. WILLIAM JOHNSON.

Side-avenue, Bamburgh.

Rest Awhile.

THERE is a time of rest
Beyond the pulse of day,
When Jesus meets thee on thy way,
To be thy guest.

There is a place of rest
Which loved disciples share,
And thou canst tell thy secrets there,
Upon his breast.

There is a need of rest
Beyond the world's control,
For aching heart and weeping soul,
By sin distressed.

Seek oft the Master's rest,
And lean thy heart on Him,
Where never clouds his beauty dim,
Nor cares molest.

E. V. K

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE LATE DR. MOON.

There is something very pathetic in the heroic endeavours of blind men to benefit their fellow sufferers. In Dr. W. Moon and his Work for the Blind, Rev. John Rutherford, M.A., B.D., of Lewes, tells the story of a truly remarkable man. The interest lies not so much in the difficulties and struggles of the youth as in the marvellous energy and courage of the man while suffering from deprivation of sight. A great purpose seems to have taken possession of him, the patient development of which was the outcome of long years of prayer and work. The pages show what, even under great disadvantages, a man of genius and sanctified determination may effect in inventive resource and administrative organisation. The influence of Dr. Moon's labours has extended throughout the world, and it is a great comfort to know that, with Brighton as its centre, the work is still being carried on by his daughter. It appears that the system of embossed reading has been applied to 476 languages and dialects, and that, by means of the various teaching societies and free lending libraries at home and abroad, some 200,000 volumes are circulated annually. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

CHURCH HISTORY.

Church History is a broad term, covering the pure and the corrupt, the encouraging and the disheartening. And there are few chapters that do not engage the controversialist as well as interest the student of religion and civilisation. Rev. Leighton Pullan's work, The History of Early Christianity, is the latest addition to the Popular Biblical Library (3s. 6d. Service & Paton), and in some respects it is an admirable book. It covers the period from A.D. 29 to 190, and is forcibly written, professedly as "a defence of orthodox Christianity." The pages present an immense amount of information, ably digested; but on matters of worship and ministry they fall far short of a mature judgment. It cannot be safe, on the strength of controverted patristic documents, to classify as "Apostolic" various opinions and practices of which the acknowledged Apostolic writings are confessedly and entirely silent.

Reformation history as it relates to our own country is a chapter of surpassing interest; and we welcome a reissue of a capital book on the subject from the pen of Bishop Ryle. The title, Light from Old Times, suggests the serious purpose of the book, which contains a series of papers on "Protestant Facts and Men," with an introduction pointing important lessons for our own day. Here we read again the stories of Wycliffe, Rogers, Hooper, Taylor, Latimer, Bradford, Ridley, Ward, Baxter, and Gurnall. There is a vigorous answer to the question, "Why were our Reformers burned?" also chapters on Archbishop Laud and James the Second and the Seven Bishops. Dr. Ryle includes several Puritans in his list of worthies, whose heroic careers are made the text of many an appeal to present-day Protestants. This is a book for Christians of all communions, and we trust many will assist its usefulness by extending its circulation. (3s. 6d. net. C. J. Thynne.)

CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY.

One of the most interesting and instructive records of a faithful and fruitful Christian life, recently published, is Dr. W. G. Blaikie's Memoir of Dr. David Brown, of Aberdeen. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The writer is in the fullest sympathy with his subject, and that is a great point; but the life under review, though uneventful in a special sense, was so full of efficient, steady work, intelligently accomplished, that the task of the biographer becomes a pleasure, which is correspondingly shared by the reader. Moreover, Dr. Brown was so fully alive to, and practically conversant with, all the great spiritual and ecclesiastical movements of his time that the book is a chronicle of contemporary history as well as the life-story of a good and true man.

It is peculiarly interesting to us to note (what other reviewers have laid stress on) Dr. Brown's zeal for evangelism and his able defence of the Evangelical doctrines of the faith. Probably he was confirmed in this by his early association in London with that brilliant but erratic pulpit orator Edward Irving, whose departures from the simplicity of Gospel testimony clouded the latter days of a remarkable career. At any rate, there was no well considered revival movement that did not have Dr. [illegible]n's warm approval, and as far as possible his [illegible]ial co-operation.

We must refer the reader to the author's informing pages for an account of Dr. Brown's work as a professor, his services on the Bible Revision Committee, his active share in the work of the Free Church of Scotland, and his writings. There is so much of varied interest in the memoir that the attention never flags. Dr. Brown had an unusually long spell of active participation in the work that lay near his heart, and in this book he has left behind him memories that will ever prove an inspiration to those who would be faithful servants of Christ.

Another excellent piece of work in the same line is The Life of Rev. James Morison, D.D., by Dr. W. Adamson (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). The great event of Dr. Morison's life was his suspension from office in the Secession Church because he held and taught certain views with respect to the scope and extent of God's salvation, which were then regarded by some as contrary to the standards of his Church, but which are now commonplaces of accepted belief. Posterity vindicated Dr. Morison to the full, and he lived to become a trusted and influential teacher and professor. Dr. Adamson seems to have narrated the stormy as well as the happier experiences of this earnest and thoughtful man of God with an impartial hand, and the biography is most valuable as a contribution to the history of Christian thought and study concerning the deepest problems that can engage the human mind.

From the same publishers (Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton) we also receive a well-written memoir of Lady Fry of Darlington, by Eliza Orme (3s. 6d.), whose active participation in all movements bearing on the betterment of her generation made her a model to her sex. Her loss was greatly felt in circles outside her own religious communion (the Society of Friends), and many moving in humbler walks of life will read with interest this unpretending record of a fruitful career.

"Books by Pansy" are always attractive and pleasing. Her latest, As in a Mirror, is a simple and winsome story, which will find many readers. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Reason and Faith. (Macmillan & Co.) This poetic "reverie" on matters at once high and deep is evidently the production of an able and reverent thinker, and is full of strengthening suggestion as well as profundity of conception.

The Cry of the Children. By Frank Hird. (1s. 6d. James Bowden.) These chapters, revealing the conditions under which many British children are exploited in the interests of commercial rapacity, ought to be studied carefully by all actual or potential social reformers.

Sunday-school Success. By Amos R. Wells. (Sunday-school Union.) Into this manual on Sunday-school methods the author has packed a large amount of practical teaching that ought to help many in their noble but often difficult work of moulding the lives of the young. These chapters are clearly the outcome of much experience and observation.

Rev. G. Critchley has produced a capital volume of stories for children, entitled The Legend of the Silver Cup (1s. 6d. Partridge). The stories are of the nature of parables, pointing spiritual lessons. Mr. Critchley says that before publication the chapters were read to children, and the children listened. This we can well believe, for from first to last the stories are striking in character and simply told.

Among sermon literature a typical place may be given to a volume of discourses by Rev. W. Bright, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford. The sermons are thirty-three in number, and the first, founded on Rom. iii. 27, and entitled The Law of Faith, supplies a title for the goodly volume. Teaching of a sacramental order occasionally mars the pages; but taken as a whole the book may be described as an informative contribution to homiletic exposition, cast in a distinctively Anglican mould. (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

That the government of the Church of England stands in need of reform is not simply the contention of Dissenters. This may be learned from a volume entitled Advent Sermons on Church Reform. (4s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co.). The discourses were delivered in London churches by several clergymen, and the Bishop of Stepney writes a preface to the book. Apart from their special object the sermons are not of much account, and the doctrine is often open to question. The object, however, is important, and several appendices help to an understanding of the Church Reform League and its work.

Lieut.-Colonel Conder, whose name for many years past has been almost a synonym for Biblical archæology, shows his well-known erudition and ingenuity in his new book, The Hittites and their Language. (7s. 6d. W. Blackwood & Sons.) The result of ten years' labour, this work is an important contribution to literature of its kind. It is clear that we shall not have long to wait before the records of the Hittites will be as well understood as are those of the Egyptians and the Assyrians. Colonel Conder gives a syllabary which is rich in comparative details, and at the end of the book are plates of "texts" and seals.

Some years ago a useful little work was issued by the C.M.S., entitled "Candidates in Waiting," and the pages left the impression that the author's heart had much more to give out on similar lines. At length another book has come from the same pen, Missionaries at Work, with a preface by Rev. H. E. Fox, M.A. (2s. Church Missionary Society.) These pages have been written to afford practical help to missionaries going out for the first time. In addition to many suggestions that will prove of timely service, the author deals sensibly and in the light of much information, although very briefly, with questions that materially affect missionary comfort and usefulness.

Dr. Bullinger announces the completion of a great work, upon which he has been engaged for ten years, entitled Figures of Speech used in the Bible Explained and Illustrated: Being a Guide to a Clear Understanding of Hundreds of Passages rendered Obscure and Difficult by Defective Translation. Extending to about 1500 pages, the volume will describe and explain in proper order some 228 forms of expression commonly passing under the name figures of speech, such as metaphor, metonymy, simile, hendiadys, and others less commonly recognised. It is many years since any comprehensive work on the subject was issued; and inasmuch as this has for its set purpose the explanation of misunderstood passages of Scripture according to established laws of language, designed to indicate emphasis and animation of utterance, it ought not to escape the notice of Bible students. The book will be a work of reference and much besides, for those who master it will be qualified for independent research on a scale that cannot but yield immense profit in the study of God's Word, the pages of which continually exhibit instances of figurative language—too often, alas! misinterpreted, with sad results in personal confusion and church divisions. We trust the work will be published without needless delay. Meantime, likely subscribers are advised to write to Dr. Bullinger, at 25, Connaught-street, London, W., for copies of the very interesting prospectus.

Men and Women of Note. (1s. 153, Fleet-street.) A new and well got-up illustrated magazine of national biography. A booklet which many workers will take pleasure in circulating is Jesus Christ, by Captain Shawe-Taylor. It sets forth the way of salvation in the words of Scripture, accompanied by references to the passages quoted. (1s. per 100; 5s. 9d. per 1,000, post free. To be had from 95, Southwark-street, S.E.)

The Licensing Commission.—Two Scotch witnesses attended last week to make confessions in reference to their practices in the past. One told the Commission that he was directed by his father, now dead, to enter liquors as groceries, lest the amounts should be irrecoverable at law, and that he had helped a sailor's wife to deceive her husband by entering whisky as butter. He did not know then that these practices were general. Another grocer stated that he had illegally sold liquors from a van without orders, and that there was a great deal of drinking in grocers' shops.

West Greenwich Ragged School.—By the kindness of Col. and Mrs. Forster, the friends and supporters of the West Greenwich Ragged School held their annual meeting in the shady groves of Jesmond, Blackheath Park, on Saturday, June 11. The report of the work presented by Mr. C. McClure, secretary, was most encouraging. Nearly four hundred children are on the roll of the Sunday-school, and close on two hundred lads enjoy the many advantages of the Working Lads' Institute. There are many tokens that the past year has been most successful. Addresses were given by Rev. George Wearham, Col. Robinson, Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, and others.

Shop Girls.—The outward life of a shop-girl (says a writer in The Young Woman for July) we all know something about—the long hours of standing, the dreary demand of patience, the petty tyrannies of fines, the constant suppression of individuality, which unconsciously to herself jars on the girl's nerves, and either turns her into an automaton or frets her into fastness as an antidote. No girl can for a sustained period work for thirteen or fourteen hours a day and be healthy, even under favourable conditions. The food may be plentiful and good of its kind, but it does not balance the stale air breathed, sometimes poisoned by gas all day, the strain on the mind, the straitened condition of the body. Till shorter hours reign supreme, the typical shop-girl will always be a thing of nerves and hysteria and over-wrought fancies, compelling admiration by the pluck with which she adheres to her shop duties, and eliciting sympathy because she is the inevitable victim of the terrible curse of custom.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

A new home for the Waifs and Strays Society is to be erected at Southport. The estimated cost is £7000.

Archdeacon Sinclair is to visit Liverpool in October, and will preach on behalf of the Diocesan Sunday-school Institute.

Mr. Horsfall is building a church at Crosby, near Liverpool, entirely at his own cost. The building is estimated at £20,000, and is the third church built by Mr. Horsfall in Liverpool.

The Bishop of Salisbury is appealing for help to erect an institute or tent for the benefit of the 80,000 soldiers who will be engaged in manœuvres on Salisbury Plain and in Dorsetshire during the summer.

The Queen has granted a pension of £100 a year from the Civil List to Rev. J. C. Atkinson, Canon of York and incumbent of Danby-in-Cleveland, in recognition of his services to philology and scholarship.

The General Committee of the C.M.S. have appointed Rev. G. B. Durrant, some time missionary of the Society in the North-West Provinces of India, as secretary of the Society, in succession to Rev. P. Ireland Jones.

A member of the congregation of Christ Church, North Brixton, of which Rev. W. R. Mowll is the energetic vicar, has offered to give £1000 towards the building of the new parish church, providing another £1000 is collected.

It is stated that Sir William Muir has offered the C.M.S. securities valued at nearly £5000 with which to build a home for women at Allahabad, in memory of the late Lady Muir, and that the Society has provisionally accepted the offer.

A workmen's early service at 5.30 a.m. for men on their way to work has been commenced at All Saints', South Lambeth, and will be continued every Thursday during the summer. The church is filled with country noseguys, and every workman takes one away with him.

On account of the increase in the population of the parish of Heysham, near Lancaster, Rev. C. T. Royds has decided to build a church in two districts. He has given in each case a site and a contribution of £500, and the Bishop of Manchester contributed £50. The church is to cost £4400, and will seat 378 persons.

The Protestant Association Defence Brigade recently held a very successful open-air meeting in Bayswater, when Rev. C. Stirling spoke to a very large gathering, composed mostly of men, on the subject of "Popery: Its Principles tested by Results." More than usual interest was manifested by those standing around. Further meetings are being arranged.

At a meeting of Bristol citizens, held under the presidency of the Bishop of Bristol, an elaborate scheme of Church extension was adopted, involving a capital outlay of £250,000 for the following purposes:—Churches needing completion, six; new churches wanted, seventeen; mission halls, fourteen; stipends for curates, twenty-four; half-stipends for curates, fourteen.

The annual meeting of the Mission to the Assyrian Churches was held at the Church House. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who presided, said the Assyrian Church could trace its history up to Apostolic days. Mohammedan persecutions had brought the Church to a very low ebb, but about 150,000 people still kept to the old faith. They deserved recognition at the hands of all Christians.

Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield continues to prove that, when worked on Gospel lines, the Church of England can attract the masses in East London. The men's service at St. James the Less, Bethnal Green, already averages 500 men weekly, and on Sunday last, when the annual open service was held, over 1500 coins, or £15, was collected in aid of the local hospitals. Equally successful is the work amongst women.

The annual meeting of the supporters of the Curates' Augmentation Fund was held last week at the offices, 2, Dean's-yard, Westminster, Archdeacon Kaye presiding. The council stated in their report that during the past year upwards of £8000 was voted in grants to 167 curates, whose average length of service had been twenty-nine years, with an average stipend of £128 a year. The chairman said the unbeneficed clergy numbered at least, if they did not exceed, 7000.

At the meeting of the Rochester Diocesan Conference, held at the Masonic Hall, Camberwell, last week, under the presidency of the Bishop, an able paper was read by Rev. J. Haslock Potter, and a resolution was moved: "That, in view of the alienation of a large number of people from the open profession of religion, this Conference urges upon clergy, teachers, and parents the duty of a more definite and distinct inculcation of the principles and obligations of the Christian faith."

Congregational.

Rev. E. J. Dukes, of Bridgwater, has accepted an invitation to undertake charge of Harrogate Church.

Rev. Henry R. Davis, after nearly twenty-seven years as pastor of the Golborne-road Church, North Kensington, has resigned his charge.

Ill-health has compelled Professor Christie, of Hackney College, to resign the professorship of mathematics, which he has held for twenty-one years.

Mr. F. H. Tapp, of Harley House, Bow, having been appointed assistant to Rev. C. Thomson, Ladysmith, Natal, will sail next month for Durban.

Rev. J. Jameson, of Arundel-square Church, Barnsbury, has been invited by the Yorkshire Union to accept the office of special missioner for the county.

Towards extinguishing the debt of £3300 on the Robinson Memorial Congregational Church at Gainsborough, Rev. Dr. Mackennal has undertaken to raise £1000.

Rev. J. Matthews, of Barnet, who recently resigned the secretaryship of the Evangelical Free Church Council for London, has become minister of the church in Prince's-street, Gravesend.

Dr. Guinness Rogers will speak at the Memorial Hall today (Thursday), upon "The Ritual Strife: What have we to do with it?" Mr. Alfred Hutton, M.P., will take the chair at 4 o'clock.

The committee of the Congregational Union has appointed Rev. W. Pierce, of West Hampstead, and Rev. George Cousins, of the L.M.S., to visit the churches in British Guiana early in 1899.

An offer has been made for a piece of land on Broadway, South Hackney, as a site for the proposed new place of worship for the united churches of the Tabernacle, Victoria Park, and Trinity, New Town.

A new church is to be erected at Ilford (Rev. C. H. Vine) on the site adjoining the present building in the High-road. The scheme, with the clearance of the present debt, will entail an expenditure of £10,000.

The late Mr. James Bromiley, of Bolton, has left £1000 to St. George's-road Church, Bolton, to be invested for religious purposes, £500 towards building a new church at Victory, Bolton, and £100 to the infirmary.

Rev. Dr. Berry's leave of absence, which extends to August, will probably have to be further prolonged, on account of his unsatisfactory state of health. He is now compelled absolutely to abstain from work.

The Congregationalist churches of Bristol and district have unitedly agreed to invite the Congregational Union of England and Wales to hold its autumnal assembly in 1899 in that city, under the presidency of Rev. H. Arnold Thomas.

Last week Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackennal left for America as representative of the Congregational Union of England and Wales at the Triennial Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States. Nine years ago he attended the Council in a similar capacity.

The Welsh Congregational Union met last week for the first time in London. At the opening meeting in the Memorial Hall on Tuesday, Mr. C. R. Jones, Mayor of Llanfyllin, presided over about 200 delegates. Rev. W. Thomas, of Whitland, was elected chairman for the coming year, and it was decided that next year the assembly should meet at Llanelly. Rev. T. G. Jenkyn, of Llwynyia, presented the annual report, which showed that the membership of the 1,058 churches comprised in the Union was 143,544, the year's increase being 2832. There were also 140,196 adherents and children. During the year eleven new chapels had been built, and the number of sittings provided was 419,411. The number of ministers was 766. At a largely attended public meeting Dr. Parker occupied the chair.

Baptist.

The First Baptist Church, Philadelphia, will celebrate its two hundredth anniversary this year.

West Midland Association reports a net increase of 346 church members, including 271 from the Sunday-school.

Rev. W. Jenkins, of Buckley, near Chester, has commenced his pastorate of the Farnworth Church, near Bolton.

The autumnal assembly of the Baptist Union, to be held this year in Nottingham, will begin on Monday, September 26, a week earlier than usual.

Pastor F. T. Passmore has resumed his ministry in Carpenter's-road Chapel, Stratford, E., after an absence of several months in South Africa. He has greatly benefited in health by his voyage south.

Pastor D. C. Chapman, of Yalding, after seven years' pastorate, has decided to close his ministry there at the end of September. During this pastorate a substantial chapel and school have been built; over seventy members have been received into the church since its formation in 1892.

Rev. Fred. H. King has celebrated his second anniversary at Bow-road, E. Eighty-three members have been added to the church in the two years, and fifty-eight have been baptized. Proceeds of the services are being devoted to the commencement of a mission hall for the drift children.

The pastors and delegates of the churches in Holland will hold their eighteenth annual meeting at Stadskanaal, South Groningen, on July 6 and 7, where English brethren will be welcomed. Mr. R. Klickmann, of 41, Belvidere-road, Lambeth, London, would be glad of an early intimation from intending visitors.

The Baptist Churches in the United States continue to make marked progress. Their net increase for last year is greater than the whole of the membership in England. There are 43,397 churches in the United States, comprised in 1609 associations, with an aggregate membership of 1,055,806, an increase for the year of 231,768.

Methodist.

As the result of revival services conducted by Rev. K. Garthwaite, seventeen new members have been received into Wilmslow Church.

Finsbury Park Circuit is launching a scheme for the erection of a church at New Southgate, where hitherto only an iron chapel has existed.

Rev. E. D. Cornish, of Manchester, is mentioned as the probable Free Methodist President for next year. He is a popular preacher, and entered the ministry in 1869.

A new chapel, seating about 550, was opened last week at Sacriston, Durham, superseding one opened thirty years ago, but now become insufficient to meet requirements.

Rev. S. F. Collier has received from Mr. Isaac Hoyle the sum of £500 in aid of the building fund for new homes and shelters in connection with the Manchester Central Hall Mission.

One of the latest proposals in connection with Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home is the admittance into one of its branches of the orphan children of Methodists in the Royal Navy.

The date of the opening of Wesley's House, City-road, E.C., after restoration and repairs, as a museum and residence for Christian workers, has been fixed for Thursday, Sept. 22 (the 170th anniversary of Wesley's ordination).

Reassuring news has been received from West Africa, whence it was feared that the tragedy of Golbanti had been re-enacted. It is now certain that although the mission station at Tikonoli has been destroyed, the missionaries are in safety.

The committee of the Missionary Society has agreed to send a commission consisting of one minister and one layman to the West Indies to make such arrangements as will enable the churches there to overcome, with British assistance, their present financial difficulties.

At the Primitive Methodist Conference in Leeds last week, a long and exciting debate took place on the question of the organic union of the Primitive Methodist and Bible Christian Churches. The joint committee appointed last year to gather information and suggest a basis of union is to continue its labours.

The Young People's Guild movement in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Churches has so far succeeded that 807 guilds have been formed, with a membership of 57,070. With a view to stimulate interest in the Guild movement it is proposed to hold a series of demonstrations on a large scale early in the autumn.

In connection with the Bow Circuit Mission (Rev. F. Tunbridge, superintendent), the Sunday-school has during the past six months grown to 1000. During the same period a Bible-class for young men has been formed. There is a young men's club and reading room, and an excellent choir of fifty young men and women from the neighbourhood. Two hundred temperance pledges have been taken, and the membership of the Band of Hope more than quadrupled. The work in its many branches was never so full of promise.

Presbyterian.

The Marylebone congregation is expecting a visit from Dr. Pentecost in July.

Rev. Dr. Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's Church, Glasgow, has been appointed next Cunningham lecturer.

A tablet in memory of the late Mr. H. M. Matheson is to be erected in Hampstead Church (Rev. J. R. Gillies).

Rev. J. B. Meharry's pulpit at Crouch Hill will be occupied the first three Sundays in August by Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, of New Jersey.

Rev. James Wallace, late assistant at M'Cheyne Free Church, Dundee, has accepted invitation to take charge of the church recently formed at Blundellsands, Liverpool.

Kensington Presbyterian Church, a call to which was some time ago declined by Rev. Dr. John Watson, has decided to invite to the pastorate Rev. C. Anderson Scott, of College Park Church, Willesden.

The old church in St. George's-street, Belfast, is to be worked as a mission amongst the non-church-going population, and a minister in full standing has been appointed in charge for a term of three years.

The movement for the amalgamation of the Free and U.P. Mission stations at Monifieth, near Dundee, is proceeding harmoniously. It is proposed to erect a church with a seating capacity of 500, at an estimated cost of £2700.

Trinity Church, Bromley, Kent, of which Rev. Dr. Moinet is the first minister, has inaugurated a movement for clearing its heavy building debt of £7000. Eleven members of the church begin the list by subscribing over £300.

The balance of the £50,000 required by the Presbyterian Church of England for building purposes is being allocated pro rata among the various Presbyteries. The Presbyteries of Newcastle and of London (North) have definitely undertaken to raise the amounts allotted to them.

A settlement is to be formed in East London. A house will be secured about the middle of the Burdett-road. It will be occupied by ladies with means, who will work in connection with the congregations of Bow, Stepney, and East India-road. It will serve as a training home for deaconesses and may be merely the beginning of a much more extensive work in East London.

The sale of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Manchester, of which Rev. Dr. M'Caw was for many years minister, has led the Presbytery to consider the best mode of providing ordinances for North Manchester. One proposal is to build a church in the neighbourhood of Queen's-road to meet the wants of Cheetham Hill and Harpurhey. Another is to build two churches—one in Cheetham Hill and one in Harpurhey or Moston. The congregation of Trinity Church is worshipping temporarily in the Conservative Club.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. EDWARD TUCKER, father of Bishop Tucker, aged eighty-two years.—Rev. LEWEN TUGWELL, rector of St. Mary's, Stapleford Abbots, honorary canon of Rochester Cathedral, once a well-known London clergyman, at the age of seventy-nine.—At the age of ninety, Mr. WILLIAM REDFORD HARRIS, an ex-mayor and magistrate of Windsor, and a Congregationalist; was greatly respected in the district.—Rev. JOHN LEVETT, formerly vicar of Swinton, near Rotherham, of which parish he had charge for forty-five years.—Mr. G. F. MUNTZ, of Umberslade Hall, near Birmingham, aged seventy-six. Nearly a quarter of a century has passed since he opened his house for preaching services on Sunday evenings. In such numbers did the people of the rural district attend that in a short time the present sanctuary, Christ Church, became a necessity, Mr. Muntz defraying the entire cost—about £6000.—Rev. JOHN CAVE-BROWNE, vicar of Detling, near Maidstone.—Alderman FRANCIS SANDERSON, J.P., of Stockton, a prominent Wesleyan Methodist, highly esteemed in the town.—Rev. B. BRUDNEY BOCKETT, late vicar of Epsom, has died at an advanced age. Mr. Bockett was a staunch Protestant, and a member of the Church Association.—Rev. W. D. WRIGHT, M.A., formerly Presbyterian minister at Kingston-on-Thames, aged thirty-one years. Owing to a mental affliction Mr. Wright had to be relieved of his charge at Kingston. He went abroad, but neither rest nor change had effect. He was greatly beloved at Kingston.—Bishop ALFORD recently died at Tunbridge Wells, in his eighty-second year, two days after a new prelate had been consecrated for the see he held from 1867 to 1872. Until within the last two or three years he was a very familiar figure in the committee-room of the C.M.S., and at all representative Evangelical gatherings.—In his seventy-seventh year, Dr. S. HOEKSTRA, for years a professor of theology at the University of Amsterdam and at the seminary of the Baptists. He was an authority on moral and religious philosophy.

Appeals.

REV. G. E. WEEKS, chaplain H.M.S. Vernon, Portsmouth, asks for religious and other literature for distribution among the men of the ship. Rev. F. B. Meyer's booklets would be welcome.

MISS CHILD, of the Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E., will be glad to hear from friends who have letters to spare introducing to the various hospitals and convalescent homes, especially the Victoria Park Hospital.

MR. C. FRANK LLOYD, 70, Darlington-street, Wolverhampton, appeals on behalf of children residing in the Black Country, who live in an area of thirteen miles of pit mounds and ironworks, many of whom see as little of the real country as Londoners. A postal order for 1s. 6d. will pay for two children being taken out for the day.

Walworth.—The work in the new hall of the Richmond-street Mission, East-street, is being carried on vigorously. An earnest appeal is made for helpers, especially on Sunday evenings in the Ragged School, where upwards of 500 children need teaching. There are classes ready, with eager children waiting for teachers; three or four ladies and the same number of gentlemen are sorely needed for this blessed work. The hon. sec., Mr. T. W. How, will most heartily welcome any friends any Sunday evening at the Mission.

MR. W. DUNN, evangelist, for many years in the West of England, and an old friend of the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham, has bought a van formerly used by a lion-tamer, in which he is going to travel in South Wales, Weston-super-Mare, etc., with Bibles and pure literature. He wants £15 for a horse, and asks friends who believe in Bible carriage work to enable him to take advantage of the summer weather, and to comfort the South Wales people in this time of their distress. A gentleman in Cardiff has promised to provide the harness when the horse is bought.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, June 20, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

J. B. (Brighton).—We cannot find we have received the 10s. Please apply at the P.O. and write us.

S. L. R.—Please let us know if your gift is for "Day in Country Fund," or "Children's Country Holiday Fund." Kept.—Please say which Jamaica Mission.

	£	s.	d.
Protestants in Barcelona—S.B. and L.R., 2s.; Misses P., 10s.	0	12	0
Friends of Armenia—M.E.M., £1; 1 Peter v. 7, £10	11	0	0
Evangelistic and Rescue Work, Armenia (Rev. K. Behesnilian)—Union Chapel, Manchester, £15; Eccles Congregational Church, £15; Pendleton Congregational Church, £14; Albert Memorial Church, £6 11s.; Moss Side Baptist P.S.A., £4 11s. 8d.; J.B., £1 1s.	56	3	8
Pundita Ramabai's Widows and Orphans—Hope, £2; C. F., £1	5	0	0
Soldiers' Homes in India (Miss Sandes)—M.E.M., 10s.; E.T., 7s. 6d.	0	17	6
Society Relief Persecuted Jews—M.T., £3; L.R., 5s	3	5	0
China Inland Mission—Kappa, 10s.; J.R.W., £2; (Purchase of Temple, Mr. Heal)—1 Peter v. 7, £10; Alpha, 5s.	12	15	0
Work in Central America (Mr. J. Hayter)—1 Pet. v. 7	10	0	0
Mr. G. C. Needham's Mission to Japan—1 Pet. v. 7.	5	0	0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—A.R.E.	0	5	0
London Missionary Society—Nemo	1	0	0
Bible Christian Missionary Society—Nemo	2	0	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—L.R., 5s.; G.C.F., 10s.; G.G., £3	3	15	0
Society Suppression of Opium Trade—C.G.	0	10	0
Pastor Rodriguez's Work, Spain—C.G.	1	0	0
Church Missionary Society—Frances, £3; 63,368, £2	5	0	0
Dutch Baptist Mission—M.S.	0	10	6
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—G.C.F.	1	0	0
English Church, Odessa—Mrs. B.	0	4	0
Boys' Industrial Home, Venice—Alpha	0	5	0
Mrs. Wall's Work, Rome—Alpha	0	10	0
S. American Missionary Society—M.S.	5	5	0
Countess Schimmelmann's International Mission—Beta	2	0	0
Mrs. Lewis's Homes, Paris—Beta	3	0	0
Paris Society of Evangelical Missions—Beta	3	0	0
Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque—Beta	2	0	0
Day in Country Fund—H.T., 2s. 6d.; E.T., 5s.; M.S., £10 10s.; Beta, £25; H.E.T., £1; E.R., £1 1s.	37	18	6
Bristol Orphan Houses—M.E.M., £1; A.B., £5; J.R.W., £1; Beta, £5	12	0	0
Evangelisation Society—M.E.M., £1; Beta, £3	4	0	0
Open-air Mission—M.E.M.	0	10	0
Met. Tab. Rebuilding—M.E.M., £1; T.E.S., 2s. 6d.	1	2	6
Stockwell Orphanage—M.E.M.	1	0	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—S.M. and L.E., 5s.; Kappa, 10s.; 63368, £2; (New Testaments) M.G., £1; (Jewish Testaments, Russia) M.E.M., £1	4	15	0
Liberator Sufferers—S.M. and L.E., 8s.; H.G., 2s. 6d.; W.G., 5s.; (Shilling Fund) M.E.M., 5s.	1	0	6
Famine in West Ireland—R.B., 15s.; Alpha, 5s.; M. and M.B., 7s. 6d.	1	7	6
St. Giles' Christian Mission—1 Peter v. 7, £10; G.H., 5s.; T.E.S., 2s. 6d.; S.J.H., 10s.; J.R.W., £1; J.B.P., 5s.; (Holiday Fund) E.T.M., 5s.; (Homes) S.W.J., 10s.; (Day in Country) S.S.G., 3s.; J.R.W., 5s.	13	5	6
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—1 Peter v. 7, £10, T.E.S., 2s. 6d.; E.J.A., 5s.	10	7	6
George Yard Mission—1 Peter v. 7, £5; J.R.W., £1; Beta, £5; (Day in Country) J.R.W., 5s.; M. and M.B., 4s. 3d.	11	9	3
Evangelistic Village Work (Mr. Shipley)—1 Peter v. 7, £10; Beta, £3	13	0	0
Home for the Fatherless (Mr Toye)—1 Peter v. 7	10	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—1 Peter v. 7, £10; A.R.E., 12s. 6d.; Brussels, £1; Frances, £1; C.F., £1; J.R.W., 5s.; S.W.J., 10s.	16	2	6
N.E. London Gospel Mission.—Beta, £2; (Aged Widows' Fund) 1 Peter v. 7, £5	7	0	0
Trinitarian Bible Society—1 Peter v. 7	5	0	0
Dr. Stephenson's Children's Homes—Nemo, £2; C.F. £1	3	0	0
R.N. Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen—L.R., 5s.; Brussels, £1	1	5	0
Friendless and Fallen—Memorandum, £5; J.R.W., 10s.; Beta, £5	10	10	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—C.G., 10s.; Lela, 5s.; J.R.W., £1; H.E.T., £1	2	15	0
London City Mission—Frances, £2; In Memoriam, 5s; Beta, £5; (Disabled Missionaries, Widows, and Orphans), Frances, £2; In Memoriam, 5s.; (Foreign Branch), C.G., 10s.	10	0	0
Distress in Wales, Pastor L. S. Jones, Aberychan—Misses P.	0	5	0
Royal Hospital for Incurables—Frances	3	0	0
Church Pastoral Aid Society—Frances	2	0	0
United Kingdom Benefic nt Society—Frances	2	0	0
Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution (Pension —Frances	1	0	0
Christian Blind Relief Society—Frances	2	0	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—Frances	1	0	0
Hospital Sunday Fund—Frances	1	0	0
Ragged School Union (Cripples)—T.E.S.	0	2	6
Inland and Coast Society for Ireland—M.E.	0	10	0
Ladies' Irish Association—H.E.	0	5	0
pture Readers' Society, Ireland—H.E., 5s.; C.F., 10s.	0	15	0
Naval Scripture Readers' Society—C.F.	1	0	0
rmy Scripture Readers' Society—C.F.	1	0	0

(Continued on page 28.)

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

Estd] [1835.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

All the Profits are Divided amongst the Assured; already divided, £5,400,000.

Claims Paid Exceed £10,000,000.
Invested Funds - - £5,000,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at minimum cost, with provision for old age. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignificant rate of interest on his payments.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C. — ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary & Secretary.

THE OUTCAST AND STARVING.

70 Homes, &c., in London and Provinces for giving a fresh start in life to every suitable case, irrespective of creed or character. 13,000 cases (men, women, and boys) dealt with in 1897. 58 per cent. turn out well. Tickets for beggars free to donors.

Funds and Old Clothes of every description Sorely Needed.

Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec., Church Army, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. Bankers, Barclay's.

The Servants' Mission and Homes for Men and Women Servants.

£600 URGENTLY NEEDED

To pay off debt on new premises.

Contributions thankfully received by Mr. J. GOODCHILD, 109 and 111, Eaton-terrace, London, S.W.; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

"THERE IS SORROW ON THE SEA."

THE SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.

Over half-a-million persons relieved since 1839.

The rescued sailor, fisherman, &c., instantly cared for on the spot and sent home; the widow, orphan, &c., of the drowned immediately sought out, the distressed sojourner of every grade charitably assisted.

Contributions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or will be thankfully received by the Secretary, GERALD E. MAUDE, Esq., 26, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE WAY

EFFECTUALLY TO HELP

HEBREW CHRISTIANS in DISTRESS

IS TO SUPPORT THE

OPERATIVE JEWISH CONVERTS' INSTITUTION, where for three years they are entirely cared for and taught trades.

Particulars gladly given and Contributions thankfully received by the Rev. H. OLIVER ALLBROOK, Palestine House, Bodney Rd., London, N.E.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.

(9000 MEMBERS.)

Established in 1891, to unite all women of every class and denomination in maintaining and defending Protestant Christianity, and in resisting the encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism.

Monthly Organs—
"THE PROTESTANT WOMAN" and
"THE PROTESTANT GIRL."

JUNIOR BRANCHES for GIRLS and BOYS.

MEN are admitted AS ASSOCIATES.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, EIGHTEENPENCE.

For Information and Enrolment apply to the President, Mrs. W. R. ARBUTHNOT, Plaw Hatch, East Grinstead.

NEW EDITION.

ALPHA AND OMEGA: OR GOD

IN HUMAN LIFE. By Rev. W. MIDDLETON. With Introduction by Rev. Handley C. G. Moule (Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge).

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, 3s. 6d.

"A really beautiful devotional book, full of stimulating and healthy teaching."—Preachers' Magazine.

"Mr. Middleton has given us seven sermons, marked by good taste, deep feeling, and sound sense. They are bright and helpful reading, and the volume will win a welcome wherever it goes. Those who read it will begin to think what public worship may be when Christian people realise and enter into its true spirit. We hope that these sermons will gain a wide circle of readers."—London Quarterly.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door; but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster-row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Treasurer.

TO ALL LOVERS OF THRIFT.

THE JUBILEE SHILLING SUBSCRIPTION to complete the good work of the LIBERATOR RELIEF FUND still kept open.

A further sum of 440,000 Shillings needed.

2,300 Victims on the Books of the Fund, of whom 1,460 are Widows or lone women over 60 years of age, cruelly robbed of their life-savings. Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS, Hon. Sec., 16, Farringdon-street, E.C.

ROYAL NATIONAL

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.

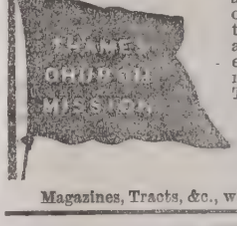
Number of Services held in 1897 - - - - - 2,627
Patients Medically and Surgically treated in 1897 - 12,540

HELP EARNESTLY ASKED. Requires £20 000 per annum.

Treasurer: THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq. (Offices, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

INFIDEL PARIS.

The Salvation Army is opening in the Rue de Chabrol a



NEW SHELTER FOR MEN,

accommodating nearly 300 nightly, where a clean comfortable bed, with facilities for washing and mending, will be supplied for 1½d., and where everything will be done to lead those sheltered to the living Christ.

£400 IS URGENTLY NECESSARY towards the enforced outlay of £800 for the initial expenses.

Will any friends able to send help, however small, address their assistance to Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, 101, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., marking their letters "For Paris Shelter."

With 54 years' great success among Sailors, Bargemen and others in the Port of London, the Committee most urgently ask for help to carry on the excellent work. Contributions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to (Paymaster-in-Chief, R.N.),

F. PENFOLD
Secretary,
31, New Bridge Street,
London, E.C.

Magazines, Tracts, &c., will be thankfully received.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron:—

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN is unable to respond to several urgent appeals received from important ports abroad, where numerous British crews greatly need spiritual and physical help.

Increased Funds are also required for the maintenance and extension of the existing work, afloat and ashore, of the Missions to Seamen at home and abroad.

The Society has to maintain one hundred and sixty-eight Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in sixty-eight seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-nine Mission Vessels and Boats, and Eighty-seven Seamen's Churches and Institutes are in daily use, winter and summer.

INCOME for 1897, £36,611.

Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meeting Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing sailor work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to COMMANDER W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Estd. 1867.

700 MEALS have to be provided EVERY DAY, and the reader is earnestly asked to contribute towards the Daily Expenses of the Five Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge.

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT will receive contributions.

200, Euston-road, London, N.W. WILLIAM J. TAYLOR, Secretary.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the EDITOR should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT,
BOUVERIE HOUSE,
SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„	„
12 „ „	6s.	„	„
24 „ „	12s.	„	„

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE would specially urge our friends, when sending us postal orders, to cross them and to take note of the numbers. Neglect of these precautions is likely to lead to their irrecoverable loss.

The date of Commemoration Day at the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone, Surrey, has had to be changed from Monday, July 11, to Thursday, 14th. The Bishop of Winchester will preside, and prizes will be distributed by H.R.H. the Duchess of York.

May we remind our readers that thousands of poor children are longing for that one bright Day in the Country which to the prisoners of London's dull courts and alleys means so much. Our fund for this purpose is now open, but as yet it is very short of the amount needed to meet the claims which seem most urgent. Surely many of our readers will consider how much they can spare to aid in giving the children a glimpse of the green fields and a taste of the fresh air. We should be glad to hear at once from all who are willing to help in this matter.

Life and death move up and down the busy ways of men, hand in hand. There is but a step between any of us and the spirit-land beyond. In the flash of a moment the angel from the light-city of God may come and touch us with his hand, or call us with his voice, and we cannot resist the summons. What a pall of grief has spread itself over many homes in connection with the launch of H.M. battleship Albion! In a moment, when the excitement is at its height, a frail wooden structure is swept away by the "back-wash" as the huge ship slips into the water, and between thirty and forty persons, chiefly women and children, are drowned. We most sincerely mourn with the bereaved families so unexpectedly smitten with an overwhelming sorrow. Oh, to be ready always, through the faith that lives on the Son of God! Ready for any day is to be ready for every day.

We trust that the recent discussion in the House of Commons on the Workmen's Conciliation Act, in its relation to the present disastrous coal strike, will lead to some steps being taken towards securing the intervention of Mr. Ritchie. The suffering of the women and children in several districts has become most acute. Both employers and employed are heartily at one as to the mischief that is being wrought. What is needed is for each party to read once more the Lord's great "Sermon on the Mount," and in the spirit of its supreme teaching to approach each other with the open hand of brotherhood. Then the strike, with its attendant starvation and misery, would come to an end.

Sir William Harcourt has put the case against the Ritualistic clergymen with cogent force in a letter to The Times. Referring to Mr. Redmond's complaint that he had brought a charge of immorality against the Catholic Church, he says :—

> What I have condemned as "illegal, immoral, and disgraceful" is the conduct of men who, having at their ordination obtained, and who still hold, preferment in the Reformed and Protestant Church of England as established by law under solemn vows not to teach certain doctrines or follow certain practices, do, nevertheless, habitually violate these vows. That, in my judgment, is no insult or reflection on the Catholic Church, which is free to prescribe its own doctrine and practice, but is a just judgment upon the conduct of men who repudiate the legal and religious obligations into which they have entered.

It is difficult to imagine a more demoralising state of things in a State Church than to have men officiating in it who thus habitually set aside their obligations.

Anyone who doubts the temper of the Sacerdotalists needs but to read the account of the meeting held by the E.C.U. at the Church House to be persuaded of their determination to carry their point; that being to use their position in the National Church to override all authority, whether of State or bishops, when that authority is contrary to their "convictions." It is true that a majority voted for "obedience to the bishops," but the tone of the references showed that the spirit of opposition might easily break into open revolt. Everything points to a determined battle between Ritualism and Evangelicalism in the near future. The clergy are almost solid for the former cause. If, as is often stated, the laity are at heart on the other side, it is high time they organised their forces. So long as the Church is established by law every citizen has a right to take up the matter. It is by exercising that right that the peril can be met and mastered.

Sir John Gorst's admission as to the superiority of religious teaching in Board schools over that given in Voluntary schools ought once for all to lay the charge that undenominational teaching can only be carried on at the expense of efficiency, and to remove the stigma of "secularity" from the advocates of the Compromise of 1871. The minority composed of true Secularists in education is scarcely worth mentioning. The vast body of educationalists are sincerely anxious to maintain a high standard of religious teaching in our primary schools, and the testimony of the head of this department is so conclusive that there need be no alarm on this score. The Sacerdotalists are very angry with Sir John Gorst, and are calling on him to resign. This is natural, for it takes the only valid weapon against undenominationalism out of their hands. Everyone else, however, will be grateful for a frankness that will go far to make the re-emergence of the religious difficulty less likely at future elections.

Among the probable incidental results of the Cuban War will be the throwing open both of that island and the Philippines to Protestant missionary effort. There is no disposition, according to the Boston Congregationalist, in the United States to make it a war of religions, for Catholics are to be found in large numbers in the American army. But the Spaniards, both in their home Press and through their Government officials in the Philippines, are showing a tendency to use the forces of religious hatred in their cause. And in France the Superintendent of the Order of the Capuchins has cited the war as an illustration that on both sides the Atlantic the Protestant nations are striving to crush the Latin nations and the Catholic faith in order to rule the world. The only way in which Protestants are likely to injure the Romish faith is by the letting in of light into the dark places of the earth, and by insisting on freedom to teach the truth as they hold it. That this should create a panic among Romanists only shows their dread of religious liberty.

The German Emperor never speaks without saying something that will be remembered; this time, in addressing his army, he has expressed his view of the conditions of military service in words which will be often quoted :—

> May, further, the main foundations of our army remain untouched—bravery, the sense of honour, and absolute, iron, blind obedience. This is my wish, which I address to-day to you and the whole army.

It is easy to understand why Social Democracy spreads and flourishes; exact "absolute, iron, blind obedience" to the will of one man, and there will be resistance. The severe sentences passed upon newspaper editors in Italy and the Kaiser's words form suggestive illustrations of what follows from military rule.

The African Association, a new society which has for its purpose the creation of a spirit of unity among African races, the promotion of their highest interests, the suppression of the illicit traffic in strong drink among them, and the stimulation of British opinion as to the true position of the natives in the Empire, has begun a vigorous campaign of education in this country. It is high time something was done to develop social opinion, for there has recently been a distinct set-back in public sentiment as to the rights of conquered races. The treatment of coloured populations by our "Empire builders" has been marked by a sharp practice and an occasional cruelty quite alien to our traditions, and is responsible for most of the troubles that have just turned Sierra Leone into a field of massacre. Nothing but vigilance and earnestness on the part of those who voice the conscience of the nation will defeat this retrograde movement. Those interested in missionary work should do their utmost in this direction.

The sensation occasioned by the alleged "holy shroud photograph" in the Romish Church is a sad indication of the pitiable credulity that is still rampant among the members of that faith. According to a canon of Turin Cathedral, in an "ecstatic" note to the correspondent of the Daily Mail at Rome, a photograph of the supposed shroud that enveloped the body of the Saviour has miraculously revealed his form lying within, with all the details of his suffering clearly indicated. This story has had a wide circulation, and has been received by millions with childish confidence. How easily this kind of illusion can be created by a clever manipulator has been shown again and again. The remarkable thing is that people of intelligence should be found who are credulous enough to believe such a story. The love of the marvellous has seldom been shown in a more humiliating or degrading form.

This incident is not without its bearing on certain tendencies in the Protestant world just now. Dean Farrar's "Life of Christ in Art" and Sir Wyke Bayliss's "Rex Regum—A Painter's Study of the Likeness of Christ from the Time of the Apostles to the Present Day" deal from different points of view with the physical appearance of the Saviour, the former denying, and the latter affirming, that we have in this traditional portrait a real indication of his person. It is only a low form of curiosity that is satisfied by the discussion of such a question. The true picture of Christ is contained in the Gospels—a matchless spiritual portrait that fully satisfies the legitimate demands of faith. This portrait gives a vivid and delightful impression of the humanity of our Lord. Pictorial representations may help to carry home the lessons of the Gospels; but the "spiritual man" is independent of anything more. Paul's attitude is the true Christian attitude: "Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more" (2 Cor. v. 16).

The correspondence published in the last two numbers of The British Weekly on the results of evangelistic missions has brought to light a remarkable diversity of opinion as to their value. Certain deductions, however, stand out clear. The abiding results depend much on the men who minister, on the spiritual state of the churches previous to the holding of special services, and on the way in which the good influences brought to bear during them are husbanded and developed afterwards. The accessions made to the membership seem to be predominantly from among those who have been previously under religious education. In certain cases testimony proves that the "regular" ministry has been helped by the impulse given through a mission; but where sensationalism has been pandered to the contrary has taken place.

As there is great variety of experience, and lack of experience, among ministers on this subject, considerable diversity of judgment was to be expected. We should welcome a consensus of opinion from men at once fully informed as to the pressing needs of the people and personally acquainted with aggressive evangelistic effort. Many correspondents in the columns of our contemporary see a peril arising from rapid leakage back into the world; but this sad reverse is by no means peculiar to the work of evangelists. The same may be said of "pandering to sensationalism," which is as repellent and unprofitable on the part of pastors and church workers as it is undesirable and mischievous on the part of evangelistic missioners.

We wondered some time ago at the reports which were published of a boxing club connected with an East End church, but now the thing is explained. It seems that, according to Mr. Fowler, assistant secretary of the Protestant Alliance, there is a club which learns boxing in order to protect Protestant lecturers, and another club which undertakes the defence of Ritualistic lecturers, while there are also the Roman Catholic Ransomers. But surely if there is any need of the protection of free speech in this country, it ought to be afforded by the police, as being the legally constituted body. The day of intimidation should be for ever past, but defence should not be left to amateur pugilists.

From the last report of the Rescue Society, which is a record of a successful year's work, we learn that the conditions of rescue work have changed, that girls are not so ready to enter Homes as they were twenty or even ten years ago, and that those who do enter are more difficult to manage. The reasons are not given, "but the fact is stated for the consideration and prayers of all interested therein." Another fact brought forward is that the large majority of the inmates of the Society's Homes have been born and brought up in country districts; less than one-third of them come from London. A large number of unfallen girls had been sent to the Society by parents or relations, an evidence apparently of the unmanageableness above referred to. Three hundred and three can read and write tolerably well, as against fifty-seven who cannot do it at all or do it very imperfectly. Of 178 fallen girls, 124 had been domestic servants, and twenty-four had been living at home assisting their parents. Of 182 preventive cases as many as forty were removed from bad parents. The home is evidently the weak or the strong place.

Those who run mad after athletics would do well to ponder a recent sermon by Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, on "Christianity and Sport." Making due allowance for the place of play in human life, he pointed out with trenchant force the perils that beset the modern craze for games of all kinds. Apart from the vices associated with various forms of sport, there is a seemingly harmless absorption of mind in them which means the decay of all intellectual and moral activity. There are parents who choose a school for their children for its reputation in athletics rather than scholarship or religious influence—which is a crying shame. It is time to remember that sport was made for man, and not man for sport. It is usually a feeble type of Christianity that goes with athletic prowess, with, of course, some splendid exceptions.

There is a line reached in the lives of some ministers called "the dead-line," the point at which they cease to learn anything, or to conceive anything fresh, or to bring out of their treasure anything new; it is all old—and dead. Ministers do not stand alone on "the dead-line"; Sunday-school teachers, evangelists, and others are to be found there yet. The Bible is an inexhaustible book, and he who finds nothing new in it must be defective in spiritual vision. Happily no one who has touched "the dead-line" need remain there; the Spirit of God can quicken him through the truth, and make all things live.

In the early days of the Reformation, Luther, on being criticised because he only wrote little books for unlearned laymen, said he would to God he had all his life long and with all his power served a layman to his improvement. Thus he went on expounding to the people, in a few pages, the Ten Commandments, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, giving forth tracts for consolation and words of saving truth. He had nothing to do with whether it was ephemeral or not. No one can tell what has in it the seed of immortality; "thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." The "trifle," thrown off in a short time, may have in it a message for many generations. Luther's little books flew like wind-borne seeds all over Germany; and the harvest we know!

It has been well said, "There is a knowledge which is not light, but darkness; just as there is a lustre on the surface of the ocean which keeps you from seeing down in the ocean's depths." This is the "wisdom of the world" concerning which Paul speaks so strongly. It is characterised by much confidence about details, and knows all about secondary causes; but has no eye for the spiritual, and knows nothing about the Great First Cause. This kind of knowledge, to quote another writer, is "but the showy side of ignorance." It makes large assumptions, but it leaves the heart at last orphaned, crying with Job, "O that I knew where I might find Him!"

Some things are prized because they are rare, such as gems; others because they are common, such as air, light, love. The preciousness of the Gospel consists in its gift of a "common faith" (Tit. i. 4), and a "common salvation" (Jude 3), to meet "common temptation" (1 Cor. x. 3). It is universal as air, diffusive as light, all-embracing as love. The Apostles, brought up in a school where exclusiveness was a virtue, show in their epistles how this universal aspect of the good news of God captivated their imagination, and how it sent them forth into the world to spread the knowledge of the Gospel far and wide. We are in perpetual peril of forgetting the duty laid upon us by this quality of the Gospel, that it is meant for all, and can redeem all. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15). Only so can it become what it was meant to be, a truly "common salvation."

Those who excuse themselves for lapsing into sin on the ground that they "could not help it"—it is one of the commonest pleas—forget that evil by its very nature is something that can be resisted, as goodness is something that must be chosen. Take away the element of freedom in our relation to both, and both are destroyed. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you" is thus the utterance of a necessary law. He can attack, but he has no assurance of victory. That remains with the soul who is tempted. When the native forces of the will are insufficient to meet the combined attack of many temptations, we have the assurance that "God is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that we may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. x. 13). This takes away the last excuse from the man who succumbs to the solicitations of evil.

It is one of the curious features of temptation that it always appears to the soul in disguise. The soul is never tempted to sin. The invitation comes clothed in all manner of subterfuges and pretences. The resources of language are taxed in order to hide the real nature of evil as it appeals to us. We are invited to some deed of gallantry, to be "smart," to "enjoy ourselves," to "follow the crowd," to see "life," to be and do everything except sin. This is a proof that sin is unnatural, and that we are meant for better things; it explains the "blindness" with which our Lord charged the Pharisees, and the need of spiritual illumination from above, that we may be able to see things in their true light, and recognise the evil that is in the world in its truly devastating and destructive character. When we see life in the light of God, we must all hate evil, because we see it "as it is."

The Modern Sadducee.*

BY REV. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., BALHAM

OUR LORD warned his disciples against "the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." Although the spirit and character of the two classes ended in the same rejection of the Word of Life, yet they were distinct in their ideals and in the reasons for their spiritual failure. We may find both represented in the religious life of to-day.

The Sadducees would, strictly speaking, be the lineal descendants of an aristocratic caste of priests. In Acts v. 17 we are told that "the High Priest rose up, and all that were with him (which is the sect of the Sadducees), and they were filled with jealousy, and laid hands on the apostles and put them in public ward." It is at least certain that this sect represented the principle of pride in high descent, in noble blood, in worldly comfort, in political and social achievements. They were the well-to-do folk, from whom the officers of State and Church were largely drawn.

Like the Pharisees, the Sadducees represented in degenerate form that were in themselves of priceless value.

CERTAIN FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

1. As regards their rivals the Pharisees, they stood out for the earlier and purer faith, as against the wearisome accumulations of tradition, rejecting the senseless details of ceremonialism which had slowly but surely grown up around it. More broadly, Sadduceeism was the cult of common sense in religion, as distinguished from extravagance, over exuberant fancy, and faddism in belief and practice.

2. As regards the nation at large, the Sadducee stood out against excessive other-worldliness. It was always the peril of the Jewish people, with their passionate absorption in the ideal future of the race, to fall into a dreamy neglect of their present duties and responsibilities. Against this the Sadducee, strongly protested. In the dark days following the prophetic era they furnished the practical statesmanship and resources whereby, under the Maccabees, the Jews threw over one yoke after another, and emerged from the stormy ordeal in spirit unconquered, albeit shattered in numbers.

3. The Sadducee was the champion of a close relation between morals and religion. He taught that God judges according to life rather than profession. If we wish to please Him, we must be good citizens, good men; we must do our duty. Rites and ceremonies are nothing, divorced from practical godliness. Faith without works is dead.

Like the Pharisee, therefore, the Sadducee made a good start. Unfortunately, he, too, came to a bad end, by a different road.

1. Take his first principle. It was good to protest against the tangled upgrowth of tradition, and to cling to a simple and pure faith; but when this protest was exaggerated into a denial of all revelation subsequent to the age of Moses it became a snare. For it meant the rejection of all the high and beautiful teaching of psalmist and prophet and inspired history. He held that God had not spoken authoritatively since the thunders of Sinai had died into silence, and the "pattern in the Mount" had been revealed. Whatever was in the Book of the Law was Divine; and there was nothing Divine outside it. In protesting against the extravagances of the Pharisees, therefore, the Sadducee fell into a still more devastating error.

This was the fallacy of Deism, which taught that God, having started this universe, had retired from active participation and direction in the world's affairs. The logical result in both cases was a religion of materialism, which emptied the universe of all ennobling attributes, and degraded it to the level of a machine, grinding out heroes and villains, blessing and disaster, with cold impartiality and indifference. The remedy is a belief in God as immanent and operant in all things, except sin. The failure to recognise the Divine hand in providence, in history, in the higher movements of human thought, is a modern recrudescence of Sadduceeism. God speaks to men still. Our reverence for the supreme revelation enshrined in the Bible should not make us blind and deaf to the ever unfolding revelation of the Divine purpose that goes on perennially throughout the ages.

2. Take the Sadducee's second principle. His protest against an undue other-worldliness that excused itself from the high call of the present was carried to the extreme of practically ignoring, and finally of actually denying, the future life altogether. This tendency received a powerful impetus from the fact that there is no clear doctrine of immortality in the Pentateuch (which was the Sadducee's only Bible), and that the system of rewards and punishments revealed there is an earthly one. The practical result was a degenerate nether-worldliness, an absorption in the ideals and motives of this life which left death without a horizon, and the heart without a gleam of hope as it sank into the "valley of the shadow."

If there is one point where Sadduceeism threatens to revive in another form, it is here. It cannot be denied that the doctrine of future rewards and punishments has in days gone by been dwelt on to the exclusion of pressing and immediate duty. But of late years the peril of these swift and rushing days is in the opposite direction. The future life has dropped

PERILOUSLY INTO THE BACKGROUND.

This tendency weakens the higher incentives to a holy life. For if man is immortal, if his life here will matter infinitely to him hereafter; if the ends of perfection reach out into the illimitable future, and embrace heights that can only be attained in the life beyond; if there is a heaven for the faithful and a hell for the wicked—then these facts are of vital import, and ought to make a tremendous difference to us all. To ignore them is to starve the soul of its rights as the heir of eternity, to cramp the scope of the spiritual life, to belittle the universe itself. If the Sadducees' creed, which ended in the denial of the resurrection, were to become the creed of the future, we should come at last to a race of spiritual pigmies, whose thoughts and aims would be finally imprisoned in a sensuous present, and whose motto would be: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

3. By affirming that religion was a mere department of ethics the Sadducee was led to lower his ideal to the level of a cold and calculating morality.

HE WAS A UTILITARIAN.

A man was good who was a good patriot, a respectable moral member of society; no question of his motives or aims was raised if his outward conduct was straight and blameless. Conformity to prevailing custom—this was the creed of the Sadducee.

Is there nothing like this nowadays? Here is a passage from a recent leader in the London Standard:—

"A great deal of the support now given by the laity to the Church of England is given her because she is the Established Church, which it is highly desirable to retain in the position it has always held. Free the Church altogether from the control of the State, and it may be questioned whether many subscriptions now cheerfully given would not show signs of falling off. It is to the social and secular side of the Church of England that many laymen are so warmly attached."

That this is the feeling of the majority of devout Churchmen I do not suggest; but that there is a tendency in churches of every name to value them for their social and incidental benefits is only too clear. Such a religion of expediency, as opposed to a religion of the heart, is the modern equivalent of Sadduceeism. It shows itself also in a tendency to judge of character by its externalities, by the shell and husk of life, forgetting that what settles everything is not the trivial accidents of fashion or temperament, but the presence or absence of faith at the root of the hidden life. And this tendency is always in the end fatal to true religion.

Note the attitude of this type of man towards the Saviour. We have abundant proofs that the sect of the Pharisees furnished not a few open or secret disciples—Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathea (probably), and certainly Paul the Apostle. But we have no hint anywhere that there was a single convert to Christianity from the ranks of the Sadducees, which is only another way of saying that fanaticism is more hopeful than indifferentism.

And what was our Lord's attitude towards the Sadducee? He could do nothing with him, except answer him according to his folly. There seems to have been no foothold left for the truth on this smooth rock of a man; no chink in this granite cliff in which the seed of the Kingdom may lodge and strike root. There was and is no more hopeless kind of man than the Sadducee.

* A companion sermon, THE MODERN PHARISEE, appeared in our last issue.

A Prophetic Conference.

THE fifteenth annual Clapham Conference was held on June 14, 15, and 16, in the Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road.

Many received blessing, and testified to the power of the Spirit in their hearts.

Space will not permit us to give an account of the various addresses delivered. The coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ was shown to be personal and visible, and the signs of the times indicate it to be not far distant. The light thrown on the visions of Ezekiel when compared with the vision to John in Patmos was helpful to many.

The special feature of the second day's meetings was the coming of the Lord in relation to the Jews. "Zionism" as a sign of the times was described. At the afternoon Bible-reading much encouragement was given to work amongst the Jews, and the cry from many that it was waste of time and money to try and convert them was shown to be a great error. The second evening closed with an address on preparedness for the Lord's return.

Practical consecration was considered on the third day. The conference meetings were brought to a conclusion with the Lord's Supper. On Friday morning a praise-meeting was held, when testimony was given by some of those who had received definite blessing.

Distress in South Wales.—We thank the friends who have kindly responded to my last plea for help, but regret to say that the privation is becoming more acute day by day. The men hold out firmly, and the masters will not yield; the result is that the men are pinched with hunger, and the women and children are on the verge of starvation. Are the people to starve? is really the question of the hour. 100,000 colliers and labourers are said to be idle, while at least 50,000 men at the various docks are also thrown out in consequence of no coal to ship. GERALD R. COULTAS, Supt.

Mission House, Barry Dock, N. Wales.

*Daniel and the Revelation.

As indicated in its title, this book is a study of the Historical and Futurist interpretations of the Revelation. The author begins by mentioning four different systems—the Spiritualising system, which we think is misrepresented, and is then dismissed as "vague, uninteresting, unprofitable, and unfounded." Secondly, the Preterist, which is somewhat more fully entered into and equally set aside—and with good reason if there were nothing more to be said about it than its errors as here described.

There then remain the Historical and the Futurist systems, and "between these the student is called to choose, since they are opposed to each other nearly throughout the whole course of Apocalyptic prophecy." The author lays down as a main principle of the Historical system, which he advocates, that of continuity in the visions of Daniel and John, as opposed to the interposition by the Futurist system of "a gap or blank in God's prophetic revelation, leaving out the whole of this dispensation." A second main feature of the Historical system is that the language of these prophecies is mainly symbolical, while Futurists maintain, generally speaking, that they are to be interpreted literally. The third divergence between these systems is that the Historical view regards "the Papacy, in its rise, career, and end, as the true fulfilment of the Antichrist," while the Futurist expects that fulfilment "in some future supernatural individual, who is to appear upon the stage of the world for a few years at the close of this dispensation."

The author then enters upon the prophecy of the seventy weeks, the dates of their commencement and their close; contesting the Futurist view of the last week, and arguing that the covenant of Daniel ix. 27 is not one between the Antichrist and the Jews, but is the New Covenant of which Jesus the Anointed Prince is the Mediator. He says:—

> As regards the meaning of the covenant which is here said to be confirmed, or made valid, it should be noted that this is just the work which was foretold in other prophecies as that which Christ should come to do. Thus, for example, Isaiah says: "I, the Lord, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the people [i.e., as the medium or mediator of a covenant: Cheyne] for a light of the Gentiles." Again, in Malachi, Christ is spoken of as "the messenger of the Covenant," that is, as Cheyne well explains it, the messenger "who is to actualise, as it were, the Covenant relation" between Jehovah and his people, by establishing the new and spiritual one—the very idea briefly conveyed by the angel's words, "He shall confirm a (or the) covenant with many." Similarly Dr. Perowne comments on the same passage of Malachi: "The covenant which was before the Law" (Gal. iii. 17), and yet by virtue of its later introduction "a new covenant" (Jer. xxxi. 31-34; Heb. viii. 7-13). He comes, in fulfilment of promise and prophecy, as its Messenger and Mediator (Heb. xii. 24) to inaugurate and ratify with his blood."—pp. 50, 51.

If the covenant spoken of is the New Covenant, it follows that the person who confirms it is Messiah, and not Antichrist. On this the author says:—

> The angel, in verse 27, returns to the main subject of the whole prophecy—the Messiah Himself. It is to the Messiah, therefore, as we shall show, that we must refer the word "he" in the beginning of verse 27: "And He shall make a firm covenant," etc. Futurists tell us that this is grammatically impossible, and that "he" must refer to the subject which has last been mentioned; and this, they say, is the "prince" of verse 26. But, in the first place, when Hebrew scholars and commentators of the highest authority—such as Pusey, Godet, Burgon, and many others—assure us that "he" does refer to the Messiah, and that there is no grammatical impossibility whatever, we need not be concerned with the above Futurist assertion. As a matter of fact, abrupt transitions of person or subject, presenting ambiguity at first sight, and requiring that the context and spirit of the passage should be studied in order to find out who is meant, are not uncommon in Hebrew prophetic or poetic language. As remarked by one of our Old Testament Revisers: "The genius of Hebrew does not require such a distinct indication as our Western languages." Moreover, as is well pointed out in Ellicott's Commentary: "In verse 26 it is the people of the prince, and not the prince, which is the subject of the sentence." And, lastly, we have shown that even if the "he" did refer to the "prince" just before mentioned, it would mean Vespasian or Titus, who led the Romans against Jerusalem, and not some future Antichrist.

The view which regards the whole of the Revelation after the third chapter as future to this dispensation, and unconnected with the Church's history, has always seemed to us impossible. It is contended that it is divided into three parts—(1) the things which John had seen being contained in ch. i., "the things which are" being the letters to the churches (ch. ii., iii.) and covering the whole of the present period; and the rest of the book having no fulfilment until the Church has been removed from earth to heaven. This seems to be contradicted by the sentence itself in ch. i. 19, 20, which reads thus in the R.V.:—

> Write, therefore, the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass hereafter; the mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks.

The three divisions are all contained in the mystery of the seven stars and the seven golden candlesticks; the stars are the angels of the churches, and the candlesticks are the churches. Therefore "the things which shall come to pass hereafter" belong to the Church period. And if so, it seems incredible that the great Papal apostasy should not have the same place in the prophecy that it has in the history.

The commendatory preface by Rev. Hubert Brooke will have weight with many. The following paragraph is worthy of note:

> On all sides and in almost all schools of interpretation there is to-day a widespread expectation of the nearness of the Lord's return. Five great signs are evident in the world, calling for attention from every Christian soul. The temporal power of the Pope has gone, and the dominion of Mohammedan rule in the East is going fast: two great signs to which Historical interpreters have for years been looking as tokens of the end of the dispensation. Joined to the latter sign is, further, the ever-growing stream of Jewish immigration into Palestine, making ready the way of the Lord's return. Whilst in the living Church of Christ are two other tokens: the increasing zeal for missionary effort throughout the world, side by side with earnest pursuit after growth in holiness; both of them marks that the Bride of Christ is being gathered out of all nations, and is making herself ready for his coming.

We think there are weak links in the chain of each system of interpretation. We think also that the good and evil principles and forces which have marked the Papacy existed under Pagan Rome, and must be concentrated and intensified in the final crisis. And that, therefore, it would be better for the advocates of either system of interpretation to endeavour to find out any possible point of agreement, rather than for each to endeavour to prove that it is absolutely and exclusively right, and the other absolutely wrong.

In justice to themselves and to those whom they influence, all students of prophecy should give their unprejudiced attention to the views of those who differ from them. We are glad to see that Mr. Tanner recognises the propriety of avoiding contemptuous allusions to others; and that he has done so himself.

The book before us is an able, painstaking, and forcible presentation of the Historical system, written without bitterness towards the advocates of other systems, and with allowance for diversity of view within itself.

* Daniel and the Revelation: The Chart of Prophecy and our Place in it. A Study of the Historical and Futurist Interpretation. By Rev. Joseph Tanner, B.A. With a preface by Rev. Hubert Brooke, M.A. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

[572]

Faith.

It is by no arbitrary law that faith is made the condition of salvation. In the very nature of the case it cannot be otherwise.

Christ is the life of the world. He conveys this life to us by his Spirit, who waits upon us continually, affecting us more or less as we welcome or repel Him. When we turn the key upon the earthward side of our nature, and throw wide open the door of our soul God-ward, we become "new creatures in Christ Jesus," being "born again of the Spirit."

Now, it is just here that the need of faith comes in. Christ saves not only by making atonement for sin; that was the preparatory step towards a full subjective salvation through the indwelling of the Spirit. We are not cleansed inwardly by a judicial act, any more than a house is cleaned by having its rent paid. The purifying work must be done from within in both cases.

But it is faith that gives Christ the entry into our soul; it is because we believe in Him that we are willing to receive Him. It would be impossible to make such a friend of a person as to yield one's whole being to his control without having previously judged him worthy of confidence.

Thus it is that faith is an indispensable factor in the work of salvation. It opens the heart to take in its Saviour with his unsearchable riches of grace and healing.

It has been said that faith is to salvation what the touch is to electricity: it awakes it, not makes it; it earns nothing, but elicits all.

Sometimes we feel, if we do not say, respecting some individual: "I don't believe in him." And there is an end to any advances towards intimacy. Do we ever reflect that by not freely and gladly entrusting to Christ the care of our whole life, spiritual and temporal, we are practically declaring, "I do not believe in Him"?

At this moment He stands at our door, saying to each of us: "I am thy salvation." Surely we have faith enough in Him to rise and let Him in?

Helen K. Gibson.

Paris.

Oroomiah.—In a letter dated May 14, Deacon Abraham writes;—"This year is a severe one; we fear famine. Most of the wheat, especially that sown in the mountains not irrigated, has been destroyed by severe cold; vineyards are destroyed, and one-third of the sheep in those regions have died. Only forty remain out of 140 sheep I had with friends in the mountains. I have lost wheat worth £120 and sheep worth £50. The Orphanage vineyard, worth £50, is destroyed by cold. A party of the refugees have returned to their own land. Many died here; their own climate is better than ours in Oroomiah. The sick and wretched, widows and children remain with us. I trust the Lord will send help from England for them."

Coonoor, So. India.—The third annual convention for the deepening of spiritual life which has met in Coonoor has proved a time of great blessing to many. The meetings extended over four days. The subject set was "Fellowship with Christ in Life, Suffering, Service, and Glory." Among the speakers were Dr. Boggs (of Secunderabad), Revs. J. Golson Gregson, Rev. J. Ward (Madras), Rev. T. Walker (of Tinnevelly), Dr. White (of the Bible Institute, Chicago), and Mr. G. L. Eddy (of the Student Volunteer Movement). A resolution heartily approving of the invitation extended to Revs. Andrew Murray, F. B. Meyer, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and others was carried unanimously. The Church of God in India will accord them a warm welcome should the Master send them among us.

D. R. L.

Nap.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

"THESE burglaries are becoming serious," Mr. Standing said, as he laid down his newspaper. "Jones' place was broken into last night, and a large quantity of jewellery taken, and the gang got clear away. I cannot tell what the police are about."

"Oh, James, perhaps they will come here next!" exclaimed his wife, with a distressed face. She was a slight little woman, one of the best of wives and mothers, but constitutionally timid, with nerves that vibrated to the slightest touch of alarm, and her husband regretted having given her the news. He was a watchmaker and jeweller in Westminster, with a well-established and prosperous business, which, however, made no dash or show; and no one, from the appearance of his windows, would have supposed how really valuable his stock was. He reminded his wife of this, and she smiled a happy response to her husband's words.

An hour later Mr. Standing went to superintend an unusually careful closing of the shop, and Mrs. Standing, coming down stairs from seeing her children to bed, found him still there, and joined him. Suddenly the door was pushed open, and a huge dog walked in and calmly proceeded to divest himself of a thick overcoat of snow, shaking it off unceremoniously on the carefully kept floor. "Just look at him!" Mrs. Standing exclaimed indignantly; "wetting everything! Thomas, put him out." The assistant hastened to obey, but his attempts at eviction were not a success. The dog sat quietly down under a very hailstorm of shouts and threats, wagging its tail. "Well, it is a rough night to turn the poor brute out in," Mr. Standing said at length, "we might give him a bed somewhere, my dear"; and his wife, with pity, agreed that perhaps the dog could be housed for the night.

This, however, was by no means the purpose of their unwelcome guest. As Mr. and Mrs. Standing turned to their cosy room, he walked in stately fashion by their side, and took possession of the hearthrug with such that they laughed again. The visitor wagged his tail, and then settled down for the night.

AN AIR OF EASY PROPRIETORSHIP

He was quite ready in the morning to receive the children with his comical master-of-the-situation air, and stood majestically in their midst, slowly waving his plumed tail in graciously condescending response to their frantic caresses. But all attempts of the children to coax him out of doors for a walk were fruitless. He attached himself simply and entirely to Mrs. Standing, following her everywhere, and when she sat down stationed himself closely by her side, with a dumb devotion that quickly changed her first feeling of distaste into real enjoyment of his presence.

Later in the afternoon Mr. Standing came into the room with a concerned air. "It is very unfortunate," he said, "Thomas has not returned from his tea, and I must keep an appointment at five o'clock, but I don't like leaving you alone, Hetty."

"Oh, I am not quite such a coward as that," she said, with a brave attempt to smile; "it can only be for a minute or two; and besides, I have this valiant monster," and she turned to pat the dog, who lifted to her eyes eloquent with devotion, though his easy, insouciant bearing scarcely justified any special reliance on his bravery.

So Mr. Standing, lingering as long as he possibly could, was obliged at last to go, and Mrs. Standing took his place in the shop without a thought of fear. Not a minute afterwards the outer door was sharply opened by a man, who, pausing to speak to a companion who remained outside, advanced to the counter and asked to look at some watches. Mrs. Standing meanwhile looked at him, and she now nervously wished that Thomas would come, for, with the quick observation of a town-bred woman, she detected the combination of polish and ferocity and cunning characteristic of the London sharper. As deliberately as possible, to gain time, she selected some cheap silver watches, and placed them before him.

The man became impatient. "I don't want rubbish like that. Bring out some decent gold watches—something worth looking at," he said, irritably, and as she hesitated and falteringly asked if he would not call again, when her husband would be able to show him what he wanted, with a fierce oath he ordered her to lose no time, or it would be the worse for her. Then there was a low, impressive growl, the flash of a quickly moving body, and facing the man, crouching for a spring, his eye covering him with such a keen regard of any hostile movement that the ruffian dared not even stretch out his hand for the revolver. So they stood—one of God's noblest creatures, debased, dehumanised, and the magnificent animal, with more than human intelligence in his eyes, and more than human power tingling in every limb. A London thief is not slow to discern his master, and this one took Nap's measure to the full. With another oath—below his breath this time—he turned away, and lost no time in joining his companion outside. Nap took his victory calmly, but his descent from the counter was as rapid as his leap to it had been, when he saw the mistress he had served so well sway forward and fall to the ground. A dog's tongue is credited by its possessor with wonderful curative properties, and it was now actively employed in the eager attempt to restore consciousness. And so Thomas, a moment afterwards, found the pair, his first horrified dread of the animal's ferocity being changed to wondering admiration when the intelligent head was raised to him, and a distressed whine said, as plainly as a dog can speak, "Come and help me."

NAP WAS ON THE COUNTER,

It was an exciting story to which Mr. Standing had to listen on his return, and the first thought was of devout gratitude to Him who had wrought so marvellous a deliverance. "But where is Nap?" was the next very natural question; and had he been there surely no dog would ever have been more loaded with caresses and marks of favour. Nap was not there, nor was he ever seen or heard of again; but his name was henceforth always named softly as one of tender and mysterious memory.

Mr. and Mrs. Standing were well known to me. Certain articles we daily use were purchased from their stock, and often I find in them "sermons" on the care of God and the ministry of angels.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M. C. F.

Famine in West Ireland.—SIR,—Allow me to thank you for the interest you have taken in the condition of the starving peasantry in this romantic region around the shores of Lough Mask and the Joyce Country mountains. Rev. N. W. Gresley, rector of Durnsley, Gloucestershire, with his wife and some friends, has been here for the past fortnight visiting and nourishing the sick and hungry. The pinch of hunger will be very intense till the beginning of August. The new crop of potatoes will not be ready till then. I ask further aid for 250 starving families.—Truly yours,

JOHN A. JOYCE, J.P.

Mount Gable Hotel, Clonbur, co. Galway.

Free Breakfasts in Dublin.—Among the Christian agencies of Dublin there is good reason to believe that, under the blessing of God, none have done more during the last seventeen years to influence the masses than the Sunday morning free breakfasts connected with the Dublin United Services. This meal is the one bright spot in the cheerless week for many a darkened life. The kind sympathy of workers, the bright hymns, the solos setting forth the love of God, the warm food, the atmosphere of peace, the simple Gospel message, must have a saving and elevating influence. Other help takes the form of special treats and penny dinners. Income comes very far short of expenditure. Secretary, Mr. H. B. Dawson, Christian Union-buildings, Lower Abbey-street.

Honey-bees and Drones.

BY DR. G. F. PENTECOST.

SUPPOSE I toil on from early morn till dewy eve, what will be the result for an ordinary Christian? I got encouragement the other day by reading a little book on bees, and in that little book I found such a question as this: How much honey do you suppose a single honey-bee will gather in the course of a whole season? And it told how from about the 1st of May until the end of October the honey-bees travel thousands of miles, visiting tens of thousands of flowers, wasting not one shining hour of the day; and the result of the work of the most industrious bee, under the most favoured circumstances, in the whole season is about a quarter of a teaspoonful of honey—and it takes about ten or twelve times that much to satisfy me on my cakes at breakfast. Suppose the bee should say, "Why, what does it matter, if after a whole year's work I can only gather a quarter of a teaspoonful of honey? I will never be missed, and my contribution is of so little consequence." But, when we turn out the contents of the beehive and find there sixty or seventy, and sometimes a hundred, pounds of honey, it is the aggregate of the yield.

There are young men in our Christian Associations; there are young men and young women, old men and old women, who have a name in our various Christian organisations. If they should all turn out, as the honey-bees do, and should bring a quarter of a teaspoonful of sweet nourishment, what an abundant supply there would be for our Master. But you see it means what John Wesley said when he gave this motto:—

"ALL AT IT, AND ALWAYS AT IT!"

When we recognise that as the mainspring of our organic work, then we shall begin to see magnificent results, and we shall not hear so much about the organisations as of the results.

I learned another thing from the bees. About the 1st of May, when it comes time for the bees to start out on their work, if you go and look at the hive you will see that there is a great deal of commotion: bees are beginning to run in and out in a good deal of excitement, and by-and-by you will see the head of a bee being pulled out, and then the leg, then the wing, then the torn and mangled body of a bee; and this will go on for a day or two, until the whole hive is littered about with mangled bodies of the bees. What does it mean? All through the winter the drones have been allowed to live, but when the working time comes the bees, in great excitement, say it is time to get rid of the drones, and they fall on every drone and clear the hive of every bee that is not a honey gatherer.

I wonder what would happen if on the 1st of May we should go through our churches and tear the members who are not producers limb from limb and throw them out! There are a great many drones, I fear, who are living on the honey which the active men have gathered.

"Humble Thyself to Walk with God."

(Marginal reading of Micah vi. 8, last clause.)

Ho, ye on the peaks of religious profession!
Come down from your distance,
The souls that are crushed 'neath the heel of oppression
Implore your assistance.
Come down from your giving of alms to the wealthy
And cures to the healthy.

Ye thrill to the touches of sweetness and beauty—
Come down from that pleasure;
Take hold of some hand that is grimy or sooty,
And give it love's pressure;
Come down from the folly of soft comforts spoken
Where hearts are not broken.

Bright banquet and bower, dim temple and college,
We love and revere them;
But life has deep raptures, devotion and knowledge,
That never were near them.
From silence monastic and fashion's high revel
Come down to God's level.

Come down to where Christ with his strong consolation
Keeps pace with life's anguish,
Abreast of the souls in the fight with temptation
Whose energies languish;
To sin-shackled man and to shame-covered woman
Come down and be human.

Clune Brae, Port Glasgow. KATE M'NEILL.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 3.

"Now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the firstfruits of them that are asleep."—1 Cor. xv. 20 (R.V.).

WORDS which are altogether transcendent! How they thrill us and inspire! What memories they recall! How impossible is it not to feel their majesty!

On the day that Jesus rose the firstfruit sheaf of the barley harvest was being waved by the High Priest in the Temple, as the representative of the myriads that stood stacked amid the stubble of the fields. It was the specimen sheaf—representative, pattern, and pledge of all the rest. The risen Christ is the pattern and pledge of what his people will be when their bodies shall be fashioned anew in the likeness of his resurrection.

He is pattern. His body bore the same general outlines as before; so will theirs. It was recognisable by those who had known and loved Him, even to the tones of his voice; so will it be with theirs. It was the ethereal and pliant instrument of his spirit; so will theirs be. It could no more return to corruption; no more will theirs. It was invulnerable to disease and pain; such an inheritance awaits them also.

He is pledge. He does not stand alone. He is united to us by a myriad indissoluble ties. What the power of God did for Him it will do for us. Those that sleep in Jesus God will bring with Him, and we that are alive and remain shall be caught up. There shall not a hoof be left behind. Not one purchased body of a saint, however obscure or unworthy, shall be excepted from the effect of the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. Meanwhile, in the kindly embrace of mother Earth, like the seed germs of a vast harvest, the resurrection principle in the bodies of the saints awaits the resurrection signal.

MONDAY, July 4.

"If any man loveth not the Lord, let him be anathema."—1 Cor. xvi. 22 (R.V.).

This sentence might have been written by Samuel Rutherford, of whose Letters the holy Richard Baxter said: "Hold off the Bible, such a book the world never saw." And the late revered and beloved C. H. Spurgeon said of them: "When we are dead and gone let the world know that Spurgeon held Rutherford's Letters to be the nearest thing to inspiration which can be found in all the writings of mere men."

Take this extract, because it indicates how you may come to love the Lord Jesus as this master of the holy art did:—"Strive to make prayer, and reading, and holy company, and holy conference your delight; and when delight cometh in you shall, by little and little, find the sweetness of Christ, till at length your soul be over head and ears in Christ's sweetness. Then shall you be taken up to the top of the mountain with the Lord, to know the delights of spiritual love, and the glory and excellency of a seen, revealed, felt, and embraced Christ; and then you shall not be able to loose yourself off from Christ, and to bind your soul to old lovers; then, and never till then, are all the paces, motions, and wheels of your soul in a right tune and in a spiritual temper. But if this world and the lusts thereof be your delight, I know not what Christ can make of you; you cannot be metal for a vessel of glory and mercy. My desire is that my Lord would give me broader and deeper thoughts to feed myself with wondering at his love. I would I could weigh it, but I have no balance for it. When I have worn my tongue to the stump in praising Christ, I have done nothing to Him. What remaineth then, but that my debt to the love of Christ lie unpaid for all eternity?"

TUESDAY, July 5.

"Who comforteth us in all our affliction, that we may be able to comfort."—2 Cor. i. 4 (R.V.).

Child of God, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which tries thee, as though some strange thing had happened. Rejoice, inasmuch as it is a sure sign that thou art on the right track. All the saints have gone by this road, notably the writer of this Epistle.

Its keyword is affliction, because written amid afflictions so great that the Apostle despaired of life. It is steeped in affliction, as a handkerchief with the flowing blood of a fresh wound. But in this passage the Apostle has built himself a little chamber of comfort, the stones of which were quarried from the pit of his own sorrow. He blesses God, who had led him into affliction to teach him the art of comfort, that by observing how God comforted himself, he might become proficient in the art of comforting all sorrowful ones.

The world is full of comfortless hearts, orphan children crying in the night. Our God pities them, and would comfort them through thee. But ere thou undertake this lofty ministry thou must be trained, and thou must therefore pass through the very trials that they are exposed to. Now watch how God comforts thee. Keep a diary, if thou wilt, of his procedure. Ponder in thine heart the length of each splint, the folds of each bandage, the ministration of each opiate, cordial, or drug. This will have a twofold effect, in turning thy thoughts from thy miseries to thy mercies, and in taking away that sense of useless and aimless existence which is often the sufferer's weariest cross.

WEDNESDAY, July 6.

"We are a sweet savour of Christ unto God."—2 Cor. ii. 15 (R.V.).

There is rare beauty and suggestiveness here! The idea is borrowed from an ancient Roman triumph, which to the eyes of the world of that day was the most glorious spectacle which the imagination could conceive. The Apostle compares himself first to one of the prisoners led in long chains behind the conqueror's chariot, then to a servant bearing incense, and lastly to the incense itself that rose all along the line of the procession.

Nothing touches the sense more quickly than sweet odours, unless it be noxious ones; and they almost instantly recall some scene of the past with which they were indissolubly associated. For instance, the scent of new-mown hay will carry us off to merry scenes in the far away days of childhood. Thus, the Apostle wished that his life might be a sweet perfume, floating on the air, reminding men, and above all reminding God, of Christ. It was as though he said, "I desire so to live that I may perpetually remind God of the obedience, sacrifice, and devotion of the Lord Jesus, so that my words and deeds may recall to God's heart similar ones in the earthly life of his beloved Son."

A sweet savour of Christ! It does not consist so much in what we do, but in our manner of doing it; not so much in our words or deeds, as in an indefinable sweetness, tenderness, courtesy, unselfishness, and desire to please others to their edification. It is the breath and fragrance of a life hidden with Christ in God, and deriving its aroma from fellowship with him. Wrap the habits of your soul in the sweet lavender of your Lord's character.

THURSDAY, July 7.

"Beholding as in a glass" (A.V.). "Reflecting as a mirror" (R.V.).—2 Cor. iii. 18.

Moses veiled his face, and the veiled lawgiver was characteristic of the dispensation he inaugurated. It was a partial revelation, gleaming through a veil, expressing truths in rites and types and symbols. But Christ has torn away the veil, removed the fences of the mount of vision, and revealed to babes the deepest secrets of God's heart. The Apostle's phrase is characteristic of Christianity, "Behold I show you (i.e. unveil) a mystery."

The object of visions. "The glory of the Lord." Concerning which we may accept the statement of a trustworthy commentator, that the reference is not to the incomprehensible, incommunicable lustre of the absolute Divine perfectness, but to that glory which, as John says, tabernacled in the Lord Jesus Christ, full of grace and truth—the glory of loving, pitying words and lovely deeds; the glory of faultless and complete manhood; the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

The nature of the vision. "We behold." It is true that we cannot see. "Whom not having seen ye love." But it is also true that the heart has eyes by which it looks away unto Jesus. "Seeing is believing" is a familiar proverb among men, but "believing is seeing" is a true aphorism of the spirit which clings to the Lord by its faith and love.

The effect of the vision. First we reflect. The beauty of his face glancing on ours will be mirrored, as a man's eye will contain a tiny miniature picture of what he is beholding. Then we shall be changed. If you try to represent Jesus in your character and behaviour, you will become transfigured into his likeness. Love makes like. Imitation produces assimilation. Reflect and resemble.

FRIDAY, July 8.

"While we look...at the things which are not seen."—2 Cor. iv. 18.

We are here bidden to look through the things which are seen, to consider them as the glass window through which we pass to that which is behind and beyond. You do not waste your time by admiring the frame or casket of some rare jewel, but penetrate to the jewel itself; so, day by day, look through the material and transient to the eternal purpose, the Divine idea, the deep that lieth under. "All visible things," said Carlyle, are "emblems. What thou seest is not there on its own account; strictly speaking, is not there at all. Matter exists only spiritually, and to represent some idea and body it forth." This is an exaggerated way of stating the old saying, "Everything that is, is double." Both, however, illustrate the affirmation of the text.

Look for God's thought in all the incidents, circumstances, and objects of your daily life. Do not stop at the outward, penetrate to the inward and eternal. Beneath that bitter physical suffering there are stores of Divine fortitude and grace. Beneath that trying dispensation there are celestial compensations. Beneath those sweet family ties there are suggestions of love and friendship, which can never grow old or pass away. Beneath the letter of Scripture there is the spirit; beneath the world of nature the processes of the eternal husbandry.

Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush aflame with God.

SATURDAY, July 9.

"All things are of God."—2 Cor. v. 18.

Of here is equivalent to out of. All the precious contents of the Gospel have emanated from the heart of God, so that we may say with the Psalmist, "All my fresh springs are in Thee."

That we have a building, a house, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to which to go when the earthly house of this tabernacle is broken up; that it is possible for the mortal to be swallowed up in the descending glory of the Second Advent; that we have received the Spirit as earnest of our future glory; that we shall be one day at home with the Lord; that One died for all that the dominion of the self-life should be destroyed, and that they should henceforth live, not to themselves, but to Him; that it is possible to become a new creation in Christ; that God is already reconciled to the world of men, and is only waiting for them to be reconciled to Him; that He hath committed to men the ministry of reconciliation, and commissioned them to be his ambassadors; that it is possible for us to be the righteousness of God in Jesus—all these things have issued from his heart of love.

"O for a soul as wide as the outmost circle of the highest heaven that containeth all, to contain his love! O world's wonder! O what a sight to be up in heaven, in the fair orchard of Paradise!"

Just Published.—Our Daily Homily. by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Vol. I., Genesis—Ruth. (1/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan and Scott). Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job, will be ready shortly, and will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

HOME MISSIONS.

Welsh Forward Movement.

THE general superintendent of this mission, Rev. J. Pugh, has issued his annual report. The movement is now seven years old, and pro.ress has marked every year of its existence. In 891-2 there were six mission centres, all in Gla.norganshire. In 1893-4 there were thirteen in Gla.norgan, five in Monmouth, one in North Wales, and ne in London, or twenty in all. In 1895-6 there were eventeen in Glamorgan, ten in Monmouth, two in Jorth Wales, one in Mid-Wales, and one in London, r thirty-one in all. In 1897-8 we find eighteen in Glamorgan, eight in Monmouth, three in North Vales, one in Mid-Wales, and one in London, or hirty-one in all. In 1896 two of the Monmouthhire centres went off the funds, so that there were nly eight centres in that county last year, as against en in 1896.

What proves that the movement is raised of God s that poor sinners flock to hear the Gospel from he lips of its missionaries, and are being converted o God through their agency. These sure signs have ever been withheld from the movement.

At the close of 1892 there were 2680 adherents, 33 communicants, 1161 Sunday-school scholars, nd total collections towards all purposes of £1584 4s. 11d. At the close of 1897 there were 4,000 adherents, 1800 communicants, 4720 Sunday-school scholars, and total collections towards ll purposes of nearly £5000 after grants and loans ad been deducted, or over £2 10s. per head per nember.

Last year was not as fruitful as some of the previous years in the way of planting new centres, or et of additions to the number of communicants in he various centres. Yet progress was made, and he spiritual outlook of this year seems brighter han ever. Financially, however, the prospect is ery dark, for twenty-seven of the mission centres re directly affected by the terrible strike in the oalfields of South Wales. Cardiff, Swansea, and Newport are as much affected by the strike as the ill districts of Glamorgan and Monmouth. Already he movement has been called upon to strain every erve to keep its poor converts and their children rom starvation. The heroic self-sacrifice made by many of the staff is worthy of great praise.

In glancing over the past seven years of the xistence of the Welsh Forward Movement it would e well for readers to remember that the membership of its mission centres does not represent the umber of souls won for Christ through the movement. As the advance guard of Welsh Christianity very regiment of the one army of the living God —within the sphere of its influence—has had reruits through its efforts.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—Last Thursday night Sir George Williams, according to annual ustom, entertained at Exeter Hall a number of vomen from the Strand. Many nationalities were epresented among those present. Between thirty nd forty voluntary workers of the Midnight Meeting Movement distributed cards of invitation throughout he district, and between eighty and 100 of those inited responded. One girl made several successful ttempts to bring her companions into the hall, and urned herself into a missionary for the occasion. Several good cases were the result. Sir George Williams and the President of the Y.M.C.A. at Bath spoke.

Mary Wardell Convalescent Home.—This carlet fever convalescent home at Brockley Hill, Stanmore, exists especially for the care of voluntary ases in the metropolis. The benefits which the Home as conferred upon London in general during the ast thirteen years deserve to be more widely ecognised. Most of the patients are drawn from hose classes that cannot afford to pay the entire ost of their treatment; and it is therefore important hat more annual subscribers shall assist to place the work on a sounder financial footing. A special effort is in progress to raise £2000 to clear the debt nd provide for general repairs. Miss Wardell has been a most liberal benefactor of the work to which he devotes her life, living on the spot, acting as hon. sec. and treasurer, and regulating the management.

Stockwell Orphanage.

MANY thousands of visitors thronged the grounds of this institution on Thursday last, the weather being fine throughout. The collections of the day were given to the fund now being raised to provide a seaside home at Margate.

At 3.45 Mr. JOHN MARNHAM, J.P., presided at a largely attended meeting in the Memorial Hall. The president, Dr. J. A. SPURGEON, was able to present a financial statement which showed that the total income for the year had been £15,237, which appears to be the largest on record. The legacies alone for the year amounted to £5083. The good Diamond Jubilee year has thus enabled the managers to place £2000 to the credit of the permanent endowment fund, which, it is hoped, will continue to grow until the rents and dividends produced half the annual income required. The average cost of each child is £26 10s. 6d. The health report is fairly good, and good accounts come of those who left the institution. Dr. Spurgeon thanked all his colleagues for their faithful service, and proceeded to press home the matter of the seaside home, for which about £2600 had been received. They had sicknesses among the children, and needed a place where the ailing or those recovering from illness could go for some weeks together, their education being continued.

After a short address from the chairman, Dr. MONRO GIBSON said the work at the Orphanage was as Christlike as any carried on. The methods are of a common-sense kind, and all that is done is pervaded by the spirit of Christ. What struck him in regard to such work was that much more is done than can either be seen or tabulated. That is true of every good work—the indirect influences cannot be estimated. Reference was also made to C. H. Spurgeon's testimony to the faith and to the mighty influence of the Stockwell Orphanage. Dr. Gibson said he was also glad to be there because it was a sign of Christian union. All over the country people are banding themselves together for the spread of the Gospel, and by their union they will have ten times the power they had before. Revs. B. J. Gibbon, of Bloomsbury Chapel; W. J. Woods, secretary of the Congregational Union; and Mr. F. F. Belsey, J.P., also gave addresses.

During the year ninety children were admitted, while eighty-six went out into the world. The total number received since the opening is 2083. These came from the various Christian denominations, 830 being of the Church of England and 254 being "not specified." The callings of their parents also show a large number of trades and professions. A second meeting followed in the evening.

The Open-air Mission.

THE article in our last week's issue, entitled "The Gospel at Ascot Races," should have stated that the work thus recorded was accomplished by the instrumentality of this Mission. The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair has issued an urgent appeal on behalf of its funds. The forty-fifth annual report, recently issued, is a most encouraging testimony to the value of the society's work, and can be obtained on application to Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary, 11, Adam-street, Strand.

On Thursday week, June 16, nearly 200 preachers of the society were entertained at Leggatt's, Potters Bar, in the kindest way by Mr. and Mrs. S. Gurney Sheppard, the occasion being the twentieth summer festival of the Mission. The day was one of great enjoyment to all.

Deptford Association for the Blind.—During the sixth year of this work the classes have been the means of much blessing to the sixty members, men and women, who have attended them. Reading and writing has been taught on the Braille system, interesting and instructive books have been read aloud, the Word of God has been honoured, and the social hours have been seasons of joy. Many homes have been visited, with special care for the sick. Two members have obtained small pensions from the Royal Blind Pension Society, chiefly through the instrumentality of the benevolent fund. Some have spent happy weeks in country homes, where bracing air, nourishing food, and, best of all, spiritual benefits, were highly prized. Hon. sec., Miss Cock, 17, Tressillian-road, St. John's, S.E.

Hyde Park Services.

TWENTY-SEVENTH YEAR.

THE meetings this season, specially those on the week evenings, are being much blessed, it being a very common thing to find in the after meeting—beginning at 9.30 p.m. in Hyde Park Hall—a dozen young men come out boldly and avow themselves on the Lord's side. This has occurred night after night, until we find ourselves in the midst of a real awakening and a revival in God's work.

The other evening Rev. Fuller Gooch was the preacher. Over 1000 men were present, and the results were most cheering. Four backsliders were among the number who were blessed. Mr. Leonard Weaver has also been preaching with liberty and power, people flocking to the after meetings, which continue till quite late at night.

The singular part of the movement is that nearly all the converts seen are men. The other night a head-coachman, whom I had met at Ascot races, came to the meeting by appointment with me, and said, "I desire from this night to live a Christian life." "And I—and I also," responded ten or eleven others. They were pointed to the risen Saviour, and his Word shown them. All accepted, and confessed Him as their Lord.

On Monday Mr. W. R. Lane comes to help us, and he will be followed by Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. Edward Glenny, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Leonard Weaver, our old veteran Barry Wake, Ransome Wallis, and others. Madame Annie Ryall is singing the Gospel. We ask the praises and prayers of your readers. The meetings are held Sundays, Mondays, Wednesdays, and alternate Fridays—on week-nights at eight, near Marble Arch; on Sundays we have to go on the grass, as the meeting is much larger. CHAS. COOK.

Liverpool Evangelisation Society.

THIS Society was an outcome of the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1875. Evangelistic work has ever since been vigorously carried on in the neglected parts of Liverpool and neighbourhood, in conjunction with churches of various denominations. During the summer tent and open-air meetings are conducted.

The noon prayer-meeting is conducted daily by the clergymen, ministers, and laymen, and is a rallying point for Christian workers, including missionaries from abroad and others visiting Liverpool, who frequently give interesting accounts of their work.

As time goes on the need of the work is more widely felt. Bright testimonies about the results of the meetings are constantly received. On Whit Monday, at the New Brighton tent, three interesting cases were met with of those who had received blessing in former missions held by the Society. Preachers are sent free of expense to conduct missions, and but for the aid of this Society it would be difficult to maintain such aggressive evangelistic work as is carried on at New Brighton and other places of public resort.

The hon. treasurer is Mr. James Butterworth, 3, Hackins Hey.

North Yell, Shetland.—A correspondent sends us an extract from a letter received from Mr. R. R. Gutcher, an old sailor, who, after having followed the sea for forty-five years, has now devoted himself to service for the Master. He says: "Last Sunday morning I took text cards and tracts and went out among the men in the fishing boats as they lay in their beds. I spoke to them and stayed till I was worn out and hardly able to reach home. I have given away many thousands of tracts, and have not reached half of them. There are just now between six and seven thousand men and women here for the fishing season."

Police Institute for London.—The Central Police Institute in Adelphi-terrace, Strand, was recently reopened, after having been for some months closed for alterations and repairs. The large meeting-room was crowded, a great number of policemen being present at both afternoon and evening meetings. Among the speakers were Messrs. J. H. Tritton, A. A. Head, A. C. P. Coote, J. Cory, J.P., Dr. A. B. Stoney, Miss Dora Howard (from Japan), Miss Macdonald (from Canada), Miss Gordon (of Midmar), Chief Inspector Kirschan (of Scotland Yard), and Miss Vaughan Barber and Miss Johnson, who have taken charge of the Institute as resident hon. secretaries.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Amazon Valley.

THAT the South American Missionary Society made a brave and persistent effort some twenty-five and more years ago to establish missions on several of the confluents of the Amazon will doubtless be remembered by those who are conversant with early missionary enterprises. The missionaries sent out by that Society carried on a heroic struggle for some years. Sometimes cut off for many weary months from supplies and from all intercourse with those of their own race and religion, assailed by external foes, and racked by deadly fevers, one by one they dropped off, or were compelled to return by the breaking down of their physical constitution. Failing to have their places taken by new volunteers, the mission was eventually abandoned, and to-day but slight traces of this early attempt at evangelising the interior of Brazil can be found, though I am told that there are still a few Indians on the Purús who know the Lord's Prayer, taught them in those days.

No missionary society has felt called upon since then to re-establish a mission station on the great river, and whatever work has been done in the last twenty years has been done by the energy, persistency, and faithfulness of those who have gone there independently, being either self-supported or sustained privately by friends. The pioneer in this line of work is Rev. Justus H. Nelson, who, in company with several others, came out in 1880 to establish a school at Pará, and to carry on mission work on the plan advocated by Bishop William Taylor, which aimed at the establishment of a chain of self-sustaining missions all over South America. So far as the writer knows, Mr. Nelson is the only worker remaining who has successfully carried out that scheme, and who has not only been able to sustain himself and his work, but has been able to extend a helping hand to later arrivals, always offering them a home, and frequently boarding them for months, while the

NEW COMERS ARE LEARNING THE LANGUAGE.

Besides the Methodist church, there is a small Baptist mission at Pará, carried on independently by a Swedish brother of the same name—Mr. E. A. Nelson. He appears to be energetic and zealous, giving much time to house-to-house visitation and holding cottage meetings wherever permitted to do so. He was for a time allied with the Christian and Missionary Alliance, but the connection has been dissolved, and he is sustained by a number of churches of his denomination in the State of Kansas, U.S.A.

Protestant mission work is also carried on at Manáos, the enterprising capital of the western-most State of Brazil, Amazonas. Rubber exportation forms its chief source of wealth, and how that trade has grown may be inferred from the fact that from a total exportation of 374 tons in 1880 it had grown to 7523 in 1897. At the present time the city is said to contain 40,000 inhabitants, and is being laid out on a scale showing that the city and State authorities expect an even more rapid increase in the future. The mission in Manáos is carried on independently by a Presbyterian minister, Rev. Marcus E. Carver, who settled there in 1887, and whose work is sustained by a number of congregations in the central portion of New York State. By the contributions of friends at home Mr. Carver has been enabled to erect a chapel, which is attached to the ministerial residence. The congregation also owns a fine lot fronting one of the proposed new public squares, and they eventually expect to erect a good-sized church on the property. Another mission would probably be commenced on the west side of the town if a competent worker were at hand to take charge of the station.

The only places on the Amazon between Pará and Manáos where Protestant mission stations might be placed are Santarem and Obidos, the former at the mouth of the Tapajos, the latter near the confluence of the Trombetas with the main river. Besides these, Cametá, on the Tocantins, and Iquitos, on the Maranon, 1600 miles beyond Manáos, but still accessible to sea-going steamers, might form a good location for missionary operations. All of these towns, which must be considered as strategic points, each forming the base for the supply of a distinct and important field, ought to be speedily occupied.

Yours very faithfully,

GEORGE R. WITTE.

Care of American Consulate, Pará, Brazil.

Mr. Witte, who is going to the Indians in the interior of the State of Goyaz, remains for the present at Pará, awaiting the arrival of his travelling companions, Dr. and Mrs. Graham, of Glasgow.

On coming to Pará Mr. Witte learned that the Indian guide who had been expected to convey the missionary party up river had been engaged by a party of Catholic priests, who are likewise starting an Indian mission; and he further found that the journey up the Tocantins, requiring seventy days' travel by canoe, will involve a far larger outlay of money (£60) than he was prepared to make. Hence the party will be unavoidably detained at Pará, waiting for additional funds to reach them. Mr. William R. Ronald, 24, Mulgrave-street, Liverpool, continues to act as treasurer for the mission party.

American Missions in Spain.

AMONG the various centres of light in Spain there is a little group in the north, near the point of the Bay of Biscay, which just now possess special interest and need our prayers. They are the stations of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, under the direction of Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Gulick who have laboured in Spain since 1871. Although this unfortunate war has necessitated the withdrawal of American citizens from Spain, there is by this time a sufficient number of native pastors and teachers to carry on the work till peace is restored, though there is much to be feared from the hot-tempered ignorance of the lower classes under priestly influence.

It is impossible yet to say what turn affairs may take as the effects of the struggle make themselves felt, when even English people, on account of their sympathy with the Americans, are in constant danger. But there is a little circle of true-hearted, patriotic Spaniards gathered round those mission centres who have learned that some of Spain's best friends hail from the United States, and gratefully acknowledge that it was through them that they learned to know Christ. By such the contest will be heartily deplored, and prayers offered, in which we may join, for a speedy peace. Not only has one of the results of the labours of Mr. Gulick and his friends been the establishing of but the training of the members to undertake home mission work of their own.

NATIVE PROTESTANT CHURCHES,

The most important feature of the work at San Sebastian, where the headquarters are, is educational, for there, without anticipating it, Mrs. Gulick was led step by step to organise a school, which has developed into "The International Institute for Girls," having branches at Santander and other neighbouring towns, with over a thousand pupils between them. Like the excellent school at Scutari, opposite Constantinople, the Institute, to which all Protestant workers in Spain look for teachers, has received a charter of incorporation from the commonwealth of Massachusetts, which enables it to grant diplomas, which are recognised in the United States, and uphold thereby the missionary traditions which gave that State birth. But more than this, it has secured the recognition of the Spanish Government and universities, its pupils having been accepted and awarded the degree of B.A. in Madrid and Guipuzcoa, a hitherto unheard-of thing for women. But so far were the male students from feeling jealous, that when first the girls entered the University Library at Madrid the young men formed in line on the stairs and threw down their caps for them to walk on, while they sang the Royal March. As a Spanish paper remarked at the time, "These girls are educated not only in literature and science, but in truth and virtue, and in the knowledge and fear of God," adding wisely that "the regeneration of Spain must begin with the education of its women."

Out of a population of eighteen millions, only five millions in Spain can read or write! Such is the enlightenment of Papal sway! Great improvement has, however, been made since the revolution of a generation ago, and now there are at least State-directed primary schools, hopelessly inadequate and inefficient though they be. But, though the boys may proceed to secondary institutes in some of the towns, as also to the universities, no provision is made for the girls, who, if they can read at all, seldom get beyond a prayer-book and low novels, for they are not expected to think; and it is over them in their darkness that the priests exercise the power they have either lost or are fast losing over the men. So Mrs. Gulick and her fellow-workers have stepped in, and year after year have turned out victors in the Government examinations who had, in addition to the State-prescribed curriculum for boys, acquired a knowledge of English and studied their Bibles, besides qualifying in the elaborate embroidery and needlework required in Spanish schools as the

CHIEF ELEMENT OF FEMALE EDUCATION.

That among these pupils definite Gospel work has not been forgotten is abundantly evident by the lives and testimonies of not a few, as well as by the flourishing societies of Christian Endeavour, Temperance, and the "King's Daughters" which exist among them. The monthly organ of the first-named would do credit to "Endeavourers" in England, and attests a widespread zeal. Mrs. Gulick and Dr. Clark, it is interesting to notice, were playmates as children, and it is to a visit of the founder that the local branches owe their commencement. The students contribute among themselves enough to support one of their number in addition to outside contributions, and a circulating library reaches many homes. In the Santander school some 200 children pay for tuition, where the Bible is the most prominent text-book, as, in spite of severe opposition, the Spaniards are steadily learning the value of such work.

It would be possible to go much further into detail as to the need, the achievements, and the prospects of this necessary Institute, and the promising condition of the fifteen stations of the Mission, with their eight churches and over five hundred members contributing annually over £100 to the work; but enough has been told to encourage and interest those whose prayers and support are now needed in this hour of trial and anxiety.

BUDGETT MEAKIN.

The Gospel in Mexico.

MR. EGLON HARRIS, writing from Orizaba, reports a visit to Vera Cruz, where he had much encouragement:—"There is not the least difficulty now in gaining entrance to barracks, prisons, and hospitals. In the latter we are more than welcome. We were able to distribute freely a number of Testaments and thousands of tracts. In the streets we sold 141 Bibles, etc. Trips have also been made to Cordoba, Amatitlan, Paso del Macho, and other places in the 'hot country.' We purpose going to Tehuacan, Mexico City, Puebla, and Jalapa. There has been another baptism, and five other professed believers are waiting for the ordinance. My wife and I recently found some fruit of tract distribution six years ago, when Bro. Stanger and I used to go to the villages on horseback. An Indian in Coapan watched one of us push a tract and Gospel through the fence of his garden, and when we were gone he came from hiding to see what it was. The reading resulted in his break from Romanism and subsequent conversion."

The above reaches us through Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester.

Genoa Harbour Mission.—The meetings at the Sailors' Rest on land at this port are far more frequent than they were in the old floating "bethel" twenty-five years ago, and there is an attendance of nearly 17,000 men in the course of the year. While one man will like the Rest because of its comfort, its readings, its games, its songs, or its preaching, there are others who think the Tuesday evening prayer-meeting, with its numerous hymns and plain-spoken addresses, to which they may contribute, the greatest attraction of all. The cosmopolitan character of the work centering in the Rest is a marked feature of the work. Herr Farnes says: "After meeting many sailors indifferent to the Mission, it was a pleasure to hear a man whom I saluted amidst coal dust on board ship say, 'You must be impelled by love to visit us in such circumstances.'" The work is superintended by Rev. Donald Miller, 4 Via Peschiera.

The Gods of India.

By LUCY E. GUINNESS.

"STAY—what on earth is this?"

We have caught sight in passing of a little doll-like object, tricked out in finery, but uglier and odder than any conceivable doll—a preposterous little figure with an elephant's head and trunk attached to a human body, dressed in an immensely full crinoline skirt, and looking like some novel form of an elephant ballet-dancer.

"Mem Sahib," replied my guide with the utmost gravity, "this is the god of wisdom, Gunputti, son of Siva."

"But why with an elephant's head?"

"Gunputti fought with Vishnu," answers the pundit. "Siva, to end the quarrel, cut off Gunputti's head. The mother, Kali, threatening to wreck the universe if the head was not restored, Siva promised to do it, but the head could not be found, so he gave him that of the first animal they met—an elephant."

"An elephant is wise too?"

"Very wise, Mem Sahib. Gunputti is invoked by travellers and scholars. His name is written at the head of philosophic books."

We look at the pantomime doll again—its foolish gown, its ponderous proboscis curling down among the spangles. Yes, it is quite true; India worships this. This is a fair example of her innumerable gods—the gods of Hinduism—that all-inclusive all-accommodating cult, "a religion which unites the grossest possible idolatry, in the most horrible and degraded forms, with a very high development of philosophy; a faith that covers and includes monotheism, polytheism, atheism, morality and immorality, ceremonial, non-ceremonial, no rites or any amount of ritual—binding its followers inflexibly together like columns of the hardest adamantine stone."

From the Golden Temple and Lake of Immortality in Northern India, down to the Bombay shrines we are visiting to-day, and away across the continent, till it meets the faith of Buddha in Burmah, the Himalayas, and Ceylon, this ancient idolatry still reigns—reigns over more than five times as many men and women as there are in the United Kingdom at this hour.

Dozens and scores of people, mostly men and boys (for very few women are anywhere to be seen) gather round us whenever we stop our gari and get down with the guide to see what Hindu temples actually are. Sometimes the shrine is very sacred, no European being allowed within; sometimes a considerable temple, with little shrines around it, a handsome pillared entrance, shaven priests, and the perpetual bull gazing unconsciously towards the central idol. Worshippers pour water over the stone bull's back.

"Why do they do that?" I ask. "Worship," is the answer.

"What use is it when he can't feel?"

"It is the system."

This is the constant reply to every query as to underlying reasons. Always the same thing over again.

"Why do you have a stone bull here?"—"It is written in the Puranas."

"Why do they ring the bell?"—"It is a kind of sign of worshipping the god.

"Can the god hear the bell?"—"I cannot answer that question."

"But do you think that he can hear?"—"I would rather not say."

You turn to another—"Do you think he can hear?"—"No."

"Then why do you ring the bell?"—"It is the system."

"It is written in the Vedas, 'Ring the bell,'" explains my guide. He is himself a scholar, teaches Marathi in the mission-house, and sees the folly of idolatry, and yet remarks all the same—"It is the system."

One wayside temple is very pretty: green trees outside, a verandah over the lofty entrance, and a young fellow in red and green and purple looking down; a quiet spot with little birds flitting past and a large tree in leaf in the courtyard. The tinkle of the soft bell shows the whereabouts of the idol. A group of men round the door are excitedly discussing the marriage question. Near the priest's house on the courtyard a cow is tethered to the tree. Women, with the usual pretty figures, pass here and there, and children, bright, wee creatures with jewelled nose-rings, are playing about. They seem to do so freely all over the sacred precincts. The latter are dark and gloomy, wooden pillars supporting the low roof, fresco pictures on the wall representing grotesque gods variously occupied; glass candle-bowls hang from the ceiling, and a decorated canopy stretches over the idol.

"What is this building at the side?" I ask. "Places for holy men—poor men" (pilgrims and fakirs).

"Do people worship here much?"—"Every day, once a week, on the chief day."

"How do they worship?"—"With flowers and water."

"Can the idols see the flowers or the water?"—"No." "Then why?" "It is the system."

"Have you read the New Testament?" I ask an intelligent looking young priest. "Being a Hindu," he answers, "I don't wish to read that."

What does he read—the histories of his idols? "Do you know that, as a Bengali newspaper* confesses, 'abomination worship is the main ingredient of modern Hinduism'"?

Standing in the sunshine and looking into the gloom of the idol hall, the contrast between the Light of the World and India's heathen darkness fills the heart. Face to face with Christ, think of the ideals before us: of SIVA.

"Siva, the destroyer, covered with the ashes of funeral fires, drawing a veil over the sun, and driving creation into chaos." A glance from the third eye in his forehead strikes dead those who offend him. His necklace is of human skulls, and his rosary is of the same; serpents writhe in his hair and wreathe his neck.

Think of these ideals! of KALI.

Kali, wife of Siva, "an abominable personification of hatred and cruelty."

It is scarcely possible to conceive anything more hideous than the images of this goddess. Her body and four arms are dark blue, the hands red, to intimate her delight in blood...The mouth is open wide, and the tongue, all red with blood, is hanging out...The hands on the left side are extended in welcome to her worshippers. Those on the right hold a weapon of war and the head of a giant.

"At her best," writes Bishop Thoburn, "Kali is a wretched idol, and no one who comprehends even faintly the blighting effect upon the heart and mind which the adoration of such an object must cause can think with indifference of the manner in which millions prostrate themselves before this revolting object."

* The Reis and Rayet, in an editorial.

Siva and Kali are worshipped by myriads. Krishna is another of Hinduism's ideals.

KRISHNA.

"The most popular god of India," over the narrative of whose shameless and abandoned life "the Pundits allegorise and the common people gloat," is represented by more frequent images than those of any other god. One of the best known is the shapeless, hideous idol in Orissa—nothing but a black stump with a head on it. The difference between it and other images of Krishna is accounted for by the saying that "his limbs had dropped off on account of his wickedness."

When I was remonstrating with some Hindus (writes Dr. Robson*) on their worshipping a being guilty of such acts as Krishna, they replied very warmly, "Why, these were but his sports. You English have your sports. You have the railway, and the steamboat, and the telegraph, and no one blames you. Why should you blame Krishna for sporting in his way?"

Naturally "his way" is followed by his devotees. "Starting from the worship of a sensual god, they have sunk to his level.....The nemesis of their origin seems to have followed them all." Consecrating body and soul to the god, supposed to be incarnate in his priests, "the worshippers throng into the temples...and in more esoteric worship emulate the example of their prototype, Krishna...But 'it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them'—in worship."

We turn away from the dilapidated, picturesque old temple—home of what thought, of what iniquity!—thinking with amazement that the Church of Jesus Christ still allows this Hindu system to outrage with its secret cult and open festivals the great names of Religion and Humanity. As Carey said a century ago, of those who might be witnesses for Christ, in face of facts like these, "staying at home is becoming sinful in many cases, and will become so more and more."

Sadly we wend our way out of the "sacred" precincts, among broken old stone, fragments of Maroti, Gunputti, and the sacred bull lying about on the ground. In spite of being castaways they are venerated, and the people protest a little when I venture to examine them. Children crowd around us—a sudden swarm of gay mites gathered in half a minute, and chased away by a vigorous old wife. We leave the Hindu "holy" rooms garnished with their small what-nots, with little brass things stuck on them, and gods in gay attire, to visit one last temple—that of the Jains. It is handsomer than any Hindu shrine we have seen to-day. The central building is composed of fine wood-carving, one hundred years old—quite a beautiful structure. Whatever idol lives here they will not let us see. The priest, a quiet thoughtful man, seems to have never heard of Christianity.

"Do you know nothing about Jesus?" I ask him and the others with him—three tall, grave men.—"We have not heard of Him."

"Have you never seen the Bible?"—"No."

"But you must have heard the missionary speaking in the bazaar?"—"No."

Solemn, impenetrable faces! Unknown, unreached hearts beating beneath this calm exterior! I try to tell them something through the guide by interpretation, but he hurries me away.

"They do not like us here," he explains. "They do not like me—a Brahmin. I cannot tell them Christianity!"

A Flemish Conference.—A conference on missionary topics has been held at Terneuzen, a picturesque small town on the Scheldt opposite Flushing, in the grounds of a godly farmer. These conferences were inaugurated five years ago by the late Rev. N. de Yonge, the energetic founder of the Brussels Flemish City Mission. There were two platforms in the grounds, and enormous crowds from various parts of Holland and Belgium, in their attractive national costumes, listened with deep interest to the addresses given by several friends.

* Hinduism and Christianity. John Robson, D.D. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

THE LATE

Rev. Samuel Newth, D.D.

THE career of the late Principal of New College furnished a good example of consecrated scholarship. Dr. Newth was a true scholar. He was endowed with all the mental qualities that go to the furnishing of the successful student—an accurate and tenacious memory, sound judgment, a keen hunger for knowledge, and an indomitable will in its pursuit. He was also an excellent teacher, with an orderly mind, great powers of exposition, and a contagious enthusiasm for the subjects which he taught. But, above all, he was a simple-hearted Christian, and his religion permeated his whole work, lifting the somewhat dull routine of professorial duties into the dignity of a spiritual service. His life was spent as in "the Great Taskmaster's eye."

Dr. Newth gave himself almost from a child to the work of preparation for the ministry. At twenty-one his early industry was rewarded by obtaining the degree of M.A. in mathematics, at the London University, in which branch he took the gold medal for the year. For a few years he worked in the Congregational ministry, first at Broseley, in Salop—where he was ordained in 1842, at the age of twenty-one—afterwards at Stonehouse, in Devon. While here he entered first into connection with Western College, Plymouth, accepting, in 1845, a professorship in classics and mathematics, a position which he continued to fill with great efficiency for nine years.

The chief task of his life began, however, in 1854, when he was appointed to the post of Mathematics and Ecclesiastical History at New College, London. This continued till 1867, when Dr. William Smith resigned his work as Professor of Classics, and Dr. Newth added this to his other duties. In 1872 he succeeded Dr. Halley as Principal, a position which he held till 1889, when he retired, after forty-four years of continuous professorial work.

This summary gives but a small idea of the unflagging mental activity and the arduous industry of Dr. Newth. He was one of the distinguished men who gave their linguistic services in the great revision of the Scriptures. To this work he devoted his ripened powers, and no time or labour was grudged to the fulfilment of his duty as reviser. As an incidental but important result, his lectures to his students on New Testament exegesis were of peculiar value. A more faithful, scholarly, and conscientious inquiry into the teaching of Scripture could scarcely be imagined. The young men were trained to deal with the Bible, both in its general subject matter and in its minutest clauses, as something so sacred that no amount of trouble must be spared by them in trying to get further light upon it. His method was first to give an introduction on the authorship and genuineness of the particular book, then pass on to a careful summary of its contents, and finally to examine every sentence with a view to the elucidation of the whole. This was excellent practice for those whose future work was to teach the Word of Truth, and laid the foundation of a life-habit of study in many a quiet manse and busy pastorate.

Dr. Newth's lectures on ecclesiastical history were scarcely less valuable, being excellent as an introduction to the more detailed study of theology in its historical development. Though his lectures on mathematics were less directly connected with the spiritual side of ministerial training, they inculcated to the full a habit of intellectual thoroughness and honesty, for into all he threw an extraordinary energy and a tireless zeal for accuracy. His conscientiousness as an examiner made it difficult to obtain a high percentage of marks, but those who underwent the ordeal were sure of scrupulously fair treatment.

In his government of the college he aimed at training the students into habits of industry, and encouraged them to work for the highest aims. He cherished the idea that in order to become a good minister a man must be a good student. Those who had the gifts he earnestly incited to go in for their degree, and he showed that he expected great things from them; but if a man lacked the ability for academical honours he was well content with him if he did his college work with conscientious earnestness. Only the idler had small mercy from the Principal; he had little patience with the man who thought he could fulfil the high office of a preacher without strenuous and whole-hearted preparation. Those whose physical strength was unequal to unremitting mental toil he readily excused, if they did their best; and such as were of straitened means he helped with a discriminating kindness good to remember. His manner was sometimes a little hard, but underneath it there was a sympathetic heart and a perfect passion for justice.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.

His personal piety was deep and sincere. The closer one got to his confidence the deeper this impression grew. All who knew him realised that here was a man who held all his talents—and they were many and varied—in trust, and who felt that his time must be devoted to making the best use he could of them in the service of God. This piety was manifested in all his relations, but the time when he gave it full and free expression was in the morning prayer-meeting, at which all the students were present. Then the deep well of faith in him found its way to the surface, and he led the devotions with a simple eloquence that was memorable to all who took part with him. To quote from a sketch in The Independent from the pen of an old student—

> As he prayed his voice mellowed; his hidden tenderness came to the surface; the strong man became a little child; he gave utterance to the elemental needs of the human heart in language that was direct, choice, and full of yearning. This was specially so after his return from the severe breakdown that he had in 1880-81, when he underwent a long and trying period of weakness.

In his more public work Dr. Newth earned and filled the highest places in his denomination. In 1875 he was presented with the honorary degree of D.D. by the Glasgow University; in 1880 he was chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, delivering addresses on "Christian Union" and "The Churches and the Colleges." He also served as Chairman of the Congregational Board of London. Among his literary labours may be mentioned a useful volume on "Biblical Revision," a memoir of his brother, Prof. Alfred Newth, and many articles in the "Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature." As a writer he lacked distinction of style and wealth of imagination; but these defects were amply atoned for by his faculty of putting the greatest amount of information into a small compass.

Theologically, Dr. Newth was a convinced Evangelical. His lectures bore no trace of having passed through any period of mental stress and doubt; but he was well acquainted with the controversies of this and of past ages, and showed that in spite of them all his faith was simple and childlike. It is not often, indeed, that a man so widely cultured is able to retain so unquestioningly the simple truths of the Gospel; and this gave him a hold on many minds who were in peril of being carried away by the latest speculations in religious thought. All his thorough knowledge and accurate scholarship were laid at the feet of the Saviour whom he loved and trusted.

Since his retirement, in 1889, Dr. Newth continued to do useful work in various ways, his chief service being a thorough reorganisation of the Congregational Library at the Memorial Hall. This was a task involving an immense amount of what to many would appear drudgery, but to him was a labour of love. He succeeded in putting the library into thorough order, and getting valuable books of Puritan theology into circulation among the ministers and laymen of the metropolis. Not long after this work was completed his strength began to fail, and though he was busy to the end, he lived more and more in seclusion. He died on January 29, at the ripe age of seventy-seven.

Imperial Protestant Federation. — After many months of earnest deliberation and private meetings of influential Protestants from all parts of the country, this Federation has been duly inaugurated under the chairmanship of Col. Sandys, M.P. Its object is to unite the Colonies and British dependencies with the United Kingdom in a federation of Protestants of all classes and religious denominations, determined to maintain Protestant supremacy as opposed to Romish, sacerdotal, or infidel ascendency in every branch of the constitution and life of the empire. The idea has met with much favour at home and in the Colonies, more especially in Australia. In order to secure united action a central council will be formed, with representatives from each recognised Protestant society. The Protestant Observer is adopted as the official organ of the Federation. Further information will be sent, on receipt of stamped addressed envelope, by the hon. sec., Mr. Walter Walsh, 392, Clapham-road, London, S.W

MILDMAY ADDRESSES.

Spirit-Taught Prayer.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

"In like manner the Spirit also helpeth our infirmity; for we know not how to pray as we ought; but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."—Rom. viii. 26 (R.V.).

PRAYER as a possibility comes of the nature of God; and we may rejoice that every barrier has been removed by the work of Christ, so that there is now free access to the very presence of God. We have only one place that is ours by right, and that is the holiest, the way into which was opened by Christ; and yet we feel that —something more that we need if we would pray. The more I know of Him who has been graciously pleased to reveal Himself in Christ, and the more I appreciate the blessedness of having access to his presence by the work of Jesus, the more do I feel that I need to be taught how to pray. This necessity is set forth in the words of the Apostle: "We know not what we should pray for as we ought." We need something beyond that which is already supplied. It is not enough that God will hear and answer, and that I have immediate access to his presence, none daring to make me afraid. I want to know what to say; and the more conscious I become of my nearness to Him the more I tremble lest I should dishonour Him, and say something that will insult the white light of the Divine fulness, and the tender compassion of the Divine heart. The revelation of the Father and the mediation of the Son are blessed facts, but we must also have the indwelling, and, so far as prayer is concerned, the inspiration of the Holy Ghost.

THERE IS A MISSING ELEMENT

This verse (26) is the centre of a paragraph; from the nineteenth verse to the end of the chapter (and indeed to the opening of chap. ix.) there is one continuous line of thought. The paragraph has its place in the great argument of the Apostle, and yet it is a wonderful revelation on the particular subject of prayer. From speaking of the groaning of creation, the Apostle goes on to speak of the groaning of the Christian, and lastly of the Spirit making intercession with groanings which cannot be uttered. Here we find after God, and thence we are led to the place of prayer, and at length are told of the way in which the Spirit helps our infirmity. Finally, we learn that the soul that realises the intercession of the Holy Spirit is enabled to look out upon all things and say that they "work together for good." So we have in the first part of the paragraph a revelation of the sphere in which prayer is operating—the sphere affected by the Fall; then we have the need of the children of God and of all humanity; and lastly the secret of prayer (in verse 26), and the glorious experience of prayer that grows out of the realisation of that secret.

THE DEEP SOB OF NATURE

In verse 22 the Apostle says the whole creation "groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." That statement follows this—"The earnest expectation of the creation"—not of the creature only in the sense of a person—"waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God; in hope that the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." The statement is perfectly clear; the whole creation waits for the revelation of the sons of God. I feel increasingly that what I need to be saved from in my prayer is a self-centred spirit; we ought always to remember that we are associated with the whole creation. The sob of creation is for God, and is a result of the Fall. The great wail of the dark places of the earth which are full of the habitations of cruelty—the great cry of the great city in which we are gathered—is the sob and wail of all creation for that which was LOST BY THE FALL.

In the case of those who are in bondage it is the cry for liberty; in the case of those in need, it is the cry for that which will satisfy them. The Apostle passes from that wider outlook, and says: "Not only so, but ourselves also, groan within ourselves, waiting"; as the whole creation groans so do we, and we wait—waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body? I live still in this tabernacle that has been touched by sin, and I know every day what it is to sigh for the fuller life that shall come in the morning without clouds, when we shall have the redemption of our body.

Then the Apostle tells us of the Spirit's groanings; and the word rendered "groan" means a sigh, and conveys the idea of being in a narrow place, confined within limitations, as it were in bondage. That is the view of prayer here—the sighing of man and creation after God. I do not say that it is an intelligent cry on the part of creation; it is only intelligent in the child of God when the Spirit

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

From Photograph by Messr. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.

makes it so. All humanity is saying, if it could understand its language, "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." It is the cry of "a child in the night, with no language but a cry." It is the work of the Spirit of God to make the child of God understand its need and the need of the whole creation as well. The Spirit within him makes intercession with groanings which cannot be uttered; and this admits us into which is the consciousness of need in the presence of God. If you pass on, you find that "He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God," or rather, "according to God." So, while the Spirit makes us intelligent as to our need, He has a perfect understanding of the will and purpose of God for man; and, accordingly, He gives us such a revelation of God's will for us. Thus we can go into God's presence by the door opened by the work of Jesus Christ, the Spirit creating dissatisfaction with everything apart from the will of God, and creating an aspiration after all that is in accordance with that will. Then it is that we come to know and confess that "all things work together for good to them that love God...for whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." Thus, the work of the Holy Spirit in prayer is to reveal the image of the Son. In John xiv. 26, Christ says: "He shall teach you all things"; in xv. 26: "He shall bear witness of Me"; and in xvi. 16: "He shall glorify Me."

THE PLACE OF PRAYER,

If the Spirit of God creates in my heart a dissatisfaction with everything contrary to the will of God, that drives me to prayer, and creates an aspiration after everything that is according to the will of God, which becomes my prayer. I am not sure that this indwelling of the Spirit, that this control of my life, does not take away my words, and lift my prayer into a new region; all life becomes prayer, if the whole life is under the control and government of the Holy Spirit. There is a life whose every act and deed is prayer, and this becomes prevailing prayer because in that life God is bringing in his own will and accomplishing his own purpose. Petitions that are selfish must then cease, and prayer that has for its object comfort in immediate circumstances must then perish. A gentleman recently wrote me that for three days and nights he tried to pray, but he could get no further than

"O GOD, JUST KEEP ME RIGHT."

He dared not ask to be provided for in temporal things; the Spirit "made intercession according to the will of God."

If the Spirit is to be the Offerer of prayer, He must come into our lives and accomplish the Divine will. Then all selfish petitions must necessarily end, and the mere asking for anything for our rest here must cease. We must not even ask God to make us great workers for Him. I do not know that there is anything to pray for in this direction beyond "Keep me in thy will, O God, whatever that may be for me." Instead of my prayer becoming narrow and circumscribed, and being a prayer for myself, how broad will it then become for humanity! I shall be for evermore in the presence of God, a priest of intercession, indwelt of the Spirit, for the offering to Him of the cry of humanity, of creation—for the coming of that day in which the sons of God shall be revealed, and the Master shall have that which is his by right.

Now some notes of the experience of prayer. A man may offer a prayer, beautiful in diction and perfect in the number of its petitions, but if it gives him gratification afterwards that prayer cannot have been truly prayed. When the Spirit prays through my poor life, his intercession will prevail over my weakness, and in the sob that is checked there will be a prayer that takes hold upon God and brings blessing from Him. In this way the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. Savonarola said that when a man is truly an uttered prayer becomes almost an impediment. To the praying soul there is this that follows: "All things work together for good"—"ye shall ask what ye will"—what ye are inclined to—"and it shall be done unto you"—generated for you. There can be no impossible thing to that soul.

WRAPT IN THE SPIRIT

The soul that prays thus in the Holy Spirit looks out upon the mists and mysteries and darkness of life, and sees all things work together for good. There is no longer any doubt as to the ultimate issue of the way of life. He says, "If God be for us"—and it seems to him that there is the very laughter of heaven in the question—"who can be against us?" Also, there is a sense of perpetual conquest—"in these things we are more than conquerors"; and he sings the doxology—"I am persuaded that neither life nor death...shall be able to separate us from the love of God." Moreover, he uses those other words which some have been inclined to account for and criticise (ix. 3): "I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren's sake."

The Apostle not only knew the place of prayer and the place of perfect rest, but also had an unending compassion for those who were out of Christ.

In conclusion, the speaker summarised the threefold conditions of true prayer: God revealed, the way opened, and the Spirit given. So long, however, as the Spirit is set aside, so long our praying must prove weak and worthless, and in fact fall back upon our own heads and involve injury in our life. Prayer must either be in the Spirit and take hold upon God, or it must come back upon our souls with sad and blighting consequences.

Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY

began his address with a series of maxims and short sayings about prayer. About forty years ago, while in Dublin, he heard a man of God preaching, and one sentence of his sermon had ever since lived in memory. It was "How much prayer is not prayer at all!" Perhaps it is wanting in faith; and "without faith it is impossible to please God." Or it may be wanting in purity of motive, and the person may be "asking amiss." Perhaps it has not begun with the sweet word "Father," or did not include the petition "hallowed be thy name," or "thy kingdom come"—any time, now, before my prayer is answered, come Lord Jesus! Or perhaps "thy will be done" was not in the prayer. Someone has beautifully said: "The prayer of the unregenerate man is 'my will be done'; that of the regenerate man is 'thy will be done'; while that of the sanctified man is that of the glorified, 'thy will and mine be done.'" How much breath is wasted in vain prayer that is no prayer at all!

Mr. Baskerville, in his little book "Abba, Father" threw out (unconsciously) to the people of the British Isles a suggestion for a new prayer union; we ought, he says, to enrol our names amongst those who do not know how to pray. There is the beginning of the whole matter, and you can just put your initials against the verse in the Romans, and say it suits you. Thereupon, without any fee, you belong to the band of people who "know not how to pray." "Somebody that I know," you can add, "knows just how to pray, and He will do my praying for me, and I will be with Him in his prayers."

A missionary in China, named Wolfe, while suffering from typhoid fever (from which he died), thought he was preaching to some of his poor people, and he said, "Pray much, that you may be taught to pray more." Somebody has well said that

"MUCH PRAYER SAVES MUCH TIME."

Ah! how much we lose by getting up from our knees too soon! Having in a formal way satisfied our consciences, we rise just as the Lord is ready to shed upon us the spirit of prayer and supplication; we must write a letter, or attend to some urgent business, possibly some Christian business! I remember finding on the margin of a friend's Bible this precious sentence: "Prayer is not the overcoming of the Divine reluctance, but it is the taking hold of God's willingness." I do not know any greater proof of the hopeless depravity of the human heart than that we who have been begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead—we who have been signed and sealed, accepted and loved, and covered with Divine caresses, should yet so misunderstand God in prayer as to make it appear that we are terribly in earnest while God has to be stirred into action.

The picture presented to us in the Scriptures is not one of the sinner at the throne trying to move an unwilling God, but of God trying to move the sinner, and, in the words of the great Apostle, "beseeching him by the mercies of God." It is a picture of God's love overcoming our unwillingness. God is, in fact, miles ahead of us—millions of miles ahead of us in his love for sinners—in his wisdom, purpose, and knowledge, and sovereign will to save most mightily, and to bring about wonders such as we little expect. Another sentence which I would mention is, "The man who is powerful in prayer is one in whom prayer is powerful." In the words of Christ, "The water which I shall give him shall be in him a well of water," that was not there before. Not man, not the sanctified self, but a fountain within, works spontaneously, as was the case with the Apostle Paul when he spoke of his "striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily."

A FOUNTAIN IN THE SOUL

Now notice, in John xiv. 16, the word "Another." That word implies a former Comforter—Jesus Himself. Have your minds clear about the work of Jesus, apart from you altogether, but for you; that you may have a clear conception of the work of the Holy Spirit independent of the Saviour, and also for you and in you. You know perfectly well that the Lord Jesus Christ was a Comforter to you in the time of conscious sin; He comforted you with a sight of his blood. You saw your sin and were aghast, broken-hearted, almost dying of despair. Again, when you were called upon as a saint to follow in the blessed steps of Christ, you found the pathway crooked and thorny, and in the time of sorrow Jesus comforted you with his words. Then also, when doing service, and trying to carry the battle to the gate in face of a strong enemy, He comforted you by his presence. Now, consider, what can the Lord Jesus do for his people in his absence? He has been all in all to his disciples, but at length He is going away! He stands in the presence of his disciples, and breathes on them, and says, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." I will not enter into the question of what the Saviour meant; I am quite sure He did not mean to give his disciples the power of absolution, though the next verse is "whosesoever sins ye forgive," etc. Long before that the Lord gave the power of binding and loosing, not to the twelve but to the seventy. I will not say whether they received the Spirit when the Lord said the words, "Take the Holy Ghost," but I will turn over one leaf in my New Testament and show you what the disciples did—they began to PRAY FOR THE HOLY GHOST.

With one accord, and unceasingly, with the women, they engaged in supplication in the upper chamber (Acts i.). They would not let God go until He had blessed them. So I believe that the Lord Jesus, in the initial stage of our Christian experience, does something for us, and then, quite naturally, we should pray for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost. One man tells me that he cannot pray for what he has got—he has the Holy Ghost. I tell him to go to the Scriptures and see the Apostle Paul praying for the Ephesians that God would give them the Spirit of wisdom in the knowledge of Him; he did not say that they had the Spirit. I believe in the indwelling and the outpouring; I believe there is such a thing as the Holy Spirit falling upon men to-day. We want a great revival, and we will never get it till God opens the windows of heaven and pours out the blessing.

Up to the time of Pentecost there was comparatively little prayer, and there is but slight record of such in the Scriptures; but when the Spirit was given the condition of things underwent a great change. When the disciples prayed for the Spirit He came, and from that day they prayed in the Spirit. Praying in the Spirit was the Spirit praying in them. When they had the Spirit they had more of Jesus than before—the Spirit at once threw floods of light upon Jesus. When praying in the Holy Ghost we have some new experiences; we learn that we have a new place of prayer; having boldness, we enter into the holiest. This gives glory to our praying. Many have a clear Gospel, but a great hankering after ritual because of its effect upon their minds. I never heard such a pure Gospel as that of Father Ignatius, but his ritual is beyond that of the Roman Catholic. I would say to such, "You are not half High Church enough—go higher, and smell the fragrant incense, hear the enchanting music, and have a sight of the High Priest, clothed in garments more costly than ever were wrought upon earth:

Where high the heavenly temple stands,
The House of God not made with hands.

In some concluding words the speaker said that (2) the Holy Ghost also teaches us a new plan of prayer. When you pray, do you pray for workers in distant lands? Again, we have (3) a pattern of prayer, and (4) a new power of prayer. The more we get filled with the Holy Ghost, who "searches the deep things of God," and "knows the mind of God," the more influential we shall be for the whole human family.

The Elements of Prayer.

By Rev. GEORGE WILSON, Edinburgh.

"If a man love Me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make our abode with him."—John xiv. 23.

I am perfectly sure, apart from this audience, that there are thousands of hearts in Scotland to-day thanking God that Mildmay has been led by the Spirit to make prayer the subject of conference. The modern Church is very largely losing the secret of prayer. By the emerging of new questions and the hurry of life it is being crowded out; by modern speculation in the realm of spiritual realities, on many sides, it is being doubted out; and, by culture that does not understand itself, in many ways it is being refined out.

If I can read my own age, it is this. Men are not now burdened with human souls, but with problems; they are not now burdened with what they preach, but with the way of preaching it. But preaching, in the Word of God, never means how you preach it; it means the thing you preach. So it is with prayer. I do want the sweetest manners and the purest culture with me on my knees before God; I want to carry into my still hour the courtesy of a human heart. But I had rather pray with a man who could not make an English sentence stand straight upon its legs, if his heart were in it, than with a man of the finest diction whose prayer consisted entirely of his diction. If the Church would be saved, we will have to grapple with this great question of Christian prayer in more than one conference.

I take my subject just as it has been given me in the Conference programme. At the same time I plead for a large freedom for my own heart and yours when we go into the presence of God. Sometimes it may be a note of adoration; sometimes a note of confession; sometimes a note of thanksgiving, or a note of petition. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty"; and I do not want to bind myself to any in which I am to address my Heavenly Father. What lies on my heart most impressively I want most impressively to pray about. Therefore I do not ask you to take any particular order and say you will have no other order. But I do say that these elements given to us in the programme are the outstanding elements of true Christian prayer. God's servants who drew it up have evidently been guided by the Spirit to do a thing that I am afraid many in the modern Church have lost the art of—putting first things first. Do not think that is a commonplace; it is one of the most essential things in the Kingdom of God. It is first God coming down to me, then my coming up to God; first God saving me and then sanctifying me. The effort of many to sanctify unsaved people is one of the most sad things I know.

CUT AND DRIED ORDER

The first thing about prayer is Surrender. I do not suppose I am speaking to many, perhaps not to any, unsurrendered souls to-day. But if I am, I would say, "My brother, my sister, I could as easily teach a blind man the law of colour, or a deaf man the law of music, as I could teach you the law of prayer." Not only so; there must be a daily surrender for sanctity, for the moulding of the Spirit of God, the transforming of this twisted and warped character of ours into the perfect image of the Lord Jesus Christ. And that must go on between God and the soul as regularly as a man's rising from his couch to begin his day's life. There must also be definite surrender that God has given us to do. And there must be surrender in submission to all these dispensations and disciplines that come to the Christian every day. When you rise from your bed with headache or toothache, go to your knees and ask God's grace to bear it without a single murmur. Above all, surrender to God for the gift of prayer. What do you do in the silent moment when you enter God's house of prayer for worship? Whatever you do, do this: surrender yourself to God for the gift of worship, and you will find that that silent moment flings its sweetness over the whole service.

FOR ANY PARTICULAR SERVICE

We come next to Waiting on God. Surrender is an act. Waiting on God is an attitude of the redeemed soul towards its Heavenly Father, its Saviour, and the Holy Spirit. It is not a thing that comes by itself; it needs to be cultured. Ay, but it is easier to study a sermon, or to take off your coat and tackle a bit of work, than to wait on God. It is a Christian art not taught by man, but by the Holy Spirit. I cannot go into it fully, but there are one or two things I am quite sure of. If we are to wait on God, we must practise the Lord's presence; to know that presence and realise it, to feel it and live in it. Then we must

TARRY THE LORD'S LEISURE.

How often I have wished that God was in a hurry with some blessing that I wanted! I thought that because I was in a hurry to get it He should be in a hurry to give it. Be patient with God. Do not ask for the fruit before He sees fit to give it. Do not ask for the withdrawing of what you would like to get rid of until it has wrought its blessed discipline in your heart; then the Lord will take it away.

Then may I say, without being in the least irreverent, cultivate the Lord's convenience. I have often laid down on my bed in weakness and weariness, breaking my heart about the coming Sunday, lest I should not be able to go and speak to the people God had given me to help. What peace and joy have come to one's heart when one has grace to say: "If I never preach to another human soul again, He has a purpose with me; I will tarry his convenience. If it is to go home, I will go; if it is to stay, I will stay. My Father knows, and in that knowledge I want to rest."

Another thing I venture to say. Show the Lord that you are giving Him your best in prayer. When I began to be a minister I was very foolish, like most young ministers. Sometimes the light came —you know those wandering gleams when, perhaps, you can do more work in five minutes than in other circumstances in half an hour. As a boy I used to fish, and when "the rise was on" then was the time to make the most of your opportunity. So when the rise was on I used to say, "Now I must seize my pen and manuscript, and do my very best for God." But it was not very long until He taught me a far better lesson. When the light is on, with brain clear and insight true,

GIVE THAT TO GOD IN PRAYER.

Give the best of your time and your alertness to God, and you will find that is one of the paying things in the Christian life. I had rather not pray at all than keep my weary hour for God. He did not keep his weary hour for me. He gave me his very best, and I want to give Him my best.

Just a word about the Divine side of waiting on God. My waiting on Him will never come up to his waiting on me. When I wait on Him truly it is all his work. Never for a moment dream that your waiting on your Father can match with his waiting upon his child.

I can only mention the other subjects: adoration, confession, thanksgiving, petition. Let me say this in general: As you value reality be real in your prayer. Never utter a sentence of adoration if you are not in an adoring frame of mind. And so with the others. What does Adoration mean? That hunger of the heart for a higher than myself, and the discovery that that God is higher than the highest. Oh, the joy of of finding out that I know where I can go to, and beyond that I can never go. I am sure that sometimes you will get such a vision of God that the Holy Spirit will not let you at one single session of prayer do anything else but pour out your heart in adoration; the time you have will be all too short to exhaust the adoration of your heart.

FINDING OUT THE HIGHEST;

The Divine side of this must not be overlooked. God is not only the self-sufficing One in Jesus Christ, but the self-revealing One. The longer I live the more I see how little I depend on the things I have found out, and how wholly I depend on the things my Father has told me.

I want to give you a warning about Confession. Never speak the language of a broken heart if your heart is not broken; rather be dumb. The realm of reality in prayer is one of the greatest things about it. But one thing we can all do. We can always coincide with God's judgment concerning the load and loathsomeness of human sin. Do we not all long to know sin as Jesus Christ knew it? What a knowledge He had of sin, just through his ineffable purity. We get our knowledge mostly from contrasts; but I am not pure enough to know all about sin, so I want to get nearer and nearer my Master, and in union and communion with Him to get into something of the knowledge of its loathsomeness. The Divine side of this is that we need God to tell us where we are and what we are. God will come down to-day and search our hearts, and tell us just where and what we are in the spiritual life, and it will be worth coming to Mildmay if He does that.

Why does the Scripture so emphasise Thanksgiving? Because a man never possesses and enjoys a gift

TILL HE ACKNOWLEDGES IT.

Thankfulness is the seal of possession and enjoyment, so in prayer never forget thanksgiving. In this matter one must be very careful to distinguish between what we like and what we need. I gave a gift to a little friend of mine not long ago, and his mother said, "I want you to thank Mr. Wilson." Perfect silence. "Won't you thank Mr. Wilson?" Perfect silence. "Do you refuse to thank him?" Then tears came to his help (thank God for tears!), and the boy said, "Mother, I do not like it." Dear wee man! it was beautiful. I took him in my arms and said, "What would you like?" "I would not like that; I would like a lamb." "You shall have a lamb by to-morrow morning's post." I was able to say that without doing any harm to the boy. The Lord has often sent me the thing I did not like. He has laid me aside, and I did not like it; given me pains, and I did not like it; till I had a struggle to say: "I want to thank you, whatever you send." What rest and peace and joy came into one's life then.

Then as to Petition; what are we to pray for? The Scripture says we are to pray for everything, and I believe it with my whole soul. I will tell you the law by which I go. I will pray for everything that lies within the purchase of the blood of Christ; anything that lies outside that purchase I do not need, and I will not ask for, if God will give me grace.

Let me close by saying that I have in my experience (and I know you have in yours) been led to withdraw many prayers. Do you know about that you would never pray again? You were led very earnestly to plead them before God, but the day came when you saw it was your duty and privilege and joy to withdraw them. Paul never prayed again about the thorn in the flesh. He would not trouble the Lord any more about it after He said, "My grace is sufficient." I have had to withdraw many prayers—prayers about one's personal health, and to say to God: "Perhaps I can serve you better in wretched health than as a strong man." Do not be guided in this matter by me or by any other, but as God guides you let Him have such charge of your life that it will be entirely in his hands.

WITHDRAWN PRAYERS

I wonder why the friends who prepared the programme did not put into it the element of Intercession. I can only remind you of what Michael Angelo once said to his students when walking round his studio examining their work in the morning. He took a piece of chalk and wrote over one canvas Amplius—wider. Our prayers must be wider. We were told last night that a praying man is a great traveller; do not forget that when you are considering the elements of prayer.

The Conditions of Prayer.

By Rev. C. G. MOORE.

The story of the prayer of Jairus for his daughter and the answer of Jesus Christ, as told in Mark v., conspicuously presents to us most of the conditions of prayer mentioned in our programme to-day. Faith, abiding, importunity, are all present in it; obedience and purity also come within sight. The conditions of prevailing prayer are not only brought before us in actual combination, but in a combination that is perpetually recurring in the hearts and lives of those who pray. I would not suggest that all prevailing prayer is after this pattern, but he who can pray thus will not find it difficult to practise the blessed art of prayer in other departments.

In verse 23 this ruler said, "Lay thy hands on her that she may be healed and she shall live." No one prays in this fashion in whose soul there are not mighty things. What were the elements out of which sprang so straight, so intense, so earnest a prayer as this? We have here a soul in bare contact with

THE HARD FACTS OF NEED.

"My little daughter lieth at the point of death." No illusion, no vain hope stood between the father's heart and the great fact that his child was dying. There was also the despair of all help but Christ. He was shut up to the Saviour. There was also great confidence. We do not know how Jairus learned this faith, but here it is:—"She shall live."

Let us lay emphasis on the first point. We do not like to face the facts in our own life, in our home, in our business, in our churches. I believe nothing is wanted among us more than the surrender of our hearts to Jesus Christ to feel the facts as He feels them, and to realise them as He does. There are fond parents who will refuse to know the facts about their children until great disaster and sorrow come. How much weakness in prayer and in other ways come because we will not know the truth.

Years ago I was asked to take some interest in and counsel and guide a particular piece of Christian work. There was a great deal going on in loving, kind service, there was any amount of money available and yet there was no real prosperity. A very slight acquaintance with the work made it clear to me that the whole thing was wrong from the spiritual standpoint. The issue was: Would those concerned be willing to come down to the facts about the work as God saw them? We do so like and to stand well in the eyes of the world. We do not like to seem a failure. God gave us grace to say: "Nothing can be done here unless you allow this whole thing to go to wreck and come down to what it is before God. If you do that God will join Himself to the work." They consented. From that hour God was there, and has never ceased to work since; there has been great prosperity. Will you let God take you into the facts as He sees them about yourself, your home, your children, your work? Then you will be able to pray as this man prayed.

TO KEEP UP APPEARANCES

Jesus went with Him. What was committed to Him intelligently, honestly, and in simple faith Christ undertook in a moment. Here we have the pivot of prayer. There is the prayer that precedes the consciousness and the assurance that God has undertaken for us, that He has turned his face with us to go to some goal of our desire. This only will save the heart from breaking. People talk of

A REFLEX BENEFIT OF PRAYER.

I would not give many shillings for it. It would not be much help to me in my life, at any rate. As I put my hand out in some great agony, thank God there is another hand to take it. Jesus joins Himself to us, and prayer means fellowship with Him as we walk toward the blessed goal.

A godly father once told me that he had been praying for his boy. The first thing I heard about him after that was that he had run away from home. God had to take that father into the facts. Five minutes' real prayer would bring a mighty earthquake into some of our lives, and would overturn our false illusions. Last year I met that father, and he told me of God's goodness. He had never had an anxious moment since then. Christ had assured him that He would go with him, and never leave him till He had blessed him. That kept his heart from breaking, and prepared him for the long walk with Jesus that stood between him and that glad hour when Christ would fulfil his prayer. Many of the conditions of successful prayer belong to that long interval. How the slow, deliberate walk of the Saviour amidst the crowd must have tried the man's heart. But Christ would not be hurried. Then there was the healing of the woman with an issue of blood. All the agony of the father's heart would not tempt Christ to leave that woman until He had filled her cup to overflowing.

Then there came the great test. The very thing that the father feared happened. As he looks at the slow lingering movement of the Saviour the message comes that the child is dead. "Trouble the Master no more"; why it was

THE VERY TIME TO TROUBLE HIM.

If you are trusting Christ about something the very worst you fear will probably happen, but Christ knows the issue; fear not. When He has undertaken, and when the soul is clinging to Him, what is there to be afraid of? Devils? No. The world? No. Death? No. Nothing but doubt in God—doubting that the Saviour who has started on the journey with you will fail or faint. God will not carry out our little beginnings. He will let death come in and sweep them all away.

You remember there was a great crowd and a great stir in the house. Christ put them all out. I always enjoy that bit. Christ does everything splendidly. He was not going to have the joy of that happy hour spoiled by a gaping, staring crowd. With some of his disciples, and the father and mother, they enter the death chamber, and the prayer that began in an agony ends in an ecstasy. And so it does to-day.

I want to leave one thing with you. I do not care what there is in your life that is dark, difficult, sorrowful, perplexing—Christ offers to undertake it. You may go forth in the holy fellowship of prayer and confidence and surrender. He will hold you up and keep your heart from breaking, until you come to your upper room. But you must begin here. Will you go to Christ afresh and say: "My Saviour, I gave my heart to Thee long ago; I did not quite understand all that it meant then. I see now it is to feel as Thou dost, to despair of all but God?" He does want men and women who have no confidence in anything in the universe but Himself. He will honour that confidence. Shall we let God thrust us out from the wretched illusion of false confidence? Then we shall pray and He will hear and answer and undertake.

Encouragements to Prayer.

By Rev. D. J. STATHER HUNT.

God would not command us to pray without ceasing unless He meant to encourage us. Whatever our need, we may pray like Jacob beside the brook Jabbok, like Moses in the battle, like Nehemiah waiting at table, like David with his sheep, like Nathaniel in his garden, like Peter in prison, and when, as with Stephen, the gates of glory open before us. There is no time and no place which may not be a Bethel to God's children. Prayer should be made as we listen to sermons, form friendships, and enter our professions. Neglect of prayer is responsible for the lingering Lots of to-day, the juggling Jacobs, the restless Reubens, the defeated Davids, the worrying Marthas, the backsliding Christians.

Christ's invitation is an encouragement to prayer (Matt. vii. 7; xi. 28). Not only is there in Christ rest for the sinner from his load of guilt, but there is what may be called a "resting up" for the child of God, so that amid the burdens and perplexities of the day we may look up into our Father's face instead of being bowed to the ground by care. Furtive visits to the throne of grace, in busy street and bustling crowd, will wonderfully help the wheels of life.

There is encouragement also in the promise given to prayer. This is referred to in Jer. xxxiii. 3. And the desire of the heart sooner than it can find expression by the lips; so that He says, "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear" (Isa. lxv. 24). Somebody has said that the prayers of the Church are God's intentions—that is, what God means to grant unto his people the Holy Spirit writes upon their hearts to pray for. Thank God, his people are praying now. Surely the present readiness of men to hear God's truth means that He is about to pour blessing down upon us. When Christ prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me," He was 'heard in that He feared,' but the answer was in the negative. Are there not occasions when we, too, may thank God for such an answer? Nevertheless, He is a God who delights to give and to bless.

REACHES THE THRONE OF GOD

Our own experience encourages us to pray. I do thank God that personally I know something of it. The preacher always knows whether there are praying people in the congregation or not. It is always so easy to speak God's message when there is a Divine

SYMPATHY BETWEEN PULPIT AND PEW.

We sometimes ask for things in the wrong way. When I began my ministry in the East End I longed and prayed for power, but it seemed lacking. A friend, who often speaks from this platform, pointed out that if I sought to be filled with Christ his power in me could be as great as when He walked the earth many years ago. Power is not in the man, but in the Master; not in the servant, but in the Lord. We sometimes lose the answer to our prayers because there is something we are not willing to lay at Jesus' feet. It were better to lose my right hand if He hold but the other. There must be whole-hearted surrender to his service.

Thank God, there is like encouragement in his love. Our very need calls forth his sympathy. He says of us, as of Israel, "I know their sorrows, and am come down to deliver them." When Christ walked out of the garden, after that prayer already referred to, He saw his disciples slumbering in their need, and went back to pray, "Not my will, but thine be done." The Lord taketh pleasure in his people. Is it not wonderful that Christ should have riches and glory and an inheritance in his saints? (Eph. i. 18). God's love inclines Him to give more than we ask. Jacob prayed for food and raiment, but God made him two bands; and other instances of may be traced in King David, in the dying thief upon the cross, and in the prodigal son of the parable.

OVERFLOWING DIVINE BENEFICENCE

Encouragement to prayer is found in the blessing which it brings to the individual heart. When Christ stood praying the heavens were opened; and sometimes when we are so engaged suddenly we become like the chariots of Amminadab, and our souls are brought into the very presence of the Lord. God delights to hear the cry of the Holy Spirit in his people's hearts; and we shall pray with the more acceptance not as we possess the Spirit but as He possesses us. Not only the Spirit, but Christ Himself maketh intercession for us (Rom. viii. 34). The holy Ambrose said that the believer's prayers are like children's bunches of flowers with weeds inadvertently gathered among them; but the merits of Christ's atonement, as pleaded in his intercession for us, perfects our offering of prayer.

Prayer brings peace. "Ask and receive," said Christ to his disciples, "that your joy may be full." We read in Heb. iv. 3, "We that have believed do enter into rest." Therein we have "resting down," a counterpart of the other phrase I have used. It means that, being quite content to trust your heavenly Father, you can lie down in rest and peace. As we give our petitions into the hands of Christ, oh! the calm, the peace, the rest, the joy that come over hearts. Sometimes we learn to know our Father best in suffering. When great sorrow overwhelms, maybe we know not how to pray, but can only cast ourselves before Him, Well, He knows; for the heart of the child speaks to that of the Father. He may, like Jacob, bless us with his hands crossed; but He does it wittingly, and

> Ill that God blesses is our good,
> And unblessed good is ill;
> And all is right that seems most wrong,
> If it be his sweet will.

Answered Prayers.

By Rev. JOHN WILKINSON.

I would rather pray for hours than talk about it for thirty minutes. We all know the essential difference between saying prayers and really praying. Doubtless Saul of Tarsus said as many prayers as anybody when he was a religious man, as distinct from a godly one; but when his eyes were opened in conversion it was said of him, "Behold he prayeth." True prayer is prompted by the Holy Spirit dwelling in believers; but no man should be discouraged from it as a thing beyond attainment, Praying always in submission to God's will, He may lead us to expect a near answer or may require from us persevering prayer for years. My late beloved wife was long a great sufferer. She urged me to pray for her release. It was hard to do this, but I did; and she immediately improved in health, because we were surrendered to the will of God. What interest can a child of God have apart from the Father's will?

There is no credit due to any man for trusting the only Being worthy of absolute confidence. Knowing God's willingness to bless us, and his inexhaustible resources to meet our need, what are the conditions upon which I may prove his favour in prayer? The attitude of the soul toward God in this respect is most important. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is." Some prayers seem to ignore God, like that which was described by certain secular newspapers as "one of the most eloquent prayers ever addressed to a Boston audience." We must bear in mind, too, that communion is of a twofold nature; and that while we speak to God in prayer He speaks to us through his Word. In truly waiting upon God we always get a blessing, whether we have a definite answer to prayer or not, for "He is a rewarder of them that seek Him."

"Every good gift and every perfect boon is from above" (James i. 17). That shuts out everything that is bad and includes all that is good in God's estimation; so that his children have no excuse for keeping the eyes of their soul on the low level of their fellow-men. The first lesson which came to me in that way, more than twenty-two years ago, was when I sought to get a converted Jew into missionary work. Fifty pounds were needed for college and other expenses. My wife and I prayed about it. A gentleman whom I had never seen before heard of the case and asked how much was required. I refused to mention any sum, but he took out his cheque-book, and wrote a draft for the exact amount. That was my first lesson in definite prayer. We sent the man to college, and he cost me an additional £300; but more than this was sent in, and he has been in the work ever since with signs of much blessing upon his ministry.

The remainder of Mr. Wilkinson's address dealt with further illustrations of the encouragement which may be derived from the exercise of faith and prayer, in the details of daily life, and in the exigencies of God's work. He originated efforts made to reach the Jews of London during the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. This took the shape of distribution of 15,000 leaflets in the streets and in house-to-house visitation. At first the papers were not received by those for whom they were intended, but prayer overcame that difficulty. The committee with which Mr. Wilkinson was connected would take no financial responsibility in the matter. Nevertheless, waiting upon God brought subscription of the cost to the penny, because it was felt that the work was not man's, but God's own.

Then came the story of the establishment in 1876 of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, with its daily lessons of waiting upon God for means contributed by lovers of Christ in every Evangelical denomination. The Mission now has from sixty to seventy agents—in the East End of London, in Egypt, in North and South Africa, and in other parts of the world, with several in Russia among the five millions of Jews there. The annual need is ten thousand pounds a year, but from the beginning the work has ever been free from anxiety, care, and debt. Mr. Wilkinson has no salary or private means. Times have come when for days nothing has been received for the Mission or for personal use. Then prayer has been the resource, and there has come some such message as that contained in the little note, "By order of the Court above, twenty-five pounds for yourself, and twenty-five pounds for the Mission." That the idea of the Home for poor Jewish children was of God became manifest by the remarkable manner in which funds for the purpose were forthcoming in answer to prayer. The East End Hall of the Mission has five floors and forty-one rooms all occupied, with an annual attendance of sixty thousand or more, the people being drawn together simply by the uplifting of Christ. Details of work done by the Mission in the distribution of Scriptures among the Jews formed another wonderful record of means provided, and more than a million copies of the New Testament have been thus circulated.

Afternoon Meetings.

JEWISH MISSIONARY MEETING.

This meeting was held on the Tuesday afternoon in No. 4 Room, and had a fair attendance. The chairman, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Wm. Stirling, said, in the course of his opening remarks, that in former years a brother officer had confessed to him that for some years he had abandoned faith in anything, and had never been without the means of destroying himself; by studying the position of Israel and comparing it with Scripture his faith in the Bible was restored.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson showed the link between the Conference subject ("Prayer") and the Jews. There was no recorded prayer of any importance before Abraham's petition for Sodom, and all the beautiful Bible prayers were Jewish.

Rev. John Wilkinson once again in his own striking manner pressed home the claims of Israel upon his hearers. Reading a letter from the late Mr. Pennefather, addressed to him in 1876, he spoke of the interest in Israel taken always by the founder of Mildmay. He spoke at length of the varied work of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, and of definite answers to prayer. The meeting afterwards resolved itself into a prayer meeting, and was continued till five o'clock.

OUR POLICE.

On Tuesday a meeting was held in Room 5 on behalf of the Christian Police Association, Mr. J. H. Tritton presiding. The meeting was a most representative one, including workers from China, India, Ceylon, Canada, and Australia.

Miss MACDONALD, of Toronto, gave a most interesting account of the growth of the C.P.A. in that city and throughout Canada, and urged the absolute necessity in Christian work of keeping in close touch with the Lord Jesus Christ. Miss FLETCHER told of the police in Hong Kong, and Mr. LONGHURST WARD pleaded for a lady to go out and settle in Madras to organise the police work there, promising to give every help possible to one who would come out as a self-supporting worker.

Miss CHILD, lately returned from Ceylon, told a touching history of a young Mohammedan whose heart had been won to Christ through the meetings held; and Miss GURNEY pleaded for more prayer and for means to carry on and extend the work. A number of Christian police officers were present, who between the speeches engaged in prayer, and several gave bright earnest testimonies, telling of the power of Christ to save and to keep.

POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH ASSOCIATION.

A short meeting was held on Tuesday, June 21, on behalf of the senior branch of the Association, under the presidency of Mr. A. A. HEAD. There was an earnest, purposeful spirit amongst the various members who took part; and throughout a repeated expression of the power and place of Spirit-filled intercession in such a field of service for God. Accounts were given of the branches of the work already opened or opening in Spanish America, Germany, Italy, France and other French-speaking countries, Sweden, India, Ceylon, Japan, and China, as well as at home. The workers are very thankful for these open doors God is giving them, and are looking to Him for the full supply of the various needs. The whole character of the mission is a spiritual one. Gospel papers for postal employés are already circulated quarterly in French, German, and Italian, as well as English.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

A meeting was held on behalf of the Railway Mission on Tuesday afternoon in the South Tent. Mr. T. A. DENNY presided, and warmly commended the work of the Mission to the Christian public. It has an immense sphere of influence. There are 465,000 railway men employed in the United Kingdom. These, with their wives and children, make up a total of at least a million and a-half of people connected with our railways. Everyone travels in these days, and therefore ought to be interested in the work of making railway servants Christians and temperance men.

Mr. R. NIXON, secretary, said there are two special reasons for the existence of the Mission: Sunday duty, which makes it impossible for railway men to attend ordinary places of worship regularly, and the dangerous character of railway work—on an average about 500 railway men are killed and 3000 wounded every year in accidents. The workers connected with the Mission visit the men in their homes and arrange meetings for them. Much definite blessing has attended the work, and many men have been converted. At the Convalescent Home about 200 men have professed to trust Christ as their Saviour during the last six years. Three missionaries are at work in connection with the Mission among the railway men in South Africa, and one in Japan. Another has been appointed for India, and will sail (D.V.) in October.

Lady HOPE said her experience in the work was very happy. She found the men most intelligent, and willing to listen to the Gospel.

Major LIEBENROOD spoke of the branch at Reading, and Miss MILLER of the Croydon branch, after which Mr. S. G. SHEPPARD led in prayer on behalf of the Mission.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

In the South Tent on Tuesday afternoon there was a goodly gathering to hear about medical missions. The chairman, Dr. MAXWELL, by way of encouragement, pointed out that from the Evangelical Churches of this country and America not fewer than fifty fully qualified men and women medical missionaries were being sent out annually to the foreign field, and that the total number in heathen and Mohammedan lands cannot now be less than 550. There was also good ground to expect a still larger ratio of increase. The principle of medical missions, as a visible expression and illustration of the great healing purpose of the Gospel of God's grace, is better understood and appreciated. The opening up of the heathen world is revealing much more of human misery and sorrow which calls for alleviation, and the seal of God's blessing on the past work of medical missions is his plain call to go forward.

Dr. MELVILLE KEITH, medical missionary elect to the hospital at Jaffa, gave a vivid description of his experiences in the work at the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green. The heathendom down in that district was bad enough, but there were many jewels which had been gathered out and many yet to be gathered out there to the glory of Christ. One old woman of over eighty had found a previous experience of the hospital so precious that when, lately, she had to be received in again she truly said that she wanted "just another taste of Heaven upon earth" before she was called home. On dispensary mornings, though they admit about 150 for treatment, there are generally a number more who are turned away. There is no difficulty about the service which always precedes the doctoring. No one ever complains. Dr. Keith spoke of the wonderfully blessed influence of a hospital like that at Bethnal Green, where doctors, sisters, nurses, all are animated by the one purpose of doing their very best alike for the bodies and the souls of the patients.

Dr. HENRY SOLTAU told of the expansion of the St. Giles' work by the planting of the new mission in Oakley-street, Lambeth. A number of ladies come to help, and provision is made for teaching them what will be useful to those who go abroad. The centre of the work is around the poverty of the St. Giles' district, and in the home visits the doctors find so many of the patients in need of food and invalid comforts that the Mission has an invalid kitchen for the special supply of such needs. Then for the months between March and October the Mission has a convalescent home at Folkestone, where a week or two's rest brings new life into many weakened frames, and where many of the convalescents come under the gracious influence of the superintendent, Miss Brown, and are led to accept Christ. Yet more, provision is made for the little children, and at Brasted bands of the St. Giles' little ones find a week or two's holiday under the best of influences, and come back to their comparatively dismal homes to talk of what is to them the great event of the year.

The meeting was one which left behind it a sense of much encouragement.

UNDER THE MULBERRY TREE.

A deeply interesting meeting was held on Thursday under this historic tree, when accounts of work in Central and South America were given to a large and interested audience.

Mr. HAYTER, who has been labouring in these parts, spoke of the work of the Jamaica Baptist (coloured) Society, who, despite the depression in business in Jamaica, and while coffee is selling for twopence-halfpenny per pound, and sugar for no price at all, are sustaining eight missionaries in the foreign field. The reality of the converts was evidenced, when the small mission church was building and funds exhausted before the roof was put on, by one man saying, "I will take the roof off my house and put it on God's house." And he did it. All the Republics of South America seem opening to the Gospel, and the need is felt now for men to go.

Mr. RIDINGS, who for years resided in Peru, spoke earnestly of the needs of that great country, and bore witness to the loving labours of the late Mr. E. M. Thomas, one of the four pioneer missionaries of Peru. He mentioned the fact that the Roman Catholic Government of Guatemala was paying a Protestant missionary to translate the Word of God into the language of the Indians.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS then told of his recent visit to South America, describing the low-lying coast of Peru; then the ascent of the Andes to a height of 19,000 feet, till the plateau, stretching away for 1000 miles where the descendants of the Incas now reside, was reached. Here are hundreds of thousands of Indians who have never heard of the Gospel. Twice have our brethren occupied the city of Cuzco, and twice have they, by reason of the bigotry of the priests, been turned out—the expulsion of the "foreign devils" being demanded. The labours of Mr. and Mrs. Jarrett, however, were not without effect upon the people, who, approaching their priests, said: "Of course if you tell us they are devils, they must be, but they are uncommonly nice devils." Recently, however, Cuzco was again revisited, and the mayor and other leading liberal men waited upon Mr. Jarrett and bade him go in for an examination, and thus take a diploma which would legally permit him to reopen his schools and give him liberty to preach the evangel of Christ. The deputation assured him that if he would come up before them for examination, they—being in the majority—would see that he passed. Accordingly he did so, and having answered all the questions satisfactorily was granted his diploma, and thus the door had been opened into the dark country. Dr. Guinness described the condition of the people and the lives of the priests as being beyond our conception, the inhabitants living in a paganised heathenism, a superstition unillumined by a single ray of light. The five great Republics of South America are apparently feeling their way out of the darkness and thraldom of Roman Catholicism; and it is our liberty and privilege to stretch out our hands to help them into the liberty and light of the Gospel of Christ.

Lord RADSTOCK spoke very encouragingly of work in several parts of the Continent, especially in France; and urged courtesy rather than denunciation in dealing with individuals.

Sowing and Reaping.

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Gal. vi. 9.

PERHAPS this Divine promise was never verified in a more remarkable way than in the following incident. A deacon of a Baptist church in the North of London, who had for many years corresponded with the late Mr. George Müller, asked him shortly before he was called home to send a few lines of encouragement for the pastor and members, who were somewhat depressed that there had not latterly been many conversions in the church, notwithstanding that the Gospel had been earnestly and faithfully preached by the pastor, the deacons of the church being equally concerned at the apparent lack of spiritual prosperity. To this appeal our revered brother thus responded:—

New Orphan Houses, Ashley Down, Bristol.

DEAR MR. F——,—In reply to your letter, I write a few lines of encouragement.

1. Often blessing is given, yea, even great blessing, and it does not at once appear. About sixty-three years ago I once preached and came down from the pulpit greatly tried, considering that all had been in vain. After some time it appeared, however, that there were nineteen cases of blessing through that very sermon.

2. Many, many, many times I have heard of cases of blessing only after five, ten, twenty years, and a few times even much longer than that.

3. We have not to preach to see blessing resulting from our labours; but to serve our Master. If we see fruit we ought to be thankful; if not, yet patiently to go on in service.

4. The Lord allows us to see as much fruit as is good for us to see while on earth; but the full harvest comes in heaven. God has allowed me to know that my labours have been blessed to many thousands, but of tens of thousands more I expect to hear in the Glory.

5. We have to go on in earnest, continued prayer, faith, and patience, leaving the results in the hands of the Lord Jesus.

6. Lastly, see how little was the fruit the Lord Jesus Himself saw while on earth; yet He will be satisfied at last.

Please to give my brotherly love to dear Mr. W—, and accept the same for yourself.—Yours in our Lord, (Signed) GEORGE MULLER.

These are weighty words, and worthy of a place in the memory of every true-hearted servant of Christ. Mark the issue! Mr. Müller's letter was read at the next church meeting, and much prayer and waiting upon the Lord followed. Within five months of this, and following a special Gospel mission conducted by a well-known evangelist, no fewer than 230 men, women, and young people, without any pressure, and in the absence of any excitement, confessed having received great spiritual blessing, at least one-half being cases of decided conversion.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE special mission in London, which has extended over five months, was brought to a close on Saturday evening by what may be regarded as the most remarkable meeting of the series. The great Albert Hall was practically filled from arena to gallery, a really wonderful tribute to Mr. McNeill's powers as a preacher, and to the unfading attraction of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We fancy that all parts of the metropolis sent their quota of interested auditors, who desired to testify by their presence their thankfulness for spiritual blessing experienced under the preaching of the evangelist.

In the preliminary part of the service Mr. McNeill expressed his earnest thanks to all who had helped in the Albert Hall mission, referring warmly to the work of the secretaries, and specially to the organising faculties of Mr. J. H. Putterill, who "has now gained a metropolitan reputation in arranging united missions." The services of Mr. Livesey Carrott, as organist and choirmaster, were also acknowledged.

Then Mr. T. A. Denny, as chairman of the committee of the London Mission, expressed hearty thanks to the evangelist for his part in the work, and to God for the blessing that had attended his earnest and continuous labours. In some further introductory words Mr. McNeill spoke of the growth of the attendances. He asked all present who had received definite blessing at any of the missions throughout London to indicate the same by rising. A large number responded, and the evangelist observed that such a sight was sufficient answer to any critics who might throw doubt on the results of the work.

The closing discourse was on the narrative of the lame man at the Beautiful gate of the Temple, who received healing at the hands of the Apostle Peter. This miracle is of special note because it happens in the dispensation of the Spirit, after the risen Christ had withdrawn Himself to the presence of the Father; and it proves that Christ, though absent in body, is still as powerful as ever to meet the wants and cure the woes of humanity. Moreover, this man, lame from his birth, is a fit type of mankind at its worst, and weighted with the incubus of inherent sinfulness. The preacher powerfully developed these points, and others arising out of the story; and the sermon was an appropriate finish to a ministry which during the past months has grandly magnified Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the lowest and neediest who will betake themselves to Him through the faith of the heart.

After earnest prayer, Mr. McNeill pronounced the benediction. "God be with you till we meet again" was sung, and thereafter the Doxology, and the London Mission of 1898 was terminated. It took the evangelist some considerable time to say good-bye to friends who crowded round, and to satisfy those who wished him to inscribe his autograph in their Bibles or hymn books.

FAREWELL BREAKFAST.

By invitation of Mr. T. A. Denny, chairman of Mr. McNeill's London Committee, a number of friends came together for breakfast at Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning, to meet the evangelist and to wish him a hearty farewell at the close of his arduous labours. Among those present were many clergymen, ministers, and workers who have been associated with him at the different missions held throughout London; others wrote regretting their inability to attend.

After breakfast, Mr. Denny, in a short address, said that this London Mission really originated at Keswick last year. While there he met Mr. McNeill, and persuaded him to undertake the work which was now brought to a close. I think (he continued) we are all satisfied. We did not see eye to eye in everything, but I have come to the conclusion that the best way to agree with a man is to let him have his own way. The end has justified everything that has been done. During the last twenty weeks Mr. McNeill has given 184 addresses. The amount collected at the various services towards the expenses was £2570, while many private donations have been given. A mission on such a large scale is an expensive thing, as everyone knows. We all have reason to thank Mr. McNeill, and also to thank God for what has been done.

Then followed some personal testimonies by those who had taken a leading part in the meetings. The first to speak was Rev. F. T. Snow, of St. Peter's, Islington, who said he had come into contact with some hundreds of anxious souls during the three weeks of the mission in the Agricultural Hall. The workers had endeavoured to follow up the cases and hand them on to the churches with which they avowed connection. Those attached to his own church had been visited a number of times since the meetings were held. As a whole, the work had been good, and gave cause for rejoicing. Mr. Snow suggested that it would be advantageous to have large movements on the lines of the Keswick Conference in the different parts of London where the Gospel mission had been held, so as to deepen the spiritual life of the young Christians. It is proposed to have such a conference in Islington in September, with the view of following up the Agricultural Hall work.

Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, told of the hearty co-operation of Christian friends in the meetings held by Mr. McNeill in that populous district, and of the great crowds that attended. The question as to visible results, he said, is always a difficult one, and there must be allowance for ultimate deductions from the numbers of those who profess to be converted or blessed. Mr. Wilson said that that very evening he was going to receive into the church, by baptism, some who were brought to Christ through Mr. McNeill's preaching, and he had heard from various quarters of not a few cases of definite blessing. Another result of the Woolwich mission was seen in the greater interest aroused among the Christians in the study of the Word of God, and in the preaching of the Gospel. There is much apathy in the churches, and great need for special evangelistic missions. He prayed that Mr. McNeill might long be spared to his work, and be greatly blessed in it in different parts of the world.

The mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, was spoken to in warm terms by Mr. F. N. Charrington, who told of the unprecedented crowds who thronged into the hall on week nights. He cited one case of blessing as a sample of many others—that of a railway ticket inspector whom he had met only the previous day, and who thankfully confessed that he had been converted under Mr. McNeill's preaching.

Rev. Wm. Cuff, representing the work at Shoreditch Tabernacle, said that Mr. McNeill was not only a miracle of grace, but a mystery of physical force and endurance. The meetings in Shoreditch were held on short notice, but the congregations increased as the services went on, and so did the power of the preached word. It was only when the mission was necessarily drawing to its close that the people out of the slums of Shoreditch and Bethnal Green were found going to the Tabernacle, where they heard the Gospel so faithfully proclaimed; and some of them are continuing to attend, where they can do so quietly and without observation. Mr. McNeill's name is now widely known in the East End, and the sooner he came back to continue the work there the better. Mr. Cuff also referred thankfully to the expository character of Mr. McNeill's preaching, which made it a channel of great blessing and stimulus to Christians. It is a great thing to wake up the Christians, and there is much need for such work in all parts of London.

Col. Morton having briefly testified to the good outcome of the afternoon meetings at the Mildmay Conference Hall, a short but weighty address followed from Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. He said Mr. McNeill is much more than a mere evangelist. He deals with the needs of humanity all round, and it is the most effective kind of preaching. He might be described as a sort of converted poet Burns. His preaching well illustrates the power of the Protestant or Evangelical faith over the hearts of men. There is another kind of religious teaching that seems to be taking hold of a portion of the English people just now—ritualistic and sacerdotal teaching. Some of its teachers are, no doubt, intensely earnest, self-denying, and laborious, putting many of us to shame by the lives they lead. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that what they teach is another and a spurious form of Christianity. One of the best ways of meeting these errors is to show the mighty power of the Evangelical Gospel to regenerate and change human lives; and that is what Mr. McNeill has been doing. He preaches the old-fashioned Gospel, and has no priestly inventions mixed up with his presentation of the truth. If this old Evangelical Gospel is kept to the front, we may hope to see the tide of ritualism and priestcraft rolled back. God speed Mr. McNeill in his splendid work.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL

was cordially greeted on rising to speak. He said he felt greatly relieved at reaching the close of this London mission; for undoubtedly the strain on body and mind had been very heavy. Sometimes he thought that, as he preserved a certain amount of robustness in appearance, he did not get so much sympathy as if he were thin-shouldered and pale-faced. He thanked God for having carried him through the prolonged strain. It is wonderful what God can do with flesh and blood; to Him be all the praise. As to results, he sometimes felt that it was a form of infidelity to doubt God's promise that his Word should not return to Him void. The outcome of preaching the Gospel in the power of the Holy Ghost is not to be stated in mathematical or arithmetical terms.

Referring to some public criticisms on the point of his re-delivering his sermons, Mr. McNeill pointed out that if he had simply given out stale repetitions his audiences, many of them composed of shrewd, hard-headed business men, would have melted away. Some of his particular expositions had grown from one to three, four, and six discourses, so much had his grasp of the theme developed. During this mission he had delivered some scores of distinct and different addresses, so that this work of evangelism is not a cheap and easy thing, viewed from the intellectual side. It is a heavy tax on brain and mind, and unless the truth had constantly come fresh and sweet to his own heart he could not have given it out to others. He thanked God that they had been given such large results, through the channel of what looked at first like a small committee. God had brought them up to Jericho time after time, and the walls of difficulty had fallen down before them. Again he said, to God be all praise.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin, having confirmed Mr. Charrington's report, Sir George Williams made a short statement as to the financial liabilities of the Mission still outstanding, which amount to £500 or £600. He hoped that by the hearty co-operation of friends this deficit would speedily be wiped off, and intimated his desire to contribute towards it.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe repeated a remark made to him years ago, which had been a source of great help to him in connection with mission work. It was to the effect that "God never gives to any one man a whole soul." The point was that there must be fellowship in such work, especially by due preparation and much continued prayer. As illustrating this Mr. Webb-People outlined the course of a mission in his native city of Hereford, in connection with which a local paper instituted an inquiry some time afterwards with respect to the results of the work in different churches of the town. These results were investigated and tabulated by a special commissioner and published. The Prebendary said he had found (what was not known to the journalist who prepared the statistics) that the ascertained results were exactly in proportion to the time given by each church to united prayer in preparation for the mission. Where the soil has been well watered by prayer the question of the evangelist is a secondary one; the truth proclaimed will germinate and bring forth fruit unto God.

The Chairman made reference to the approaching marriage of Mr. McNeill, and in the name of the London friends wished him and his chosen bride all happiness. Mr. McNeill, in expressing his thanks for these good wishes, invited the company to Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Halkin-street, at 2.30 on the afternoon of July 14, when the ceremony will take place. Dr. Newman Hall added a word or two as to the need of preaching the old Gospel, and closed the proceedings with prayer.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Living in Clover.

CLOVER! I can write that word and shut my eyes, and be carried away in thought to a quiet Sunday morning, once upon a time, in the month of June. I am not in my study now, for fancy has done its work, and pen and ink and writing-table and books have vanished. I am walking along very slowly, from Herne Bay to the village of Herne, where good Bishop Ridley, who was burned at the stake for love of the Lord Jesus in 1555, was once the parish priest.

If you look at a clover plant you will find that generally each of its leaves is made up of three separate leaflets; sometimes there are four. In country places it used to be considered a most fortunate thing to find a "four-leaved" (really four-leafleted) clover. It was a "slice of luck," as many people would say to-day (very foolishly, I think, when there is a good and wise Father who carefully arranges everything in our lives). Those old folk were anxious to get the four-leaved clover, because they supposed it to be able to do very wonderful things for them.

Shall I tell you what I think? Just this—that the common things around us are never prized at their real value, and the uncommon things are always prized at much more than their real value. Never mind how beautiful and fragrant the ordinary clover may be—it is so common. It is the out-of-the-way four-leaved sort, with all its magical properties, which people hanker after. This is the way we think about a great many things. Do I live in a back street, and in a house that has small rooms? There may be love enough in that street and in those rooms to fill my heart a thousand times over, yet I am not satisfied. But if I could only "reside" in a stylish road and in a house with grandly furnished rooms, I would never complain any more. Is my father only rich enough to allow me a penny a week for pocket money? Oh! if I could only have sixpence a week, like Tom, Dick, or Harry, I should be happy.

Perhaps I have got a little further than this, and would like to be a scholar. Do you say, "Very good, my boy; the best thing you can do is to try"? Ah! if I were only clever, I would accomplish something! If I had only more time I would learn a great deal! Or have I got even further still? Am I beginning to want to be a Christian? My teacher is greatly pleased, and, putting his hand on my shoulder, says he is sure that God will help me. But it is so hard, with things just as they are. If I could only live in a house where everybody was nice and kind! If only my playmates didn't laugh at me! If only I hadn't got to be quite so particular about what I did, I would soon be as great a saint as the rest of them; but the fact of it is that before I can begin there will have to be a great alteration in my surroundings.

Now, all these are very good notions, but the worst of it is I do live in a back street, and in a house that has small rooms; I have not sixpence a week pocket-money, but only a penny; I am not particularly clever, and I have not much time; everybody in my home doesn't help me to be good as much as I should like (though, perhaps, that's more my fault than theirs, by-the-by); my playmates do laugh at me; and if I want to be a Christian I am obliged to be particular what I do.

I may some day be able to alter some of these things (though not all), but for the present I have to put up with them, and may have to do so for a long time to come.

Well, then, the only thing I can do is to give up looking for four-leaved clovers and make the best of it with the common kind. And the sooner I can learn that "living in clover" means living, as a rule, in the usual sort of clover, or, in other words, in the very ordinary place where God meant me to be, the better it will be for me. Whatever kind of life we have to live is clover if the Lord Jesus be in it to make it sweet. That is the real secret of the whole business.

Oh! boys and girls, I pray you go to Him and ask Him to be with you in everything you have to do—in every place where you have to be. Then, indeed, you will "live in clover"; then, indeed—

> The trivial round, the common task,
> Will furnish all we ought to ask—
> Room to deny ourselves, a road
> To bring us daily nearer God.

F. E. HUDSON.

Quarterly Prize Competition.

APRIL TO JUNE.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN.
   IV. Those over FIFTEEN.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and your AGE last birthday.
5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Tuesday, July 12. The results will be announced on July 21.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do as MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly.

The questions are set from the Book of Acts.

DIVISION I.

1. By whom and to whom were the following words spoken? And why?—(a) Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? (b) These are not drunken as ye suppose. (c) Such as I have give I thee. (d) Why hath Satan filled thine heart?
2. (a) What did Peter do after he had healed the lame man? (b) What was done then to the apostles? (c) Why did they rejoice?
3. What did the shadow of Peter do?
4. Of whom was it said, They saw his face as it had been the face of an angel?
5. (a) Who killed James? (b) How? (c) What did he do next? (d) What happened to him?

DIVISION II.

1. What happened at the Beautiful gate of the Temple?
2. Describe the conversion of Saul of Tarsus.
3. What do you know of the two Ananiases?
4. Of whom was it said—(a) The hand of the Lord is upon thee. (b) When he had said this he fell asleep. (c) He went on his way rejoicing. (d) He was a good man. Give the circumstances of each.
5. Who "did great wonders and miracles among the people"? What became of him?

DIVISION III.

1. By whom, and of whom, were the following questions asked? Give the answers where you can. Describe the circumstances of each case.—(a) Men and brethren, what shall we do? (b) What shall we do to these men? (c) What shall I do to be saved? (d) What wilt thou have me to do? (e) What mean ye to weep and to break my heart? (f) Was it not thine own?
2. (a) How many disciples were in the upper room? (b) How many persons were converted on the Day of Pentecost? (c) How did they show it?
3. (a) What answer did Peter and John make to those who commanded them not to speak in the name of Jesus? (b) How often was Peter arrested? (c) Before what three dignitaries was Paul brought?
4. By whom, and to whom, and under what circumstances, were the following said?—(a) It is not for you to know the times and the seasons. (b) We ought to obey God rather than men. (c) Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. (d) When I have a more convenient season I will call for thee.
5. (a) Who was called a "child of the devil"? (b) Why? (c) What was the result? (d) What official was converted after it? (e) Where did it happen?

DIVISION IV.

1. "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." (a) Explain this simile. (b) Under what circumstances were the words used?
2. (a) Describe the death of Stephen. (b) What were his last words? (c) Whose death recorded in the Old Testament was like it? (d) In what respect was it unlike it?
3. (a) Describe Pefer's vision. (b) What lesson did it teach? (c) What resulted from his recital of it?
4. (a) What were the "many infallible proofs" (ch. i.)? (b) Explain ch. xxii. 28.
5. What Old Testament passages are referred to in (a) Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy. (b) This is the stone which is become the head of the corner. (c) His bishoprick let another take. (d) Make us gods to go before us.
6. (a) Enumerate the different sources of danger during Paul's voyage toward Rome. (b) How long did the tempest last? (c) How were the people saved?
7. (a) What was the general subject of the Apostles' preaching? (b) Why did they lay such stress upon it? (c) Quote a verse in Corinthians which shows the importance of it to us.

☞ The following are eligible for the Competition:—

A—J. H. Archer, Zeldah Albert, Ralph, Ernst, and Dora Aldwinckle, A. Rose Anton, Violet Ashworth, Willie Aston, W. T. Aldous.

B—Herbert Braddon, Edith R. Ballard, Massy Baker, Lillian Blackie, Janet and Elizabeth Black, Charlotte Bailey, Aline and Chappie Bazett, Henriette Bardot, Gertrude and Edith Badham, Teresa Blackie, Mabel Bailey, Edith Bensted, Ethel Benger, Mary Beck, Leslie Bell, Emily Bridgewater, Daisy Bligh, Gordon Bligh, May Bligh, Mabel Birney, Albert Bridges, Gertrude and Nellie Brookfield, Ralph Bourne, Eva Browne, Lindsay Browne, Ashley H. Bowker, Gordon Bolton, Leonard S. Browne, Phyllis Boyd, Charles Brown, John Bott, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Eleanor Chance, Lois M. Craven, Millicent M. Craven, Daisy Rosalind Clarke, Beatrice Cashford, Alice E. Crang, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Jessie, Walter, and Maggie Carter, Mary and Willie Charles, Lottie and Daisy Carmichael, Rosaline Castein, Isabel and Charles Caudlin, Nellie Crawford, Lily Clarke, Bessie Cheale, Henry J. Cheney, Edith, Annie, Mabel, and Ida Cole, Irene Coppard, Arthur G. Cox, Nina Coote, Marjorie Collins, Ruth Coupe, Dorothy Cooper, Kathleen and Brereton Code, Susie Cumbers, Walter Cumbers, Annie Cooper.

D—Dorothy Daintree, Jas. Ernest Davey, Pelognia Daws, Vera Dickinson, Violet, Kittie, and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Kenneth Dunbar, Gordon S. Duncan, Marjory and Dorothy Dyke.

E—Sarah Evans, Muriel Edwards, Leonard Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd, Eva Edmundson.

F—Charles Faillettaz, Janet Fawkes, Richard and Arthur Farmer, James and Marian Fresgard, Eva Fielder, Eric and J. A. Field, Aileen Figgis, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Francis W. B. Field, F. A. Figgis, Janetta, Maggie, Flossy, and Agnes Fullarton, Constance Furlong, Louise Filhol.

G—Bertie and Clarice Gale, David Gardiner, Margaret and Edith Gray, Maurice Greenleaf, Daisy and Mary Greenacre, Edith Grieve, Minnie Giddings, Alfred Gibbs, Dorothy Grove, Mary Gover, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Jack Harris, Edie Harris, Winifred Harvey, Frances Harding, Annie Hazledine, Ella Hake, Dorothy E. Harris, Dorothea Reade Harris, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Edith and Emily Hearn, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Byres Hill, Violet Holford, Alice Hogben, Margaret Hogg, Marjorie Hogge, Louie Hooper, Joshua and Dorothy Hughes-Games, Mena Hunter, Tom, Harcourt, May, and Helen Hunter, Lila K. Hughes.

J—Betty Jacobs, Florence Jennings, Nellie Jelfs, Lizzie Johnstone, Kate G. and Norman Johns, Agnes Jones, Henry B. Johnston.

K—Alex, Agnes, Tom, Isabella, and Willie Kay, Max and Eva Kalb, Cara, Mary, and Ethel Kestin, Eileen Knowles.

L—Edward, Henry, May, and Sidney Law, Nessie and Henry Laing, Arthur J. Lamb, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Blanche Lindup, Cecilia Lichtenstein, Murray Lloyd, Grahame Lloyd.

M—Margie and Gracie Marston, Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Edith Marnham, Margery Matthews, Aubrey and Robert Marriott, Avie Mallory, Gladys and Enid Mather, Dugald and Kate MacGilp, Barbara Maconchy, Margaret J. Macphee, Abraham, Bella, and Maggie Mack, Charles and Geo. Macdonald, Florence Mackenzie, Kathleen J. G. McClure, Sabina Mackintosh, John R. Maconchy, Ada Macnutt, Reginald Measor, Charlotte Millar, May C. Mills, Annie E. Moule, Eva Monti, Evelyn, Arthur, Gwendoline, and Howard Moir, Trevor Matthews, Lillie Mallory, Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Francis Milne.

N—Ernest and Edie Nash, Herbert G. Newton, John, Cissy, and Peter Nicholson.

O—F. A. Osmond, Lottie and Harriette Orr, Eva and Maude Oakes, Arabella Onslow, Sidney G. Oliver.

P—Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, Winnie Page, Dorothy Patten, Ada, Willie, Maggie, Winnie, and Jessie Palmer, Alice M. Palmer, Herbert Parr, Myrtle Perry, Laura D. Percy, J. Ernest Pearce, Eva Petter, Mary, Louie, and W. M. Penny, Clarice M. Peach, Evelyn P. Pechey Vera Petrides, Edwin Peters, Dora Phillimore, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, Kathleen Pincott, Francis S. Phillips, Lilian Pook, Margaret Pook, Rhoda Porter, Mary E. Plumb.

Q—Edith and Minnie Quick.

R—Edward Rainey, Norah Read, Kate Rosenbloom, Olive and Sydney Robertson, Elmina Roe, Mildred Robinson, Cyril Roberts Charles S. Rudge, Ernest Ross.

S—Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Margery Smart, Winnie Stangoe Gwendoline, Gladys E., and Eric Shaw, C. D., T. M., and D. D. Stanier Bob and Dollie Salt, Elsie M. Slark, Stuart Scragg, Bessie Scantlebury, Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Agnes M. Sterry, Kathleen Shepherd Nellie Sery, Frederic tSeth, Douglas Shepherd, Janet Speed, Mary C. Spiganovicz, Florrie Smith, Kate Smith, Flora Simmons, Esther Simmons, Ethel and Jessie Snowball, Betty Stocks, Edward Short, Mildred and Constance Scott, Ronald Studd, Herbert Stuart, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Winnie Taylor, Nannie and Louie Tibbits, Alice M. and Frank Thompson, Harry Thompson, Frank and Herbert Tomkins, John W. Thomson, Nettie, Willie D., and Katie Thomson, James Tuff, Laurence, Herbert, Peveril, and Arthur Turnbull, Neville Tufnell, Edith and Maude Tyson, U—Queenie Upton.

V—Kenneth Vining, Hilda D. and May Vickers, Gertrude Vellacott.

W—J. Wm. and Edith Wheeler, Edith M. Williams, Pringle Wilson, Frank R. Wilson, Cecile, Phillis, and Noel Wright, Edith Wilkins, Edie Whiting, Ada Willmer, Arthur Wright, Eva Winpenny, Stewart Watson.

The Bible Searcher.

No. 127.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Douglas Adams*, Constance M. Atkinson, Wm. Aston.

B—Henriette Bardot, Mary Ballantyne, Florence Blackman*, Janet* and Elizabeth Black, Aline and Chappie Bazett, Lillian and Teresa Blackie, Charlotte* and Mabel* Bailey, Edith* and Gertrude Badham, Allen, Conyers, and Massy Baker, Mary Beck, A. Bridges, Mabel Birney, Nellie Brookfield, Ernest and Herbert Bond, Gordon Bolton, John Bott, Charles Brown, Ashley H. Bowker*, Eva and Robert Browne, Ernestine Buhl, Gertrude M. Bush.

C—Isabel*, Mabel*, and Charles* Candlin, Maggie*, Jessie*, and Walter Carter, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Daisy* and Lottie* Carmichael, B. Cashford*, Lily Clarke, D. Rosalind Clarke, Mary Charles, Beryl* and Gladys Calvert, Daisy M. A. Clarke, H. J. Cheney*, Annie Cooper. Dora and Edith F. Corrie, Edith Corrick, Ruth Coupe, Dorothy Cooper, Arthur G. Cox, Susie and Walter* Cumbers.

D—Harold Davis, Pelognia Daws, Jas. S. Davey*, Marie Denizot Winifred De Rusett, Gordon S. Duncan, Marjory Dyke.

E—Muriel Edwards*, Helen Eardley-Wilmot*, Leonard Ewin, Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Jeanne Fancon, Janet Fawkes*, Richard Farmer, Kate, Maggie, Eva, and Mabel Fletcher, Madge W. Frew, Marian and James Fresgard, Hyacinth B. FitzSimons, Eric and J. A. Field, Francis W. B. Field*, Reginald and Ernest Findlay, Agnes, Maggie, Janetta, and Flossie Fullarton.

G—Ivan Garrod, Margaret, Edith*, and Stuart Gray, M. Greenleaf, Daisy and Mary E.* Greenacre, Edith and James* Grieve, F. and A. Gibbs, Minnie Giddings, Dorothy P. Grove, Daisy Groves*, Mary Gover, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Ella Hake*, Edith and W. B.* Harvey, May and Sandy Handasyde Frances Harding, Annie E. Hazeldine, Emily and Edith Hearn, Ada Heap, Theodora Hill, Phœbe B. Hickling, Nora Hill, Harry and Doris Hodgkinson, Georgette Hoffmann, Francie and Florence Hoyte, Margaret D. Hogg, Marjorie Hogge, Louie H. Hooper, Violet A. Holford*, Alice M. Hogben*, Evelyn M. and Sheila Humphrys, Lila K. Hughes, Tom, May, Helen, and Harcourt Hunter.

J—James S. Jackson, Norman Johns, Agnes Jones, Henry B. Johnston*.

K—Willie*, Isabella*, Agnes D., and Alexander Kay, Flossie Key*, Eileen B. Knowles.

L—Wm. C. A. and Jas. D. A. Law, Arthur J. Lamb*, Ethel Larwill, Nessie and Henry Laing, Annie W. and Alex. R. Lemon, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh, Harry Lowe, Murray and Grahame Lloyd.

M—Edith Marnham, Gracie* and Margie* Marston, Lillie Mallory, Jean H. Maxwell, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Avie Mallory, Abraham, Bella, and Maggie Mack, John MacMurray, Charles Macdonald, Florence Mackenzie*, Elsie* and Dorothy McMullin, Margaret J. Macphee, Gracie McClure*, Barbara* and John* Maconchy, K. G.* and Dugald MacGilp, S. E. Mackintosh, Bessie and Charlotte* Millar, Francis and Alice W. Milne, Howard L. Moir, Annie Moule, Jack Munro.

N—Henderson and Dorothea Nathan, Edith Nash, Peter, John G., and Cissy Nicholson, Amy and Maud Nottage, Valerie and Eleanor Noel.

O—Maude N. and Eva L. Oakes, Sidney Oliver, F. Osmond, Harriette Mina*, and Lottie* Orr.

P—Dorothy Patten, Willie*, Winnie, and Jessie C. Palmer, Clarice M. Peach, Eva Petter*, Mary, Louie, and W. M. Penny, Willie Petter, Vera and May Petrides, Edwin Peters, J. Ernest Pearce*, Laura D. Percy, Gordon A. Pibel, Susabel Pim, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Kathleen Pincott*, Lillian and Jessie G. Pook, Edgar, Daisy, and Alice M. Puden.

Q—Minnie and Edith Quick.

R—Edward H.* and Herbert* Rainey, Nora Read, Isabel and Ellie D. Roe, Cyril M. Roberts, Sydney Robertson, Mildred Robinson, Charles S. Rudge.*

S—Daisy Stanger, Eric, Gladys E., Wilfred, Llewellyn, and Gwendoline K. Shaw, Bessie Scantlebury, Stuart Scragg, McLeod Staight, C. D., T. M., J. H., and D. D. Stanier, Betty Swanston, Dollie and Bob* Salt, Elsie M. Slark Marie E. Sleigh, Agnes M. Sterry*, Ivy, Rosetta*, and Muriel Sherwin, Janet and Sydney Speed, Kathleen* and Douglas* Shepherd, Nellie Sery, L. Skeats, Florrie Smith, Kate Smith*, Edward Short*, Constance M. Scott*, Emily Stuart, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Winnie Taylor, Nannie and Louie* Tibbits, Lucy M. Trotter, John* W. Thomson, Willie D. and Katie Thomson, Alice M.* and Frank Thompson, James Tuff, Neville Tufnell.

U—Queenie and Lily Upton.

V—Gertrude Vellacott*, Elsie Vigars, Dorothy Vigers.

W—Greta Watson*, Louisa Walker, R. Watson, Eva Winpenny*, F. K White, Ada Willmer, Edith M. Whiting, Ruby and Edith Wilkins, Pringle Wilson*, Wilfred Wright*, F. Wilson.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (128).

1. Ps. cxix. 28. As thy days so shalt thy strength be (Deut. xxxiii. 25).
2. Ps. lx. 11. Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee (Ps. l. 15).
3. Ps. lxix. 15. When thou passest through the water I will be with thee (Is. xliii. 2).
4. Ps. lxx. 5. My salvation shall not tarry (Is. xlvi. 13).
5. Ps. cxix. 66. The meek will He guide in judgment (Ps. xxv. 9).
6. Ps. cxliii. 9. I will make all thine enemies turn their back unto thee (Ex. xxiii. 27).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert, Dora*, Ralph, and Ernst Aldwinckle, W. T. Aldous*, Violet Ashworth, A. Rose Anton*.

B—Edith M. and Gertrude Badham, Chappie Bazett, James and Edith Barker, Herbert Braddon*, Edith R. Ballard*, Janet* and Elizabeth* Bridgewater*, Lindsay* and Leonard Browne, Phyllis Boyd, Ashley H. Bowker*, Gertrude and Nellie Brookfield, Gordon Bolton, Gertrude M. Bush.

C—Eleanor Chance, Charles H. and Isabel Candlin, Walter Carter, Lois M. Craven*, Mabel Clay, Millicent and Cicely M. Craven, Guilelma Cheal, Bessie Cheale, Edith*, Ida, Annie, and Mabel Cole, Kathleen* and Brereton Code, Susie*, Walter*, and Ethel Cumbers.

D—Pologna Daws*, Dorothy Daintree, Cecil Davis, Dorothy M. and Willie R. Davies, Vera Dickinson, Claude and Violet Dodsworth, Nellie Dowsett, Kitty*, Violet, and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke.

E—Sarah Evans, Muriel Edwards*, Leonard N. Ewin.

F—Charles Faillettaz, Arthur Farmer, Eva M. Fielder, J. A. and Eric Field, F. A. and Aileen* Figgis, Constance Furlong.

G—Maudie N. Gray, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Margaret*, Edith, and Stuart Gray, Daisy, Alfred*, and Mary* Greenacre, Frank Gibbs, Mary Gover, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Nellie Hatchett, Frances Harding, Edith Harris, Dorothy E. Harris, Dorothy R. Harris*, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Byres Hill, Theodora Hill, Phœbe Hicking, Joshua and Dorothy Hughes-Games.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Dora Joyce.

K—Stanley, Max, and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, G. Norman King.

L—Sidney, Edward, Henry, and May Law, E. Lawrence, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh, Blanche Lindup*, Cecilia Lichtenstein, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.

M—Gracie Marston*, Gladys and J. H. Mather, James S. Mackay, Ada B. Macnutt, Chas. and Geo. Macdonald, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Reginald Measor, May C. Mills*, Ethel E. Morgan, Gwendoline*, Arthur, Evelyn, and Howard Moir, Eva Monti*.

N—May R. Newall, Herbert Geo. Newton, Amy and Maude Nottage, Valerie Noel.

O—Harriette and Lottie* Orr, Arabella Onslow.

P—Winnie Page*, Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Herbert Parr, Alice M. Palmer, Myrtle Perry, Eva Petter, Francis S. Phillips*, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Kathleen Pincott, Dora M. Phillimore, Rhoda Porter*, Margaret, Lillian, and Jessie* Pook, Mary E. Plumb*.

R—Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Margery Smart*, G. Harold Sanders, Margaret and Barbara Stabb, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Bessie Scantlebury, Kathleen and Douglas* Shepherd, Frederick Seth, Annie Shepherd, Rosetta Sherwin, Janet and S. C. Speed, Mary C. Spiganovics*, Esther Simmons, Kate Smith, Flora Simmons, Reginald Skinner, Florrie Smith, Betty Stocks*, Ethel Snowball*, Constance*, Mildred, and Gertrude E. Scott, Ronald Studd, Herbert M. Stuart, C. Bessie Symes.

T—Frances Taggart*, Winnie Taylor*, Violet* and Olive Tritton, Nannie and Louie* Tibbits, Frank and Herbert Tomkins, Neville Tufnell, J. Thos. Tuff, Herbert and Edwin Turnbull, Maude* and Edith Tyson.

U—Lily* and Queenie Upton.

V—May Vickers*, Kenneth J. Vining.

W—Violet and Louisa Walker, Greta Watson, Edith J. and J. Wm.* Wheeler, Edith Wilkins, Arthur Williams, Pringle Wilson, Edith M. Williams*, Edie M. Whiting, F. Wilson, H. A., Colin, and Arthur Wright.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 117 and 118. Mildred Fryer (Sydney). No. 120. Cuckoo* and Maria H. Lister (S. Africa). No. 123. Dora E. Wallace, Henry Wm. Baillie, Jean McNicoll Scott (Canada). No. 124. Dora E. Wallace* (Canada).

Personal.

Many thanks for hampers of flowers received during this last week. They are so appreciated at the Flower Mission.

Vera Petrides.—Please write on a larger piece of paper. I wish you could write better.

Daisy Pullen.—Very glad you are all joining the Searcher.

Charlotte Millar.—Thank you very much for your photograph.

John MacMurray.—Please put your name, age, and address at the top of your paper. You would do better to use lined paper.

Albert Gray.—You do not give your age. You made a mistake in Answer 7.

Aileen Figgis.—You have done quite the right number of questions. Next quarter you will belong to the higher division.

Uncle Tom.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

Sun.	July 3	1 Kings	xii. 1-15	Thur.	„ 7	„	xiii. 23-24
Mon.	„ 4	„	xii. 16-30	Fri.	„ 8	„	xvi. 23-24
Tues.	„ 5	„	xiii. 1-10	Sat.	„ 9	„	xvii. 1-16
Wed.	„ 6	„	xiii. 11-22

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Croydon, June 30; Southfleet, July 1; Gravesend, July 2; Cranleigh, July 2-3; Kingston, July 4; Reading, July 9-10. Mr. Hankinson, Hayes Common, July 4; Guildford, July 8-10. Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Latches, Axminster, Devon.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. Tyler, Herne Bay, July 3-15; Birchington Bay, July 17-25. Mr. H. W. Figgis, W. Brighton, July 9-27. Mr. W. R. Whately, B. A., Portrush, Ireland, during August. Rev. R. Callender, B.A., Whitby. Mr. J. H. Greene, Saltburn. Mr. R. F. Drury and Mr. T. B. Bishop, Scarboro'. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington. Mr. A. W. Stileman, East Runton. Rev. S. J. Hersee, Cromer. Mr. H. Hankinson, Felixstowe. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. Aubrey Bateman and Mr. Cecil H. Druitt, B.A., Broadstairs. Rev. Dr. Barnes, Folkestone. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Rev. C. E. Hayes, M.A., Worthing. Mr. S. S. Tyler, Littlehampton. Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart., and Rev. A. H. Ridsdale, Boscombe. Rev. F. S. Laurence, M.A., and Rev. F. E. Warner, Swanage. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Newquay. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. T. C. Ranger, Weston-super-Mare. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Tenby. Mr. Arthur C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. W. H. Wilson, Colwyn Bay. Mr. H. M. Dale and Mr. E. J. Spafford, Rhyl. Mr. W. A. Murray, West Kirby and Hoylake. Mr. H. Steward, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Carnoustie, N.B.

(556)

Items of Interest.

Home.

The total of the Hospital Sunday Fund is now about £26,000.

The Benefices Bill has passed through committee in the House of Commons.

Captain Sverdrup's polar expedition has left Christiania on board the Fram. Dr. Nansen and a large crowd witnessed the departure.

Raids resulting in many arrests have been made upon clubs in Clerkenwell and the West End. Police activity in the direction of suppressing these moral pests is very essential.

A struggle between the masters and men engaged in the Welsh tinplate trade is imminent regarding the renewal of a concession for a reduction in wages of fifteen per cent. Works will be closed next week.

It was recently stated at the London Labour Conciliation and Arbitration Board that during the eight years it had been in existence there had not been an award made by the board which had been broken either by the employers or employés.

The Council of the Working Men's College are considering the question of raising a building and maintenance fund. The institution is doing excellent service; larger and more numerous class-rooms and more complete equipment are urgently needed.

In view of the approaching millenary of King Alfred, the Dean of Winchester recently said: "Though by some chance Alfred had escaped being numbered amongst the English saints, he was the one unsainted Englishman who had never ceased to be held in affectionate regard by those who spoke his tongue and dwelt in the land he ruled."

The Coal Trouble.—The serious distress in South Wales and the effect the strike may have upon the industries of the country have been discussed in Parliament. The strike has given an enormous impetus to the coal industry in Westphalia.

Charitable Contributions.—By the will of Mr. Andrew Gibson, of Chester and Liverpool, £100 each is left to the Liverpool Northern Hospital, the Southern Hospital, the Royal Infirmary, the Orphan Boys' Asylum in Myrtle-street, and the Caledonian Free School in Oldham-street; and £200 to the Seamen's Orphanage.—By the will of Mr. Edward Sully, £500 to the B. and F. Bible Society, £300 to the Baptist Mission at Orissa, and various other sums of £200 and £100 to numerous hospitals, etc. —By the will of Mr. Wm. Appleton, £1000 each to the Baptist Missionary Society, Spurgeon's Orphanage, and Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE Y.M.C.A. AND Y.W.C.A.

Mr. William Henderson, secretary of the Aberdeen Association, has resigned his post.

Mr. C. E. Derham, assistant secretary at Reading, has been appointed secretary of the Burton-on-Trent Association.

The Waterloo (Liverpool) Association is giving up its rooms in Mount Pleasant, and taking premises in a more prominent part of the town.

It is hoped that before long a branch of the Y.M.C.A. will be formed in Stockport. Already forty young men have intimated their intention of joining.

Within the last three years more than twenty members of the Southport Bible-class have passed on to the churches as Sunday-school teachers and workers.

The first Y.M.C.A. literature printed in the Welsh language, just issued, consists of two pamphlets dealing with the advantages of the Y.M.C.A., prepared by Mr. R. D. Thomas, travelling secretary for Wales.

The latest edition to the Y.M.C.A. literature is the Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A. Times. Number two has made its appearance and is a very creditable production. Its pages show that the Association is carrying on a good all-round work.

The first midsummer morning breakfast of the St. Helens Association was held in the Gymnasium at seven o'clock on Tuesday morning, June 21. Colonel Pilkington presided over a good attendance, and several short addresses were given.

The annual breakfast meeting of the Totterdown Y.M.C.A. was held under the presidency of Mr. Edgar Tanner. The Association is making a strong effort to raise a fund of £3000 required for the purpose of completing its scheme for a new building, and an offer of £500 was received from Mr. J. Storrs Fry, conditional upon the necessary amount being raised not later than Sept. 30.

A large and interesting company of men from the City, South London, and the surrounding towns and villages assembled on Saturday afternoon last, at Tudor Court, Cobham, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. Wilfred Scriven, by their kind invitation. Many were cyclists, and over 200 attended. They were most cordially welcomed by their kind host and hostess, who had provided many comforts and recreations. Various lawn games and competitions were entered upon till 5.30, when tea was served, singing and orchestral music being given at intervals by members of the Kingston and Surbiton Y.M.C.A. A meeting was held during the evening in the spacious hall, and a helpful address on "Temptation" given by Col. G. Philips. Short testimonies and prayers followed, and a very happy season of fellowship was realised. Mr. Scriven intimated that he desired, God willing, to make the gathering an annual affair.

Princess Christian has held a reception at Windsor of the delegates and secretaries who have been attending the first triennial world's conference of the Y.W.C.A. in London.

Professor White, of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, is in London for a few days, and has given several Bible lectures at the new Y.W.C.A., Morley Hall, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Preparation Home. He has kindly consented to give two additional lectures at the same place on Monday afternoon and evening, July 4.

A joint Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. meeting, in furtherance of work at home and abroad, took place in the grounds of the Mildmay Conference Hall, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, on the afternoon of the 22nd inst. Interesting addresses were given by representatives of different countries, including Lady Overtoun, Miss Habershon, and Mrs. Hind Smith, for the home field; Countess von der Reckesom-Voermersteim, for Germany; Professor Szabo, for Austria-Hungary; Mr. C. H. Goode, for Australia; Miss Wilson and Miss Ellen Barnes, for America; Mr. W. H. Seagram and Mr. W. Hind Smith, as representing the English National Council.

Foreign.

Negotiations for a permanent arbitration treaty between Italy and Argentina have been brought to a successful issue.

The King of the Belgians has concluded a loan with a syndicate of Brussels bankers to meet the expenses of the construction of various works in the Congo Free State.

The internal condition of things in Spain gives cause for grave anxiety. Risings are feared, and strong forces are held in reserve which would otherwise have been sent to the front.

The American Navy Department has ordered a fleet to be formed with the object of harassing the coast of Spain, and the Madrid Government has instructed ships to assemble at Cadiz for the purpose of resisting this movement.

The list of killed and wounded in connection with Friday's engagement in Cuba proves that the loss on both sides was a great deal heavier than at first reported.

Personalia.

Rev. Walter and Mrs. Searle have rejoined the ranks of the South Africa General Mission. They are labouring in Tembuland.

Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of the Naples Sailors' Rest, has been holding meetings in various centres in England and Scotland. He will shortly return to his work in Italy. Meantime his address is 7, Granville-street West, Glasgow.

Rev. T. J. Hazzard, of Bow, E., is mourning the loss of a son, a little fellow of twelve years. His affliction was a protracted one, but was borne with exemplary patience and unselfish consideration for friends. The lad rested consciously upon the bosom of his Saviour, and passed away without a pang. Mr. Hazzard will highly appreciate prayer that he and his may be upheld in their great sorrow, and that God's sanctifying blessing may be given in connection with his work at the Lighthouse.

Dr. A. Maclaren concluded, on Sunday, his fortieth year's ministry in Union Chapel, Oxford-road, Manchester. In his Sunday morning sermon he said that he was grateful to God and his dear friends of that congregation for the unbroken harmony, confidence, affection, and forbearance which had brightened and lightened his work. Of its worth he could not judge; its imperfections he knew better than the most unfavourable critic; but he could humbly take the words of his text, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified," as expressive not, indeed, of his attainment, but of his aims. One of his texts on his first Sunday in Manchester was "We preach Christ and Him crucified," and when he looked back he ventured to say the noble words of that text had been, however imperfectly followed, his guiding star.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Tent Work in the East End.

MUCH of the improvement in the condition of the people in East London may be traced to the meetings held in tents from time to time. In 1874 Mr. Charrington erected a tent in the Mile End-road at the corner of Whitehorse-lane. Here the roughest class used to come in great numbers. The services were chiefly conducted by converted soldiers of the Coldstream and Grenadier Guards, who, in their bright uniforms, commanded the admiration of the poor dwellers from the slums, and by their earnest presentation of the Gospel persuaded many to turn from their evil ways.

In May, 1876, the late Mr. Samuel Morley opened a larger tent on the site of the Great Assembly Hall. This proved a still greater success, and thousands look back upon the old tent as their spiritual birthplace. In Limehouse Joshua and Mary Poole will always be remembered, as they preached the truths of the Gospel and temperance in Dr. Barnardo's monster tent in Rhodeswell-road.

Now, after twenty years interval, Mr. Charrington is arranging to erect another large tent (as shown on our front page). Experience has proved that the roughest class of people will flock into a tent more readily than any other place, and we trust that this new effort will be the means of much blessing to the East End of London.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Clitheroe.

MRS. BAEYERTZ has just concluded a most successful mission in connection with St. James's Church, Clitheroe. From the commencement a keen interest was displayed in the services. Mrs. Baeyertz's faithfulness to the Word of God and to the people who gathered to hear her was conspicuous throughout, and resulted in much spiritual blessing to converted and unconverted alike. Some 270 passed through the inquiry room, and there have been many conversions. There is every reason to believe that her visit will be of permanent benefit to Clitheroe.

Mrs. Baeyertz is in the prime of life, and there are few women who have had the experiences she has had—experiences most useful to her in her work as an evangelist. In speaking she is subdued yet emphatic, her utterances being most pointed and telling, carrying conviction to the most obstinate. In these days of insipid preaching and lax theology one is thankful for such a bold exponent of truth and fearless preacher of the Gospel, and I should have no hesitation in recommending Mrs. Baeyertz as a faithful and wise evangelist whose testimony God delights to honour.

Throughout the mission it was pleasing to notice the emphasis that was placed upon the atoning work of Christ. To this, doubtless, is attributable to a great extent the success and blessing which attended the mission. Mrs. Baeyertz, however, needs the prayers of God's children, as she is in very poor health. Twice during the past three months she has had influenza, being completely run down.

ROBT. RAILTON, Rector.

St. James's, Clitheroe.

Evangelists' Movements.

MUCH interest has been awakened at King's Langley, Herts, in connection with a revisit from Rev. W. H. Aitken.

Mr. SIDNEY VIVIAN, of the Evangelisation Society, has recently concluded a twenty-eight days' mission in a tent at Cradley Heath, Staffs. The interest deepened as the mission proceeded, and it proved a season of great blessing to many. The tent has now moved to Blackheath, a few miles off.

The Brighton Open-Air Christian Mission has recently closed an encouraging session. A number of services have been held in the High-street Temperance Hall, and the Mission has given each week free teas to the most deserving poor in the locality. On Sunday week the Mission celebrated its thirty-ninth year of open-air services with a meeting on the West Front at seven o'clock in the evening. These meetings will be continued until the first Sunday in October.

The pioneering work of the Church Army, which was commenced two months ago in the metropolis, under the charge of Captain Davey, the society's prison missioner, is meeting with the most encouraging results. Already several four weeks' missions have been conducted by a staff of pioneer missioners in some of the poorest London parishes, in tents, halls, vacant shops, and open spaces, for the irreligious, the careless, and the indifferent. Arrangements have already been concluded for pioneer missions in the metropolis continuously up till the end of the year, and the Church Army committee are planning a large extension of the movement.

Mr. J. J. SIMS has been conducting a series of meetings in Edinburgh. The first week was devoted to the subject of the Second Advent. In the second week he gave illustrated addresses on various other aspects of prophetic study. During the third week he dealt with truths concerning inspiration and related themes. Many of the subjects dealt with (says a correspondent) are exciting a widespread interest in Scotland at the present time, and the result of the meetings will be to strengthen the hands of earnest workers in their loyalty to Christ and the word of God, as well as proving a valuable means of imparting such knowledge as will enable them to meet the doubt and unbelief rampant at the present day. One of the most remarkable features about the meetings has been the widespread interest shown. To find gathered, in June, between 600 and 700 people on week nights and Sabbath afternoons, and over 1000 on Sabbath evenings, is unusual. The meetings have been characterised by much solemnity and great power. God has blessed the message from night to night, and very many testimonies have been given to souls being saved, some during the meetings and others coming to decision in their own homes.

R. C.

Mrs. BAEYERTZ, during July, The Edinburgh Castle, E.

Sergeant G. PULLINGER, Iron Room, Strathmore-road, Croydon, August 3.

Mr. HENRY THORNE.—Margate, July 3 and 10; Reading, 12; Winchester, 13; Southampton, 14; Southsea, 15; Romsey, 16 and 17.

Mr. MONRO COLLINGS, Maundrel Hall, Salisbury, July 3; Wimbledon, 6; Marden, 10; Wimbledon, 13; Bromley, 17; Wimbledon, 20.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—Prayer List.—Amongst other missions the following are now being held.—Wimborne, R. D. Edwards; Medbourne, G. Attwood; Tyes Cross, J. Lovell, Weybread, A. Knight; Countesthorpe, F. Holmes; Littlehampton, A. Clark; Knoddishall, J. Clark; Whatfield, J. Harris; Broxted, J. Whiting; Langford, E. Bailey; Battle, Noah Taylor; Aylesford, J. Johnson; Harroden, K. Lambert; Plaistow (Sussex), J. Brown; Crick, C. Noakes; Lydd, J. H. Cooke; Combs, J. F. Belchambers; Horncastle, C. F. Goode; Henley-in-Arden, J. Simmonds; Blackheath (Staffs.), S. Vivian; Clows Top, S. Bryant; Frogham, H. Bray; St. Parndon, W. Notman; Llangrove, W. H. Lewis; Wakes Colne, H. Collins; Bacton, C. Chenery; Long Stratton, F. Tarrant; Denny, D. M. Bayne; Tayport, N.B., J. Galletly; Juniper Green, N.B., R. Lapsley; Glasgow, R. Hill; Kirkcaldy, N.B., T. Canning; Millseat, N.B., J. Wharton; Dundee, C. Galletly.

Requests for Prayer.

Earnest prayer requested for the conversion of a medical man.

That 1898 may be a year of salvation in the various departments of work of a mission in India.

Redeeming the Time.

I HAD a precious treasure,
But yesterday 'twas mine,
It came when dews were falling;
'Twas gone when white stars shine.
So precious, yet so fleeting;
So near, yet far away;
Beyond my reach for ever,
My treasure—yesterday.

And now another treasure
Has come to me, to-day;
Borne on the wings of morning,
Robed in the misty grey;
And yet I know this treasure
Is still not mine for aye,
The shades of night are hasting
To bear it far away.

O time, so swiftly flying;
O soul that fain would write
Upon thy snow-white pinions,
To-day, some deed of light;
Teach me, my Lord, my Master,
Each passing hour to fill,
My only joy, thy pleasure;
My only choice, thy will.

J. B. H. H.

The East End Disaster.

THE terrible accident caused through the backwash at the launching of H.M.S. Albion, resulting in the death of thirty-five people, as well as in the injuring of many others, has cast a gloom round about us. We are thankful to be able to record that some of our sailors (with others), happening to be on the spot, acted heroically in helping to save as many as they could. A mother and two children who have regularly attended our meetings were thrown into the water; the mother and one child only were rescued, the other little girl was picked up dead. The family is in deep sorrow, the mother much hurt, and will need a long time of careful nursing.

While visiting them it was my privilege to comfort them in their distress. Their little girl twelve years of age was most anxious on the Sunday before her death for them to sing together, "It is well," hymn 25 in "New Hymns and Solos." They sang some of it, but the mother could not get through it all; it was the last they sang together on earth, and it still seems to ring in the mother's ears.

Mr. Bradshaw (a London City Missionary), who also has to mourn the loss of a daughter about twenty years of age, needs our sympathy and prayers. I cannot but think that the sad occurrence may be a voice of God in the midst of this hardened and indifferent neighbourhood. May He overrule all these things for his glory and the good of souls, is our earnest prayer, and I feel sure that of all your readers.

R. CHILD.

Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, E.

Obituary.

REV. J. H. M. BARROW, LIVERPOOL.

The earnest vicar of St. Philemon's, Toxteth-park, Liverpool, died very suddenly on Saturday week. Having been in delicate health for some months, he was in his study early on Saturday morning, writing letters and arranging for the service on the following day. About half-past eleven his wife entered the study, and found him kneeling at the couch, as if in an attitude of prayer. Fearing the worst, a doctor was sent for, and it was discovered that death had already taken place. Mr. Barrow was a native of Liverpool, and had spent the whole of his ministerial life in that city. His ministry was conducted on strictly Evangelical lines, and he was an energetic worker and a capable organiser.

DR. HENRY LEE.

On June 11 there passed away, honoured alike for his sterling qualities and for his great talents, Mr. Henry Lee, F.R.C.S., senior consulting surgeon to St. George's Hospital. His attainments were great, unrivalled, in fact, in his own particular province. Of his writings Mr. Timothy Holmes says that they are a model of wide information, correct reasoning, and sound practical wisdom. He was a sound, able, and original surgeon, and a noted teacher. To those who see much in present-day medical teachings to regret and reprobate it will be of the deepest interest, in reading the notices which have appeared in various papers, to learn from the highest authority that Dr. Lee was at one with them in their opposition to vivisection, on religious, moral, and scientific grounds, and also that he held the State regulation of vice in utter detestation.

MR. W. WILCOCKS.

By the death, at Croydon, on June 20, of Mr Wm. Wilcocks a great loss has been sustained, not only in the immediate locality, but in many directions. He was for over twenty-two years connected with West Croydon Baptist Church and Sunday-school, first as teacher and then as superintendent; he was also a deacon of the church. By profession he was a solicitor, having faithfully served his firm for thirty-two years. Entering as a junior clerk he ended as a partner, and was a living example of the fact that it is possible to bring one's Christianity into one's daily business without unduly parading it. No one ever came into contact with him without becoming conscious that they were in the presence of a manly Christian. It was as if there were an aroma of Christ's presence about him which was acknowledged by those who were strangers to it. Well would it be for our business life if this were more common amongst professing Christians.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

PRAYING TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dear Sir,—The question as to worship addressed directly to the Holy Ghost is one that requires to be discussed with "reverence and godly fear." Yet I would venture to offer a few remarks which may be helpful to some, at least, of your readers.

One may expect to find in the Holy Scripture some materials for the decision of so solemn and practical a subject. It must seem to those who make the Bible their rule of faith very improbable that God should have left his children without any means of deciding so great a matter. In other questions we may see that the Bible speaks with no uncertain force when error has crept in.

While the Scriptures were still a hidden book the worship of Mary was practised by thousands, who had no idea that they were habitual idolaters; but when the light of God's truth came in this great error was speedily banished. Now, if the worship of the Holy Spirit were as contrary to the mind of God as the worship of Mary is, why has not the Bible put an end to it also? It is a fact that the worship of the Holy Ghost has pervaded the Church of God from one end to the other, and this must have been foreseen by God. Why, then, did He not give some expression of his will sufficient to guard his people against so great an error, if error it was? "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all," and He would have his children walk with Him in the light. But to do this they need to have the light placed before them clearly and unmistakably.

In the memoir of Thomas Scott, the illustrious commentator, there is a valuable letter addressed to a clergyman who had asked his opinion on this matter; and the latter says that, regarding Mr. Scott as the best Bible scholar of the day, he had been troubled with no further doubts on the question. There is also a discussion of the subject in the life of Mary Jane Graham, with observations of her biographer, the late Rev. Chas. Bridges.—I remain, dear sir, truly yours, Woking. Horace Noel.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to the recent articles on the invocation of the Holy Spirit in The Christian. In the first sentence of the Inspired Scriptures Trinity in Unity is distinctly taught. "In the beginning God" (Elohim, plural), "created" (a verb in the singular); and in verse 2, the personality and operation of the Spirit of God is expressed.

In the Book of Psalms the most frequent title by which God is addressed is either JEHOVAH, as explained in Rev. i. 4, "Him which is, and which was, and which is to come," a title equally applicable to the eternal Father, the eternal Son, and to the eternal Spirit, one everlasting God; or ELOHIM, which is a plural title embracing Father, Son, and Spirit in one undivided Godhead, so that God (Elohim), when addressed either in prayer or praise, combines the three in one, addressing at once the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

In Is. vi. Isaiah had a vision of the Lord sitting upon the throne. Here the title for Lord is not Jehovah, but Adonahy, the plural of Adon. It was a vision of the supreme united majesty of the eternal Three, hence the threefold ascription of praise by the seraphim surrounding the throne: "Holy, holy, holy, is Jehovah of hosts." Also in verse 8, Isaiah heard the voice of Adonahy saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Thus Isaiah saw the glory of the Son of God not apart from the Father and the Spirit, but in the united glory and majesty of the eternal Three (Is. xii. 41).

In Rev. iv. 6-8 John says that in the midst of the throne and round about the throne were four living ones, the emblem of the Church of the first-born, as one in Spirit with the Lamb in the midst of the throne, "and they rest not day and night saying, 'Holy, holy, Jehovah God Almighty.'"

In Eze. xxxvii. 9 it is written, "Prophesy unto the wind (or spirit); prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind (or spirit): 'Thus saith Adonahy Jehovah; come from the four winds, O breath (or spirit), and breathe up on these slain, that they may live.'" This, no doubt, is a prophecy of the restoration of Israel from their political burial among the nations in the latter day; but if we make a spiritual application of it at the present time there is here a Divine command for a personal application to the Holy Ghost. Other Scriptures might be noticed, but I refrain.—I am, yours truly,

Thomas Newberry.

Alexandra Villa, Weston-super-Mare, June 24, 1898.

Dear Sir,—I venture to send you the following short extract on the subject of prayer, from the writings of the late Dr. Martensen, Lutheran Bishop of Seeland, Denmark. It seems to me valuable in two respects: First, as a concise expression of what I cannot but think is the true position in this matter; secondly, as the conviction of one who was so devout as well as learned a theologian. "Christian prayer is prayer to God through Christ. It is prayer to our Father in heaven; yet our prayer does not go to the Father in such sense as if the Son and the Holy Spirit were excluded, as if it dared not apply to them. To the Son also we may and ought to pray, as we ought also to call upon the Holy Spirit; and the Church has ever, yea from its beginning, done both. But though one or the other of the Persons is preponderantly present to the consciousness or the imagination, it still remains the three-one God to whom prayer is addressed. But our prayer is ever made by means of Christ the Mediator, so that we must say with St. Augustine: 'We pray to Him, through Him, in Him.'"—I am, yours obediently,

Frank Barlow.

Addiscombe, Croydon, June 27, 1898.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

PREACHING in the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, Rev. W. D. Austin, rector of Castlecomer, said it was some seventy-six years ago since this Society was established. It was first started by a godly lawyer and a good judge, who was afterwards known as Chief Justice Lefroy. As he went the Munster Circuit and saw the spiritual darkness of the people and the docks filled with prisoners, he sighed in his heart for the day when these people might be brought to a full realisation of the sacrifice made for them by Christ.

On returning to Dublin he conferred with some friends, and thereupon the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland was formed. A very wise set of rules was drawn up, one of which was that the Society was to be entirely a laymen's one. A rule was made that only one book was to be used, the Bible, and only one subject to be spoken of, and that was what God had done for sinners. Another rule was that Scripture readers were not to enter into controversy, and that they were not to hold arguments with the people who differed from them, and that where a controversy did arise let it be with Christ, not them.

A case had come under his notice illustrative of the wisdom of this rule. An old man in the West of Ireland, a member of the Roman Catholic Church, was once presented by a lady who visited his garden, in which he took great pride, with a beautifully bound copy of St. John's Gospel. He took it and read it, and without any human agency was enabled to know the only true God. He gave up going to the Roman Catholic chapel, and when some time afterwards he fell ill, and was reported to be dying, an energetic young priest, determined to bring him back to the Church, paid him a visit. The priest, on stating his mission, was asked by the old man if it was wrong to trust one's soul to Christ. The young priest was silent for a time, and at last, putting his hand kindly on the old man's shoulder, replied: "I dare not tell you that is wrong."

Had that old man entered into a controversy with the priest he would have got the worst of it. This was an example of the wisdom of the rules of the Society. These rules were very wise ones, and had been faithfully adhered to for the past seventy-five years. As the clergyman of a parish covering thirty-six square miles, and containing about 500 or 600 Protestants, he had found it a great help and comfort and blessing to have godly men going among the people and speaking a word to them about Jesus.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

July 10.

"Elijah the Prophet."

1 Kings xvii. 1-16.

Golden Text.—"And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord."—1 Kings xvii. 16.

History Between the Lessons.

ABOUT seventy years from division of the kingdom to Ahab. After Jeroboam had weakened by idolatry for twenty-four years, Omri came to the throne, founder of Samaria. Next came Omri's son, Ahab, a wise king, but governed by a foolish, wicked wife. She was a heathen, and he married her for political reasons. In senior classes teacher should point out that affinity should be the supreme condition in marriage. Possibility of trouble if any other condition is made supreme.

State of Kingdom.

Politically.—Successful.

Religiously.—Idolatrous, immoral; the darkest period in Israel's religious history.

The nation so honeycombed with vice is bound to fall unless someone comes to restore the buttresses of truth, which alone will support a kingdom.

Illustration.—Tree whose heart is eaten away by insects or mushroom growth. Any storm will cast it down, though in sunshine it may appear strong externally. Apply this to the heart of the individual.

Elijah Appears (1).

Elijah—My God is Jehovah. One of the Highlanders of Palestine, a short, rugged, hairy man; grew strong and hardy among the mountains—there prepared for his work.

Illustration.—Both a razor and the axe have their work to do, but it is the coarse axe which must fell the tree. Elijah had a great upas tree to fell.

He had seen and mused over his nation's wanderings from the true God. Only waited till God's time for action came.

Lesson.—God sends his workers at the right moment. The worker must be ready.

His Message (1).

He proclaims a drought. Some such calamity needful to bring the people to a sense of their position.

God teaches by epidemics, wars, and drought to-day. The world has had many a lesson in cleanliness, sanitation, holiness of life, by the scourges which God has sent.

So individual sickness and poverty intended to do us some good and teach us some lesson.

God's Care for the Worker (2-6).

Need to withdraw. People would be importunate. He could not reverse God's command until he had authority. He had no power in himself. Only an ambassador. "The Ravens"—God will provide if we do what is right. "I have been young, and now am old, yet have I never seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread."

Sarepta: The Smelting Furnace (9-16).

The famine so great, poor widow come to her last meal. She was indeed in the furnace. But Elijah's request intensified the heat. Faith is tried only that it may be strengthened. "I know whom I have believed." Why? because Paul had so often been in the furnace.

Small Things for Great Ends.

"Handful of meal and a little oil." This was the lever that raised up these famishing souls and brought them into the abundance of God's store. Thousands have been so lifted by the memory of it. Compare with other Bible stories which have become proverbial.

Dorcas; widows' mites; Mary's box of spikenard. These deeds were small in themselves, but there was love and faith in them, so they live for ever.

Help Others and You Help Yourself.

The only road to happiness. Share your money, joy, troubles, knowledge, and what you have left brings twice its former happiness.

Illustration.—The stream and the stagnant pool. The latter dried up in the hot summer after poisoning many. The stream gave, and so there grew around it trees and flowers that shaded it from the sun.

For the heart grows rich in giving,
All its wealth is living grain,
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain.

THE OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS.

In 20 Sizes and 100 Styles.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRONICLE :—"The best and handiest for general Bible Work. . . . It would be impossible to imagine a more complete and perfect volume."

OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

THE OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS.

From 3s. to 100s.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen-corner, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

VOL. I., GENESIS to RUTH.

Cloth Boards, 1/6; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2/-.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In response to many requests, these brief meditations are now published in a permanent form; and it is hoped that they will be largely used in the private closet and at the family altar; especially where the holy habit prevails of reading the Word of God through, in due course, from cover to cover. . . . . I have endeavoured to build an exhortation to the heart from a careful consideration of the selected passage, often in the fresh light thrown on it from the Revised Version.

F. B. Meyer.

ALSO BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

A NEW VOLUME in the Series of SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHIES. Uniform with "DAVID" and seven other Volumes in this Series.

PAUL: A SERVANT OF JESUS CHRIST.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, 3s. 6d.

"A most inspiring and edifying book."—Preachers' Magazine.

"Fresh, spiritual, stimulating."—The Friend.

A NEW VOLUME IN THE DEVOTIONAL SERIES. Uniform with THE SHEPHERD PSALM and other Volumes of "THE CHRISTIAN LIFE" Series.

SAVED AND KEPT:

COUNSELS TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS.

Cloth Boards, 1s.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, 2s. 6d.

"Beautiful and suggestive."—Christian Endeavour.

"Likely to be exceedingly useful."—The Presbyterian.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE HOPE OF IMMORTALITY: An Essay incorporating the Hulsean Lectures of 1897-8. By Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, Head Master of Harrow School. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The book is one which theological students could not but read with profit, for it supports their position with a spirit and eloquence too rarely exemplified in theological literature. A general reader wishing to have a just idea of the teaching of orthodoxy upon this subject would have to search long before he could find it stated in a more satisfactory form."—Scotsman.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE SACRIFICE OF CHRIST. Its Vital Reality and Efficacy. By the Rev. H. WACE, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's and Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 1s.

"The little book is admirably adapted for gift purposes.—A statement of the Atonement succinct and clear."—Record.

"The great central theme of human history finds in these raverent pages a very clear and satisfactory unfolding."—The Christian.

BY DR. MOULE.

OUR PRAYER BOOK. Short Chapters on the History and Contents of the Book of Common Prayer. By Rev. H. C. G. MOULE, D.D. 16mo, cloth, 1s.

"Lovers and constant readers of the time-honoured manual will have special interest in the perusal of this book, and even those who discard liturgical aids will find pleasure in the exposition."—The Christian.

"We know of no other little work on the subject which might be read with greater profit and pleasure by anyone interested in the treasures enshrined in our Book of Common Prayer."—Church Bells.

THE CROSS AND THE SPIRIT: Studies in the Epistle to the Galatians. By the Rev. H. C. G. MOULE, D.D. Fcp. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"Deeply spiritual. We cannot too strongly urge Bible students to obtain it. May the work circulate by tens of thousands."—News.

DAILY HELP FOR DAILY NEED. A Collection of Scripture Verses and Poetry for every day in the year. Edited by MARY E. SHIPLEY. New Edition, 4s. 6d.

MRS. MARSHALL'S NEW STORY.

THE YOUNG QUEEN OF HEARTS: A Story of the Princess Elizabeth and her brother Henry, Prince of Wales. By Mrs. MARSHALL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"The writer is at her best, and has succeeded in producing a healthy yet fascinating romance."—Glasgow Herald.

"Full of genuine interest."—The Christian.

LONDON: SEELEY & CO., Limited, 38, Great Russell Street, W.C.

ESTABLISHED A.D. 1760.

THE GOSPEL MAGAZINE

(Formerly Edited by Rev. A. M. Toplady, B.A.)

For JULY contains Portrait of Capt. E. POULDEN, R.N. Also numerous Original Articles, including "The Question of Questions," and "The Believer's Liberty" (by Editor); Pastoral Notes (by Rev. D. A. DOUDNEY, M.A.); Sermon (by Rev. A. HEWLETT, D.D.); "The Loveliness of Christ" (by Rev. E. CARR); Correspondence; Reviews; &c., &c. 6d. Monthly.

W. H. and L. COLLINGRIDGE, Aldersgate-street, London.

ROYAL NATIONAL

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.

Number of Services held in 1897 - - - - - 2,627
Patients Medically and Surgically treated in 1897 - 12,540

HELP EARNESTLY ASKED. Requires £20 000 per annum. Treasurer: THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq. (Offices, 1st, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

BRITISH SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE JEWS,

96, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, BLOOMSBURY, W.C.

A Most Urgent Appeal for £2,000

We need at once £500 to pay the Salaries of our Missionaries and meet the Working Expenses. THE LORD GUIDE AND PROVIDE.

Some of the Work done by the British Society.

It has 24 Missionaries and many Voluntary Helpers, all engaged in spreading the Truth of the Gospel. 2.—It has Mission Stations in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. 3.—It has Medical Missions. 4.—New Testaments, portions of Scripture, and Tracts in various languages are distributed. 5.—The Gospel is preached in Mission Halls, and from house-to-house.

6.—It has Homes for Poor Aged Hebrew Christians.

We trust you will send all the help you can, and as soon as ever you can.

R. CORY, Esq., J.P., Treasurer.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Rev. JOHN DUNLOP, General Secretary, 96, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

NOW READY

A NEW WORK ON PROPHECY.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

God's Methods with Man

IN TIME—PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

WITH COLOURED CHART.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

CHAP. I.—Introductory.
CHAP. II.—From Creation to Christ.
CHAP. III.—The Dispensation of the Spirit.
CHAP. IV.—The Coming of Christ.
CHAP. V.—Daniel's Missing Week.
CHAP. VI.—The Events of the Missing Week.
CHAP. VII.—The Dawn of a Golden Age.
CHAP. VIII.—The Golden Age.
CHAP. IX.—After the Thousand Years.
CHAP. X.—The Purifying Hope.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

TWO BOOKS BY REV. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

The ACTS of the HOLY SPIRIT

The Active Mission and Ministry of the Spirit of God, the Divine Paraclete, as set forth in the Acts of the Apostles.

Cloth, 2/6; Presentation Edition, 3/6.

"A book rich in spiritual teaching."—The News.

MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS

The Evidences of Christianity; or, The Written and Living Word of God.

Cloth, 2/6; Presentation Edition, 3/6; Popular Edition, 2/-

"Terse, trenchant, and suggestive."—Life of Faith.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

ANOTHER PRESENTATION PLATE.

* * The Publishers of HOME'S PENNY STORIES announce that with next week's Issue, No. 251, "WHITE THORN FARM," by H. FITZGERALD, ready next Tuesday, they will present another SPLENDID PLATE, entitled "JOSEPH PROCLAIMED RULER OVER ALL EGYPT" (size 15in. by 20in., forming a Companion Subject to "JOSEPH INTERPRETING PHARAOH'S DREAM"—so widely appreciated—and is the work of the same celebrated artist, I. SNOWMAN. To secure this Number order to-day from your Bookseller.

London: W. B. HORNER & SON, 26 & 27, Paternoster Square; and all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. Aylmer Rouse, of St. Stephen's, Putney, is proposing to build a mission church in his parish.

Rev. Alfred Allen, of St. Stephen's, Spitalfields, has accepted the vicarage of Christ Church, Eastbourne.

Eight more fully trained men will be ready next month to leave the Church Training College for Lay Workers at Stepney.

A Boys' Shelter has been opened at Harvard-road, Gunnersbury, in connection with the C.E.T.S. Police Court Mission, for the reception of lads remitted from the police courts.

Bishop Bardsley, of Carlisle, and Bishop Jacob, of Newcastle, who are at present invalided and absent from their dioceses, are both reported to be making satisfactory progress.

At the Ely Diocesan Conference, held in Ely Cathedral, and largely attended, "The Recognition of Lawful Authority in the matter of Ritual" was discussed, but no serviceable conclusion arrived at.

There has been a considerable secession at St. John's, Dukinfield, over the ritual question, the Bishop of Chester supporting the rector, Rev. C. G. Calthrop. The secessionists are about to build a new church.

The Bishop of Calcutta, the Archdeacon of Calcutta, the Bishop of Lincoln, Canon Wilberforce, and Lord Egerton have taken part in a discussion at the Church House for the extension of Church work in India. The Archbishop of York presided.

Invitations have been issued by the C.M.S. for a meeting on Sunday afternoon, at 3.30, July 3, at Grosvenor House, W. The Archbishop of Canterbury will preside, and addresses will be given by the Bishop of Victoria (Hongkong), Dr. Neve (Kashmir), and Mr. T. E. Alvarez (West Africa).

The Archbishop of Canterbury, presiding over a meeting held in Croydon Public Hall for the purpose of considering the question of Church extension in that district, said that Croydon, like London and other places, was suffering from its own growth. Church accommodation in Croydon had not increased to anything like the same extent as the population. The scheme now prepared provided for new churches in several parishes and the completion of others.

At a meeting in aid of the Bishop of St. Albans' fund, held at Grosvenor House, Mr. Asquith moved a resolution appealing for support to enable the fund to carry on the work of the Church effectively in the great and rapidly increasing district of "London over the Border." Mr. Asquith urged that the shareholders of large industrial undertakings, who derived wealth from the exertions of the ever-increasing population of East London, have responsibilities cast upon them of not only relieving the distress of the workers and improving their social condition, but also of providing for their spiritual needs.

Congregational.

The Stamford-hill congregation is about to erect a mission hall at Stoke Newington.

Rev. E. Fox-Thomas, of Whitby, has been invited to the pastorate of Westbourne Church, Bournemouth.

Interesting farewell services have been held at Epping, on the conclusion of fourteen years' service by Rev. Charles Wright.

Whitefield Tabernacle, City-road, E.C., has been reopened, after necessary repairs. The work is in a hopeful condition.

Rev. W. J. Edmonds, of Madagascar, has been appointed by the L.M.S. to Quilon, Travancore; and Mr. A. L. Greig to the Central China Mission.

The work at Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, under the care of Dr. Leach, is reported as full of cheer. There have been large accessions to the membership, increased congregations, and general extension in activities.

Five valuable sermons have been preached in connection with the 137th "Heckmondwike Lecture"—the preachers being Revs. Dr. Vincent Tymms, Eric Lawrence, Alfred Rowland, F. B. Meyer, and J. Ossian Davies.

A bronze medallion has been placed in Bowdon Church in memory of the late Mr. F. W. Crossley, by a number of his fellow-members of the church. Inscribed beneath the medallion are the words, "A friend of God, a friend of man."

Calls.—Rev. E. Shillito, to Albion-road, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. J. H. Tuckwell, of Thane, to Berkhamstead; Rev. C. H. Underwood, of Ashton Keynes, to the united pastorates of Ruscombe, Pitchcombe, and Edge, Glos. (accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. R. Roberts, of Brownroyd, Bradford; Rev. W. Attewell, of Bradford-on-Avon.

Baptist.

Rev. N. Dobson, of Deal, who has been ill for some time, has much benefited by a stay in Norway.

Rev. George F. Harper, of East Molesey, has resigned the pastorate, and is entering the Pastors' College.

Rev. G. T. Bailey, pastor of the church in Vicarage-road, Leyton, has consented to act as deputation secretary of the Pioneer Mission, so far as the claims of his pastorate permit.

At the quarterly meetings at Catford this week of the London Association, Rev. J. Ewing opened the question, "How Best to Counteract the Invasion of the Lord's Day by Present-Day Amusements."

In recognition of the services Rev. W. Holman Bentley has rendered in the social and moral development of the Congo Free State, he has been made a Knight of the Golden Lion by the King of the Belgians.

Five missionaries have arrived home on furlough—Revs. E. S. Summers, the Principal of Serampore College; A. Jewson, from Calcutta; R. H. C. Graham and J. T. Dodds, from the Congo; and Moir Duncan, from Shensi, Northern China.

Rev. John Mitchell, who for some time has been conducting the services at Whitecross Church, Weston-super-Mare, preached his farewell sermons on Sunday last. Mr. Mitchell expects to have a wider field, preaching in various churches and conducting special missions; also in devoting more time to literary work.

A missionary garden party, under the auspices of the Young People's Missionary Association, is being arranged to take place at the Stockwell Orphanage on Saturday afternoon (July 2). A large number of missionaries and their wives are expected to be present. Mrs. W. Holman Bentley, from the Congo, Revs. F. D. Waldock, from Ceylon, and Herbert Dixon, from China, will give addresses.

Calls.—Rev. J. Wilkins, of Wendover, to Attleborough; Rev. J. Jones, of Warrington, to Llanfeorog, Anglesey; Rev. O. Tidman, of Noddfa, to Buckley and Nantmawr; Rev. H. Spendelow, of Dartford, to Grimsby.

Resignations.—Rev. Cornelius Griffiths, of Kensington Chapel, Bristol; Rev. E. Curtis, of Hatch Beauchamp (after thirty-seven years' service); Rev. O. Maden, of Inskip; Rev. H. J. Milledge, of Gamlingay.

Methodist.

To meet the spiritual needs of King's Dyke, a village about four miles from Peterborough, a wooden chapel, holding 170 and costing £100, has been erected.

The United Methodist missionary income shows a gratifying increase, though it is still appreciably below the sum aimed at, viz., £15,000. It is, however, £2500 ahead of last year.

The annual Methodist Conference was held in Belfast last week, under the presidency of Rev. W. L. Watkinson, of London, whose addresses and sermons made a deep impression.

New chapels are being built at Oswestry, Ramsey (Peterborough), Birtley (co. Durham), Stoney Stanton-road, Coventry, Holbeach Marsh, Greenfield-road, Eastbourne, Willand (Tiverton), Holywood Park (Stockport), and Studland.

Rev. Thomas Jackson, still cherishing the idea of devoting himself wholly to the Lads' Institute and evangelistic work in the East End, has intimated his intention of resigning next year the superintendence of the Clapton Mission.

The foundation-stones of a People's Hall have been laid by Dr. Pope, the Mayor of King's Lynn, and Rev. John Gould, in the populous Stoke District, Ipswich. The undertaking is intended to combine religious services with some of the characteristics of a social settlement.

Rev. Dr. J. K. Robson, who went out to China as an M.N.C. missionary at his own expense, and has now taken his medical degree, also at his own cost, is anxious to get back to work, feeling that "God has given to the Connexion in Tientsin, in the stations in Shantung and Chili, strong strategic points in the conquest of China for Christ."

The Wesley Hall scheme for Deptford has now been successfully launched. Rev. A. Newbery, speaking at a meeting last week, said that in this century Deptford's population had grown from 15,000 to 120,000, and that 73 per cent. are at this moment living in poverty. Methodism has hitherto catered for this vast population to the extent of a hall to seat some 300. The site for the new hall cost £3500. In all £15,000 is required. The Metropolitan Building Fund granted £6000, the Fernley trustees, with other generous gifts, bring it up to £8000. The site is ideal, at a corner where five streets meet.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Robert Small, of Leith, has declined the call to Wallace Green, Berwick.

A unanimous call has been given by St. Andrew's, Woolwich, to Rev. Samuel Scott, of Claughton, who has accepted.

A new chapel is to be erected in Mile End-road, E., for the Welsh congregation now worshipping in White Horse-street, Stepney.

Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow, will speak, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, at Lambeth Palace on July 1 on the opium trade.

Rhodesia is now claiming the attention of Presbyterians, and Rev. T. H. Jones, minister of Addiewell Parish Church, N.B., has received and accepted a call from Buluwayo.

Rev. T. L. Marshall is resigning the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Board, after having held it for forty-one years. His long term of office has been exceeded by only one of his predecessors, Dr. Abraham Rees, who was secretary from 1778 to his death in 1825. His resignation takes effect at the end of September.

The annual conference of the English churches (Welsh Calvinists) will be held this year at Walton Breck Church, Liverpool, September 20-22. The committee have secured the presence of Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, U.S.A., who has consented to deliver the Conference sermon. Since the formation of the Conference some ten or twelve years ago a number of leading ministers of the Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Presbyterian Churches have in their turn delivered the Conference sermons.

Salvation Army.

In addition to a rescue home for women and two slum stations in Paris, the Salvation Army has now been able to extend its social operations in that city by securing premises in the Rue de Chabrol for the purposes of a shelter for men, which building General Booth opened last week. The shelter will accommodate nearly 300 men nightly, who will be able for the small sum of 1½d. to obtain a clean and comfortable lodging with every facility for washing, mending their clothing, etc. The initial expenses have amounted to some £800, of which £400 are urgently needed, and for which Mrs. Bramwell Booth, of 101, Queen Victoria-street, appeals.

Fallen Asleep.

At Walsall, Mr. J. Kilbourn, an able journalist, and for many years an earnest preacher.—At Bristol, Rev. John McIldowie, pastor since 1885 of Gideon Congregational Chapel, and formerly devoted minister at Carlisle.—At Worcester, Mr. Walter Price, a greatly valued Christian worker.—At Warrington, Mrs. Wallington, an aged and faithful follower of Christ.—At Henley-on-Thames, aged 60, Rev. John Eagle, of Northampton, on 20th inst.—At Wimborne, Mrs. E. J. H. Peach, wife of the Congregational minister.—At George-lane, Leytonstone, Mr. I. Hadley, a devoted and useful worker.—At Mirfield, Mr. Robert Swire, a preacher of the Gospel for over forty years.—At Smallbridge, Mr. T. Simpson, aged 67, an influential leader in local Methodist work.—At Randwick, Stroud, Mr. John Howell Carpenter, a very earnest Christian worker.—At Chapel-en-le-Frith, on 22nd inst., Mr. John Smith, aged 69, an active leader in Christian service.—At Baillieston, N.B., Rev. Hugh Ramsay, minister of the parish church.—Rev. Andrew Armstrong, Methodist minister, Limerick.

Gosport Seamen's Mission. — The steam mission launch recently paid a visit to the men aboard the two lightships anchored at the mouth of Southampton Water. Song, reading of the Scripture, and prayer commending these lonely watchers of the deep to our Heavenly Father, were followed by the distribution of bags of tracts and Christian literature. A rumour has been circulated that on account of ill health Mrs. Cook has closed this work and left Gosport. Needless to say, this is not the case; communications to her may be addressed, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, Hants.

THE BOOK WORLD.

MONTHLY MAGAZINES.

The July issue of Rev. John Urquhart's magazine, The King's Own, is full of good things. Recent features make this monthly more than ever serviceable to preachers and teachers. In addition to instructive articles on the integrity of the Scriptures, there are sermon helps and useful expository points. (6d. monthly. Marshall Bros.)

The July Quiver opens with a description of the remarkable career of the late George Müller, of Bristol, illustrated by a number of new photographs. The Bishop of Derry contributes an illustrated holiday paper entitled "A Trip to the Irish Highlands," and Miss Elizabeth L. Banks (a well-known American writer) is responsible for a topical article on "Sunday at the White House." An interesting feature of the number is an authentic account of "The Queen's Favourite Hymns," whilst another important item is Dean Farrar's appreciation of the late Mr. Gladstone as "A Christian Gentleman." (6d. Cassell & Co.)

A striking little book is The Essentials of Salvation, Illustrated by Incidents in the Life of Ned Wright, as told by Himself. The pages exhibit the way of salvation in simplicity and with peculiar force. (6d. Alfred Holness.)

A book dealing with an important social subject from an analytical and statistical standpoint is A Woman's Chance of Marriage. By J. Holt Schooling. (1s. C. Arthur Pearson.) The book claims to be "a practical guide to matrimony," and in the very limited measure that carefully prepared statistics can serve that purpose it is a book answering to its claim.

An acceptable addition to the stream of Gladstone literature is W. E. Gladstone: A Souvenir, containing two reprints from "Chambers's Encyclopædia," the first being a biographical sketch by Justin McCarthy, and the second an article on Homer, from the pen of the lamented statesman himself. Portraits and facsimile pages add to the attractiveness of this booklet (W. & R. Chambers). Another tribute, strictly non-political, and eminently readable, is "The Land we Love": William Ewart Gladstone, by Rev. Charles Bullock. (2s. "Home Words" Office.) In addition to a life sketch, there are chapters on the religious principles of the statesman, and his writings, also many pages of interesting gleanings.

James Walker, D.D., of Carnwath (T. & T. Clark). The subject of this brief memoir, and author of several incorporated essays and sermons, was a man whose memory deserves to be cherished. Possessing high intellectual gifts, and a spirit of fervent zeal he might have achieved prominence in the ranks of the Scottish Free Church, to which he belonged. But he was content to find a lifelong sphere in his quiet, rural native parish. The memoir by his fellow presbyter Rev. R. Logan seems all too short; yet it gives a comprehensive idea of the course run by this man of God, and of the services he rendered to his Church and generation. The papers on Church history given in the book show a wide grasp of ancient records and much lucidity of style. The paper on Church Union is a masterpiece of clear and conclusive reasoning, while the sermons are vigorous and impressive.

Four booklets, at once direct in teaching and chaste in external appearance, are, The Christian's Calling, The Christian's Abiding, The Christian's Keeping (No. 1), and The Christian's Keeping (No. 2), They are all from the pen of William Thomson, and worthy of widespread circulation. (3d. each. Drummond's Tract Depot.)

Three small publications, called forth by the death of Mr. Gladstone, are: The Heritage of a Great Life: Two Sermons Preached in Westminster Abbey and St. Margaret's, on Sunday, May 22, by Canon Eyton. (1s. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) "Rock of Ages": Interesting Particulars of Mr. Gladstone's Favourite Hymn, with facsimile on a postcard of the Latin translation made by him during a debate in the House of Commons, by Rev. J. Brown, Wincanton, from whom copies may be had (3d. each). Mr. Gladstone: Scholar, Statesman, Saint: A Sermon Preached in Ancoats Congregational Church, Manchester, by Rev. Charles Garnett. (1d. Manchester: R. S. Chrystal.)

Sailors in Holland.—Whilst attending a conference at Terneuzen, it was my privilege to see some of the homes where our sailors live, and what scenes met my eyes. These homes I was told were formerly dens of iniquity and strife, but now havens of refuge. I also went to Antwerp, and saw something of the Lord's work under the care of Miss Smith and her Swedish co-worker. A little report just issued tells its own tale of success and further needs. Miss Smith, who has had an apprenticeship of many years in Ratcliff Highway, is eminently suited for the work. L. Blaauw.

Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

☞ All communications intended for the Editor should be addressed to him at the editorial offices, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., and not to our advertisement agents, Messrs. John Haddon and Co.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols. „ „
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols. „ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 „ „	4s. „ „
12 „ „	6s. „ „
24 „ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

Notes and Comments.

"THE Invasion of the Lord's Day by Present-day Amusements" was the subject of an important conference at the quarterly meeting of the London Baptist Association last week. This invasion was properly described as an organised movement, for on a recent Sunday the Sunday League, which has for its object the secularisation of the day, had twenty-three excursion trains to different places, while concerts and other amusements were provided.

Some of our religious leaders are weakly pandering to this tendency by defending Sunday games "within proper limits." The love of the world, the growth of unbelief, and the extension of Roman Catholic influence in Britain are largely responsible for the present state of things. Till the national sentiment is more earnestly roused, and the possibilities of organising in defence of the Protestant Sunday are clearly grasped, the evil cannot be stemmed. What may be done is seen in the defeat of the Oxford Music Hall authorities last autumn in their endeavour to promote Sunday evening concerts ; and the equally striking defeat of an attempt at Bournemouth and elsewhere to introduce band-music into public parks on the Lord's Day.

A proposal (apparently serious) has been made to get the London County Council to maintain a municipal opera-house. We are glad to see The Spectator and other responsible papers vigorously exposing the futility of this extraordinary proposal. That the body responsible for the government and well-being of Greater London should be expected to subsidise the amusements of the rich with public money is amazing. The County Council has better ways of spending the money entrusted to it in sweeping away dens of iniquity, lessening the pressure of overcrowding, and providing healthy conditions of living for the people. If an opera-house is necessary, those who desire it can well afford to maintain it themselves.

The movement towards federation is invading our Free Church colleges, where it is the growing tendency for colleges of different denominations to have a common staff of professors. Regent's Park, Hackney, and New Colleges have for years shared the services of certain members of their staff, and now they have just joined in the appointment of five professors, whose duties will be performed in the common interest. This is an admirable way of economising denominational money, increasing the efficiency of professoriates, and of further riveting the bonds of brotherhood among the Free Churches of the future. If the students during their studies come together, they will form friendships that will count for good when in years to come they occupy leading positions in their respective denominations, and their influence will naturally be enlisted on the side of a true spiritual unity among the people of God.

The growing tendency in many of our churches is for the "voice of praise" to be almost entirely the voice of choir and organ. Dr. Talmage, in a recent utterance, specially referring to the state of things in America, says :—"We dam the great Mississippi of congregational singing, and let a few drops trickle through the dam." This is the penalty of paid quartettes. But even in this country the evil is increasing, and the result is the stifling of the natural instincts of the heart to utter itself freely in song. By this means a barrier is put up in the way of effective worship. It should never be forgotten that preacher, organist, and choir exist for the congregation, and not for their own glorification, and that they do not fulfil their function unless they help to give greater confidence and stimulus to the general singing. Praise and prayer should never be done by proxy.

In these days, when music is so greatly loved and so generally cultivated, there is great opening for groups of well-trained singers to go out singing the Gospel. We have bands and choirs of a miscellaneous kind that go into the streets and into parks and other places to conduct the service of praise in open-air services, or to gather a crowd and lead them to a place of worship. But why not a few choice and well-harmonised voices going from court to court, street to street, and park to park, to sing for Jesus—bands of modern Lollards ?

Sir Henry Fowler, M.P., says that when his father was minister of Great Queen-street Chapel, London, the vice, ignorance, and intemperance abounding were terrible, and that the wickedness to-day is not to be compared with that of fifty years ago ; yet London is "not a Christian city," and the problem we still have to deal with is its religious condition. And to do this we must "stamp social life, business life, municipal life, and parliamentary life with the spirit of Christianity." Dr. Maclaren asked the other day :

> In what sense is England Christian ? Are we not living in a fool's paradise to hope it ? We have not lost grip. We never had hold of the masses.

These two witnesses agree. The problem of to-day has been the problem ever since Columba and Aidan preached to our wild fathers in the North ; and the misery of it is that so few members of churches realise the responsibility and the privilege of the work to be done.

Mr. Andrew Lang, in his "Making of Religion," subjects the current theories among scientific thinkers on this question to a rigorous examination, and comes to results that tell remarkably in favour of the Christian point of view. His book, written as an expert who has spent many years on the subject, marks a sharp return from the materialistic standpoint of recent writers on the origin of religion. He favours the idea of a primitive Theism—how attained (i.e., whether naturally or by revelation) he cannot affirm, but at least prior to the eras of animism and ghost-worship and other fancies of the anthropologist's brain. Most noticeable of all, however, is his defence of the credibility of the New Testament miracles.

After detailing the evidence of abundant cases of "super-normal experiences" that have been established by scientific investigation, he goes on to say :

> Thus considered, the kinds of marvellous events recorded in the Gospels, for example, are no longer to be dismissed on a priori grounds as "mythical." We cannot now disregard evidence as necessarily false because it clashes with our present ideas of the possible, when we have to acknowledge that the very same evidence may safely convey to us facts which clashed with our fathers' notions of what is possible, but which are now accepted. Our notions of the possible cease to be a criterion of truth or falsehood, and our contempt for the Gospels as myths must slowly die as "miracle" after "miracle" is brought within the realm of acknowledged law. With such admission the hypothesis that the Gospel evidence is mythical must grow weaker, and weaker must grow the negative certainly of popular science.

This is an excellent statement of the reply to Hume's celebrated argument against miracles, which for so many years held such a tyrannical sway over the scientific mind, and which has now become so discredited that it is not likely to be revived. The New Testament miracles do not depend for their credibility on the attitude of experts in anthropology, but they have at least a better chance of being accepted on their merits by those who seem to think that nothing can be true except it be accepted by these experts.

Dr. Parker, at his recent jubilee, stated that it had always been his ambition to preach a "ministry by encouragement." This should be the aim of all whose business it is to announce the good tidings of the Kingdom. In our Lord's discourses, even when He was engaged in denouncing sin, there was always an open door of hope for the sinner. His method was to expel evil by the encouragement of all that was good. He kindled the smoking flax into a flame ; He filled the despairing with a new hope. Perhaps there never was an age when there was greater need of a bright, cheery announcement of the grace of God. We are "saved by hope" as well as faith and love ; and this grace should always be a prominent feature in the attitude and teaching of the ambassadors of the Gospel of Peace.

It is very desirable at the present crisis in the ecclesiastical world to emphasise the need of maintaining a calm and charitable spirit in speaking of opponents. The bitter attacks made on Sir William Harcourt by Canon Knox-Little and others for his plain words in Parliament are a mistake in tactics as well as an exhibition of temper. We gain nothing and we lose much when we allow passion to get the upper hand of us in religious controversy. The cause of truth is hindered, and relations between those who differ conscientiously are sadly strained. History speaks eloquently as to the age-long mischief that results from unguarded words and the imputation of unworthy motives, and the world laughs in scorn at the spectacle of Christian men who "bite and devour" one another. We need the zeal which has love at its heart to keep it clear and sweet in the midst of warring opinions.

The Archbishop of York, at the Diocesan Synod last week, delivered a defence of Protestantism, which is a word that is rapidly falling out of fashion in many quarters. He said the Church of England had always been Protestant as against the errors and corruption of the Roman Church; but claimed that the Protestantism of the Reformation was of a very different character from what bears the name in the present day. This difference he expressed thus :—

It did not occupy itself with little details which had no specific character of one kind or another. Its object was to preserve unimpaired the articles of the Christian faith. It rejected no doctrine inherited by the Church from the earliest centuries. It stood in the old ways, and asked for the old paths. It abandoned no ecclesiastical position, and separated itself in no way from the Catholic Church. It recovered truth which had been forgotten or overlaid with superstition, and it cleansed itself from corruptions inconsistent alike with the teaching of Holy Scripture and the faith of the Church.

Yet, in the face of the present excitement, and his own defence of Protestantism, he advocated one of the most unscriptural practices of the Romish Church [Prayer for the Dead].

The time may come when the occasion for such apprehensions may have passed away, and then it may be possible, under the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, to replace this godly custom in our Book of Common Prayer. But till then we must be content to confine such supplications to our private devotions, and to see, perhaps, in more than one of the prayers of the Church some lingering indications of her silent desire for the ever-increasing blessedness of her departed children.

